The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 1

Bulger resigns as UMass president

Trustees approve $1 million severance package

GERALDYN LINQUIST/COLLEGIAN

Bulger walks into the press conference to announce his resignation as UMass president.

•See Bulger's full resignation speech on page A9

GERALDYN LINQUIST/COLLEGIAN

Grace Fey, chairperson of the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees, tears up as Bulger publically reads his resignation speech.

By JAMIE LOO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

LOWELL – William M. Bulger, president of the University of Massachusetts system, resigned from the presidency on Aug. 6.

"It has been clear to the board that during his long and distinguished tenure President Bulger has always upheld the mission of the University. Today's outcome, although reluctantly accepted, was fair and equitable for all parties," said Grace Fey, chairperson of the board of trustees.

The board of trustees met at the trustees' office on the UMass Lowell campus and convened an open meeting earlier in the day to discuss budget issues and the recent vote by the state senate to raise tuition. The trustees then went into a closed-door executive session at 1 p.m., before reconvening an open meeting at 4 p.m.

During the afternoon open meeting, the board voted to accept Bulger's resignation and discussed the terms of Bulger's departure. The resignation became effective Sept. 1 and the board will choose an interim in the meantime. Bulger's severance package includes two and a quarter year's salary totaling $695,000, and an additional $154,000 for a six-month sabbatical along with other benefits. By resigning, Bulger waived his rights to a lifetime tenured position as a professor at UMass-Boston. The total severance package is approximately $1 million.

"I do not support the amount of severance that we are agreeing to, in light of fiscal problems facing our university," said trustee Lawrence Boyle.

There was light debate about the package and the vote was 18-1 to accept the package. Following the meeting, Boyle said he was disappointed by the lack of effort by the board to negotiate a different sum of money.

Continued on page A8

UMass slashed 18 percent

By DAN LAMOTHE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A $41 million cut in state funding for the University of Massachusetts Amherst cost 110 employees their jobs and will cost students at least another $750 per semester starting in the spring.

The moves are a part of a complicated system of budget cuts, layoffs and fee increases on campus introduced by Chancellor John V. Lombardi in July. Overall, state funding for the UMass five-campus system was cut more than 18 percent – an $80.5 million cut. The funding on the Amherst campus decreased from $212.5 million to $171.5 million.

•See Budget coverage on pages A2, A3

Lombardi elected to divide the gap in funding between a series of cuts and the student fee increase. The campus was organized into three basic categories, with cuts to research and teaching – what Lombardi calls the "core purpose" of the University – designated as a last resort. Twenty-one million dollars were made in cuts to organizations and services that the administration did not consider a central part of the University's purpose.

"The budget process had as its primary goal the protection of teaching and research on this campus," Lombardi told the Collegian via email. "This is because teaching and research define the quality of every nationally significant public research university like our own."

The majority of the remaining $21 million cut will be covered by the increase in student fees, which will net the University about $18

Continued on page A3

Student Affairs gets energized

By COURTNEY CHARLES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"There's candy in the refrigerator," new Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life Michael Gargano said as he discussed his open-door policy for students. "Students do not need a meeting to see me."

With a doctorate in higher education administration from George Washington University, Gargano plans on being "very, very active in campus life."

"Our theme in Student Affairs and Campus Life is students first!" Gargano said. "Part of the theme is connecting students to the University and the University to students, and that is accomplished through human communication and technological communication."

In order to emphasize that students are the number one priority, what Gargano calls "the reason for our existence," a new standard called "Operation Friendly" will be put into place.

The idea behind this operation is to add a new customer service related atmosphere to the Vice Chancellor's system. Gargano said that the phone will be answered in a more consistent manner, in which the individual answering the phone will follow a polite greeting with the Vice Chancellor's name and also the name of the person who's actually answering. The name will be followed by "How can I help you?"

Gargano also is brainstorming ideas on how to make the UMass campus more of a gathering place for students afterhours.

"I'm designing a program that's an alternative to alcohol-related events," Gargano said. "It's in our best interest to keep students on campus with our programming and not to drive them into the center of town. We need more cultural, social, recreational and educational events on campus."

He suggested that he would like to see more big-name entertainers at UMass, who students could see for free or a minimal fee. He dropped names such as comedians Jon Stewart and Chris Rock, and seemed pleased that Darrell Hammond would be coming.

Also planned as part of the Campus Life rejuvenation is an extended outreach program for freshmen. Gargano plans on holding a series of open forums in residence halls four to five weeks into the academic year. The purpose of these forums

Continued on page A12

Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life, Michael Gargano, replaces Jo Ann Vanin.

Grad student drowns

By FERRON SALNIKER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Ravish Dewangan, a student at the University of Massachusetts, was found dead on July 12 in Puffer's Pond.

Dewangan, a 22-year-old graduate student from India in the Chemical Engineering department in the Chemical Engineering department had gone to the popular swimming hole in North Amherst was reported missing at 6:30 p.m. after friends said an hour and 15 minutes had gone by without sight of him.

The caretaker at the conservation area reported the situation to the Amherst Police, who quickly arrived with members of the Amherst Fire Department and the Massachusetts State Police Diving Team. The team cleared other swimmers from the pond and searched the water and surround-

Continued on page A12

GERALDYN LINQUIST/COLLEGIAN

Puffer's Pond, the site of three drownings in the last two years. Ravish Dewangan drown on July 12.

ALANA caucus members' future remains uncertain in SGA Senate

By COURTNEY CHARLES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Student Government Association voted on May 7 to eliminate the seats apportioned to the African Latino Asian Native American Association (ALANA).

Although the group is given 13 percent of the seats in the senate, most of them remain unfilled, according to Jared Nokes, Speaker of the Senate.

"It's a judicial case," Nokes said. "The caucus seats are against the constitution in a technical sense."

The Office of ALANA affairs sees the situation differently.

"There's a group of students in the SGA that every year attack the ALANA caucus," said Gladys Franco, chair of the ALANA caucus. "They don't want us there because our ideas oppose theirs."

According to Nokes, many of the members of the ALANA caucus, including the group's speaker, are elected to their positions based on where they live. Every year the senate reviews the apportioned seating and decides to vote either by living area or specific building. It has always been building specific until this year.

Nokes said that senators will be at large in their areas this year.

"In this way, people who want to get involved can [do so]," Nokes said.

The act declares 12 at large Senate seats to represent Southwest South, nine for Southwest North, five for Northeast, five for Orchard Hill, five for Sylvan, eight for Central, and 22 for students living off-campus.

At the bottom of this act was a motion to have nine apportioned seats for the ALANA caucus. This part was voted out of the act on May 7.

"Some people in the Senate don't realize that ALANA is still necessary," Franco said.

Nokes said it would make no sense that there might be four seats for each building, and six people interested in representing in one dorm but only two interested in another area dorm. According to SGA by-laws there must be one seat for every 250 people. The by-laws were approved in 1994 by the administration. The by-laws support elected caucuses such as ALANA.

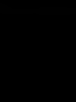
The SGA Constitution, however, presents a different view. The constitution, which is approved by the Board of Trustees, states that "Senate membership shall be composed of representatives apportioned by the Senate to Electoral Districts, as defined by the General By-laws of the SGA."

The Electoral Districts are defined as on- and off-campus.

The problem is that caucus appointments such as the ALANA caucus are not part of these districts. This means that caucus appointments are being recognized by the by-laws, but are not recognized by the constitution.

Nokes sees the situation as a judiciary dilemma, whereas Franco sees it as a personal affront to ALANA.

"They don't want us there," Franco said. "They are insensitive to ALANA



Continued on page A12

PAGE 6
BUSH FAMILY BOUNTY
RICHES WERE MADE FROM SCRUPULOUS SLAVE LABOR
• ANOTHER VIEW / COMMENTARY

PAGE B1
VOYAGE ONWARD
A PUPPETEER'S JOURNEY THROUGH THE VALLEY'S GALLERIES

PAGE C1
MORRISON'S 'BELOVED'
REMAKE OF A TALE
SECOND INSTALLMENT IN 'MEN'S GOLF GAME' SERIES DUE OUT LATER THIS MONTH

PAGE A13

BUDGET CUTS

Rape crisis program funding cut

Everywoman's Center support cut $90,000

By Dan Lamothe
Collegian Staff

While the University of Massachusetts Amherst copes with $40 million in budget cuts, one organization on campus is dealing with a cut in funding from an entirely different source.

The Rape Crisis and Violence Prevention Program in Nelson House is in the process of dealing with a $90,000 cut in funding, according to Becky Lockwood, associate director. That number represents a 50 percent budget cut for them.

"We were all stunned when we learned about the cuts," Lockwood said. "We felt like the services... cut were so valuable."

The cut to the program, which is run by the Everywoman's Center, at UMass is part of a $1.3 million cut in funding for rape crisis services across the state. Funding was reduced by the state legislature from $2.5 million last year to $800,000 in a move unrelated to any other budget cuts at UMass. Money for rape crisis comes from the Department of Public Health.

> "We're all sort of lumped together in this one line-item, and they gutted us."
>
> -Becky Lockwood, Associate Director Rape Crisis and Violence Prevention Program

Lockwood said that the Everywoman's Center is one of 18 rape crisis programs funded by the Department of Public Health. Similar programs in Western Massachusetts also exist in Springfield, Greenfield and Pittsfield.

"We're all sort of lumped together in this one line-item," she said, "and they gutted us."

That gutting includes the loss of three staff people to lay-offs, including the director of community education. Lockwood says many classes and workshops have had to be cancelled.

"We lost a big capacity part of our capacity to do education," Lockwood said.

So far, the Everywoman's Center has been able to keep their 24-hour rape crisis hotline – which includes short-term counseling and legal, medical and police advocacy – open. But the Center says it needs to raise $25,000 this year to maintain it.

According to them, the hotline at UMass responded to 1,377 calls during fiscal year 2003 as the only resource for free confidential support for rape and sexual assault in Hampshire County. Two hundred and fifty-two new clients sought counseling.

"The hotline will continue," Lockwood said. "But we're not going to be able to offer support groups. We don't have the funding anymore to do that. We're sort of brainstorming all different things we can do."

That list of things is still a work in progress, but Lockwood says that the Everywoman's Center has already set up a committee of four people and counting to develop fundraising scenarios.

The first of those fundraisers will likely be a dance in late fall co-sponsored by the Men's Resource Center on N. Main Street, according to Babs Mayer of Montague, a counselor advocate with the program. Each staff member will also be asked to write 10 letters asking for support from people they know.

"I'm really happy here and with the important work that I do," Mayer said. "I wasn't ready to leave."

Mayer staffs the hotline during daytime hours and takes walk-in appointments at the Nelson House. She has also stepped up in the fundraising process as a graphic designer.

A member of the program for almost a year, she says that she's working as hard as she can to keep her job secure. She worries about what people in need will do if there isn't someone always available to take calls and walk-ins at the Nelson House.

"If I'm not here, and that doesn't exist..." her voice tails off.

There are other concerns if the hotline were to disappear, as well. Mayer says that without it, there is concern that Teen Services at the Everywoman's Center would have many difficulties, as well.

Jamie Oltmans, 26, of Holyoke agrees. She's been with the Everywoman's Center for two years – first for a year as a counselor advocate with the crisis hotline, and now with Teen Services.

"We rely on them," she said. "We coincide."

Oltmans and Mayer say that many times the crisis hotline refers victims to Teen Services, depending upon the circumstances of the call.

"I felt devastated that this organization that I felt so strongly about was being cut... so many people use it," Oltmans said. "I feel it's a valuable community resource."

The Everywoman's Center will continue to go about business, however. Right now, that includes looking for new volunteer counselors, with training in mid-September. Anyone interested in getting involved can call at 413-545-0883.

The 24-hour rape crisis hotline can be reached at 413-545-0800 or toll free at 888-337-0800. Counselors are also available for walk-in counseling in Nelson House on E. Pleasant Street from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday.

GERALD H. LING/COLLEGIAN

Jamie Oltmans, a counselor advocate for the Rape Crisis and Violence Prevention Program at the Everywoman's Center, answers phones at Nelson House.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Promotion Manager Scott Pihl
News Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
News Editor Courtney Charles
Design Editor Robert Krzykowski
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Editorial Editor Erika Lovley
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Brandon McNutt
Family Manager Greg Stumm
Human Resources Sandra Marquez
Senior Index Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphic Artist Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Kelly Farrell
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marrelli
Assistant Arts & Living Jessica Pelletier
Assistant Time Ferron Salniker
Assistant Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the academic year, except during vacations and examination periods. The Collegian is independently financed and produces its advertising revenue. Letters to the editor should be addressed to the Collegian. Signed columns and letters do not necessarily reflect the opinion of the Collegian. Signed columns do not necessarily reflect the opinion of the Collegian Board of Trustees. Founded in 1890, the Collegian has been published continuously since January 1934. For information regarding subscriptions, call (413) 545-3500.

E-mail us at news@dailycollegian.com

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
$139
★ Student Special ★
4 months
Best Aerobics-Best Machines
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
256-0000
90 AMHERST
www.amherstathletic.com

The
BLUE WALL
PUB

Don't waste another evening at the same old place, doing the same old things with the same old "scenery". Get your friends together and come on down to The Blue Wall Pub, Amherst's newest nightspot, located on the first floor of the Campus-Center Complex.

21+ to Drink- 18+ to Party and no cover charge!

*Live Jams from the hottest local and regional bands and musicians

Be a part of the action with Karaoke, Trivia and Open Mic. Evenings.

The Blue Wall Pub is proudly serving all of your favorite cocktails in addition to a variety of domestic and international beer, wine and non-alcoholic beverages.

Don't miss a minute of the action! Catch all of your favorite teams on our 50" flat screen TVs.

- Wednesday- Bring your talent and your friends to the first of our weekly Open Mic Jams
- Thursday- A Cappella Rush Concert
- Friday- Live Rock featuring local favorites Flying Lessons and Friends
- Saturday- Charismatic Propulsive Acoustic Rock with Jason Levassuer Shaun Fogel and Sam Shaber

Hours of Operation
Monday –Saturday 3pm- 1am

Free Parking after 5:00pm in all surface lots! (Check out Lot 63) Additional parking is available in the Campus-Center parking garage. For campus maps visit http://www.umass.edu/umhome/maps/images/map_detail_03.pdf

For more info and directions call (413) 545-1919

Interested in hosting your next event at the Blue Wall Pub? Email entertainment@mail.aux.umass.edu for more info or call (413) 549-6000 x7812

Think your band should play at the Blue Wall? Drop us a line at entertainment@mail.aux.umass.edu*

Check out the www.dailyjolt.com for more of upcoming events

BUDGET CUTS

UMass budget cut $40 million

Continued from page A1

million.

Budget cuts made by Lombardi on campus are split between a number of organizations, including over $2.5 million in cuts to the Athletic Department, $1.26 million in cuts to UMass Extension programs, $500,000 in cuts to the Fine Arts Department, and over $7.4 million in cuts to Vice Chancellor positions and salaries.

Most job lay-offs came to employees and technicians in areas such as academic support and the bursar's office.

"The legislative budget reductions have required the University to greatly reduce the many services it provides its many external constituencies, economize on a number of on-campus support programs, and ask its faculty and staff to take on many additional responsibilities," Lombardi said.

Jobs cut instead of sports

The UMass Athletic Department announced its plan for budget reductions on July 9, trimming $2.55 million from an $18 million budget with a combination of job lay-offs and reductions. No sports were eliminated by the budget cuts, putting the fears of many to rest. One sport, men's indoor track, was actually reinstated after a year's absence.

"The premise behind these reductions is to ensure that the athletic department continues to pursue its primary goal of providing a high quality experience for its student-athletes and achieve competitive success in its intercollegiate programs," Athletic Director Ian McCaw said in a released statement. "We are fortunate that this strategy does not compromise either of our primary goals."

Fifteen administrative positions within the athletic department were eliminated as part of the reductions, and each men's intercollegiate program was asked to reduce its operating budgets by five percent, according to an Athletic Department release. The men's and women's swim teams, which already often shared resources, will also be combined to save money.

Several sports were allowed to continue on the condition that they would attain a self-sufficient status. Funding for men's and women's skiing will be eliminated, but they are expected to maintain self-sufficiency through NCAA sports sponsorship allocations and private funding.

> "We are operating at a level that we can sustain for a year or two, but we cannot continue at a level of quality much after that without additional resources."
>
> -Chancellor John V. Lombardi

Men's indoor track was also reinstated on the condition of self-sufficiency. The Athletic Department indicated in the release that the previous elimination of the indoor program had negative consequences on the outdoor program that could be remedied with the recreation of the indoor team on a self-sufficient level.

To a UMass athletic community afraid of more sports being cut, the plans were surprisingly pleasant to many. David Falvey, a Student Government Association senator and member of the track team, was worried that outdoor track would be cut this year as well.

"My coach and I had a talk. We were playing out scenarios to see who might be cut," he said.

Falvey said that the decision shows how lucky the campus is to have McCaw and Lombardi making decisions for the campus.

"I'm really happy. We [indoor track] don't have a budget, but that's fine with us. We have money from alumni already in our bank account," he said. "It feels great. Our athletic director has done a great job. When you look at [ex-Athletic Director Robert] Marcum, all they did was hack teams away."

Track Coach Ken O'Brien also had major concerns about the safety of his sport before the cuts were announced.

"I think there were several of our coaches who had major league concerns," he said. "I think many of the student athletes were thinking in similar ways."

O'Brien says that Lombardi and McCaw went out of their way to make many times the crisis hotline refers victims to Teen Services, depending upon the circumstances of the call.

"I felt devastated that this organization that I felt so strongly about was being cut... so many people use it," Oltmans said. "I feel it's a valuable community resource."

The Everywoman's Center will continue to go about business, however. Right now, that includes looking for new volunteer counselors, with training in mid-September. Anyone interested in getting involved can call at 413-545-0883.

The 24-hour rape crisis hotline can be reached at 413-545-0800 or toll free at 888-337-0800. Counselors are also available for walk-in counseling in Nelson House on E. Pleasant Street from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Fine Arts hit $500,000

The UMass Fine Arts Center will also cope with a large budget cut this semester, with $500,000 cut in state funding for Fine Arts Center programs.

Director Willie Hill says its hard to tell what the impact of the cuts will be on the Fine Arts Center as of yet, but he understands that plans need to be made to increase efficiency for its programs.

"We're looking at every possibility right now to make sure that we're lean and clean and a well oiled machine," Hill said.

Budget cuts in the Fine Arts Center will take place gradually. According to Hill, the Center needs the equivalent of 4.75 full-time jobs to balance the budget. The jobs will not all be cut immediately, he said, because the cuts will be put into place gradually over the course of a two or three year period with the aid of bridge money.

"To make sure that we stay afloat and to

GERALD H. LING/COLLEGIAN

Above are some of the 30 to 40 new titles that University Press prints every year. One hundred percent of state funding for the Press was cut this summer.

State Sen. Stanley C. Rosenberg, D-Amherst, said that he was happy to see that state legislators were able to override Romney's veto. "It was a stupid veto," he said. "He should have never done it."

Rosenberg expressed concern that Commonwealth College's funding has been left separate from the rest of the University's funding in the state budget – a move that he said makes it a very tempting target.

"I have been for a long time urging that once we have a program established, we should roll it into the base of the budget," he said.

Rosenberg said that every eight to 10 years, there's a downturn in the economy and budget cuts are usually made. "The University did not want it rolled in," he said. "If they ask, I will try [to make it happen]."

Honors funds restored

Commonwealth College was spared a devastating cut to its budget when state legislators overrode Gov. Mitt Romney's veto of all state funding for the University's honors program on July 7. The Massachusetts House of Representatives voted to override the veto with a 143-11 vote.

The $1.72 million veto represented the program's entire operating budget.

Meredith Lind, director of communication and program development at Commonwealth College, said that many parents and students called the Commonwealth College office looking to see what they could do.

"We recommended that they send messages to their own state legislators and the governor," she said.

Lind said that the program is looking into finding other sources for funding in the event that a similar cut was made.

"Our development officer is working with alumni for other sources of funding," she said.

Lind said that another concern for the program is that since its first class came to campus in September 1999, the program has experienced one small budget cut and other than that, they have been level-funded. At the same time, the program continues to grow.

"The level funding is not the [funding] we were looking for to accommodate the growth we wanted," she said.

Nevertheless, the people involved in the program know they're fortunate to have funds this year.

"We're going forward," Lind said. "We've got a good lineup of courses and we have close to 500 freshmen for this year."

Commonwealth College received a $1 million endowment from the Fleet Corp. in December 2002 in honor of their retiring board chairman, Terrence Murray, and $500,000 in state funding to match.

Campus Chronicle eliminated

One organization that was not able to escape budget reductions was the Campus Chronicle. The weekly staff newspaper, which has been in existence since 1985, published its last issue on June 27.

The Chronicle was hit with a reduction of $125,000 initially – a number equivalent to nearly 64 percent of their operating budget for fiscal year 2003. Once the Chronicle announced that they would not publish this year, they were cut an additional $40,000.

The cut of the Campus Chronicle cost three full-time and one part-time employees their jobs, according to Associate Editor Sarah Bucholz. So far, Bulcholz said, only Editor Daniel Fitzgibbons has found a job with the University.

Fitzgibbons was on vacation and could not be reached for comment, Bucholz said. In the last issue of the Chronicle (June 27), however, he told readers that after 17 years at the paper, he felt "as if there's been a death in the family." He will be working for the News Office "putting out online campus information," according to Bucholz.

Bulcholz, one of the other three employees who received lay-off notices, said she had no employment plans as of yet. She also said that she was in no position to predict whether or not the Chronicle, published since 1985 even during summer months, could be reinstated once the financial situation for the state and University got better.

"That's really going to depend on who's in charge and how they assess the communication needs of the campus," she said.

University Press reorganizing

University Press was also hit hard by cuts, with 100 percent of their state funding ($340,000) eliminated from the budget.

Although Bruce Wilcox, director of University Press, said the organization does bring in over $1 million a year in book sales and a number of small grants, the budget cuts reorganization cost five employees out of 13 employed in marketing at University Press their jobs. Two will enroll for early retirement and the other three will look for jobs elsewhere on campus, he said.

"We're trying to make the best of a difficult situation," Wilcox said. "People are already working hard, but they're going to have to work even harder."

JAMIE D. LYCO/DAILY COLLEGIAN

Staff Advisor Peter Woodsum answers phones at Commonwealth College last week. The Honors program was saved from a devastating $1.72 million cut in funds when state legislators voted to override a Gov. Mitt Romney veto.

"If you reduce personnel, you obviously affect programs," he said.

Hill said that he can foresee fewer events at the Fine Arts Center, and that some of the events planned on campus would have to be less costly. Bringing an orchestra in from Japan, he noted as an example, costs the Fine Arts Center much more money than it can bring in through ticket sales and other fundraising measures.

Costly events that the Fine Arts Center loses money on will not be eliminated completely from the planned program of events, however.

"We feel that it is very important to bring these entities on campus because the campus deserves it," he said. "We are still healthy. We will still be productive and we will still give people coming through the doors of the Fine Arts Center a first-rate experience."

Budget Cuts at UMass Amherst	General Operations Base Budget	FY04 reduction	Percent Reduction
Academic Instructional Media Services	482,966	220,713	45.7
Alumni Relations And Events	1,003,500	200,000	19.9
Athletics	5,684,000	2,550,000	44.9
Campus Chronicle	196,000	125,000	63.8
Center for Computer-Based Instructional Technology	211,000	211,000	100.0
Center for Intelligent Information Retrieval	446,000	44,600	10.0
Center for Real Time and IntelligentComplex Computing	70,000	70,000	100.0
Communications and Marketing	1,303,150	300,000	23.0
Cranberry Station	323,000	35,530	11.0
Fine Arts Center	1,169,000	500,000	42.8
International Programs	388,000	240,000	61.9
Marching Band	258,500	50,000	19.3
Mass Institute for Social And Economic Research	829,000	706,000	85.2
Mass Ventures	125,000	125,000	100.0
Research Labs	240,000	120,000	50.0
Scientific Reasoning Research Institute	103,131	70,590	68.4
Staff Training and Development	430,080	230,080	53.5
Statistical Consulting Center	190,000	190,000	100.0
The Environmental Institute (NETI)	760,000	500,000	65.8
Translation Center	116,000	116,000	100.0
UMass Extension	2,300,000	1,253,000	54.5
University Club Support	51,000	51,000	100.0
University Press	340,000	340,000	100.0
WFCR Radio	58,000	58,000	100.0

UMass Extension overhauled

The $1.26 million cut in funding for UMass Extension services has meant the lay-off of 26 employees and a complete reorganization of the way 4-H works, with a nonprofit organization overseeing 4-H programs statewide.

"We're trying something very radical and completely unprecedented, but something that will allow 4-H to survive and to thrive in a somewhat different context," said Wesley Blixt, spokesperson for UMass Extension.

Blixt said that until now, 4-H, one of four programs that UMass Extension runs, has been largely supported by the state. "We've been a part of the budget since the late 80s as a part of the demise of county government," he said.

The nonprofit organization will oversee the entire statewide 4-H Youth and Family Development program in a way that will no longer be "a drain on and at the mercy of state funding," Blixt said.

Local participants will also be directly affected financially, Blixt said the UMass Extension is in the process of working out an "equitable" fee system to cover costs.

"A lot of what used to be free and state-funded will have to be fee-supported," he said.

Blixt acknowledged that UMass Extension will receive bridging support in the form of a $500,000 transition package to get through this year. He expects $150,000 of that to come from UMass Extension and $100,000 to "hopefully" come from the statewide 4-H program. The last $150,000 will have to be raised through a major donor funding program, he said.

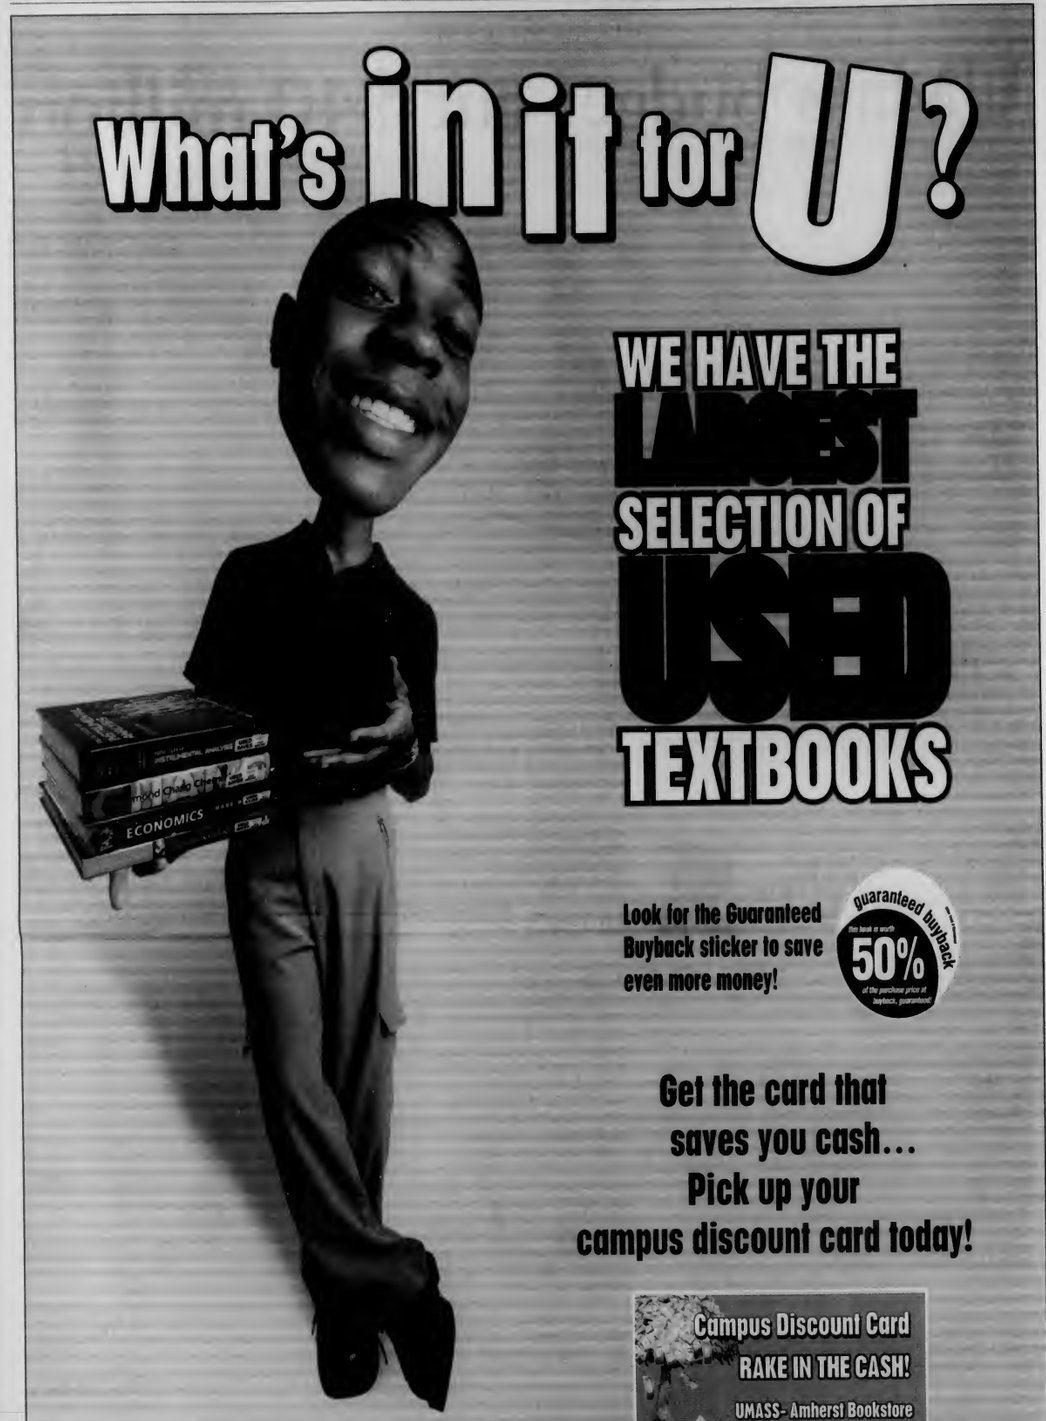
"The outlook is difficult, it's a challenge," Blixt said. "We have a lot to do. It's an unprecedented plan – a lot of it is going to fall on 4-H participants themselves."

UMass at its limit

Lombardi said that all of the cuts have pushed UMass "to the limit" of what it can absorb without damaging teaching and research programs – a claim that a study by the Center for Public Policy and Higher Education in California bears out, according to the Hampshire Gazette. UMass has both seen its student fees go up more and had bigger financial cuts than any other public university in the nation.

"We are operating at a level that we can sustain for a year or two, but we cannot continue at a level of quality much after that without additional resources," he said.

Yet he remains optimistic that UMass' present outlook will improve. "There is no indication that the legislature will force additional budget reduction on the University next year," he said. "The economy, while not booming, is recovering slowly.



"The Commonwealth's leadership is keenly aware of the tremendous difficulties the state's lack of revenue has caused for all those who provide essential services to its citizens, including higher education."

Rosenberg said the UMass system was cut disproportionately high compared to the rest of the state's higher education system. While UMass was cut 18 percent system-wide, state and community colleges were cut 13 percent.

"It seems they're [UMass administrators] doing the best they can under difficult circumstances," he said.

Rosenberg and at least 13 other state senators are in the process of trying to secure UMass additional funding in the form of a supplemental appropriation for this year – a move that if accomplished, would be unprecedented.

"We have a case because the University was disproportionately cut in comparison to state and local colleges," he said. "That was just unfair, and we want some of it back."

UMPD is ready for new year

By Courtney Charles
Collegian Staff

The UMass Police Department (UMPD) completed a heavy period of training this summer, including training in defensive tactics and escorting prisoners.

According to Police Deputy Chief Patrick Archbald, the training is normal. The in-service training is considered a yearly refresher.

One new task force, however, was introduced to the UMPD, Internet Crimes Against Children. Training in this area will include how to assist people with reports of children being solicited online.

State police approached the UMPD to assist them in these efforts, Archbald said. This is not a problem at the university, but it is a big regional issue.

During this summer, the unit of police dog Max and his police officer have undergone additional canine handling training, Archbald said. He pointed out that there will be no change in officer duties in the canine unit.

Max and his handler will continue with the visits they started making to dorms and RA's floor meetings last spring. The purpose of these meetings is for students to get to know the new police dog.

According to Archbald, when someone calls something in involving drugs, the first step is for two officers to investigate and determine if Max is needed. The dog is used extremely rarely in these circumstances.

The dog is primarily used in cases where a search warrant for drugs has already been obtained from a court of law.

"The dog enhances the officer's ability to search the room," Archbald said. "There are very narrow searches where the dog is deployed."

The drugs the dog is trained to hit on are marijuana, powder cocaine, crack cocaine, and heroine, Archbald said.

The main drug problem at UMass is marijuana, Archbald said.

"We continue to regularly receive reports of the use of marijuana and the dealing of it," Archbald said. "There is an ongoing issue in the department of suppressing it."

Cocaine is more difficult to detect, since it doesn't carry a strong smell such as marijuana does, according to Archbald.

Gerald H. Ling / Collegian

Deputy Chief of Police Patrick Archbald and the UMass Police are prepared for the new academic year. The UMPD recently completed a heavy period of training.

"We occasionally come across it in the booking room. We'll find it on someone, or in their purse or car," Archbald said. "The use is so discreet, it is difficult to catch someone using it."

In addition to discussing Max and drug use in general, Archbald pointed out several things for incoming freshmen to be aware of.

"The number one thing is the use of alcohol," Archbald said. "Clearly alcohol is the drug used and abused by students." Freshmen are exposed to alcohol more than at home and with that add in the extra freedom, Archbald said.

"I would ask freshmen to use their best judgment and be cognizant of the law, being underage," Archbald said. "If students choose to drink, I think they need to take extra measures to protect themselves. They need to be especially cautious of the people they are socializing with and the environment they are in such as an unfamiliar dorm or if they find themselves walking across campus alone at 2 a.m. Responsibility doesn't end when you've decided to have a few beers."

Also of major concern to the department is pedestrian safety. Although there is a large amount of pedestrian traffic at UMass, there are also thousands of employees and students driving to school every day, according to Archbald.

"There is a daily balance between pedestrians and motor vehicles," Archbald said.

"Everyone needs to be respectful of each other's rights. Pedestrians need to be aware of 3,000-pound cars and not walk in front of them. On the other hand, a group of five or six people may be walking along and not realize they are in the road. Drivers need to take an extra few seconds. Everyone needs to be extra courteous the first few weeks of school."

Archbald said the department is ready for another year.

"We enjoy serving the students," he said.

Freshmen Safety Tips

Be aware of your environment at all times, especially if you find yourself in an unfamiliar setting.

Be careful around people you don't know very well.

Be sure to arrive and leave with a familiar group when attending social events.

If you choose to drink, be responsible. Responsibility doesn't end with a few beers.

Never leave your drink unattended.

Don't go off alone with someone you've only known for five minutes.

TRUST "Before locking into a long term contract for a fitness facility with no machinery in place, why not give the veteran professionals a visit."
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
"Big enough to own the best equipment, but small enough to know your name."
* In business 22 years
* Locally owned & operated 0243808
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0080 90. AMHERST

SLEEPY HOLLOW BED CO.
MATTRESSES · FUTONS · BEDS & ETC.
MISMATCH MATTRESS
TWIN SET $199
MATT ONLY $119
FULL SET $249
MATT ONLY $149
QUEEN SET $299
MATT ONLY $189
FUTONS
Full* Queen
4" Cotton + Foam $110 $135
6" Cotton + Foam $135 N/A
8" Cotton + Foam $155 $180
Cushy Coil $195 $230
*twin size also available in select models
NEWYORKER
Full $99
ROMA PLATFORM
Full $149
Queen $179
ALBANY
Oak or Natural*
Full $199
Queen $229
*While supplies last
Walmart · Rt. 116 N · Stop & Shop · Rt. 116 S · Amherst College · Amherst Common · Sleepy Hollow Bed · Spirit Haus · Belchertown
328 College St. • Rt. 9 • Amherst • 253-2537 WE DELIVER!
M-TH 10-6 • FRI 10-7 • SAT 10-6 • SUN 12-4

PRINTING across from Bread and Circus
Sunraise Printing
413-586-7133
print@sunraiseinc.com
P.O. Box 390 • 322 Russell Street Hadley, MA 01035-0390
Custom Screen Printing!
Posters & T-Shirts
Sweatshirts • Golf Shirts Hats • Jackets • Bags • We Print Anything!
★ Posters ★ Stickers ★ Stationery ★ Newsletters ★ Copies ★ Signs ★ Invitations ★ Brochures ★ Thermography ★ Forms
BOXERS SHORTS!
YOUR NAME HERE
STADIUM CUPS!
CUSTOM CAPS!
www.sunraiseinc.com

All The Ingredients for...
A GREAT SCHOOL YEAR
•Back to School Supplies
•Natural Foods
•Vitamins
•Fresh Bake Shop
•Party Platters
•Full Service Pharmacy
•Dunkin Donuts
•Film Developing
•BOAR'S Head Deli Meats
•Floral Shop
SUPER STOP & SHOP
Use Your Stop & Shop Card for Check Cashing and Savings!
OPEN 24 HOURS - ROUTE 9, HADLEY
253 - 3227

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
• ABC ALES AND LAGERS
• PUB FARE
• LATE NIGHT MENU TIL' MIDNIGHT
• LIVE MUSIC
• FULL BAR
• SUNDAY JAZZ
• OPEN MIC
"THE BEST BAR ON THE WESTERN SIDE OF NORTH PLEASANT STREET"
"UPSTAIRS" @ THE A.B.C.
• POOL
• DARTS
• PING-PONG
• MS.PACMAN
• GALAGA
• FULL BAR
• ABC ALES AND LAGERS
• FOOD TIL' MIDNIGHT
• 21+ ONLY
24 N.PLEASANT ST. OCMP 253-4400 www.amherstbrewing.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The ghost of Bulger and the haunted presidency

Although the summer months emptied out the University of Massachusetts campus faster than the Mullins Center during the men's basketball games, the political and presidential struggles over President William M. Bulger raged through the hot summer months.

Bulger announced his resignation last month, and officially left office Sept. 1. The usually steadfast Bulger literally buckled under mounting pressure concerning the controversy of his fugitive mobster brother Whitey Bulger.

In many ways, this resignation comes as a blessing in disguise. Between Gov. Mitt Romney's threat to eliminate the university's presidential position, and the federal investigation into Whitey Bulger, who has made the FBI's Top 10 Most Wanted list, William Bulger appeared to be slightly distracted from his first born commitment: The University of Massachusetts.

Although Bulger is gone, this is not time to put the issue to rest. In fact, now is the time that the issue of the UMass presidency needs the most attention.

We now have a big change facing our University, and rather than dwell on the circumstances surrounding the resignation, we must look to the upcoming year and ask ourselves, "Where do we go from here?" We need to evaluate exactly what it is we did and did not like about the way in which the President's position was carried out and voice our thoughts about what we would like to see done differently in the future. Most importantly, this is the time to improve the actual process by which the new president is hired.

The resignation of Bulger should be seen at best, in a positive light. This is a chance for the university to revamp itself, and lift some of the cobwebs that Bulger left behind. So we've been slammed by a $41 million dollar budget cut, our physical education is all but expired, and our sports teams are going down the tubes. These circumstances can all be changed, along with a change in our school's presidency. All it requires is a little forethought. For instance, rather than handing over our University as a political gift to a 17-year veteran of the Senate (Bulger), this time we need to concentrate on finding a candidate who has the qualifications that UMass deserves, not someone who has been given the university as a gift for past political favors.

Bulger was great at raising money, which we are in dire need of now more than ever. But this cannot be the only qualification that the presidential candidates must demonstrate. He or she must demonstrate a drive to push the success of higher public education and work to boost the status of UMass. This will be vital for our educational welfare. We must not only gain the recognition of state lawmakers, but also earn the respect of the state-funded universities around the nation.

This won't happen if the board of trustees or the lawmakers of Massachusetts continue to view our flagship school as a political prize to be frittered away. Although the University has been forced to raise fees and cut hundreds of classes, the trustees still see no problem in sending Bulger on his way with a large chunk of cash. The chunk made a lovely severance package, totaling close to $1 million dollars. It makes you wonder how many classes, jobs or educational improvements that money could have been used for around campus.

It has been said that the fight to rid UMass of Bulger was almost as hard as the fight to rid the country of Nixon. If this is true, then a battle in this uphill war has been won. However, it is actions of the new president and the means by which he or she is hired that will determine whether or not we students have won the war.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

Commonwealth College saved from the cutting room floor

S. J. Port

"Students don't vote," proclaimed Senator Stan Rosenberg to a group of State House interns in July of this summer. A University of Massachusetts Amherst alumnus and devout supporter of the University system, Rosenberg's statement responded to an audience question concerning the perceived lack of concern from politicians for student's views, specifically on the issue of public higher education. His point, although difficult to swallow for the student audience, is unfortunately true. Students don't vote, and students don't appreciate the maxim, "If you're not turned onto politics, politics will turn on you."

In the land of higher education, there are those schools unaffected by legislative decisions, budget cuts, political strategy and Gov. Mitt Romney. Then there is the University of Massachusetts.

The value of knowing what is going on under the gold dome in Boston is enormous. Students who pay attention and contribute to discussions not only benefit their own understanding of how the world really works, but the University's as a whole. If more students took the time to read a newspaper, any newspaper, preferably of the large statewide coverage variety, they would know when the University (aka their opportunity to garner themselves a valuable education for less than $15,000 a year) desperately needs them to step up to bat for public higher education.

The battle to lessen the devastation of UMass by cuts was covered in depth by newspapers in Western Massachusetts but largely dismissed by the Boston media, despite the issue being one for every part of the state. This is in large part due to the work of those within the University's flagship district to speak out. Students and families of students who do not live in the Amherst district must inform their representatives that the issue of public higher education is important. The University system was created to pull the Amherst, Boston, Dartmouth, Lowell and Worcester campuses together in order to give the University more representative and greater power in the legislature. If the University is located in more towns, more representatives care about public higher education.

At a time when the University is taking the worst blows in it's history, students who live in towns without a University campus also must work to inform their representatives that this is important to the entire state. Representatives for Amherst, Senator Rosenberg and Rep. Ellen Story are already aware of this — other town representatives are not.

The UMass honors program, Commonwealth College, represents a giant success for the University. The program was one of the many state-funded programs this July that Governor Romney vetoed funding for. However, when the legislature took up the process of overriding vetoes, first the House and then the Senate quickly surmised and supported the value of this program, reinstating funding on the first day of sessions.

Students who pay attention and contribute to discussions not only benefit their understanding of how the world really works, but the University as a whole.

The respect and attention Commonwealth College holds with senators and representatives should be studied and understood, so that this same respect may be garnered for the University as a whole. However, this will not be simple, since Commonwealth College was born of the Board of Higher Education and not the University; it held attentions in Boston from its birth. Commonwealth College is also a separate line item in the state budget from the University.

The state budget is made up of hundreds of line items, each representing an organization to which the state designates funding. The legislature presents its budget to the governor as a sum of these many parts. The governor then has the power to veto the funding of individual line items within the budget presented as he sees fit. The University of Massachusetts is a single line item in the state's budget; this single line item includes the five campuses and the President's Office. Commonwealth College is one of only three budget line items separate from this that affect the University.

Begun in the fall of 1999, Commonwealth College was born of an initiative of the Massachusetts Board of Education to create an honors college somewhere in Massachusetts as a way of enhancing the entire state system. The Board outlined the primary objectives of the Commonwealth College: Improving the quality of public education in the Commonwealth, promoting public awareness of the quality of public institutions of higher education in the Commonwealth and providing a small, affordable and public option for the Commonwealth's most highly motivated, talented and achieving undergraduate students.

The Chancellor of the Board of Education at the time, Aaron Spencer, said of the initiative in 1997: "I happen to believe that the Commonwealth College will make a radical change in public higher education. I think every aspect of the system will be improved and I think it will get the attention of the legislature."

Spencer argued for the placement of the college at UMass Amherst, by saying that the Commonwealth College could improve its perception.

"We do not get the image that we should and the respect that a graduate should get," Spencer said in a 1997 Massachusetts Daily Collegian article. "The long range goals [of the Commonwealth College] are to lift standards, performance and environment throughout the whole system."

The legislature's decision to override the veto of funding for Commonwealth proves that Spencer was correct. Commonwealth College has earned respect and attention of the very legislature students must pay attention to. Parents of Commonwealth College students and students within the program call their representative — they are thankful that the state offers them a nationally recognized and respected honors college. Commonwealth College is a case of involved students and families finding representative in the legislature and stepping up to bat for the University.

S.J. Port is a Collegian Columnist.

The Collegian begins fresh in the new term

Dear readers,

We at the Massachusetts Daily Collegian continually strive to provide a high-quality product, published five days a week, 140 days of the year.

Sizes of the paper run from thick special issues, like this 36-page Welcome Back paper, through smaller sizes of eight to 16 pages. Throughout the year, you'll notice our sections will sport full and spot colors in addition to standard black ink.

You'll also discover The Collegian's two magazines — one from the sports department in the fall and The Scene, the Valley's arts & living magazine, in the spring. And anticipate various themed issues of the daily paper, like our dining out and apartment guides.

The most significant change in aesthetics, however, will undoubtedly be The Collegian's paper size, now 12.5 inches in width to mirror the standard of larger, full-time professional papers across the country. Our paper, a broadsheet publication with a former width of 14 inches wide since 1994, can thus offer more clean, streamlined layouts with this transition.

Our Web site, www.dailycollegian.com, will also gain a facelift this semester when the completely restyled site launches by October to offer readers even further access to our content. Thumbnails of our daily hard copies, more photography and up-to-date stories and even our Collegian Rates 2003-04 publication will all appear online, packaged to enhance its visual appeal and user-friendly access.

Ultimately, The Collegian is produced each year in such a diligent fashion to provide individuals of the University of Massachusetts and its surrounding community with a thorough look at issues and events affecting the area and to serve as a learning base for students eager to begin work in the publishing world.

Here's to a successful and productive year.

Best,

Jennifer Eastwood

Editor In Chief, Massachusetts Daily Collegian

U.S. soldiers still stuck in Iraq

Yousef Munayyer

It's been quite a while since the end of "major combat" in Iraq. The Pentagon made the announcement in mid-April but the question about whether the job has been completed cannot yet be answered. On April 11 I wrote, "With all the focus on the actual war, not enough attention has been paid to reconstructing the Iraqi infrastructure and government." The truth is very little planning was done on rebuilding Iraq, and if there was any planning done it was done very badly.

Our objectives going into Iraq, or at least the objectives that the American public was led to believe were 1. Iraq is harboring weapons of mass destruction. 2. Iraq is linked to Al-Qaeda and 3. Iraq poses an imminent threat to American security.

Well, to start off with the weapons of mass destruction. I think we all have seen how that's going. On March 30, Donald Rumsfeld said, "We know where (the weapons) are. They're in the area around Tikrit and Baghdad and east, west, north and south somewhat."

The U.S. has been in control of that nation since April and can't find weapons that are scattered all over the place. The administration made it seem as if WMD in Iraq were as abundant as oil; this is continually becoming a flat out lie. When the United Nations inspectors found no weapons after months of searching, the U.S. made them step aside; but they have yet to prove the U.S. can do a better job. What exactly is it they are looking for? Actual components, anthrax? Uranium? Or are they looking for proof of programs?

Whatever it is, they still haven't found it. As the days go by, it's looking worse and worse. However, it wouldn't totally surprise me if weapons were eventually "found" in Iraq right around election time.

Now on to Al-Qaeda; supposedly the American public was led to believe Iraq had ties with Al-Qaeda. In fact, in several polls, many Americans thought Iraq was behind the attacks on Sept. 11. As bogus as it seems, the administration continued to push this point alleging that a secular socialist Iraqi regime had close ties with a radical Islamic fundamentalist group.

Aside from it being illogical, there has been no proof of this. But proof has become unnecessary to the current administration, which exercises a constant "shoot first, ask questions later" attitude.

On March 28, I wrote, "The only link between the two is the letter 'q' in both names." Now, I must add that there is another link between Iraq and Al-qaeda: we can't find either of their leaders.

There were some stretches this summer when an American soldier would be killed every day, on some days two or three. Soldiers even began to ask why, publicly criticizing their superiors.

The imminent threat posed by Iraq was probably the biggest joke of the entire allegation. Tony Blair has been under constant fire in England over the "dodgy dossier" that was all "sexed up." President Bush has not been as criticized but has also lost support over this war. The pre-emptive doctrine used going into this war was baseless and American soldiers continue to die because of it.

The current status of Iraq is a mess. For months they have had little water or power. Imagine one of the world's most energy resource rich nations does not even have power to run itself. You think the heat wave that hit Europe was bad? Try Baghdad in August without air conditioning!

The people there who were initially happy with the American soldiers are growing to dislike them more by the day. Basra, a Shiite stronghold that initially welcomed U.S. troops is now rioting against them for food, water and electricity. The so-called Sunni triangle region has continued to be a dangerous area for American soldiers. There were some stretches this summer when an American soldier would be killed every day, on some days two or three. Soldiers even began to ask why, publicly criticizing their superiors like the Secretary of Defense (who after all this pre-emptive nonsense should change its name back to Secretary of War).

The motley crew of democratic candidates — only topped off by the candidates in the California gubernatorial re-call election — for President need to stress the Iraq blunder and focus on how such a derivation from national policies has continued to keep the economy sub-par.

In a hearing before a Senate committee this summer, Deputy Secretary of Defense Paul Wolfowitz was criticized for lying to the American public by Senator Joseph Biden. Wolfowitz and his panel readily admitted that they knew that American soldiers, in the hundreds of thousands, would be in Iraq for a long time.

I'm glad the Senate has become more wary of what is going on. Much of the responsibility for this war lies on the Congress for "abrogating" their right to go to war. They are starting to ask different questions now; maybe they had a change of conscience or maybe 2004 is readily approaching, but it may be too little too late to fix that constitutional abomination and change the situation in Iraq.

On Feb. 28 I wrote, "We are not going to walk out of Iraq in a year or two or 10, even if Saddam is gone on the first day of war. Many experts have said we may never leave Iraq because of how potentially unstable it will become. Are you prepared to pass on that debt to future generations?"

I think we are beginning to learn that we were not prepared for this and will not continue to stand for the loss of American soldiers in a country we should not have been in the first place.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian Columnist.

Letters to the Editor Policies

Committed to furthering a community dialogue, The Collegian invites reader opinions. Letters to the Editor should be directed to the Editorial/Opinion editor, submitted by e-mail to editorial@dailycollegian.com. No attachments please.

Letters can also be sent via fax to 413-545-3699 or by postal mail to Editorial/Opinion, The Collegian, 113 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, MA 01003.

Most letters meeting our guidelines appear in print. These guidelines are:

1. Letters must be no longer than 450 words. Letters exceeding this maximum will be returned to the writer to be shortened.

2. Letters must contain the writer's full name. Initials and nicknames are not acceptable. Anonymous or pseudonym letters will not be considered for publication. Additionally, University of Massachusetts staff and students should include their department affiliation or class standing; community members should indicate their city and state of residence. Writers must include a complete current address and a telephone number for verification purposes.

3. All letters are subject to editing for length, conformity to Associated Press style, tone and grammar.

4. We do not publish second-hand material as letters. This includes reprints and quotations, letters written for other publications and addressed to other people. We do not print letters that have appeared in other newspapers.

5. We do not publish letters considered too personal to be of general interest.

6. We do not publish letters written essay form. We do not publish poems.

7. At times, when we believe a given topic has been exhausted, we reserve the right to halt further comments.

8. We do not publish letters that we believe come under libel laws. Material can be libelous if it holds a private person or organization up to hatred, contempt, suspicion of wrongdoing, scorn or ridicule. Responses to writers or columnists that contain demeaning comments will not be printed.

9. We do not publish hate mail or letters that include expletives.

10. We reserve the right to limit an individual to a certain number of published letters in a semester at our discretion.

Minuteman is no minute controversy

New mascot no great change

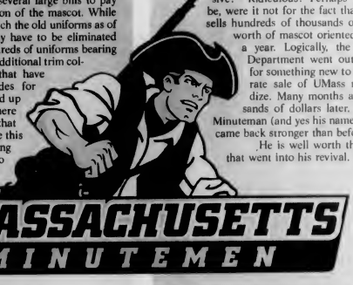
Dan Lamothe

When University of Massachusetts Athletic Director Ian McCaw announced last spring that UMass would keep the Minuteman as our school's mascot, the majority of campus celebrated it as a victory. Keeping the Minuteman was a vote for tradition, a vote for pride, and most importantly, a vote against the politically correct wingnuts who had their drawers in a bunch.

So McCaw trotted out to the podium, proclaiming the triumph of the Minuteman as a victory of the people. With that, he (who had seemed to be greasing the skids for a mascot change) and the Athletic Department did the only thing they could do to save face. Since they had already designated the old mascot as tired and outdated, they called for its revamping and revitalization.

What else could they do? Renaming UMass teams as something other than the Minuteman had already failed miserably in the ever-important arena of public opinion with students, alumni and national media alike. So for the price of an additional $15,000 paid to the Phoenix Design Group, UMass now has all the schematics necessary for its new Minuteman.

And the new logo isn't half bad. The plans have several positives to them, including the reintroduction of using "Massachusetts" as opposed to "UMass" in some of the logos, a move designed to promote the campus as a flagship university. It also has individualized logos for several sports, and the introduction of Minutewomen lettering, something that has never existed before.



The thing is, not much else has changed. We're still the Minutemen, and our merchandising sales will continue to be not great at best until our high profile sports teams don't stink. It has nearly nothing to do with the mascot, and nearly everything to do with the product on the field and court. There's nothing wrong with the new Minuteman — it just isn't going to be that big of a deal.

Back in junior high, I remember growing up in the region during Minuteman mania. It was everywhere. The "Refuse to Lose" mantra of John Calipari and his squads plastered cars with bumper stickers and walls with posters. If you liked hoops and you didn't have a UMass Starter coat, the other kids would make fun of you. Lou Roe, Edgar Padilla, and especially Marcus Camby were heroes to school kids and alumni alike throughout the region. Red and maroon were everywhere, and it was damn near impossible to get tickets to a UMass hoops game.

Funny thing, though. All those Camby jerseys that my friends and I were wearing? They had the same "tired" logos and wordmarks as the jerseys that McCaw and company insisted needed replacing last spring. The key difference, of course, is that in 1996, UMass lost two games. Nobody needs to remind us that the team didn't do quite so well last year.

The money spent on the new mascot isn't a big deal. It's a drop in the bucket in a multi-million dollar budget. For all its muscles, guns and sleek designs, though, the new mascot is still a Minuteman. And while I'd never want to see that changed, it irritates me the University seems to be pinning its hopes of merchandising millions on a new cartoon sketch of a dude in a three-corner hat.

Over the next few years, the Athletic Department will have several large bills to pay thanks to the reinvention of the mascot. While there are no plans to ditch the old uniforms as of yet, they will eventually have to be eliminated and replaced with hundreds of uniforms bearing the new logos and the additional trim colors (gray and black) that have been developed. Besides for new decals that will end up on football helmets, there have been no signs that any of that will be done this year, and it's something that is going to have to be fit into a future athletic budget — poor economy be damned.

UMass may even sell a few extra sweatshirts out of this whole deal. The Grey Wolf controversy, if nothing else, created a buzz, and that's probably something that the group marketing for new merchandise will be able to sell for a while. Long term, though, the only way that UMass will approach the enormous merchandising revenues that they had in the mid-1990s is by approaching the enormous athletic successes they had in the mid-1990s.

It's that simple. "Ugly" shirts will sell. Just win, baby. While the new mascot may be called "cute" or "cool," it alone is not going to bring in millions of dollars in revenue. To think anything else would be misguided.

Dan Lamothe is a Collegian Columnist.

Long live Sam the Minuteman!

Gilad Skolnick

There is no more fitting a mascot for the University of Massachusetts than the Minuteman, a depiction of colonial soldiers who, on the dawn of the revolution, bravely fought against the British soldiers here in Massachusetts. The Minutemen were among the first to stand up against the British and brought about the start of a series of events that cumulated with the independence of our country and the founding of modern day democracy, one of America's many gifts to the modern world.

Recently, the UMass athletics department shelled out $10,000 for Phoenix Design to come up with a new mascot. Is this excessive? Ridiculous? Perhaps it would be, were it not for the fact that UMass sells hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of mascot oriented apparel a year. Logically, the Athletic Department went out to look for something new to reinvigorate sale of UMass merchandize. Many months and thousands of dollars later, Sam the Minuteman (and yes his name is Sam), came back stronger than before.

He is well worth the money that went into his revival. He looks better than ever before, with his big muscles and brash attitude. Unlike the old 1970s Minuteman, who some would say looks like a UMass student on thirsty Thursday, the new Sam the Minuteman looks like he's ready for some action. Now in fighting position, his face is tense and the adrenaline is rushing up his spine. He is ready to crush the University of Connecticut Huskies, University of New Hampshire Wildcats and all other opposition and restore the fighting spirit into our school.

Furthermore, when UMass put into question Sam's very existence, the public outcry to keep him alive was so great that it really showed how many of us truly love our mascot. Nevertheless, there are some people out there who are bothered by the male gender, white ethnicity, and the "firearms issue" of the Minutenan. Perhaps these opponents of Sam want us to bury our heritage and history.

Were it not for these white males with guns, perhaps we'd still be under British rule, drinking tea with scones. Would our founding fathers have come up with modern democracy had we not been independent? The Minuteman doesn't say anything negative about women or other ethnicities, and shouldn't raise issues of bias, just as Presidents Day doesn't raise ethnic or gender issues. As for the firearms issues, the Minutemen were only using them for self defense against the British, who we all know fired first.

I don't think anyone could even argue that the Grey Wolves would be a better mascot. If it wasn't bad enough they closely resemble UConn's hideous Huskies, and that Grey Wolves haven't lived in the area for over a century, the phrase "Grey Wolves" is the name of a violent fascist terrorist organization in Turkey that tried to assassinate Pope John Paul II in 1981. Lastly, who wants to be associated with an animal such as a wolf, husky, or wildcat that is known for attacking the weak and helpless?

Sam isn't perfect though. A few years back, our mascot was stripped of his firearm during games, leaving him defenseless against other more vicious mascots as he continues to cheer us on. Also, his rifle is quite antiquated. I would prefer something a bit more modern, perhaps an M-16. It takes forever to load gunpowder into those things.

Unfortunately, there are those of us who are still giving Sam a hard time. As Residential Assistant Dina Itkin put it, "The new [mascot] is too violent." But then again there will always be someone to complain about something. Many other fellow students have also stated that they have found the old mascot to be goofy and lovable while the new one is brash and scary, but if we want to be serious about our sports we need to be serious about our mascot.

The new mascot will increase UMass spirit, school loyalty and may even increase overall GPA through increased confidence and moral. A new and improved mascot is even predicted to increase attendance to UMass sports, resulting in much needed revenue for our athletics department.

I predict happiness and caring throughout our campus to soar to levels that could have never been imagined. Can we really put a price on that? The Minuteman is on our state quarter; a 50-grand statue of him stands proudly near our campus pond; and similar themes use the Minuteman to link Massachusetts to its colonial past, such as the name of our football team. I have but one thing left to say: Long live Sam the Minuteman!

Gilad Skolnick is a Collegian Columnist.

Bush family: U.S. dream built from Jewish nightmare

Mark Ostroff

America had been very good to George Herbert Walker. At the dawn of the Roaring '20s, he was the president of a high-rolling investment firm in New York. He was a man of many talents and was extremely wealthy, owning mansions and apartments up and down the East Coast.

Walker's company was called Harriman Investment Firm. Two year into his work there, his boss and founder Averill Harriman had gone to Berlin to set up a German branch to the company. There, he met Fritz Thyssen. Thyssen was heir to a steel industry fortune and one of the many determined to restore Germany to its past glory. He believed that American investment into industry could save war torn Germany from total collapse.

For political support, he had turned to a war hero named General Erich Ludendorff, who introduced Thyssen to a man named Adolf Hitler and, before long, they were meeting privately in Munich with him. Hitler admitted that the Nazi movment was in need of funds and Thyssen was impressed enough to offer Hitler a $25,000 donation.

In 1923, Hitler's botched coup sent him to prison and faith in the Nazi party was shaken. Meanwhile Thyssen, along with Walker and Harriman, worked on establishing the Union Banking Corporation, which shared an address with Harriman Investment. This bank would invest in German industries. Focus was on making investing into Thyssen's now-inherited $100 million colossus, United Steelworks.

To get the job done, Walker hired his son-in-law Prescott Bush in 1926 to be the vice president of the investment firm. Prescott was a Yale graduate and a member of Yale's now infamous Skull and Bones Society. (George H.W. and George W. are members as well.) He personally took charge of investment into Germany's biggest steel corporation.

The investment-banking conglomerate had sold more than $50 million in German bonds to American investors, significantly improving the sad state of German industry. However, new economic conditions had proven detrimental to Hitler's party, which had already begun to accumulate debt as donations plummeted.

Hitler's secretary Rudolf Hess turned to Thyssen for help. Thyssen helped by purchasing and remodeling the new Nazi headquarters, formerly known as Barlow Palace. Neither Hitler nor Thyssen knew how valuable the purchase was. Two years later, the great depression hit Germany and Hitler's role as the great reformer was restored and more prominent than ever.

While Hitler held Germany in his hands, he announced the "rebirth of the German army." Thyssen's United Steelworks was to carry out Hitler's vision of the German war machine. Profits for Union Banking and Harriman Investment firm were at an all-time high from the successful venture of United Steelworks.

Five years later, Hitler invaded Poland, where a subsidiary of United Steelworks was operating. This company, known as the Consolidated Silesian Steel Corporation, was to be solely operated by Auschwitz slave labor. Thyssen decided to sell CSSC after chaos across Europe worried him about losing his subsidiary. He sold CSSC to Union Banking and Harriman Investment. Now under American control, Prescott Bush was put in charge of managing the company and even managed a portion of the slave labor.

In 1941, President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed the Trading With the Enemy Act, while Bush continued business until he was caught the following year.

However, the U.S. government did not prosecute Bush, but instead worked to cover up his business before it became widespread, fearing that such a scandal would lead to attacks on public morale and widespread strikes. Instead, the U.S. government seized all of Bush's stakes in the Nazi war effort. He was still allowed to run Union Banking and Harriman Investment, but only under strict government supervision.

When Prescott Bush stepped down and, ironically enough, became chairman of the National War Fund, Thyssen was arrested by Allied forces and made to pay reparations for his crimes. After he died, the U.S. government released all seized assets and American investors quietly sold their bonds off.

In the sell-off, Prescott Bush made $1.5 million from his shares. After his death, his son George H.W. Bush placed his father's ill-made fortune into a blind trust fund, which today still makes up a large part of the Bush estate. Today, the money made by Prescott is worth more than $15 million dollars.

To this day, no reparations by the Bush family have ever been made. No apology given, no responsibility taken. They are simply a family who built their American dream out of a Jewish nightmare.

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian Columnist.

Homosexual couples still lack marriage rights

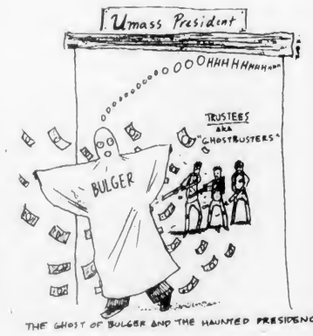
Zach Oelschlegel

We need the government. We need it to tax us so we can have schools, roads and other public services needed for basic civilization. We need it to pass laws so that we can live in a protected society without fear. Most importantly, we need the government to ensure that the rights of Americans will always be guaranteed and never compromised. Unfortunately, according to federal law, homosexuals have different rights. So much for that whole "All men are created equal" comment.

The Supreme Court finally took a step in the right direction a few months ago when all sodomy laws were officially abolished, having massive implications in terms of American justice. Sodomy laws basically said that a person did not have the right to do as he wanted in his private life. In some cases, this applied only to homosexuals and rendered them second-class citizens compared to other Americans. One's freedom depended on what state he lived in, especially the farther south of the Mason-Dixon Line he was. Since the first battle has been fought, the next logical step would be to grant homosexuals the same rights that heterosexuals are supposedly "guaranteed" by the U.S. Constitution. This decrees that equal rights belong to all citizens regardless of race, gender or sex. By not allowing homosexuals to legally marry, Washington is really declaring that homosexuals aren't citizens, even if they are law-abiding, pay their taxes, and don't rip the tags off their mattresses.

Now, a couple married in, say, Nevada, has the guarantee that every other state will recognize the marriage, whereas a Vermont marriage will not always be recognized by the other 49 states of the Union. This entire issue stems from Article IV of the Constitution, which says, "full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state" (marriage is one of these).

This brings in the idea of state's rights, an issue that has been heavily debated since our country's inception. Each state can regulate who does and doesn't get married, wherein the problem lies: For all states to recognize all marriages, marriage must be a federal status and not a state jurisdiction. Allowing some states not to recognize marriages from outside states is unconstitutional. Unfortunately, this status threatens complete chaos, making our country a confederacy and not a union, as if to say people residing in New York were New Yorkers and not Americans.



Specifying that marriage is between a man and a woman (which many states have done to combat the "threat" of gay marriage) is furthermore unconstitutional because it is sexual discrimination. However, the underlying factor to why this discrimination is permitted isn't its legality, but rather a religious import. While I pray to the same God that George Bush prays to, the whole notion of banning an act simply because it may or may not be immoral is absurd.

Just because I think the Ku Klux Klan and the ideas they spread are completely outrageous doesn't mean that I am going to demand Congress to pass a law outlawing their hate speech. I respect the Ku Klux Klan's constitutional right to think any way they would like. Likewise, because the religious right wing believes that homosexuality is wrong, it shouldn't have the means to force the creation of laws based on its' version of morality. If people had that right, Prohibition might still be in effect. Certain states could still ban interracial marriages, and our constitutional rights would be in the dumpster, alongside the moldy banana peels and last week's want ads.

While many carry out marriage as an aspect of their personal beliefs, the United States defines marriage as a civil union. Disallowing the right to a civil union for same-sex couples doesn't only permit discrimination; it prevents particular privileges that heterosexual couples take for granted. For instance, one may not be able to see an injured partner in the hospital simply because they aren't "married." Pension continuation after the death of a partner will be denied since there is no legal union tying those two people together. Simple things like joint tax returns can be rejected.

Homosexuals, once not allowed to have sex in many states, still don't have full rights with the anti-marriage laws that cloud our nation. They aren't the criminals or perverts as society once saw them; rather, they are our brothers, sisters, friends, and co-workers. Let's not sit here and let the tradition and morality of a few rule the nation. Instead, let's stand up for the Constitution, and what it truly means to live in the Land of the Free.

Zach Oelschlegel is a Collegian Columnist.

THE GHOST OF BULGER AND THE HAUNTED PRESIDENCY.

Actions speak.
Words are louder.
Write for Ed/Op. Be heard.

President Bulger resigns from UMass presidency

Members of the board of trustees accept his resignation on Aug. 6

Continued from page A1

"We should be much more aggressive in negotiating something that is fair. It's fair for him but not necessarily for the University, and that's who we represent. We represent them," Boyle said.

Prior to the vote to officially accept Bulger's resignation, many board members had kind words to say about the departing president.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

It's official: Bulger is chosen as UMass president

COLLEGIAN

Collegian archives: on Nov. 29, 1995, The Collegian printed news of Bulger's appointment.

"It's a sad day for the University of Massachusetts and for the citizens of our beloved Commonwealth," said Trustee Edward Dubilo. "The University of Massachusetts is such a better place because of President Bulger's leadership."

Trustee William Giblin noted the reluctance that he and many others on the board had on voting for the resignation.

"If I had truly voted my conscience this afternoon, I would not have made the decision to accept President Bulger's resignation. I voted for it simply because of a great respect I have for him," Giblin said.

Rosalyn Lankowski, student trustee on the Lowell campus, thanked Bulger for his work.

"On behalf of the students of the whole University system we want to thank you for your leadership and service to all the students. You will be greatly missed," Lankowski said.

Bulger then made a short statement about his resignation. He said that while the University was undergoing budget problems it also became the victim of a "calculated political assault." He went on to emphasize the achievements of the university over the past seven years as well as its future.

"Despite the many challenges, this University will persevere – and it will prosper. The University is larger than any of us who have the privilege to serve in it, and in serving it, we have a solemn obligation to act in the University's best interest – as I believe I am today," Bulger said.

Bulger also thanked the legislature and the board for their continued commitment to the university. "This board has been steadfast and solid. I deeply appreciate the strong vote of confidence you gave me just six weeks ago, as well as your willingness to judge me on my own merits," Bulger said.

The 69-year-old president's decision to leave came after two weeks of private meetings with Fey. It also came at the end of a long summer of swirling controversy over his private life and his position as president. In July, Bulger testified before a congressional committee concerning his mobster brother James "Whitey" Bulger, who has been on the run since 1995. Gov. Mitt Romney and Attorney General Tom Reilly publicly pressured Bulger to resign on several occasions this summer, prompting the board to issue a statement of support in July. Bulger has been president of the university since 1996.

University leaders had mixed feelings about the terms of Bulger's resignation. Amherst student trustee Hannah Fatemi felt that Bulger made the decision independent of politics.

"It was his decision and I think that's good that it was his and not the governor's. The board did its job and it didn't let Boston politics get involved. He will be missed, he's done good for our school," Fatemi said.

Trustee Robert Sheridan felt that Boston politics had a huge impact on Bulger's decision to leave. "There's been so much politics in this. We reluctantly came to the agreement on both sides that we would accept a resignation. He's done an incredible job and it's a record of achievement and success…right now it might be the best thing that can happen to stabilize what's going on. Maybe the political rhetoric will die down."

Amherst campus Student Government Association president Dave Carr felt the decision is offering the University system mixed blessings.

"I think it's a loss for the University on one hand, I think it's also an opportunity. We've been getting a lot of bad press because of the governor's view on President Bulger," Carr said. "I think it's an opportunity for us to step back into the light. He set up the building blocks for us to take our next step and I think we're just going to move from there. I don't think we can sit and ponder what we're losing but instead

BULGER PHOTOS GERALD H. LING / COLLEGIAN

President Bulger on Aug. 6, at the press conference where he announced his resignation.

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
$139
★ Student Special ★
4 months
Best Aerobics-Best Machines
KEISER • NAUTILUS • FREE WEIGHTS • CYBEX • STAIRMASTERS • LIFECYCLES • TREADMILLS • ELLIPTICALS • LIFEROWER
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0000 90 AMHERST
ON BUS ROUTE • OPEN 7 DAYS
www.amherstathletic.com

WELCOME BACK
TO THE TOWN OF AMHERST

Yes, we enjoy the slower pace of a summer in Amherst. But university and college students are what make Amherst the great place that it is to live, work and play; and we welcome you back to our town – our town and your town.

Relations between the Town and the University remain good, even while we all struggle with financial problems; and University students have played a big part in those good relations. Student activities such as arts and athletics have always provided culture and entertainment for townspeople as well as for members of the University community. Students have always provided many volunteer services, both on an individual and a group basis. The student firefighters and EMTs have provided vital services to the town for many years. The annual, spring "Into Amherst" day (sadly, rained out last year) has been the most visible way for large numbers of students to provide services to the town you live in. We love the Community Service Learning program, and there are other student services too numerous to mention.

Some students have also participated on Town boards and committees and at Town Meeting. One such committee, a Community Partnership on alcohol-related issues, has been active for almost five years. The Partnership includes representatives of students, landlords, administrators of the Town and educational institutions, and other citizens.

Progress that that Partnership made on alcohol and behavior issues has, at least temporarily, been overshadowed by the "riot" last May. The University administration, the new Hadley District Court, and the Town of Amherst will redouble efforts to ensure that circumstances of the kind that led to that incident will not happen again. The Amherst Police Department is dedicated to protecting the safety of Amherst's citizens and visitors – including your safety. We hope that students can enjoy college life without serious alcohol-related incidents.

Transportation to and parking in and around downtown Amherst has been improved over the past few years, so we hope to see you downtown often. Please abide by parking regulations, or use the buses that are paid for by your student fees, or use the bicycle lanes and racks downtown.

Thanks again from the Town of Amherst, and have a good year.

Select Board
Town of Amherst

Barry Del Castilho
Amherst Town Manager

eBay & Domino's Deliver the Hottest School Deals!
DELL Free Shipping! on any New Notebook* at www.ebay.com/Dell
ENTER CODE: DOMINOS at checkout ebay
$5 off any $50 purchase!* Including Textbooks and more!
First-time buyers only, excludes shipping & handling at half.com by ebay
ENTER CODE: DOMINOS at checkout
To learn more about the great deals log onto www.ebay.com/dominos
*See site for complete details
PLUS: Enter to WIN 1 MILLION eBay Anything points*
Call us September 1 to try our new Philly Cheese Steak Pizza!

Bulger's goodbye speech

August 6, 2003

The past two years have been a time of great stress for the University of Massachusetts.

During this period, state funding for the University has decreased by 26 percent. The results are known to all of us.

We recognize that the University has not been singled out for harsh treatment, and that this has been a period of acute fiscal and economic distress for the Commonwealth, forcing state government leaders to make wrenching cuts throughout the length and breadth of the state budget.

The conduct of the University community has been heroic. The chancellors, working with faculty and staff, have maintained the academic excellence on all five campuses.

It is a matter of concern that as we have been dealing with our fiscal challenges, the University has become the target of what I think must fairly be described as a calculated political assault.

This assault has been mounted from a particular quarter and manifests itself in many ways; in a proposal that would have dismantled the five-campus UMass system; in a subsequent proposal that would have eliminated the Office of the President; in character attacks on distinguished members of our Board of Trustees, and by the creation of a stated "litmus test" stipulating that future members of the UMass board must be willing to sign away their independent judgment before taking their seats.

Happily the University of Massachusetts system has not been dismantled; a president's office that coordinates the system and helps to generate more money than it expends remains; and the attacks on dedicated public citizens who serve on our board are being revealed for what they are. And every effort will be made to assure that trustees will remain independent and will be devoted to the betterment the University of Massachusetts – and to no one or nothing else.

Theses assaults – politically motivated to be sure – come at a time when the University of Massachusetts, like many public universities across the nation, is struggling to cope with the effects of painful budget cuts.

Although we have met the challenges and are up to the task of meeting more, I increasingly believe that the University and its Board of Trustees should not be subjected to further assault.

I hope that the step I take today will be helpful in our effort to provide a measure of protection for the University.

Those of us sitting in this room – trustees, chancellors, faculty and staff – have dedicated much time and effort to building this university. Working side by side, we have raised academic standards, we have brought about important academic and managerial collaborations, we have raised the bar with respect to fund-raising and other self-help efforts, we have launched an online education program that takes its place alongside the finest in the land, and we have increased public appreciation for an institution that for too long did not receive the appreciation it was due. Since 1996, we have seen the academic credentials of entering students steadily mount, enrollment has grown, research funding has increased by more than $100 million, licensing revenue from faculty discoveries and innovations has soared from $750,000 to more than $20 million, annual private support has more than doubled, and we have seen a dramatic growth in the number of endowed chairs: from four chairs to 46 chairs at present.

Our work will continue. Despite the many challenges, this University will persevere – and it will prosper. The University is larger than any of us who have the privilege to serve in it, and in serving it, we have a solemn obligation to act in the University's best interest – as I believe I am today.

I thank the legislature for its steadfast support for the University – providing funding increases during the good budget seasons, approving incentive programs that helped to spur fundraising, and, most recently overriding gubernatorial vetoes that threatened Commonwealth College and would have deepened our overall budget cut. The legislature has been a stalwart friend. It is a place where appreciation for the University of Massachusetts runs deep.

In closing, a personal message to trustees past and present.

A little more than eight years ago, then – Trustee James O'Leary called and asked if I would consider becoming a candidate for the UMass presidency. After some brief deliberation, I said "yes," and what an inspired decision that was.

The trustees who served at that time embraced my candidacy, and subsequent iterations of the board have offered support, wisdom and inspiration throughout these years. This board has been steadfast and solid. I deeply appreciate the strong vote of confidence you gave me just six weeks ago, as well as your willingness to judge me on my own merits.

During my presidency, I have had the pleasure of serving with three distinguished chairmen: Dan Taylor, a skillful, dedicated leader; Bob Karam, an energetic, passionate chairman who challenged us to build on success and who believed that UMass helped him to achieve his American Dream; and Grace Fey, a quintessential public citizen who has led with such dignity…and courage…and integrity. Grace – one word does not say it all –you have been a partner, a counselor and a friend. You have my boundless gratitude, as do other members of this board.

Working together, we have made things better. What more could we seek?

Thank you.

Campus Perspectives

"What do you think about Bulger's resignation?"

By Gerald H. Ling

"I feel that he [Bulger] plays a substantially powerful part in the Massachusetts Government and that the present University administration felt threatened by the fact that his brother is involved with orgtanized crime. This was used as an excuse to get rid of him. He was a fine president and his connections were much needed."

university staff
Physics department
- Tom Schnicker

"He's getting paid too much to leave. In addition, they're going to have to pay the replacement as well. Given the current situation with the budget cut, I think it would be wiser to just have him stay as the president."

senior
Women's Studies
- Stephanie Parker

"UMass had various problems while he [Bulger] was the president, but it's not his fault. He has been doing a good job, but I think that it was a good choice for him to retire. He was thinking selflessly for the University."

sophomore
Cultural Anthropology
- Michelle Moreno-Lee

"He walked away with too much money, with the knowledge that UMass is in financial turmoil."

junior
Psychology
- Katherine Hemond

"I think he got way too much money. By getting rid of his position, I don't know what's going to become of it."

senior
Interior Design
- Grace Rais

"It was for the best that Bulger resigns. His resignation would shift the public's attention from the already deteriorating reputation of the University."

senior
Animal Science
- Bianca Ortolani

LABELLE & LEITNER
Specializing in foreign car sales and service:
BMW, Audi, Volvo, Porsche, VW
Used cars for sale to meet all price ranges www.LALAutosales.com
GREENFIELD imported car parts
WEBER RECARO BOGE KONI SACHS ANSA REPCO VDO BROSPEED MOMO SONAX PIAA KYB www.glcp.com
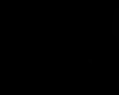
335 High Street • Greenfield, MA
Parts Dept. 413-774-9819 • Service/Used Cars 774-5517



THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
(32 years of service—and counting!)
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Fall Semester 2003 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Room 163C of the Campus Center for all meetings •Sept. 8 (Mon) •Sept. 9 (Tues) •Sept. 10 (Wed)
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs, Sep 11th @ Boltwood table CC Concourse.
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

Welcome to University Health Services
Services Include:
✓ Allergy Clinic
✓ Laboratory
✓ Eye Services
✓ Contraceptive Services
✓ Radiology
✓ Physical Therapy
✓ Mental Health
✓ General Medical Care
✓ OB/GYN, Orthopedic, Acupuncture, and Surgical Consults
Clinic Hours:
8:30 to 5:00 by appointment
24-hour urgent care
Appointments:
Medical 577-5101
Eye 577-5244
Mental Health 545-2337
NEW! Acupuncture services available at UHS. Great rates!
Please bring your insurance card with you so we can update your records.
Students taking less than 5 credits are not billed on their tuition bill and need to make payment/enrollment arrangements directly at UHS Enrollment Area for coverage. This includes graduate students who have the health eligibility benefit.
Refer to the Basic Health Plan brochure or call Patient Services at 577-5192 for more information.
℞ UMASS HEALTH SERVICES PHARMACY
150 Infirmary Way
PHONE: 413.577.5030 • REFILL LINE: 413.577.5066
HOURS OF OPERATION: Monday–Friday 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.
Saturday 9:00 a.m. to 1:00 p.m. during academic year
✓ Full service pharmacy
✓ We accept most major insurances (Blue Cross/Blue Shield, Aetna, Tufts, Harvard Pilgrim, Health New England, GIC, Cigna, etc.). Please present card at Pharmacy.
✓ Full line of over-the-counter products at reduced price to save you money.
✓ We stock a full line of diabetic and surgical supplies, cold care kits and condoms.
uhs
University Health Services • 150 Infirmary Way• www.umass.edu/uhs

INTERNATIONAL

Quick FACTS

LIBERIAN FLAG

- Area Comparative - Slightly larger than Tennessee.
- Climate - Tropical; hot, humid; dry winters with hot days and cool to cold nights; wet cloudy summers with frequent heavy showers.
- Natural Resources - iron ore, timber, diamonds, gold, hydropower.
- Environment Current Issues - Tropical rainforest deforestation; soil erosion; loss of biodiversity; polution of coastal waters from oli residue and raw sewage.
- Population is 3,317,176 as of July 2003.
- Median Age - 18.1 years
- Age Structure - 0-14 years is 43.4% of population. 15-64 years is 53%. 65+ years is 3.6%.
- Life Expectancy at Birth - 48.15 years
- Population below poverty line - 80%
- Labor Force by Occupation - Agricultura 70%, industry 8%, services 22%.
- Industries - Rubber processing, oli processing, timber, diamonds.
- Agricultural Products - Rubber, coffee, cocoa, rice, cassava (tapioca), palm oil, sugarcane, bananas, sheep, goats, timber.

The U.S. steps into Liberian crisis

COMPILED FROM A.P. REPORTS

West African peacekeepers backed by U.S. Marines worked Aug. 19 to help Liberia's new peace deal take hold, although fresh clashes between government and rebel fighters were reported in the countryside.

West African forces and a few Marines patrolled new front lines outside Monrovia, surveying dope-smoking rebel fighters clad in rainmatted women's wigs at the insurgents' checkpoint on the Po River, about six miles outside the capital.

Combatants upheld a cease-fire in Monrovia after the signing on Aug. 18 of a landmark power-sharing deal meant to lift once-prosperous Liberia out of 14 years of ruinous conflict by warlords and militias vying for power.

International mediators worked Aug. 18 to wrap up a peace deal for Liberia, while calm settled into the capital and shopkeepers opened for the first time in months.

The last time Monrovia saw such calm was July 19, during a break in fighting between government forces and rebels who had besieged the capital since early June.

Food maskets were open for the first time in a month, but many of the crowds were out of money after selling all their belongings to buy food during the attacks. When the cash ran out, they and their families lived on bristly flower leaves and snails.

The small, welcome signs of peace came a week after President Charles Taylor resigned Aug. 11 and flew into exile in Nigeria, forced out by West African and U.S. pressure and 10 weeks of rebel attacks on the capital.

Insurgents fighting for three years to oust Taylor have besieged the capital for two months, spurring urban mortar barrages and gun battles that have killed more than 1,000 people and displaced hundred of thousands.

Taylor has promised repeatedly to yield power since June 4, when a joint United Nations and Sierra Leone court revealed the war crimes indictment against him for supporting rebels in that nation.

He is blamed in nearly 14 years of conflict in Liberia that have killed more than 100,000 people, and accused of gun- and diamond-trafficking and other dealings that have fueled conflicts in West Africa.

The fighting has split the capital into the government-held downtown and the rebel-held port, which is controlled by the larger of Liberia's two rebel groups.

The progress in the peace deal came after the lead rebel movement dropped a condition that had threatened to scuttle the peace talks in Accra, Ghana.

The rebel group, Liberian United for Reconciliation and Democracy, yielded on a demand for one of the highest posts in the interim power-sharing government, which is meant to lead Liberia for two years.

The rebels had wanted the post of vice-chairman in Liberia. West African mediators threatened to suspend the talks for a month unless the rebels relented.

Liberia's post-Taylor government and the country's second rebel group already have agreed not to seek the highest jobs in the interim government.

The peace deals would call for current President Moses Blah to cede power by October, handing control over to the interim government. That government would see Liberia through elections.

Taylor handed over power to Blah when he resigned Aug. 11, heading into exile in Nigeria under pressure from West African leaders, the United States, and the rebels.

Rebel leaders and Liberia's government signed a pledge to let aid workers deploy freely throughout the starving, war-ruined country.

Humanitarian aid trickled into Liberia's devastated capital by plane and boat Aug. 16, a welcome relief but not nearly fast enough for residents famished after 70 days of siege. Fighting persisted in the interior, blocking hopes of immediate help for the millions trapped there.

Rebels ceded control of the port Aug. 14 to West African peace troops backed by U.S. Marines, ending a rebel siege of President Taylor's government that killed hundreds and left residents in government-held areas with little to eat but flower leaves and snails. The rebels withdrew after Taylor resigned.

Humanitarian workers are returning to the city after largely vacating Monrovia during the siege, and the first aid ship docked Aug. 15. Aid workers distributed small amounts of aid Aug. 16, handing out sacks of commeal to families at a church and elsewhere in the city.

Fighting in Monrovia killed well over 1,000 people, and left hundreds of thousands of others wasting by the day.

Guns have largely been silent in Monrovia since the Nigerian peacekeepers arrived in the city nearly two weeks ago, and negotiators pushed for a final peace.

The rebels, who began their siege of Monrovia on June 6, had pledged to pull out at noon on Aug. 14 if Taylor left and peacekeepers were deployed. President Bush had ruled out contributing a significant force until Taylor departed.

Washington has stressed that the U.S. role would focus mostly on humanitarian assistance.

It was the biggest U.S. mission in Africa since Somalia in 1993. The United States previously had about a dozen soldiers on the ground in Liberia, a country founded by freed American slaves in the 19th century.

Both sides have kept their AK-47s, grenades and rocket-launchers, although most of the armed insurgents have pulled out. The U.S. envoy for Liberia, Jacques Klein, announced on Aug. 17 the United Nations would donate $50 million to help demobilize fighters and restore water and electricity, both knocked out by Liberia's civil war from 1989 to 1996 and never repaired under Taylor.

COURTESY CIA WORLD FACTBOOK

COURTESY MAGPERT.COM

The Area's Best Fitness & Health Club

UltimateFitness
THE HEALTH AND FITNESS CENTER

Located in the Stop & Shop Plaza on Route 9

For more information call 253-7571

- Full Aerobics Programs Including:
  - Cardio Kickboxing
  - Yoga
  - And Many More
- Nutritional Consultation
- Tanning
- Sauna
- Juice Bar & Supplements
- Personal Training

SEMESTER SPECIAL $160

5 Year Anniversary Special: FREE UNLIMITED TANNING!

(With purchase of a semester membership by 9/21/03!)

NO ENROLLMENT FEE!!

- Stairmasters
- Precor Treadmills
- Lifecycle Recumbant Bikes
- Lifecycle Upright Bikes
- Precor Crosstrainers
- Body Masters and Icarian Free Weights
- Cybex Circuit Training Equip.

Inquire About Pilates

Now offering Aerobics only memberships

INTERNATIONAL

UMass speaks

By Ferron Salniker
Collegian Staff

As American intervention continues in Iraq and Liberia, professors and students from the University of Massachusetts continue to discuss and question the United States government's foreign policy and recent international actions.

While watching the Iraqi government begin the attempt to establish a new political system members of the UMass community have raised concerns over the future of Iraq and its citizens. M.J. Peterson, a chair for the political science department and expert in world politics says establishing Iraqi politics turned out to be more difficult than many politicians predicted. She also said that while paying attention to U.S. decisions, it is important to keep in mind that the choices of Iraqis themselves are more significant.

"There seems to be little agreement among them about what should happen next," she said. "That could leave the situation very vulnerable to exploitation by people prepared to use force rather than persuasion."

UMass sophomore Amy Hindley, an art history and elementary education major, agreed that Iraq would remain unstable for a long period of time.

"I think many people in Iraq are pleased to be rid of such a cruel dictator but I think it will be a long time before Iraqi's have a government of their own," she said.

While reviewing the situation in Iraq, students and professors have also raised the issue of what the intervention has changed within the international community.

"Combined with U.S. nonparticipation in efforts to deal with things other governments take more seriously like global warming or establishment of the Intl. Criminal Court, the U.S. comes across as very disconnected from the rest of the world," said Peterson.

Peterson said the Bush administration is not bothered by it because it "has decided that though isolationism is no longer viable, unilateralism is."

Others expressed concern that the failed search for nuclear weapons in Iraq by the U.S. has set a dangerous precedent

"It gives us the authority to do it again despite that we haven't found weapons of mass destruction," said Umass junior Aric Binaco, a philosophy major. Peterson mentioned that countries have attacked neighbors before with charges similar to those of the U.S.'s.

"Countries have attacked neighbors after making flimsy charges about provocations or dangers before: it was a staple of both Stalinist and Axis foreign policy in the 1930s," she said.

Students and professors remain curious as to what the repercussions will be for the credibility of the Bush administration.

"We've seen other U.S. administrations treat intelligence data loosely, and they have usually paid the price in reduced credibility for a period afterward," said Peterson. "It will be interesting to see what price this one pays for how long."

When comparing the U.S. intervention in Iraq to the intervention in Liberia, many agreed that the situations were very different.

"I think Iraq was more about money and politics for the U.S.," said Binaco. "Liberia seems more about actual people."

"Liberia has had a civil war raging for some time, and there seems to be significant desire for outside involvement among Liberians," Peterson said when explaining the difference between the situations. "They may be at the point where successful post-conflict reconciliation can begin: all factions tired of fighting and aware they can't prevail by force alone."

Strife in Iraq not yet over

COMPILED FROM A.P. REPORTS

Although Bush called for an end to the major conflict on May 1, allied occupation continues to come at a great cost financially and in terms of deaths and injuries on both sides.

Death estimates from news groups and private organizations range from 6,000 to 10,000 Iraqi civilians. The United States and its allies have sustained twice as many deaths as they did in the Gulf War, with current estimates of over 300 allied deaths. The majority of these deaths occurred after Bush's announcement that the major conflict was over.

There have been wide ranging estimates of injuries sustained in the war, but the most common tally found for major injuries is approximately 20,000. All of these estimates of the human costs of the war are without counts from the former Iraqi government.

In addition to the costs sustained through the loss of lives, the war and ensuing occupation has come to a great financial cost as well. In fact, the occupation and reconstruction has cost more since the war's end than the major conflict itself. According to the latest analysis by the Congressional Budget Office, the 2004 fiscal year's budget deficit will be $500 billion after accounting for the rebuilding of Iraq.

Iraq's infrastructure is still in ruins. Oil pipelines continue to be targets for bombings and fires. Water and food shortages continue to cause death and illness, as the estimate for malnourishment climbed over 20 million this summer. Most health clinics and hospitals continue to be close, leaving most of the injured without care. Many U.S. citizens, as well as other nation's leaders, continue to question the legitimacy of the war as documents reporting Iraq's possession of nuclear weapons have turned up to be false.

As of Aug. 16, 55 of Iraq's most wanted are still missing or unaccounted for according to U.S. Central Command. Including the number one most wanted, Saddam Hussein, whose whereabouts are still unknown.

SAMIR MIZBAN/ASSOCIATED PRESS

A British soldier stands guard at the British foreign office in Baghdad, Iraq on Aug. 24. Three British soldiers were killed and one was seriously wounded during a guerilla attack in Basra, 375 miles south of Baghdad.

- Aug. 26 Death tolls of postwar conflicts reported to rise above those during the war.
- Aug. 22 State Department announces capture of Ali Hasan al-Majid, a.k.a."Chemical Ali"
- Aug. 19 Truck bomb hits humanitarian effort. U.N. headquarters hit in Baghdad, killing 20 people, including the head of the U.N. mission.
- Aug. 17 Oil pipeline in north blown up by guerrillas. TV cameraman shot by U.S. troops. Camera mistaken for grenade launcher.
- Aug. 15 Oil export pipeline blown up stopping all exports to Turkey.
- Aug. 9 Rioting sparked in Basra due to fuel and power shortages.
- Aug. 8 U.S. troops kill civilian father and his three sons as they attempt to run home for curfew.
- July 29 Tape of Saddam Hussein declaring his two sons, Uday and Qusay died as martyrs for Iraq and pledges that U.S. will be defeated.
- July 28 Tony Blair and other British ministers accused of war crimes in Iraq by Greek Lawyers.
- July 25 Japan approves largest deployment of troops since 1945 to aid U.S.
- July 22 Saddam Hussein's sons, Uday and Qusay, are killed in Mosul.
- July 17 Audiotape of Saddam played on Arab television station condemning Iraqi governing council. Anniversary of 1969 Ba'athist revolution
- July 13 First meeting of Iraq's governing council.
- July 11 CIA director, George Tenet, claims responsibility for Bush's false war claims.
- July 8 White House spokesman Ari Fleisher says report on Iraq's uranium "did not turn out to be accurate."
- July 4 Tape of Saddam Hussein urges guerrillas to continue resistance to U.S. occupation.
- June 13 Bloodiest attack since fall of Baghdad kills 100 Iraqi civilians; researchers report approximately 10,000 civilians died in war.
- June 6 Hans Blix criticizes U.S. and British weapons intelligence because WMD were never found.
- June 4 Blair rejects calls for independent judicial inquiry into case for war.
- May 30 British soldier arrested for torturing Iraqi prisoners.
- May 22 U.N. Security Council votes 14-0 to lift sanctions and hand control of Iraq to U.S. and Britain. Syria boycotts vote.
- May 1 Bush declared end to major conflict in Iraq.

WELCOME BACK!

Have YOU registered for online Career Services?

Is this your last year?
Interested in an internship?
Need resume or cover letter help?

For more information about how Career Services can help YOU...

CALL us at 545-2224
CLICK your way to www-ccn.acad.umass.edu
WALK to our office at One Career Center Way
(across from the Newman Center)

CareerServices

New speaker, new year for the SGA

COURTESY JARED NOKES

New SGA speaker Jared Nokes with Chancellor Lombardi. Nokes, along with SGA President David Carr, are planning a student-oriented agenda for the upcoming school year.

By Courtney Charles
Collegian Staff

Even though school was out of session, the Student Government Association (SGA) passed 24 motions during the summer months. The motions were passed by the Coordinating Council, which is comprised of the six chairs of the committees.

"This is a record," said Jared Nokes, the new speaker of the senate. "Last summer we passed about six."

Among the motions, a resolution was passed in response to Bulger's resignation declaring that the SGA "is appreciative of the public service of President Bulger and wished the former president the best of luck in future endeavors."

"I think he did amazing things for the University," said SGA President David Carr. "He really set it up for the future. He set down a great foundation for the next president."

Although Carr called Bulger's resignation a "loss for the university," he also said there would be different efforts now that he is gone, especially in areas of fund raising. According to Carr, some people would not give to the university knowing Bulger was president.

"But over Bulger's term, the endowments of the university increased tenfold," Carr said. "This started us on the route to being a premier research institution among top-tier schools.

Included in the SGA's resolution were statistics documenting the increased standards of the university since 1996. These included an upward enrollment every year, the creation of an honors program, and the increase of endowed faculty chairs from four to 40.

Although approving Bulger's term as president of the university, the SGA passed a resolution stating the SGA "does not approve of the excessive amount of the severance package for President Bulger."

According to Nokes, if Bulger had worked the remaining four years of his contract, he would have received $1.6 million. Instead, with the severance package, he will end up with $2 million.

"We have to be more careful with our severance packages," Nokes said.

As for the idea that Romney had a personal agenda for forcing Bulger's out, Carr said "whether he did that or not is up for debate." Although if he had, Carr agreed that he would be stamping the university down by forcing its president out.

Carr and Nokes also discussed plans for the upcoming school year. Carr stressed the SGA's upcoming agenda as very student oriented.

"We're focused number one on student activities by putting on more programming through the SGA and campus activities to make them more user friendly," Carr said. In the last two years things have been different because the Chancellor, Vice-Chancellor and Dean of Students have been more interested in students than in years past, he said.

"Since students are the lifeblood of the university it makes it easier for us in the SGA to fight for students if the administration believes we're right," Carr said.

In the upcoming year he said that the SGA will be working with the New Vice Chancellor of Campus Affairs and Student Life, Michael Gargano.

"He's very student-focused and student friendly," Carr said. "The energy the man has gives us something to look forward to."

Carr also discussed the Collegiate Readership Program. He said there is going to be a question on the fall ballot asking students if they would pay $2.50 a semester to have access to the Boston Globe, the New York Times, and USA Today.

Both Carr and Nokes are pleased with the new mascot.

"I like the new look," Carr said. "It's a much livelier representation of the minuteman. It goes away from an old man with a gun slung over his shoulder." Nokes said the revamped mascot was more marketable for the university.

One issue that arose in past years and which continues to concern Carr and Nokes is the issue of Student Legal Services. Located on the ninth floor of the Campus Center, both Carr and Nokes feel that the student body is lacking in knowledge about the free legal advice they have access to.

"Students need to realize it's free legal advice for anything," Carr said. "I can't stress enough that it's free. Free."

Nokes agreed that it is "the single largest agency we spend money on." He cited an amount of about $270,000 of undergraduate student money goes to legal services each year.

The SGA has made plans for student activities for the first week back. Included in these plans are a Casino Night on the concourse at 9:30 p.m. Sept. 5 and Darrell Hammond in the Fine Arts Center at 10 p.m. on Sept. 6.

Carr summed up his ideas for the upcoming year.

"It's really about working for students," he said.

Gargano revitalizes office

Continued from page A1

will be to ask freshmen about their expectations of UMass and whether the university was able to live up to these expectations. The areas he will ask about include food, social life, residential living and more. In areas that fall short, Gargano plans on asking for suggestions and opinions on what could be done for improvement, and then immediately setting to work on plans to address these issues. In areas that seem to meet expectations, Gargano is set on exceeding them.

"I want to put a human face to Student Affairs, to show that we are just like them [students] – heart, body and soul," Gargano said.

He said that during the first week back there will be banners and buttons declaring "Welcome Back Students" and his new office motto of "Students First."

Gargano also wants to reinvigorate and redesign all the UMass websites, starting with the Office of Admissions.

Gargano is also planning weekly meetings with Student Government Association President Dave Carr and Speaker Jared Nokes. The purpose of these meetings will be "exchanging ideas, what they are doing within the university."

Gargano said he has a special interest in the "pulse of the student government and to know what it is wrestling with."

When he came to visit the campus and interview last May, Gargano said that he met Carr and former Speaker Dan Saunders. He was very impressed with them and "if they were a reflection of the student body, knowing my love for students, this would be the perfect place."

"I think UMass is the perfect place for me and presents the perfect challenge to make UMass a nationally and internationally recognized institution," Gargano said.

Student drowns

Continued from page A1

ing conservation land.

Dewangan's body was found in about 10 feet of water near the beach off State Street. He was declared dead at the scene.

Dewangan's death remains under investigation, but neither drugs nor alcohol appears to have been a factor. Dewangan's family in India was notified immediately after the death.

On July 3, 2002, a 23-year-old Holyoke man died after being pulled out unconscious from the pond. In July 2000, another man swimming at the pond at night had to be rescued and hospitalized after inhaling water.

An old stone dam across from the Mill River forms Puffer's Pond, and the conservation area around the pond includes an extensive trail system.

Although the drowning was the second in just over a year, the pond does not have lifeguards. Many signs reading "swim at your own risk" are posted around the area. Caretakers are at the site to maintain the grounds and to make sure that people obey the conservation area's rules.

ALANA's place in the SGA as an apportioned caucus is questioned

Continued from page A1

issues."

According to Nokes this issue was a judicial case four years ago. The judiciary said it was unconstitutional but couldn't strike it because it was a political problem.

The following year the Senate amended the by-laws, said Nokes. But the by-laws also rule that if something is to be amended then it has to be done through a referendum.

The referendum passed in the senate with the two-thirds majority vote needed. The vote then went to the general student body.

The majority of students voted to keep ALANA on. According to the ALANA office, it was about 80 percent.

Nokes said he now needs to make a decision by the first meeting of the SGA, which he said is tentatively scheduled for Oct. 1.

"I haven't made a decision yet," Nokes said.

He said that the Senate has told him not to recognize the caucus, and that the Attorney General and the Coordinating Council has given him the same advice.

"The Speaker has decided not to approve caucus seats," Franco said. "He thinks he has the right to approve whether ALANA seats are to be apportioned."

"It's my responsibility," Nokes said. "It's not a matter of what I want or what I think is fair. I take an oath to represent the by-laws and the constitution and sometimes they conflict."

WELCOME BACK STUDENTS!!

PLEASE PARK SMART.

The University community appreciates your parking cooperation.

Valid UMass parking permits are required in all parking lots Monday through Friday between the hours of 7 am and 5 pm (unless otherwise designated as a reserved space or 24-hour enforced lot). Parking meters are enforced for payment Monday through Friday between the hours of 9 am and 5 pm.

Please visit Parking Services' website at www-parking.admin.umass.edu for further parking information.

TRUST "Before locking into a long term contract for a fitness facility with no machinery in place, why not give the veteran professionals a visit."
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
"Big enough to own the best equipment, but small enough to know your name.
* In business 22 years
* Locally owned & operated"
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0080 80 AMHERST

The Hexmark Tavern at the Historic Salem Cross Inn
Route 9 West Brookfield, MA
• New "Pub" style menu at Hexmark Tavern
Tuesday - Friday 4:00 - 9:00
(Live music Fridays until 10:00)
• Main Dining Room Hours - Tuesday - Friday 11:30 - 9:00
Saturday 5:00 - 9:00
Sunday Noon - 8:00
Call (508) 867-8337 To reserve or receive sample menus
www.salemcrossinn.com

PIZZA SUBS GYROS
THE SUB
Pizza
Calzones
Subs
and more...
Best! 2002 UMASS Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Best! 1999 UMASS
Best! 2000 UMASS
UMass Best: Five Years
Free Delivery
Hours: 11am - 2am
549-5160
Memeber O.C.M.P.

*Regency Hairstylists ☆☆☆ would like to introduce JULIA
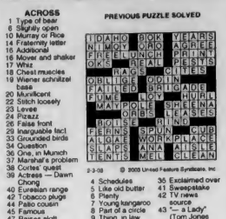
STOP BY ANYTIME!
SHAMPOO, CUT & BLOWDRY $13.00
114 N. Pleasant St. Amherst 253-9526

UMass Student Legal Services Office
CALL TODAY
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students
545-1995

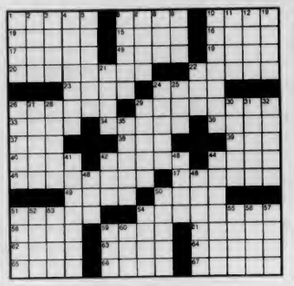
Quote of the Day



"...It is necessary to teach by living and speaking those truths which we believe and know beyond understanding. Because in this way alone we can survive, by taking part in a process of life that is creative and continuing, that is growth.

- Audre Lorde
"Sister Outsider"

Across
1 Type of beer
6 Slightly open
10 Murray or Rice
14 Fraternity letter
15 Additional
16 Mower and shaker
17 Whiz
18 Chest muscles
19 Wiener schnitzel base
20 Munificent
22 Stitch loosely
23 Levee
24 Pizazz
26 Falsa front
29 Inarguable fact
33 Grounded birds
34 Question
36 One, in Munich
37 Marshal's problem
38 Cortes' quest
39 Actress — Dawn Chong
40 Eurasian range
42 Tobacco plugs
44 Patio cousin
45 Famous
47 Raises aloft
49 Water the houseplants
50 Minus
51 Shakes up
54 Calling on
58 Touche provoker
59 Off-road vehicle
61 Music source
62 Shy creature
63 Org. for over-50's
64 Awkward
65 Gummy
66 Laugh loudly
67 Secret supply



Down
1 Splendor
2 FitzGerald's poet
3 Clothier — Strauss
4 Schedules
5 Like old butter
6 Plenty
7 Young kangaroo
8 Part of a circle
9 Thing, in law
10 Go forward
11 Thumbs-down votes
12 Undiluted
13 Paul Drake's creator
21 — out (made do with)
22 Forbid
24 Jostle
25 Illuminated
26 Thigh bone
27 Luigi's romance
28 From Havana
29 Smoked, as ham
30 Adds to staff
31 Make laws
32 Stinks
35 Exclaimed over
41 Sweepstake
42 TV news source
43 "— a Lady" (Tom Jones song)
44 Fer
46 Unsold of the NBA
48 Isis' beloved
50 Fresh
51 "Star Wars" knight
52 Fuel org.
53 Mild onion
54 Dancer — Ellen
55 Inkling
56 Bites
57 Barbarian
59 Poke
60 Flair for music

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

2-3-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

DIRTY BUSINESS LLC
LAUNDRY DELIVERY SERVICE
Space is limited for Semester Plans
Sign-up NOW
Now Accepting O.C.M.P.
256-3478
www.DIRTYDELIVERY.com
Now Hiring Student Reps!

Dining Commons Menu
D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

Check here for the daily dining commons menus starting Thursday, September 4.

Daily Weather Forcast
For Amherst, Mass.

WEDNESDAY
• High: 100
• Low:-12

THURSDAY
• High: 29
• Low: 15

FRIDAY
• High: 210
• Low: 98

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood / Dan Lamothe
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Gerald H. Ling / Emilie Duggan
COPY EDITOR
Nikolas P. Markantonatos / Andy Vogt
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Shannon Farrington / Irene Ros
Jennifer Eastwood

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Your part in something that is not a "sure thing," will better the odds.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
It won't take you long to figure out today just where you stand and want to be.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
It is a good day to keep your fingers crossed and hope for the best.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
The cosmos are in a tizzy of the movement. Better stay in bed.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
You're going to step on a crack today, but it won't break your mother's back.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Your future is cloudy. Try out something new today. It might help clear the air.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Today will be trying, but don't worry. It will pay off in the end.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Try to be nice today. It will result in good things for everyone you meet.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
It'll be essential to get messages sent ahead of time today to get things done.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Hammer out an agreement with someone who has been at odds with you.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
What you get today is not likely to be what you originally bargained for.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Work may have you traveling far from home today, so be prepared.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS ANNOUNCEMENTS ANNOUNCEMENTS ANNOUNCEMENTS ANNOUNCEMENTS ANNOUNCEMENTS ANNOUNCEMENTS

RUN YOUR CLASSIFIED AD HERE!

UMass gets a makeover

By Todd Holmes
Collegian Correspondent

Despite being confronted by mounting revenue issues, the University of Massachusetts is near completion of numerous on-campus construction projects.

The projects promise to add to the esthetic quality of the campus, expand on opportunities for education and research, and develop upon important utility functions.

Work is underway for a new Fine Arts Center Plaza, located adjacent to the Fine Arts Center building along the southern end of the campus.

According to James E. Cahill, director of Facilities Planning and an 18-year veteran of the department, the final stage of the project, which began in late spring at a cost of $1.7 million, is due to be completed by October of this year. The development is now in the final phase of a multi-staged project that initially involved replacement of the underground steam lines servicing the Fine Arts Center and surrounding buildings.

"We took the opportunity to improve the area adjacent to the Fine Arts Center after completing the steam line site restoration," Cahill said. "We're putting down a plaza, and a handicapped parking area that will look like the rest of the plaza. The parking function is only a necessity during Center functions, the rest of the time it will be an open plaza."

As is noted on the UMass Web site, "the intention of this project is to design an 'area of excellence' in the campus landscape. The Haigis Mall / Fine Arts Center Plaza is a major entrance to the campus, and one of the primary locations where the public interacts with the campus. The project will maintain the grandeur of the existing space, yet also add 'human-scale' elements that can be appreciated on the pedestrian scale."

The project was jointly designed by Visual Arts Chair Betsy Siersma and Director of Operations Lew Lourainein, in conjunction with Kuhn Riddle Architects and William Canon Landscape Architects. The contractor for the project is Northern Construction.

CONSTRUCTION PHOTOS GERALD H. LING/COLLEGIAN

The Fine Arts Center is getting remodeled with the addition of an adjacent plaza. The work at the Fine Arts Center is part of the 'Building a Better UMass' project.

While the disturbances created by the project during the summer have been minimal, the effects of the dust and noise upon the student's once they arrive to begin the academic year may be more significant. The project appears to be on schedule, and therefore should not cause any inconvenience beyond the first few months of the fall semester.

Another major undertaking noted by Cahill is the new Engineering Laboratory II, located on the north end of campus, just south of the Computer Science Building. Scheduled for completion by December of 2003 at a cost of $25 million, this modern 60,000 square foot facility will provide graduate research laboratories for the Chemical Engineering and Civil/Environmental Engineering Departments. The building should be occupied by spring of 2004.

The building will also house a 45-seat Distance Learning Center, as well as a 250-seat auditorium, to be made available to any department on campus. The design for the building was provided by Ellenzweig Associates/Whitney Atwood Norcross, and the contractor for the facility is Fontaine Brothers, Inc. Parking lot #45 will be lost due to this construction.

Other projects for the Facilities Planning Department sited by Cahill included the Orchard Hill Parking lot, located on the east side of campus next door to the Dickinson and Grayson residential halls. Designated "purple" for parking purposes and accommodating 280 spaces, the lot is due to be completed by September of 2003, at a cost of $427,000. The site will eventually replace the parking area off of Olympia Drive. Two new bus stops will also be added to service the area. As for long-term projects on the horizon, the Central Heating Plant is also under development. It will be located near the Mullins Center around the area of the Amherst Water Treatment Plant.

Currently, the site is occupied by a large fill west of Mullins Center. The purpose of it is to remove layers of water and sink the clay foundation. The process can take up to a year. Once this is completed, construction upon the solid foundation can begin. Upon its completion, the plant will meet all modern state and federal environmental standards. The new facility will be able to be fueled either by natural gas or oil, a source that burns much cleaner than the current coal burning facility.

After the commissioning of the new Central Heating Plant, the current heating plant, stacks, and fuel handling facilities on Campus Center Way will be demolished. Much of the building demolition debris will be recycled. What will remain, however, are the headers to the steam system that supplies the 25 miles of underground steam lines throughout the campus.

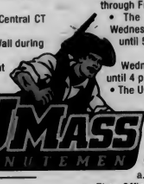
After licensing is complete, construction is expected to take approximately two years, and is expected to begin start-up operations by 2007. Vanderweil Engineers is the lead designer, and Northern Construction is to be the chief contractor.

All this comes in the face of state-wide budget woes that have cut deeply into the funding for much of the public school system throughout the state. These big budget projects can still move forward in spite of the apparent funding troubles.

"It is not unusual to see operating budgets reduced," Cahill said. "But then we're sitting here long-term on all this capital." Much of the funding for these projects is provided for through operations budgets, grants and private donations, sometimes borrowing is necessary

"In some ways, borrowing money now, which is the way we build some of our buildings, is the way to go, because the interest rates are low," Cahill said.

Information was taken from www.umass.edu.



First Week Events

Compiled by Courtney Charles

September 3 - September 6
2003

Wednesday 3

- A poster sale takes place in the Student Union Ballroom from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.
- Magician Fran Ferry (pictured right) performs on the concourse from 11 a.m-3 p.m.
- There will be a balloon artist, airbrush tattoo artist, and two caricature artists on the Campus Center Concourse from 11 a.m.-3 p.m.
- Free popcorn and snow cones will be given on the Student Union Steps from 11 a.m-2 p.m.
- An Open Mic Talent Show will be held in the Blue Wall from 8 p.m.-11 p.m.

Thursday 4

- The poster sale continues in the Student Union Ballroom from 9 a.m.-4:30 p.m.
- Ice-Bird, a magician, will perform from 11 a.m.-3 p.m. on the concourse.
- There will be an A Cappella Rush Concert in the BW at 8 p.m.
- Union Billiards in the Student Union will be free from 7 p.m.-11 p.m.

Friday 5

- The poster sale continues in the Student Union Ballroom from 9 a.m.-4:30 p.m.
- There will be a Coca-Cola Football Town USA interactive Tutor from noon to 4 p.m. on the Library Lawn.
- A pep rally will be held at 4 p.m. on the Library Lawn.
- SEF "Varsity Blues" in Top of Campus at 8 p.m. and "Chicago" will be played at 10 p.m. and midnight.
- Casino Night will be held on the concourse at 9:30 pm.
- Live music will be performed at the Kick-Off at the Blue Wall Bar.

Saturday 6

- Minute Fan Park takes place behind home stadium from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.
- The UMass Football team takes on Central CT State at 1 p.m.
- There will be live music at the Blue Wall during the evening.
- A dance will be held in the Student Union Ballroom from 10 p.m.-2 a.m.
- Darrell Hammond appears at the Fine Arts Center at 10 p.m. Tickets are $8 for Umass students and $12 for General Admission.

Miscellaneous

- Also during the rest of the first week several of the university's offices will operate on different schedules.
- The Dean of Students Office is open Wednesday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. until 5 p.m.
- The Housing Assignment Office is open Wednesday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. until 5 p.m.
- The Registrar's Office is open Wednesday through Friday from 8 a.m. until 5 p.m.
- The Bursar's Office is open Wednesday through Friday from 9 a.m. until 4 p.m.
- The Admissions Office is open Wednesday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. until 5 p.m.
- The Financial Aid Office is open Wednesday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. until 5 p.m.
- The Meal Plan Office is open Wednesday through Friday from 9 a.m. until 4 p.m.
- The UCard Office is open Wednesday and Thursday from 8:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. and on Friday from 8:30 a.m. until 5 p.m.
- The Commuter Services and Housing Resource Center is open Wednesday through Friday from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m.
- The Office of Information Technologies Helpdesk is open Wednesday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. until 7 p.m.
- University Health Services is open Wednesday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. for health plan enrollments, member services, immunization records drop off and other questions. Customary 24-hour medical services will be provided during the opening week period.

•••For questions or concerns, call the Dean of Students Office at 413-545-2684.

Casino management classes are a 'sure winner'

By Courtney Charles
Collegian Staff

The Department of Hospitality and Tourism Management (HTM) is offering an online course in casino management this fall. This three-credit course entitled "Casino Management" was developed by the HTM department and the Foxwoods Resort and Casino of Ledyard, Conn.

"They provided us with financial support to help develop our online gaming courses," said Chris Roberts, associate department head of HTM, of the role of Foxwoods in helping to develop the class. "Their contribution helps both our department and their employees, as the course becomes a development tool for them to help their employees advance their careers."

The first in a series of three courses on the gaming industry, this new online course is offered through the University's Division of Continuing Education. According to Roberts, the department would consider expanding the courses beyond just the three.

"There are a number of elective-type subjects that would present students with useful areas of extended study such as casino marketing, gaming regulation and control and casino security and surveillance," Roberts said.

According to a University of Massachusetts news release, Roberts said the new courses were developed because gaming is "a fast growing, multi-billion dollar industry."

"We want to be sure we're on the cutting edge of educating professionals who will manage these large enterprises. We think the program is a sure winner," Roberts told the UMass news office.

The department has offered the general casino management course for about five years now and has learned that there is a strong level of interest by the students, according to Roberts.

"Typically I will get 140-plus students requesting a seat in the 35-seat classroom," he said.

He commented on what qualities in students could possibly lead to success in the class, and ultimately, the industry.

"Certainly we are offering a course of study from a management perspective," Roberts said. "A student interested in developing a career in the operation and leadership of casinos would be interested in this program. Qualities for success are similar skills to other aspects of the hospitality industry such as an interest in working with customers and leading employees, an attraction to the exciting dynamics of 24-hour operations and a willingness to understand what makes this industry unique from all others, and a commitment to flexible thinking to help hospitality firms (including casinos) respond and adapt quickly to the rapidly changing dynamics of this industry."

In the face of a struggling economy, the casino industry does not appear to be suffering.

"We have spent time working with the casino industry along the East Coast to determine their interest in hiring students that we prepare," Roberts said. "The timing for the match between student and industry seems to be now."

In addition, people with casino management jobs won't be struggling either. Although income varies depending on the size of the operation, managers are far from just barely scraping by.

"For the very large casinos such as those in Atlantic City and Las Vegas the salaries will be $350,000 and upward, often with bonuses for performance that can significantly increase the compensation. Salaries of director level positions in those organizations often run in the $250,000 range such as for director of human resources, public relations, hotel operations, food and beverage and marketing. For the mid-range casino, salaries of $100,000-150,000 are common for the casino manager."

In the first of the online classes, the basics of the industry are laid out to students from a management perspective.

Roberts said the casino management course examines the history and development of gaming and explores casino operations including slot machines, table games, and sports and Internet betting, according to the news release. It covers additional topics such as credit and casino accounting, casino hotels and casino food service, and the marketing of the gaming products, he said. A central focus will be on current trends as well as the primary management and financial elements unique to operating a casino.

Grading criteria has been established and is standard for an online course.

"For this particular first online gaming course, students will complete assignments very typical of online courses," Roberts said. "They will answer review questions from the chapters to demonstrate a grasp of the material. They will complete quizzes to test their knowledge retention, and they will participate actively in discussion questions -a process wherein students can have an asymmetric dialogue regarding a current course theme. There is also a midterm and a final exam in the course. As the course is a study of the industry and its complex components there is no actual hand-on activity within a casino for this first course."

Planned for later in 2004, a second course is titled "Casino Products, Protection and Probabilities," and it will focus on understanding the design and structure of casino games such as blackjack, roulette and craps, as well as how the casino protects the games from abuse by cheaters, according to the news release.

"As you might imagine, that is an area of tremendous interest by the casino and why one of our three courses is focused upon the subject," Roberts said. "There is no simple answer to provide here - but there are as many ways to catch customers AND employees who become involved in schemes to cheat and steal as there are plots. Casinos use both human and computer resources extensively to protect the core of their business. Plus, the protection begins with the design of the game itself in addition to the operation of it. So, a casino protects itself by carefully designing the rules of the game, its delivery (operation) to customers and through a complete monitoring of its usage."

The third course in the series, "Gaming and Social Policy," will explore the social consequences of gaming on individuals and communities and includes both economic impacts and regulatory oversight.

Frank Lattuca, HTM department head, said the hospitality and tourism department's mission is to develop new and innovative courses and programs that meet the needs of UMass students and others from the region, according to the news release.

"The study of gaming and casino operations is one among several emphasis areas found in our program and will no doubt draw a great deal of interest," Lattuca told the UMass news office.

The HTM program is ranked fourth in the nation by the Gorman Report, an organization that ranks law, medicine, business and other college programs, according to Lattuca.

"We will continue to develop courses in casino management that will provide a knowledge base for those wishing to pursue a career in this segment of hospitality management," Lattuca told the UMass news office.

Because the three-course series is being offered online, Roberts told the news office, "that will allow working professionals to explore the world of gaming without having to come to the UMass campus. Online access gives students the ability to time-shift their learning activities and to save on transportation expenses commuting to the campus."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
ARTS & LIVING
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 2003 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

The Pioneer Valley is home to more than a dozen public art galleries. Each provide an array of work from local and international artists in almost all genres and media. With such a wide range all within a 20-minute drive from Amherst and Northampton, how is it that so many of these galleries open exhibit after exhibit to only a handful of art lovers?

Could it be that these galleries are so discrete that nobody knows where they are? If so, look no further than this comprehensive guide. Take a trip with this pioneer through the finest galleries in and around the Valley.

... And there's no better place to begin than at any of the six on-campus University of Massachusetts galleries, each free and open to the public.

University Gallery

The University Gallery is the most illustrious of all the galleries on campus. Only work done by professional artists is featured here.

"What we choose to show is focused around what the socio-political mood of society at the time the selections are made," gallery curator Betsy Siersma said.

The University Gallery opened its doors to the public in 1975 and has continued to provide the community with quality work since. In addition to displaying artwork from around the world, the University Gallery is responsible for the University Art Collection, which includes many permanent collections of 20th century prints, drawings and photographs as well as public sculptures, artists' books, WPA prints and Southwest American Indian pottery. The gallery is

Continued on page B4

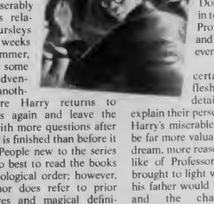
Rowling out another worldwide best seller

'Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix' casts its spell on readers

By Jessica Pelletier
Collegian Staff

Once upon a time, not so very long ago, a young mother from a tiny kingdom introduced the world to "the boy who lived" and a thousand adventures were born. This is certainly the case with British author J.K. Rowling's previous success with the world of Harry Potter, and this June marked the release of the fifth edition of the series.

After being delayed from bookshelves for what seemed like a lifetime the midnight of June 7 was a much-anticipated event for all Potter fans ages six through 60. Throngs of bookworms dressed in Potter garb formed lines that spilled out the doors of local bookshops open at such a late hour. There was even a miniature scandal that erupted when the New York Daily News published a page from the novel, which was being sold illegally in a small Brooklyn store before the scheduled release date.



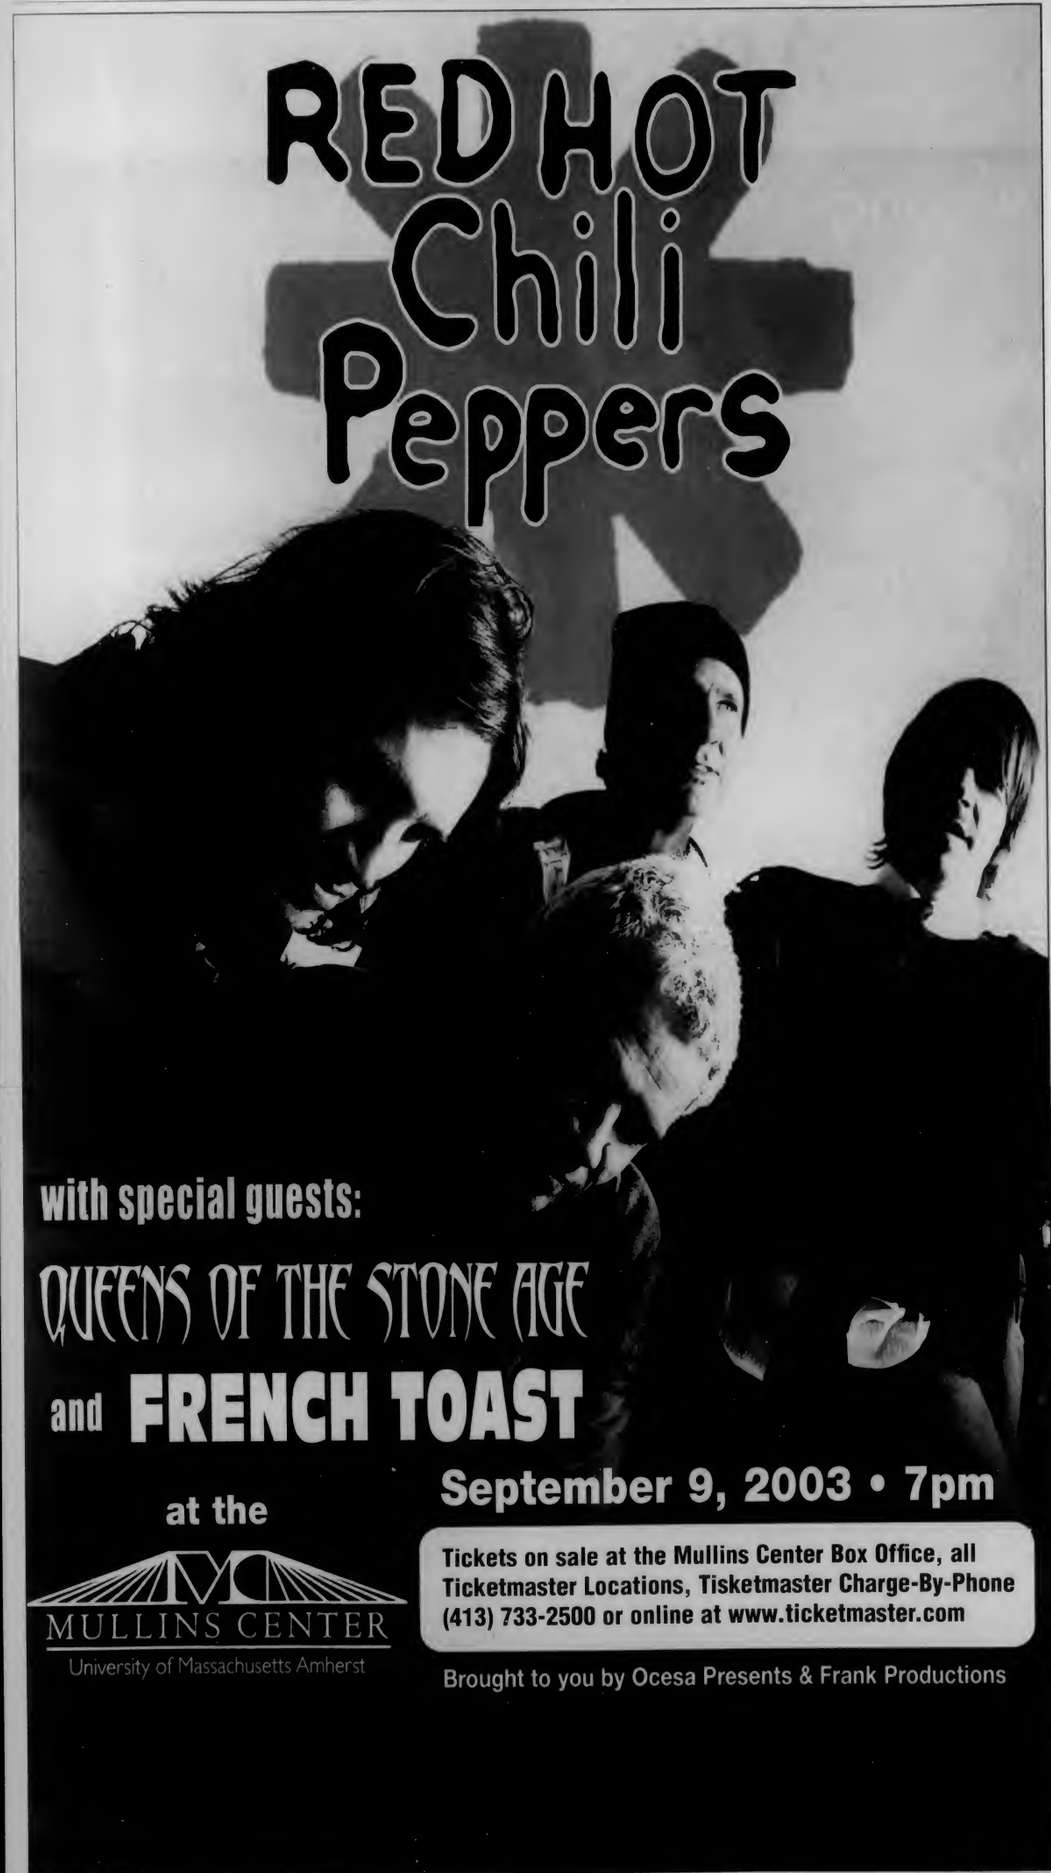
COURTESY J.K. ROWLING/SCHOLASTIC

'Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix'
By J.K. Rowling
Scholastic

Bookstores around the country knew about the impending pandemonium and were well prepared for the frenzy. Select Border's bookstores around the country hired animal experts to bring in snowy owls for displays and demonstrations. Other bookstore chains provided live orchestras to perform the musical score from the movie's soundtrack. Still others provided the sumptuous pastries and candies described in the previous novels.

But could the book live up to the hype? Suffice it to say, fans of the series will not be disappointed. Ms. Rowling has allowed her character's personalities to mature as the series moves forward. No longer naive to the magical world, Harry becomes aggravated when he is left out of the Order of the Phoenix considering his exposure to his arch nemesis, Lord Voldermort. The relationship between Harry and his two friends Ron and Hermione has lost its childish sparkle and none of the teens are above bickering with one another.

Rowling's method of storytelling hasn't strayed far from her norm. Begin each story with Harry miserably living with his relatives the Dursleys during the last weeks of summer, allow for some minor adventure or another before Harry returns to Hogwarts again and leave the reader with more questions after the book is finished than before it started. People new to the series would do best to read the books in chronological order; however, the author does refer to prior adventures and magical definitions in each novel such that anyone who passed junior high should be able to follow the story without enormous problems. Should this method fail, talking with any die-hard fan will do the trick.



Look for another slew of interesting characters within the book's 870 pages. Back from the first novel, the centaur Firenze returns to take the place of Professor Trelawney as teacher of Divination. Pay close attention to Luna Lovegood, a quiet and spacey young blonde holds more secrets than her vacant eyes let on. And whereas every good story must have a villain, Dolores Umbridge steps in to usurp Hogwarts from Professor Dumbledore and make life wretched for everyone at the school.

The life stories of certain characters are fleshed out in greater detail and do much to explain their personalities. For example, Harry's miserable summers turn out to be far more valuable than he could ever dream, more reason for the obvious dislike of Professor Snape for Harry, is brought to light when he discovers that his father would bully Snape to no end and the character of Neville Longbottom begins to shed his ugly duckling feathers.

Some of the most interesting parts in the plotline include the creation of "Dumbledore's Army," a secret society lead by none other than Harry himself

Continued on page B9

MUSIC
Page B1
A REEL SUMMER REVIEW
JOHNNY DEPP'S INTO THE WEST AND WORST OF SUMMER
FOOD
Page B7
NORTHAMPTON'S FINEST
TASTE OF NORTHAMPTON, A FOOD FESTIVAL COOKS UP THE VALLEY'S BEST CREATIONS BOOKS
Page B8
MORRISON'S 'BELOVED' REMAKE OF A TALE
SECOND INSTALLMENT IN WHO'S GOT GAME SERIES OUT EARLIER THIS MONTH
LIVE MUSIC
Page B11
DYLAN PLAYS PINES THEATER
MUSICAL POET PERFORMS IN FRONT OF SOLD OUT CROWD FEATURES
Page B14
REGGAE FEELIN' IKH
A LOOK INTO HOW DANCEHALL IS HELPING THE GENRE BREAK BOUNDARIES

MOVIES

COURTESY WARNER BROS. PICTURES

Cinema scorchers and box-office belly flops SIZZLE this summer

COURTESY DISNEY/PIXAR, PHOTO: DISNEY

By Johnny Donaldson

Question: What was this summer's most pointless, gratuitous rah-rah blockbuster? Was it the extremely loud, extremely ugly "Bad Boys 2" in which Will Smith, Martin Lawrence and Co. treat everything — plot, character, human life — with the glibbest of disregard? Or is it Ang Lee's pretentious and plodding adaptation of "The Hulk" which had the distinction of proving that even FX-laden comic book extravaganzas could be turned into high-minded twaddle?

Whatever the answer, I can tell you one thing: it wasn't a particularly good summer at the movies. It was, after all, a season of sequels and marketing campaigns that made last summer's slate of high-caloric junk food look downright healthy in comparison. It's enough to make a movie lover swear off the cinema altogether.

It was a good sign, however, that the audiences seem to just now be rejecting the kind of pre-digested, over-inflated blockbusters that have come to rule the seasonal roost. If you doubt me, just look at the numbers: audiences lined up, en masse, on opening weekend only to reject and forget that very same movie the following week. Movie after movie fell — tumbling 50, 60, even 70 percent (in the case of "The Hulk") from whatever record-breaking opening came the week before.

COURTESY ALEX BAILEY

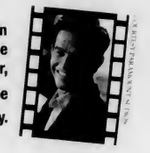
In addition to having the season's most tongue-twisting title, 'Lara Croft: Tomb Raider - The Cradle of Life," is also the summer's most competently dull 'blockbuster.'

And who could blame the audiences for their apathy? The summer of 2003 began much like the summer of 2002 — with a bang, giving promise that the season to come would move beyond meager expectations of popcorn thrills. But "X2: X-Men United," much like "Spider-Man" before it, provided only false hope. A wondrous comic creation that flitted easily between adrenaline-rush thrills and intelligent, unforced social commentary, it gave me a glimmer of hope that this year's crop would provide something — anything — of lasting substance.

By the time "The Matrix Reloaded" surfaced two weeks later, it was apparent that the wish was not to be. The Wachowski Brothers' long-anticipated sequel suffered from could be called George Lucas Disease: breathtaking action sequences that tickle the visual cortex interspersed with much wooden acting and flat, perfunctory dialogue. Keanu Reeves, as the leather-clad savior Neo, gets to fly around like a hipster-Goth Superman and spout endless streams of metaphysical mumbo-jumbo about destiny and free will. It's enough to make your head hurt. "Reloaded" isn't as bad as "Star Wars: Episode 2" — despite it's flaws (and there are many) it has a kick-butt visual charge — but you wish that the Wachowskis took some time to develop a script along with the special effects.

Still, "Reloaded" looked like a work of art compared to some of the other offerings Hollywood cynically coughed up. Take "The League of Extraordinary Gentleman," a very ordinary X-Men-for-the-Merchant Ivory-crowd that grouped a gaggle of legendary lit characters (look Dorian Gray! Hey, isn't that Jekyll-n-Hyde?) into an inept and plausibility free adventure. Even star Sean Connery looked bored by it all. Or how about the car-race thriller "2 Fast 2 Furious" which hits a speed bump at 90 thanks to, the stiff acting and cliché plot.

In addition to having the season's most tongue-twisting title, "Lara Croft: Tomb Raider – The Cradle of Life," is also the summer's most competently dull "blockbuster." Angelina Jolie, speaking with a lilting British accent, reprises her role as the voluptuous adventure-babe Lara Croft, but the movie is as well-made and as unexciting as the original. "Spy Kids 3D: Game Over" brings back the old gimmicky chestnut of the 3-D movie, and I have to ask: Why? Those scratchy cardboard glasses reduce the images into shadowy murk, and when they're off the images become blurry and indistinct. Who wants to watch a movie like that? Of course, 3-D is hardly the only thing that's wrong with "SK3D," which plays like some studios corrupt attempt to milk some last few bucks from a dying franchise. The family values messages — delivered so effortlessly the first time out — now come off as cheap and heavy-handed.



Of course, not every big-budget film was a disaster. There was after all movies like "Terminator 3: Rise of the Machines" and "Pirates of the Caribbean: Curse of the Black Pearl," movies in which money and prowess came together to provide summer movies that did a little thing called entertain. Johnny Depp, in particular, deserves some sort of award for his brilliantly fey turn as "Pirates'" swishy anti-hero, Captain Jack Sparrow.

Amidst all the big ticket junk sprouting up like weeds, were a few smaller films jostling for attention, and like the bigger movies, the collection was a mixed bag. "Down With Love" starred Ewan McGregor and Renee Zellweger in an arch, precious "homage" to the Doris Day-Rock Hudson comedies of yesteryear — replete with pastel fake sets and double entendres that induce groans rather than laughs. Mark Wahlberg and Edward Norton gave bland performances in the passable heist thriller "The Italian Job" but the supporting cast (Seth Green, Mos Def, Charlize Theron) save the day. There was nothing scary about the banal, glossy backwoods "horror" flick "Wrong Turn" (imagine "The Texas Chainsaw Massacre" recast with Abercrombie and Fitch models), but there was enough eerie juice in Danny Boyle's Brit zombie import "28 Days Later" to be the stuff of nightmares. The image of a post-epidemic, apocalyptic London – all empty, barren streets and fluttering missing persons signs – is more chilling than all the grunting and axe-throwing the goofy cannibals of "Wrong Turn" engage in.

Comedies came and disappeared without a moment's thought: "The In-Laws" (forgettable), "Dumb and Dumberer: When Harry Met Lloyd" (awful) and "Legally Blonde 2: Red, White and Blonde" (even more awful), among them. Jim Carrey returned to being Jim Carrey with the inoffensive, crowd-pleasing "Bruce Almighty" but Harrison Ford and Josh Hartnett succeeded in boring the audience with "Hollywood Homicide", which I think may be Hollywoods' 2,387th buddy-cop film. Seriously, folks, it's about time to put a moratorium on these kind of flaccid team-ups. Just when you thought that the spy spoof has been Austin Power-ed into the ground along comes Rowan "Mr. Bean" Atkinson with the daft and cheeky "Johnny English."

Jason Biggs, Seann William Scott and the gang served up a third helping of pie and – surprise – "American Wedding" isn't all that bad. Stale, yes, but it does serve up a generous dose of gross-out laughs and heartwarming sincerity. The summer's big surprise may be how bad the Jennifer Lopez-Ben Affleck dud "Gigli" isn't. No, it's still not a good movie — as it is, it's marked by whiplash-inducing tonal inconsistencies, jaw-dropping dialogue, moldering clichés and Affleck's atrocious miscasting – but it does still have a quirky sort of lunkheaded charm. There were times when I felt that the fact-based, Depression-era horse race fable "Seabiscuit" should have been bronzed and displayed because of how suffocatingly syrupy it could be (I could have done without David McCullough's PBS-ready narration.) But Tobey Maguire, Jeff Bridges and Chris Cooper, as the damaged men whose lives revolve around the equally damaged eponymous horse, imbue the movie with enough honest emotion that the movie earns its uplift.

Mark Wahlberg and Edward Norton gave bland performances in the passable heist thriller, 'The Italian Job,' but the supporting cast saved the day.

COURTESY PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Teenybopper star Mandy Moore proved she could be a genuine actress in last year's "A Walk To Remember," and she proved it again in "How To Deal," an at-times cloyingly earnest soap opera that showed just how much good acting can save trite writing. The movie piled on the "serious" made-for-Lifetime catastrophes — divorce, teen pregnancy, yada yada yada — to the point of ridiculousness, but Moore helped the medicine go down. Speaking of terrific performances, Jamie Lee Curtis gave her loosest, least controlled performance since "A Fish Called Wanda" playing a teen trapped in an adult's body in Disney's scrappy, witty, spellbindingly charming remake of "Freaky Friday." Lindsay Lohan — as the uptight mom trapped in her daughter's self — equaled Curtis's youthful exuberance with her amusingly starchy "mom" routine. Certainly, it was a better example of female relationships than the schmaltzy and tooth-rotting "Uptown Girls," a film starring Brittany Murphy once again giving a flighty, fluttering performance.

The two best movies this summer were "Finding Nemo" the latest work of art from the Disney/ Pixar stable, and "Whale Rider" the moving story of a 12-year-old Maori girl defying misogyny and tradition to prove herself as true, prophesied tribal leader. The former is a witty adventure painted with computer generated underwater images so tactile you almost believe your floating in the ocean. It's the best work to come from a flawless canon, with its rollicking humor and quirky characters. The latter has been directed by Niki Caro with such poetic beauty that it all but transcends the formulaic uplift of its story.

What was the worst film this summer? I'd have to say that dishonor has to go to "Charlie's Angels: Full Throttle," a brainless, assaultive hack job that erases the line between exploitation and empowerment. Director McG's camera leers over the half-naked bodies of his stars as they strut around in skimpy clothing like dirty-doll strippers in training. And these are supposed to be strong women? It doesn't help matters that the movie goes wrong in almost every conceivable fashion: Garish cinematography, painful soundtrack, heartless action, non-existent plotting. The list goes on. But it may be the perfect movie to sum up a summer of soulless and bankrupt Hollywood offerings.

Johnny Donaldson is a Collegian Columnist.

S.W.A.T. teems with big names, but the plot crashes and burns

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

Imagine how crazy things would get if a rich criminal, played by Oliver Martinez, shouted into a nationally televised video camera that he would pay $100 million to anyone who was willing to break him out of prison. That is exactly what the L.A. S.W.A.T. has to deal with in this film. In a day and age when great camera work and pretty faces are not enough to excite the masses what did Sony do? Gave people gunfights, explosions, bigger explosions, fist-fights, brawls and gunfights with bigger guns, all this broken up with some witty snippets of dialogue.

COURTESY SONY

Samuel L. Jackson and Colin Farrell

This movie has all the elements required to be an action flick; an oversimplified plot, a team of likeable "good guys," one-sided characters that are easily killed off without any emotional damage, a hero with a sketchy past and lots of fight scenes.

Samuel L. Jackson's character, Hondo, in this movie is comparable to that of Yoda, only taller, blacker and with a really sarcastic personality. He is the grizzled old S.W.A.T. member who the chief of police calls in to put together a team of special agents. At this point the movie slips into a series of scenes that are essentially the role call of the main cast.

Enter the pretty boy hero, otherwise known as Collin Farrell, or Street. Farrell plays taxi for Jackson as he recruits his agents from anywhere but the S.W.A.T. officers. LL Cool J makes the cut after a "COPS" style foot chase and a sarcasm fight with Jackson.

The part of officer Sanchez is played by the always-tough Michelle Rodriguez, who is introduced in a hospital being patched up. Being a single mom/ cop with a badass attitude earns her a spot on the team.

'S.W.A.T.'
Directed by Clark Johnson
Starring Samuel L.Jackson Colin Farrell Oliver Martinez Michelle Rodriguez LL Cool J
Sony
Rated PG-13
111 mins.
Grade B-

Then there are Reg. E Cathy and Josh Charles who play L.A. S.W.A.T. members whose initiations into Jackson's team would probably have been too boring to be put on film. Though both of them play important supporting roles, Cathy is the jerky brother of Street's ex-girl friend and Charles is his flunky who lacks a spin of his own until his final scene.

So now that the team is assembled they go through Jackson's crash course in how to be super cops and then it is into the fire. A series of straight forward jobs, hostage negotiation, robbery and a psycho who has boarded himself up in his own home, just to name a few, carry the team through a non-stop 48 hours that is only a sample of the movie's core action sequences.

When one would believe that this story had no ability to take a plot twist at all it takes a U-turn. After his one positive line to, Street in the whole movie, Cathy is shot in the neck by Street's ex-partner who — now here is the surprise — is in league with Charles'. That was it for surprises though the last hour of the film was simply a combination of gunfights and car chases.

This is a movie for the action purists out there. If you are looking for plot, romance, drama or emotions other than anger, then this is not your movie. "S.W.A.T." definitely is a feel good movie, in that deep, visceral cowboy kind of way.

Though the plot is thin and the characters have less development than one hour photos, this movie has something rarely scene today, pure action. Other police-oriented action movies such as Dark Blue and Training Day do have a dose of high-end action, but it is coated in a layer of sticky forced story that only leaves viewers feeling partially satisfied. Not so with "S.W.A.T." From the first minute of the movie right through to the credits there is no pretense at side story or back-story or anything that is not at the end of someone's gun sight.

Return to a predictable dream-world of bloodstained nostalgia

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

Robert Englund hasn't played the role of pock-marked, child-killing demon Freddy Krueger — he of the dirty Christmas sweater and razor blade glove — in nine years, and he comes into the role energized. In "Freddy vs. Jason" Englund cackles, smirks, he purrs profane sweet nothings to his young victims — in short order he steals the show. Over the course of the "Nightmare on Elm Street" series, Freddy Krueger became a kind of satanic stand-up comedian, the demon-clown jester of slasher villains. The Krueger we see here is back to being the Freddy Krueger that we know and love — malevolent, sarcastic, a perverse, leering embodiment of black-hearted id.

'Freddy vs. Jason'
Directed by Ronny Yu
Starring Robert Englund Kken Kerringer
New Line
Rated R
96 mins.
Grade B

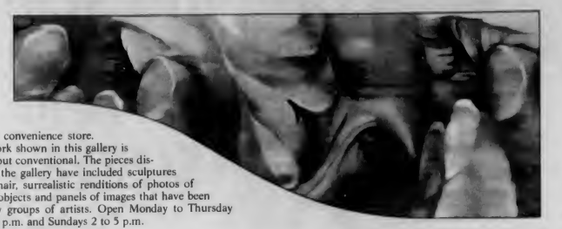
Englund's performance is one that juices the movie. "Freddy vs. Jason" is the movie that finally unites this generation's two most infamous horror baddies. There's Krueger, taunting and killing kids in his surreal dreamworld, and then there's Jason Voorhees, the indestructible hockey-masked hulk with the blood-stained machete. In "Freddy vs. Jason" they are pitted against each other in a battle over who gets to kill more faceless, horny teens and the movie takes off from Englund's performance — it breathes life into not one, but two, long in the tooth franchises that only a horror fan could love.

How exactly do the filmmakers get the two titans together? In Springwood, Freddy has been rendered powerless by the loss of his legend. The Elm Street teens have never been told the legend of Freddy and have no fear of him. Freddy, then manipulates Jason into stirring up a little mayhem and allowing Freddy to take the credit. But then Jason begins to massacre kids left and right — most notably during a cornfield rave — and Freddy decides to wipe out his new rival.

COURTESY NEW LINE CINEMA

Jason returns to battle with and against Freddy Kruger.

"Freddy vs. Jason" isn't a good movie in the traditional sense. Director Ronny Yu — who did wonders for the "Child's Play" series with "Bride of Chucky" — keeps the pace hurtling along, and gives horror fans exactly what they want. Youthful bodies are bent, broken, mangled and stabbed. Heads fly. Gore spills. And it all comes at the expense of credibility and continuity.



Damian Swift and Mark Shannon's script cuts and compresses everything so that the script comes out more expository than natural. Characters make great leaps of intuition with little prompting, as if logic just alighted on their head. It serves the purpose to propel the story from point A to point B, but it does nothing to help the characters or dialogue make any kind of lasting impression.

Yu, however, keeps things rocking along. Never mind that the young actors playing the myriad nubile victims usually overact their way through the film, or that the dialogue is perfunctory at best. The director imbues "Freddy vs. Jason" with a certain ambitious style, certainly far more surreal and stylistic than any "Friday the 13th" movie ever tin that respect. "Freddy vs. Jason" is the best "13th" made — ever.) The gory mano a mano battles between the killers — one in Freddy's dreamworld, the other at Camp Crystal Lake — come off like blood-splattered WWF battles, as the two villains thrash each other into pulp. And fans couldn't have it any other way. "Freddy vs. Jason" has been in the works for more than ten years, and over that course of time the various filmmakers that have been attached should have delivered something that would live up to the fan's expectations. While "Freddy vs. Jason" is imperfect as a movie as a horror cinema battle royale, it bloody well delivers.

Voyage onward to the long, strange trip through the best of the open to the public Tuesday through Friday 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m.

Continued from page A1

Herter Gallery

More modern artwork is featured in the Herter Gallery. Work here is a compilation of student and non-student work that is hand selected by curator Trevor Richardson.

"I try to stay mainly with contemporary avant-garde work in a variety of media," Richardson said. "Mostly I want work that explores and encourages experimental approaches in presentation of visual art."

Other than the unusual artwork featured in the gallery, Herter frequently has guest artist lectures.

The Herter Gallery is located on the first floor of the Herter Annex and is open to the public Monday through Friday 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday 1 to 4 p.m.

Student Union Gallery

Perhaps the most unknown gallery on campus is the Student Union Gallery, which features work done by UMass students, as well as national artists. The gallery is the only one on campus that is completely student run. Work featured here consists of paintings and sculptures on any number of media and subjects. The gallery also hosts a number of side projects such as gallery talks, video screenings and poetry and prose readings.

This is the oldest of the six UMass galleries; having opened in 1957 the Student Union Gallery has withstood the tests of nearly half a century. Open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Friday.

Hampden Gallery

Nestled in the heart of the Southwest living area, the Hampden Galley is probably the most frequented on-campus gallery, but that may be because one must pass through it to get to the Hampden convenience store.

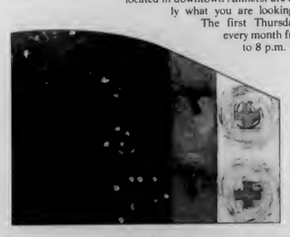
The artwork shown in this gallery is anything but conventional. The pieces displayed in the gallery have included sculptures made of hair, surrealistic renditions of photos of everyday objects and panels of images that have been altered by groups of artists. Open Monday to Thursday noon to 6 p.m. and Sundays 2 to 5 p.m.

Augusta Savage Gallery

The Augusta Savage Gallery located in the New Africa House presents artwork that raises many important issues such as ethnicity, race, class, and cultural identity. The gallery features work done by students and non-students alike.

The gallery also conducts a series of educational performances such as poetry readings, dance demonstrations, solo and duo music recitals and story telling. The Augusta Savage Gallery is open on Monday and Tuesday from 1 to 7 p.m. and Wednesday to Friday 1 to 5 p.m.

Central Gallery



Finally, the Central Gallery ,which is the only on-campus gallery with the distinction of being inside a residence hall. The gallery mainly features the thesis work of art students as well as some artwork from emerging local artists. The Central Gallery also features a number of workshops, gallery talks and video screenings along with their exhibits.

Located in the Wheeler Residence Hall in the Central Residential Area the gallery is open Monday through Thursday 3 to 6 p.m. and Sundays 2 to 5 p.m.

For more information about any of the galleries listed above or about the Fine Arts Center go to www.umass.edu/fac.

***

On a date? Looking for a way to kill a night? Then the galleries located in downtown Amherst are exactly what you are looking for. The first Thursday of every month from 5 to 8 p.m. the six galleries in Amherst open their doors, walls, and tables of refreshments to the public for the Gallery Walk program.

Mead Gallery

Starting furthest up South Pleasant Street there is the Mead Gallery on the Amherst College campus. The Mead Gallery is re-opening this fall after some major renovations that were undertaken this winter. The gallery is open on weekdays from 10:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

The Fiber Center

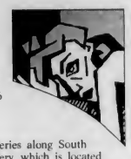
The Fiber Arts Center is completely dedicated to art made of fibers. "Fibers are any material that is made into pieces and then worked into a product in a traditional manner," Gallery Director Susan Loring-Wells said. "These are definitely not just your grandmothers knitted quilts, crochets, and doilies. It is a growing field and we here are helping artists to push the limits of the conventional to new levels."

Having started in a backroom of their current residence in June 2001 the Fiber Arts Center has since October 2001 expanded to include the entire building space.

The gallery is only part of the Fiber Arts Center experience. There is also a lot of handcrafted artwork for sale at the center as well. The Fiber Arts Center is open Tuesday to Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

R. Michelson Galleries

The R. Michelson Galleries, located in Amherst and Northampton, provide an exclusive professional gallery/ shop for art gazers. With a core group of about 20 artists that have been producing the art for the Michelson Gallery since the late '70s to early '80s, this gallery prides itself on the quality of the work it exhibits.



Though the gallery rarely admits new artists into its showroom the paintings and sculptures displayed change daily. The Amherst Gallery is open Monday to Saturday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and the Northampton Gallery hours are Monday through Wednesday 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Thursday to Saturday 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. and Sundays noon to 5 p.m.

Pioneer Valley's art galleries...

Alfredo's Photographic Gallery

Alfredo's Photographic Gallery specifically displays photographic art. Every other month the gallery presents a new main display of work, but items in the gallery change daily because they are all for sale. Anything from the exclusive private photo collections of Frank Sinatra and Rocky Marciano to high quality prints of well known artists' work and the personal work of the galleries owner Alfredo DiLascia.

"I try to choose work based on its quality and creativity and its marketability. I accept work from all over especially from student photographers," says Alfredo. This Photographic Gallery has been open for seven years come November and is the only one of its kind and caliber in the region. Alfredo's is open Monday to Saturday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

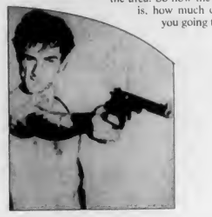
Gallery A

The smallest of all the area galleries, Gallery A, is by no means lacking in its contributions to the quality of art in the area. Founded by Richard "Jozan" Treston and a group of fellow artists in response to the Sept. 11 tragedy, "It is an attempt to create a community gallery that is something healing and productive," says assistant curator Lynn Peterfreund.

Gallery A strives to display art to the public that is less conventional and more representational of the community's condition. Gallery A 's hours are Wednesday to Saturday noon to 6 p.m.

Burnett Gallery

Rounding out the Amherst galleries along South Pleasant Street is the Burnett Gallery, which is located inside of the Jones Library. Within this gallery one will find a vast variety of artwork all created by local area artists. Arthur Mange spokesmen for the Burnett Gallery said, "We try to keep this very much so a community gallery. We display the work of both amateur and professional artists as long as they are members of the community."



Opening its doors in 1921 along with the Jones Library. the Burnett Gallery is the oldest of the six galleries located in downtown Amherst. Having undergone renovations in the mid '80s, the gallery at least to Mange is, "The nicest gallery around, it has plenty of space, great lighting, everything is neat and in shape.

Hosmer Gallery

In Northampton, there is a gallery similar to the Burnett Gallery called The Hosmer Gallery. It is on the second floor of the Forbes Library on Main St. The work displayed here is also selected from the vast pool of artists in the community. The gallery itself is a spacious open area, which allows visitors a chance to see two or three different artists work in one visit.

The Hosmer Gallery reopened in June of 2002 after undergoing a 15-month renovation of the entire second floor. The gallery is named for the late local artist Jean Elizabeth Hosmer, who was shot by her estranged husband in 1999. With donations totaling around $200,000 Mary Ann P. Cofrin and her family chose to dedicate the gallery to Hosmer in honor of her.

Thirteen galleries, each with its own history, style and purpose all within a 20 minute bus ride of anywhere in the area. So now the only question is, how much of this art are you going to experience?

ARTWORK BY ARTIST | GALLERIES

Big Apple blacks out

Thursday, Aug. 14.
4:10 p.m.

I am practically falling asleep at work as I fold checks and stuff them in envelopes at a New York City advertising company where my father works. And then, everything electric shuts off.

We all laugh and think it is just our floor, but soon we learn it is the whole building, the whole block, the whole city, almost the whole state, and practically the whole northeast corner of North America.

After walking around in the dark, warm office, everyone starts to pack up and leave. On the 12th floor, my father and I begin to take the stairs down. There are supposed to be automatic safety lights in the stairwell, but it is completely dark. Luckily, someone has a lighter that eases our way to the lobby.

Samara Marblestone

As we pour onto Lexington Avenue, so does the rest of Manhattan. I don't realize how serious this power outage is until I see hundreds and hundreds of confused people and rows and rows of traffic-stopped cars, buses and taxis. "Let's just start walking toward Penn Station [where we take the train home]," my dad suggests. "The power could come on any second."

We are walking a couple of blocks south and realize there is nowhere to go. The trains aren't running, stores are closing and here we are walking to Penn Station as if it was a normal Thursday. All I want to do is go home, eat dinner and relax in my air-conditioned house. It's amazing how the absence of electricity is making that an impossible situation.

5 p.m.

There is nothing to do.

We sit on the curb right in front of the Empire State building and watch hundreds of people walk. I sip my water and stare at the traffic light and pray it suddenly lights. It doesn't.

We walk two more blocks up and sit outside of Lite Delights, a place where we usually hit for lunch. All around us, people are sitting together, eating, socializing and starting to get hammered. I close my eyes and try to relax. I have a long night ahead of me.

10 p.m.

My dad and I doze on a couch in a bar for a couple hours. It's crowded, loud and hot. We go outside for some fresh air. It is completely dark, and all we see are the headlights from passing cars, candles lit in windows and people carrying flashlights.

We walk across the street and hang out by someone's car where there is a small group of people holding candles and listening to the radio. There is no new news.

After, we wait in a long line to go inside a deli to buy some more food. It has candles too, so to prevent fire and the possibility of people looting, they only allow a few people in at a time. We don't care. We have nowhere to go.

11:20 p.m.

We walk over to the other side of the street. A cab drives by, and to my surprise, he stops for us. As we run to the cab, so do three other girls. Luckily, we beat them to it.

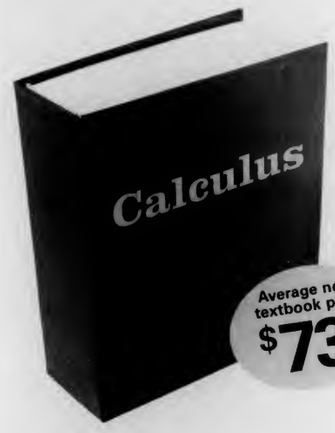
"How much do you want to drive us to Long Island?" my dad asks. The driver pulls over and looks up in a little book how much it costs. It would ordinarily cost $104 to drive us to Seaford, our town.

"I want extra, you know?" the driver bluntly stated.

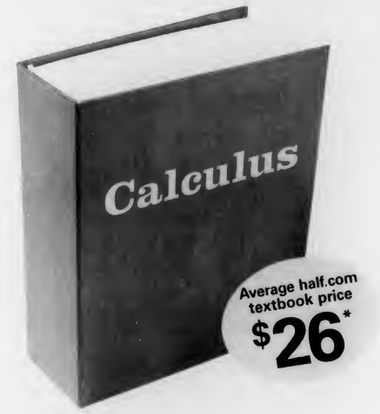
"How about $160?" my dad responds. As I stare at the driver, as if I would telepathically force him to agree; he does. We both smile and quickly jump in the cab. I never felt so relieved and

Continued on page B9

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
$139
★ Student Special ★
4 months
Best Aerobics~Best Machines
KEISER • NAUTILUS • FREE WEIGHTS • CYBEX • STAIRMASTERS • LIFECYCLES • TREADMILLS • ELLIPTICALS • LIFEROWER
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
256-0080
90 AMHERST
www.amherstathletic.com



Hampshire Mall
Route 9, Hadley
(413) 586-5700



Opening Soon!
American Eagle Outfitters
September 18
Target
October 12
Trader Joe's
October 12
Pacific Sunwear
November 30

Visit over 50 Shops, Restaurants, and Department Stores Including:
JCPenney • Media Play • CineMark Theatres
Interskate 91 • Laser Storm • Ground Round
Bath & Body Works • Eastern Mountain Sports
And Many More Coming Soon!

www.hampshiremall.com
Shopping Hours: Mon-Sat 10am-9pm; Sun 11am-6pm hot·diamonds

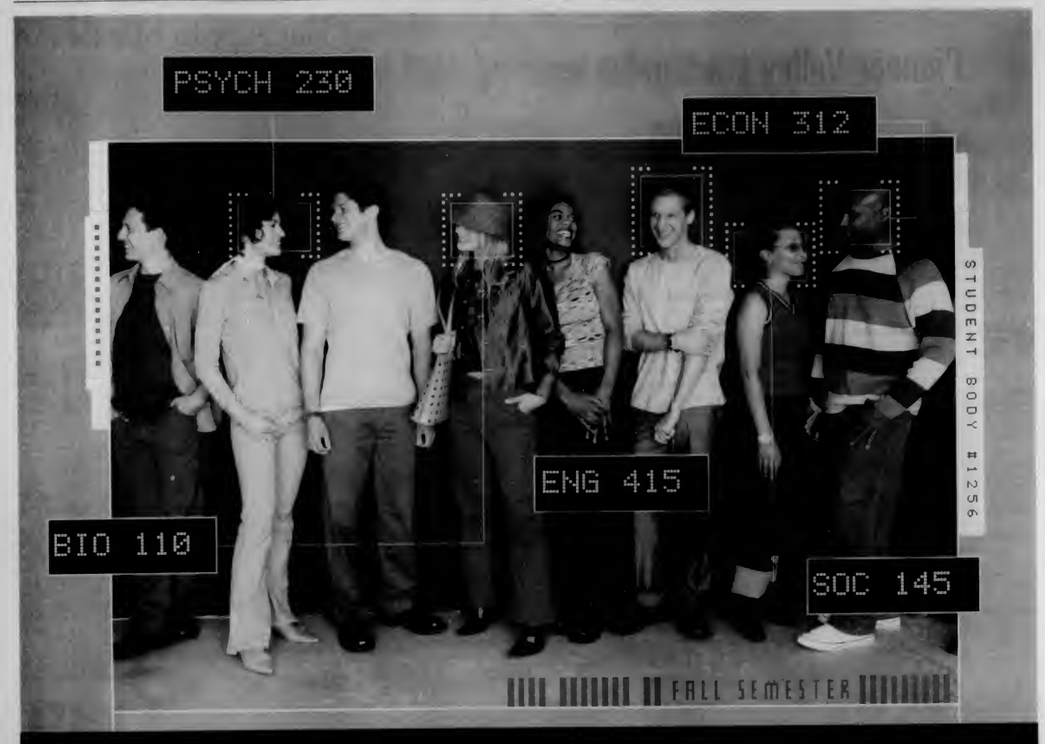
STERLING SILVER AND DIAMONDS
cape designs
THS GEM GALLERY
• Amherst • 253-3324
pedesigns.com



You do the math.

How smart is this: All the textbooks you need for up to 60% off retail prices. And all you have to do is go to half.com and type in the book titles, or ISBN numbers. Gotta love that new math.

For a limited time, first-time buyers
Save an additional $5
on purchases of $50 or more!
Simply use this code:
UMass2003

half.com by ebay
Same textbooks. Smarter prices.

*Average retail price of a new college textbook, $73 based on 2003 data from Follett Corp., Associated Press, 1/27/03. Average Half.com college textbook price $26 based on site statistics, January 2003. †First time buyers only. Limited time offer excludes shipping and handling; offer subject to change or termination without prior notice. Copyright 2003 Half.com, Inc. All rights reserved. Half.com and the Half.com logo are trademarks of Half.com, Inc. eBay and the eBay logo are registered trademarks of eBay, Inc.

WE'VE GOT YOUR NUMBER.

COURSE NUMBER THAT IS.

SAVE UP TO 25%
WITH USED TEXTBOOKS.

SHOP BY COURSE NUMBER

DELIVERY OR IN-STORE
PICK UP

BUY ONLINE. RETURN IN STORE.
NO PROBLEM.

UMASS University of Massachusetts UNIVERSITY STORE
Campus Center • Phone: (413) 545-2619 www.umass.bkstr.com

efollett.com
ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.

THE OFFICIAL WEBSITE FOR THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS UNIVERSITY STORE

FOOD

NoHo novelties:
Fun dishes sure to delight

Twinkies (vanilla loaded with hunks and hunks of twinkies)

Unsuspecting patrons will find surprising marble-sized chunks of the infamous yellow cake within every bite of this vanilla ice cream concoction. Remarkably, the cake remains in its coin shape, no crumbling, right till the end and provides a pinch of salt to mix with the sweet cream's taste. A chocolate topping breaks up any monotony for those with larger portions and anchors the cake's flavor. Reminiscent of the childhood days when you wanted nothing more than to mix your cake, ice cream and eat it to, it will bring out the kid in all. Served at Herrell's Ice Cream, 8 Old South St., Northampton, 413-586-9700.

Bistro burger served with truffle cheese

Take a Natural River Rock Farm hamburger. Add truffle cheese, tomato and a local house recipe for ginger chutney. Serve it on a fairly broad roll, and you've got one busy sandwich to test the taste buds. Ultimately, though, it's the chutney that fingerprints this dish. Diced tomatoes mixed with zesty ginger relish make for a flavorful sauce that turns up the heat without any overpowering sense of too much spice.

Mixed berry shortcake

A perfect compliment to the Bistro Burger, this classic American dessert combines a light pastry with a strawberry and blueberry topping and makes a great way to mark a sweet end to a heavy meal. Both served at Del Raye Bar & Grill, 1 Bridge St., Northampton, 413-586-2664.

Bailey's milk chocolate truffles

Enter the world's most decadent golf ball. A chilled outer shell of ultra sweet milk chocolate houses a bittersweet, heavily Bailey's laden fudge inside. The full force of this rich combination knocks the patron with a flavorful punch of gourment goodness. It may be just once piece of candy, but it truley fullfills a dessert portion on its own. Served at Ben & Bill's Chocolate Emporium, 141 Main St., Northampton, 413-584-5695.

Rounding with the usual suspects

By Jennifer Eastwood and Cameron J. Woods
Photos by Gerald H. Ling

The 'Taste of Northampton' food festival jazzes local eateries

NORTHAMPTON — For once, it's not just the dogs salivating in Northampton.

The 13th annual "Taste of Northampton" food festival brought 31 city businesses together for a three-day fair from Aug. 8-10.

Over 400 volunteers and eight months of planning produced the festivities, all under the direction of the Chamber of Commerce.

"Thirteen years ago, when this began, Northampton wanted to establish itself as a dining destination," Executive Director Suzanne Beck explained. "Around that time, more towns hosted taste festivals, but they only attracted people from that town. We wanted something that would draw in more crowds."

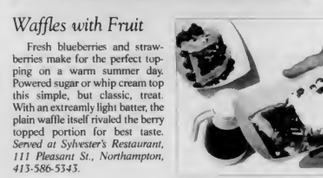
Years later, the wish has come to life. Fifteen percent of the visitors at the festival live outside the Pioneer Valley and travel from distances estimated up to 40 miles away, Beck reported.

Among them, an average of seven percent have never previously visited Northampton; instead, they hear about the festival through word of mouth and journey to satisfy their curiosity, she added.

The festival allows patrons to sample foods from throughout the city's restaurants. Entertainers included Wendy Kinal, at right, founder of the Only Fooling all-women physical comedy troupe of Boston.

The unforgettables

Chocolate Covered Strawberries



Dripping milk chocolate douses these sweet, tender berries and makes for a perfect summer treat. Introduced by Sweeties Fine Chocolates, 68 Main St., Northampton, 413-586-4180. And though Sweeties chose this berry treat specially for the festival, as they do not carry it in their shop, the coating still sported their own chocolate, a true local favorite.

DISHES · OF · THE · DAY

Glazed Chicken with Saffron Rice

Its use of authentic Indian spices was unmistakable at the first bite. Entangled with a liberal amount of curry, this tender chicken and rice combination developed into as much a treat for a stuffy nose as for your taste buds. With its orange glaze appearance beckoning the hungery patron, the dish denoted itself as a definite dinner meal to be shared on a cool evening outside. Served at India House Restaurant, 45 State St., Northampton, 413-586-6544.

Waffles with Fruit

Fresh blueberries and strawberries make for the perfect topping on a warm summer day. Powered sugar or whip cream top this simple, but classic, treat. With an extreamly light batter, the plain waffle itself rivaled the berry topped portion for best taste. Served at Sylvester's Restaurant, 111 Pleasant St., Northampton, 413-586-5343.

Pulled pork sandwich

This adventurios, seasoned pork dish sets your tongue aflame with its spices. After the sauce is slowly blended with the meat, the entire mixture is roasted with beer and barbeque sauce. Served at Northampton Brewery, 11 Brewster Ct., Northampton, 413-584-9903.

TRUST "Before locking into a long term contract for a fitness facility with no machinery in place, why not give the veteran professionals a visit."
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
"Big enough to own the best equipment, but small enough to know your name."
* In business 22 years
* Locally owned & operated" 0243606
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0080 99 AMHERST

COWLS

BACK TO SCHOOL
Great Ideas!
Organize your study space!
• Install shelving
• Build a bookcase
• Design a computer station
Choose shelving of Melamine, Plywood, COWLS pine or COWLS oak. Select from a variety of fastening systems using clips, standards or brackets.
NOTE: We cut shelving to your specifications!
Customize a school tool box!
Be the HANDY PERSON in your dorm!
Tool boxes, tools, fasteners, supplies and the expertise you need ...
ALL AT COWLS!
For All Your Building and Remodeling Needs
COWLS BUILDING SUPPLY
125 Sunderland Road, North Amherst
7-5 M-F • 8-3 Sat. • FREE local delivery
413-549-0001 • www.cowls.com

uhs EYE CARE SERVICES
Convenient Hours and Campus Location CALL 577-5244

Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services at UHS."
My name is Frederick Bloom. I graduated from the University of Massachusetts in 1971 and the New England College of Optometry in 1975. I am very proud of the University Health Service Eye Care Services and the high quality of eye care delivered to more than 100,000 individuals over the last 28 years.
I have been on the teaching faculty of the New England College of Optometry and co-authored an article with Dr. Abel, a UHS physician, that was published in a national optometry journal. In addition, I am credentialed in diagnostic and therapeutic ocular pharmaceuticals by the Massachusetts Board of Optometry.
EYE CARE SERVICES INCLUDE:
• Routine eye examinations
• A new onsite eye glass service
• Emergency eye care
• Full service contact lens care
• Co-management of laser refractive surgery
Our staff takes great pride in being able to fit many people who have had difficulty in the past wearing contact lenses.
Patient feedback of those who have used the UHS Eye Care Services over the years has been consistently excellent.
UNIVERSITY HEALTH SERVICES
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
577-5000 (main), 577-5244 (eye care)
UMASS

Fabulous Gift!
CLINIQUE Bonus is here!
With your Clinique purchase of $19.50 get this 7-piece gift, Free
Quantities are limited. Now thru Sunday, September 14th.
Fall Gift
7-piece Gift

Clarifying Lotion 2 • Moisture Surge Extra
High Impact Eye Shadow in Sugar Sugar • Colour Surge Lipstick in Wow Violet
Glosswear For Lips in Air Kiss • Clinique Happy Heart Perfume Spray
Cosmetic Bag
Cedar Chest
ARTFUL FURNISHINGS · QUALITY LINENS · IMAGINATIVE GIFTS
Thomes Marketplace · 150 Main St., Northampton, MA · 413-584-3860

AMHERST COLLEGE
DINING SERVICES OPPORTUNITIES
Amherst College is accepting applications for the following part-time positions beginning late August/early September.
COOKS · FOOD SERVERS
DISHWASHERS · KITCHEN RUNNERS
Weekday and weekend shifts (breakfast, lunch & dinner). Previous food preparation and kitchen experience preferred.
MEAL CHECKERS
Breakfast, lunch, dinner and weekend schedules available. Must be able to work a minimum of three shifts (approx. 3 hours each) up to a maximum of 19 hours per week. Light cleaning duties (including tables) during and after hours. Will train.
CATERING
Banquet Captains · Waitstaff · Bartenders
Drivers/Setup · Catering Dishwashers
Work special function/catered events. Previous experience preferred but will train.
CAMPUS CENTER COFFEE HOUSE
Counter Service – weekday late afternoon shifts available.
We offer competitive starting rates. No benefits. Interested candidates may submit a resume or complete an application at: Office of Human Resources, 201 Converse Hall, Amherst College, Amherst, MA 01002-5000.
Amherst College is an Equal Opportunity/Affirmative Action employer and encourages women, minorities and persons with disabilities to apply.

BOOKS

Captivating illustrations and a new theme crown an old Aesop favorite

Toni Morrison and son reunite with French artist for this stylish retelling

'Who's Got Game? The Lion or the Mouse?'
By Toni and Slade Morrison
Illustrated by Pascal Lemaitre
Simon & Schuster
Release Sept. 2003

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Staff

It may look like a small children's book, but simple it is not.

Nobel Prize-winning author Toni Morrison, her son Slade, and illustrator Pascal Lemaitre return to the publishing world this month to again raise the standards on a classic Aesop fable. This triage of talent — after kicking off their six-book "Who's Got Game?" series in June with a new take on "The Ants and the Grasshopper" — mobilizes their next tale into a masterpiece. Crafty and pungent, this book's got game all ages will appreciate.

Beyond the intricacies of its ink and pen sculpted plains of Africa, past the endearing handcrafted script that replaces standard typed text, the real draw to "The Lion or the Mouse?" is in its newly shaped story. Aesop's original fable may scorn those who bully and praise strength in the small, but what happens at the tale's end? Add one little mouse with a swelled head, a broken leader made wise by shame, and a general population driven by fear and insecurity, and the Morrisons give us their edgy answer.

No cardboard characters this time round. Each creature grows throughout the story to expand on his personality … for better and for worse. And it's this added dimension that hooks readers, compelling them to remain entranced through the end.

Creativity abounds in this volume. The Morrisons's use of poetry amazes, as their rhymes keep a beat-driven tempo throughout each page, splendidly exemplified by the lion's self-absorbed opening monologue:

"Listen up! Listen up! No ifs, maybes, ands, or buts. I am the king all over the land. I do what I like. I do what I can. In this place I make the laws because, because of my mighty paws. I am the strongest night and day. I can whip anyone who gets in my way. Tigers, hyenas, elephants too, everybody does what I say do."

The vibrant colors of Lemaitre's drawings also captivate and further give this book its own life. Indeed, the bright orange cover with its playful typography and scratchy line art marks its first draw, and that theme judiciously carries throughout the inside pages.

Each illustration, separated into cells reminiscent of any classic comic book, sports a color scheme unique to its text's mood. One such cell that scorches the memory houses the small mouse knocking on the lion's fortress door. The shot is angled from above to create an amazing depth perception, brilliantly colored to capture the mouse's anger. It also spikes a stark contrast with the new-age illustrations of latter panels, silhouetting the despairing lion on a white background.

Lemaitre, born in France, has been illustrating books since 1989. In addition to drawing the "Who's Got Game?" series, he has also drawn all the art for the Morrison's "The Book of Mean People," released in September 2002.

The Morrisons have found a keeper; no style could better compliment their artful words. And inevitably, it's this marriage of art and words that casts such socially powerful piece for both children and adults.

"[Reading books as a child was] a major thing. The security I felt, the pleasure, when new books arrived was immense," Toni Morrison told The New York Times back in 1994, just months after receiving the Nobel Prize for her book, "Beloved." Those who share Morrison's view can agree that indeed "The Lion or the Mouse?" and the entire premise of the "Who's Got Game?" series marks just such a milestone in cross adult-children's literature.

Morrison also reported during that same Times interview that James Baldwin's writing influenced her when she began to author.

"He could say something in a phrase that clarified all sorts of conflicting feelings," she told reporter Claudia Dreifus.

No better description can be given to Morrison's own work with "The Lion or the Mouse?" as it blasts through an old tale with some truly haunting wisdom. It's the perfect gift for art lovers of the colorful scratchy ink and pen line style loosely reminiscent of Dr. Suess — and, most of all, for shouting the message that just being yourself is the best you can be.

Also see "The Ant or the Grasshopper?" and the forthcoming "Poppy or the Snake?" – the third installment in this series.

ATKINS FARMS
Country Market ...where the apple is just the beginning!
Rte. 116 & Bay Road, South Amherst, MA
(413) 253-9528 • (800) 594 9537

Looking For Something To Do?
Atkins Farms Has Something For Everyone!

Farm Fresh Produce
Country Bakery
Meat Market
Deli & Lunches
Specialty Foods
Homemade Fudge

Full Service Florist
Fruit & Gift Baskets
Gift Department
Take-Out Food
Ice Cream Bar
Sushi Bar

A unique country market nestled in one of the oldest apple orchards in New England. Atkins is just a short drive south from UMass on route 116. You'll enjoy a unique shopping experience where old time service is an everyday treat. Sample some of New England's favorite foods or pick up a country gift as a keepsake.

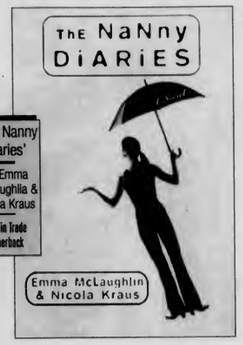
Attention Parents!!
Student Special Care Packages
Great idea for parents far away from their busy, hard working, and hungry college student.
Birthday Cakes
Flowers, Balloons
Snack Paks
Get Well Paks
Mix & Match Paks
& many more!
Call for our brochure
(413)253-9528 or
1-800-594-9537
www.atkinsfarms.com
Deliveries Mon-Sat

Goten of Japan
Cooking at your table
Hours
Mon Closed
Tues-Fri 5-9pm
Sat 12-10pm
Sunday 4-9pm
Off Rt. 116
104 Old Amherst Road
Sunderland, MA
01375
Now accepting OCMP

BOOKS

McLaughlia and Kraus show difficult role nannies play

By Lizzy Nielsen
Collegian Correspondent



Beach books are a dime a dozen in the summertime. Good beach books aren't so frequent, and beach books that actually tell a riveting and heart wrenching story well are even less common. Authors Emma McLaughlin and Nicola Kraus, both Nannies themselves, managed to create an accurate and interesting beach books about being a nanny in an uncomfortable situation for a well-to-do family in New York City.

Nanny, the main character, is a New York University student who pays for her studio apartment in the city by being a caretaker for well-off children. She meets Mrs. X in a park, and the X family nanny is returning to her home country of Australia, so Mrs. X looks to interview Nanny to take care of her son, four-year-old Grayer.

Nanny has not a clue what she is getting into. What starts out as working a dream job in a Penthouse apartment on 5th Avenue soon turns into a nightmare for Nanny. Amidst all the Prada Bags and Gucci shoes in the X's house, their marriage is disintegrating. After Nanny's first encounter with Mr. X at a Halloween party, Nanny begins to play a leading role in the dissolving of the X's marriage. Stuck in the middle of all this is little Grayer, who looks to Nanny as his main mother figure. In the midst of the divorce and being Grayer's stand in mom, Nanny is also a full time student and has a love life of her own.

'The Nanny Diaries' By Emma McLaughlia & Nicola Kraus
Griffin Trade Paperback

'The Nanny Diaries' is a great book for anyone who's ever worked as a Nanny, or even as just a babysitter...

The book has numerous ups and downs. Grayer gets very ill during the course of the book, and Nanny is left to take care of him while his mother deals with the end of her marriage in extremely bizarre ways. McLaughlin and Kraus do an extraordinary job of outlining the importance of a Nanny in a child's life, and they do an even better job of exemplifying exactly what this can do to the relationship between a parent and child. Grayer has no relationship at all with his father and a very strained one with his mother. They also accurately and delicately portray exactly how important a Nanny can become to a family, and how they get trapped in all kinds of family events, both good and bad.

The most interesting aspect of the book would easily be that none of the main characters have real names except for Grayer. McLaughlin and Kraus have both worked extensively as nannies, and they have both stated that it is because the book is drawn from their work experience. The lack of names for main characters makes it a little difficult to concentrate on the story at times, and takes away from the realistic ness of it. A Nanny is a real job, and a very important one, and the fact that names weren't used took away from the story a bit, and made it a little less believable. Throughout the book, some characters had names, but most didn't. The choice to have Grayer be the only character with a real name was also an interesting decision, and made him stand out as the most believable character in the story. Grayer behaves exactly as any four-year-old would, and reacts to difficult situations and attaches himself to Nanny just as any other child his age would. Nanny was a bit unbelievable at times, as it seems that any person in their right mind would hightail it out of such a horrible situation, and Mrs. X was a bit flamboyant even for a woman with no credit limit, no desire to be a mother and a taste for the finer things in life. However, all the characters were developed perfectly, and each of the main characters in the story had a story and a background that was both interesting and mostly believable.

"The Nanny Diaries" is a great book for anyone who's ever worked as a Nanny, or even as just a babysitter, as it is an accurate portrayal of how dependent children become on the most stable person in their life. Grayer didn't have stability in any of his parents or any of his past caretakers so the love that develops between him and Nanny is something very special. "The Nanny Diaries" is a fairly short book and is a great story that doesn't require too much thought. It's interesting, but not too deep, and it tells a really cute story of a relationship between a child and his babysitter.

Mysteries unveiled in latest Potter book

Continued from page B1

and other students bent on training in Defense Against the Dark Arts for more than just the purpose of preparing for the impending O.W.L (Ordinary Wizarding Level) examinations. Also, readers can expect mixed emotions when a new member of Hagrid's family comes to live in the Dark Forest. And if you liked Ron's twin brothers, Fred and George, from previous books and movies, you'll love them in this book faster than you can say Portable Swamp.

But despite all the newest additions, the basic feelings in the novel remain the same. The longing for a family or even a community of one's own and the idea of standing up for truth against censorship are a strong motivating factor in Rowling's stories. Wrapping these notions in a cloak of magic keeps young and old entertained and eager for Rowling's next spell.

A separate focal point for Potter aficionados was who would snuff it before the end of the term. The death of Harry's classmate, Cedric Diggory, was something of a shock to readers and all Rowling could say was that more deaths would follow. Online chat rooms buzzed with theories and suppositions on which person in Harry's inner circle it would be. In response to the rumors there is no way that I can seriously let the readers know who dies, the book is simply too good not to find out first hand.

When the lights went out

Continued from page B5

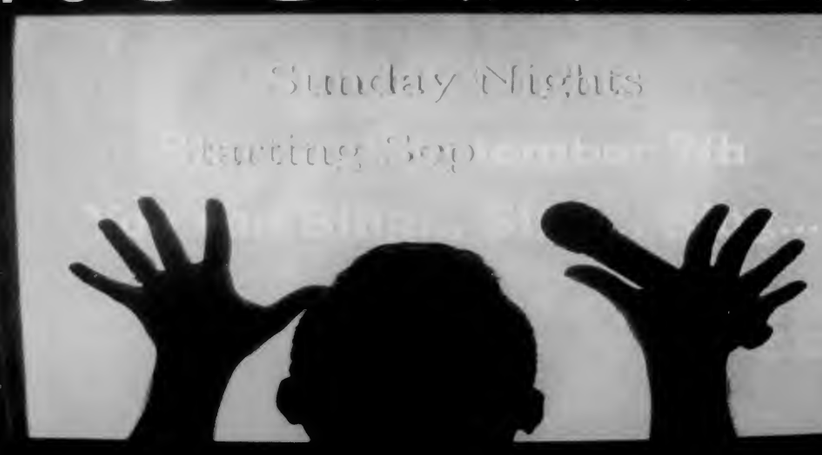
thankful to be in an air-conditioned taxi with my dad.

About 40 minutes later, the cab pulls up to our car parked at the train station in Seaford. Unfortunately for the driver, the taxi breaks down the second he pulls up to the car. We don't feel too bad, though, because he should be able to fix the problem with all the money we gave him.

12:15 a.m.

I run into my house and hug my mom, as she holds a huge flashlight. I take a shower and go straight to bed.

I am so lucky. Millions of people are stuck in elevators, subways, trains and other places you just can't walk out of on your freewill, like I did.



Oddly enough, I really appreciate everything now. I felt homeless as I sat on the streets of Manhattan. On a lighter note, my parents have since bought me a T-shirt that says "I Survived the Historical Blackout in New York City … August 14, 2003."

Samara Marblestone is a Collegian columnist.

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
$139 ★ Student Special ★ 4 months
Best Aerobics~Best Machines
KEISER • NAUTILUS • FREE WEIGHTS • CYBEX • STAIRMASTERS • LIFECYCLES • TREADMILLS • ELLIPTICALS • JUICE BOOTH
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0080 90 AMHERST
ON BUS ROUTE • OPEN 7 DAYS
www.amherstathletic.com

OCMP Off Campus Meal Plan
KFC · Panda East · Bruno's · Goten of Japan · Burger King · Sugar Bowl · Chicago Pizza · Spaghetti Freddy's · Newman Center · Bananarama · The Pub · Angelina's Pizza · Delano's · Bertucci's Brick Oven Pizzeria · Chili's · Nancy Jane's · Pinocchio Ristorante · andiamo 256 Food · Charlie's Tavern · The Souper Bowl · Java Hut Roasters · Applebee's · Milanio's Pizza · Pizza Hut · Dirty Business Laundry Delivery Service · The Ground Round, Inc. · Pete's Drive-In · the sub · Pasta E Basta · Panda East · China Dynasty · Judie's · D.P. Dough · The Lord Jeffery Inn · Stangar Pub and Grill · Nick's · Fitzwilly's · Bueno Y Seco · Bart's Homemade · Daisy's · Big Y Food Court · Veracruzana · Dairy Mart · Cousin's Market · The Harp · Athena's Pizza · Karen's Kitchen · Thai Corner · Friendly's · The Black Sheep · China Lan · House of Teriyaki · Amherst Brewing Co. · Subway · Union Station · Brueggers Bagels · Rafters · Pizzeria 256
Just because you're a college student, doesn't mean you have to eat like one.
www.OCMPAmherst.com
1-888-211-6267

It's BAAACK

Karaoke Returns! September 7th

Friday
Male and Female Go-Go Dancers
18+ Hard House

Saturday
The Ultimate Dance Party
21+ Hip Hop & House

Sunday
Karaoke Night with DJ Linda
18+ No Cover

Tuesday
Haven Goth Night
18+ Goth & Industrial

Wednesday
Drag Shows and Dancing
18+ Hip Hop & House

Thursday
1980something, Classics from the 80's
18+ No Cover

ADVOCATE ★BEST★ OF THE VALLEY READERS POLL 2003
Best Nightclub
Best Dance Club
Best Bar To Be Single
Best Gay Bar

DIVA'S Nightclub DIVA'S Nightclub

492 Pleasant St., Northampton MA 01060 / 413-586-8161
www.divasofnoho.com

LIVE MUSIC

Golden Oldies

Baby boomers have made it a good time to be an aging rock star

By Nikolas P. Markantonatos
Collegian Staff

Paul McCartney. The Rolling Stones. Cher. Billy Joel and Elton John. Bruce Springsteen. Aerosmith. Neil Diamond. The Eagles.

They're wrinkled. They're leathery. And they're eight out of the 10 top touring acts of 2002.

The core audience of these acts — baby boomers — is the one to thank. Or blame. They are part of the 76 million Americans born between 1946 and 1964 that are nostalgic for their long-ago idols. They first helped these acts top the charts in the 1960s, and now aged 39-57 they're doing it again — this time, perhaps, enjoying the music with hearing aids instead of the assistance of hallucinogens.

"You're really talking about nostalgia," says Charles D. Schewe, professor of Marketing at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and co-author of "Defining Markets, Defining Moments: America's 7 Generational Cohorts, Their Shared Experiences, and Why Businesses Should Care."

"If you define the word nostalgia, it's a straight line to pleasurable memories. And baby boomers all gained prominence when they were coming of age, which also happens to be coincidental with the music that was surrounding the event or happening — emotional or psychedelic events in their lifetime. They were so prominent in the media. They loved that time. It was fun.

"And nostalgia tends to kick in around the age of 50. There's been a link of time to these artists and your children have flown the nest at that time and you sort of have time to take a sigh of relief and reflect. One of the major elements of that is the music you've loved when you were younger is big when you're older. And since there's 76 million baby boomers, it's logical that these rock stars are seeing a renaissance."

That explains why Cher, the Stones and the rest of the aging gang rolled their way to a combined total of $486.2 million last year, emerging as 2002's top concert moneymakers, according to the tracking-concert publication Pollstar.

"They weren't successful the last 20 to 25 years, but now [baby boomers] have reached their 50s," says Shewe. "Nostalgia has become a big element in the lives of baby boomers. And now rock stars are enjoying a new growth spurt in their opportunities.

"I think the reason we keep going out to see the Rolling Stones and Cher tours are because those people defined our coming of age years," he says.

Last year the concert industry took in a record $2.1 billion, up 20 percent from 2001, according to Pollstar. That amount reflects, yes, an all-time high average ticket price ($46.56), but it also reflects more bodies, with 35.1 million tickets sold in 2002, compared to 34.4 million in 2001. Put simply: The oldies acts drove the market.

"There are very few acts that have proven to have sustained interest," says Gary Bongiovanni, editor of Pollstar. "It was really the baby boomer generation that grew up on rock 'n' roll and their musical taste has been kept intact. If you were an Aerosmith fan 25 years ago you're likely to be an Aerosmith fan 25 years later."

Even halfway through 2003, the old-school set still looks like it's seducing baby boomers out of their Barcaloungers and Craft-matic Adjustable Beds and in front of concert stages. Buoyed by top draws such as (you guessed it!) Cher, the Stones and Elton John and Billy Joel, concert attendance jumped 24 percent in the first half of 2003. The top 50 acts grossed $678 million.

The string of touring artists and bands that came through the area this summer reads like a 1960s and '70s record collection: Fleetwood Mac, Peter Gabriel, The Eagles, James Taylor, Cher, Ozzy Osbourne, Aerosmith and Aretha Franklin. All refuse to act their age, sprinting through countless shows all across North America (and, in some cases, worldwide).

Fortunately for them, baby boomers very much act their age, apparently more concerned getting their trembling old hands on tickets sometimes costing more than $100 a pop than an AARP card.

But despite baby boomers' oodles of disposable income, Shewe says the aging rock stars phenomenon isn't because of extra cash the fans possess.

"I think it all has to do with emotion and the size of this particular group," he says. "I think it's [money] an enabling effect, but not a motivating effect. It's allowed the prices to go up, but it's not the reason for the surge."

According to Schewe, music was an intrinsic part of the baby boomers cohort (the general era in which a person is born) and since people are influenced most between the ages of 17 to 23, it's no surprise they are flocking to see their idols of old. So despite the fact that it looked like the sound died with vinyl records and long hair, rock stars are rising faster than skin after a facelift.

McCartney

Despite the success of the oldies acts, the music industry, which largely operates on a youth minded business platform, may not realize how much disposable income the baby boomers have.

"I think everyone across the business thinks young, and probably don't appreciate how these older musicians have the impact they have," says Schewe. "They're not as aware of it as they could be."

At least execs at VH1, who have always been kind to graying rock stars, are getting the hint. In May 2000, (older?) sister channel VH1 Classic was launched, featuring artists from the '60s on. Despite its appeal to an older generation of people, the station is still in its infancy, available in only 20 million households in all the major markets in the country, according to Michael J. Garvey, director of music programming and production. He hopes the channel will soon reach more households.

"I think everyone is very, very happy with the way things have gone so far," he says.

Jagger

Since the channel only reaches such a small-sized audience, the number of viewers cannot be determined, says Garvey. He thinks the network will grow, not only because they'll eventually be able to attract advertisers, but also because the baby boomer generation will continue to follow their favorite rockers as they grow older. (VH1 Classic: The channel of choice in nursing homes?)

"I think part of the reason we've done so well is that the music industry is going through one of those cycles — if you look at the sales, old rock stars are big," he says. "These artists will sell out huge, huge venues. They're established and you know what you're going to get. The proof is in the pudding when it comes to these people."

Along with the arms-wide-open acceptance, aging rock acts intend to rock til' they drop — or at least as long as audiences accept them.

Joel

"They're musicians by trade, doing the work that they're good at," says Bongiovanni. "The way the economics in music is you make money from touring. Ticket price is a great reflection of how much money they want to make."

And, hey, some are asking why rock must always be a form of youth music for it to be considered legitimate. Susan K. Whitbourne, professor of Psychology of Aging at UMass and author of "Adult Development & Aging," asks if a rocker can still cut it at 50 or 60, why should he or she stop doing what they love to do (and can make money doing it)?

"You can always make more money. Why should they stop? They're still young and people in this generation are by and large still working," she says.

Continued on page B12

Times are a 'changin'

But the lyrics remain the same

By Scott Eldredge II
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — The ticket stub reads "Bob Dylan and His Band."

The poet laureate of Rock — that's how he was introduced and that's what he maintained throughout the night — strolled onto stage. In boots of some kind of leather, Dylan strutted on stage, put his cowboy hat down — somewhere next to the Oscar watching from side stage — and dove in. When Bob Dylan took the stage at the Pines Theater Aug. 19, he stepped off with the confidence of a conductor in command. He proved to be as much the maestro as he is the musician.

Bob Dylan and His Band
Pines Theater
Northampton
Aug. 18

Leaving his own guitars in the hands of a shrouded session-esque guitarist, Dylan commanded his charges from behind his keyboard, standing, stepping, shuffling at times. There is no question that he had the other five musicians on track. He stuck with the keys and the signature harmonica throughout the night.

The occasional stroll from the black and whites to conduct more closely, or seemingly just to roam, the troubadour pulled along the rest of the band for two hours. He didn't depart, ever, from the goal of music and the breaks between songs were hardly a rest. In fact, there seemed to be a goal to confuse as the band sounded more like a middle school jazz band between songs, breaking into more familiar arrangements when the lights came back on full.

One break showed as a little too short. The switch to stand up bass for Tony Garnier was hurried, as Bob started on the keys and vocals of "Boots of Spanish Letter," but once the band was on track this proved to be the shining star of the night.

"Boots," an on-stage rarity, pulled through with acoustic style. Tangible lyrics, and audible vocals — it is a prize from the catalogue that appears at the best of times. This, along with "Blind Willie McTell," showed the versatility of the musicians who controlled when plugged in, but complemented Dylan's lyricism when set to a softer acoustic note.

Dylan has proven that he will always reinvent. For those in the know, he is still on his "never ending tour." You might have expected to hear something off the soundtrack to his cinematic concert "Masked and Anonymous," but the repertoire instead wrapped 40 years of music into one well-strung set.

In such a potentially socialite loaded venue — The Pines is a 2,500 outdoor seater and tickets started at $65 — the poet rocker played the anticipated favorites. "Tangled Up in Blue," "The Times They are A-Changin'," crowd pleasers at there simplest. But in the ever-reinventing style of the laureate, Dylan rearranged.

Forty years after entering the scene no song sounds exactly the same. This has just as much to do with his 61-year-old veteran's status as it does his tireless efforts to defy description. In the 1960s he started as the political poet and since has moved through country, rock, blues taking 10-year jumps at a time. Tuesday was no different.

He played the acoustic versions that christened his career, but showed no fear when he displayed newfound arrangements for quite-classic songs.

"I'll Be Your Baby Tonight" had a far different pull compared to its debut on 1967's "John Wesley Harding," and as expected, the continued trend of a Hendrix-inspired electric "Watchtower," sealed the show. (Dylan, upon hearing the late guitar legend's version of his 1967 song, vowed to perform it only as Jimi did — plugged in.)

The outdoor air and perhaps the best weather in a month completed the scene. Certainly there were those hopping in the aisles who could hear the more obscure and not recognize the tune, but for the most part, Dylan and his band pleased the crowd and played what wanted to be heard. However, he is far from confined to the radio or album favorites, and there were the compositions rolled off the typewriter that only the long-time fan would grin for.

And as a signature that the protest-poet still cares, the half smile, half sneer when he sang, "But even the president of the United States/ Sometimes must have to stand naked" from "It's alright, Ma (I'm only Bleeding)" hit a particularly poignant note.

Courtesy Columbia Records

Bob Dylan dazzled 2,500 fans at NoHo's Pines Theater.

Continued on page B12

Cher and Cher alike

A music legend bids her fans farewell

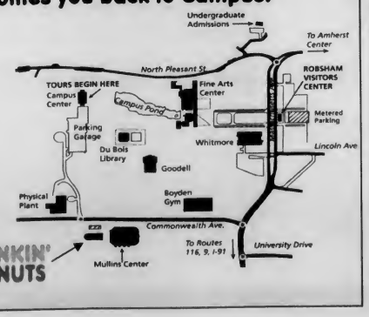
By Jessica Pelletier
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER — Mentioning the name Cher can bring to mind images ranging from raven-haired hippie chic to wig-laden pop diva. Love her or hate her, the musician/actress's career has stood the test of time for more than forty years. But even as you read this article, Cher's newest incarnation will be a successful retiree.

The end of this year is bringing an end to Cher's Living Proof Farewell Tour, which began more than a year ago, in 2002. On July 12, the tour swept through Worcester's Centrum Center. And while some may consider Cher's music to be fodder for soccer moms and drag queens, the fan base at the concert proved to be much larger than that.

Cher
'Living Proof Farewell Tour'
Centrum Centre
Worcester
July 12

Cher's opening act could have been a teenage one-hit-wonder or an obscure band being pushed out by a hopeful record company. Fortunately, however, she chose to forgo these options and the crowd was entertained by comedian Tommy Drake. Haven't heard of him? Don't worry. The comedian was quick to point out his own obscurity when he mentioned "this is Cher's Living Proof who the hell is Tommy Drake tour." His act was over a half hour long and included hilarious jokes aimed at the die-hard fans in the audience (especially the ones wearing faux Navy garb.)

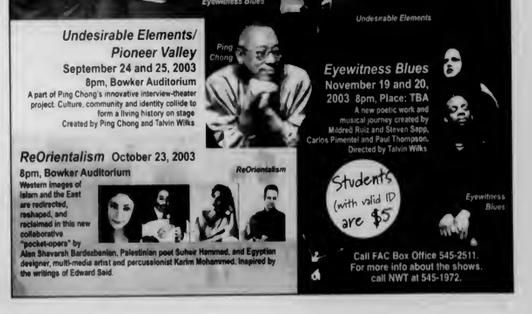


In the tradition of most pop divas, Cher went for the most dramatic opening possible and was lowered from thirty feet above the audience in a golden cage. Oddly enough, she chose not to open the concert with one of her own hits, the crowd was blasted with U2's "Still Haven't Found What I'm Looking For," instead.

Shortly after the close of the song, Cher donned a festively oversized top hat complete with cropped red jacket and whip to star as her own personal ring master in a circus of sequins. With her dark hair tucked snugly into a blonde wig, the performer admitted to wishing she was a real blonde while at the same time calling Barbie a "bitch." Hostilities aside, the moments when Cher would stop and talk to the audience proved to be entertaining as well. During one stop on the tour, the apparatus that lowered the star onto the stage broke; leaving the caped Cher strapped to a metal stand a couple stories above the crowd. "I'm not a Depends wearer," chuckled Cher. "But at that moment I thought I should be."

Continued on page B12

DUNKIN' DONUTS®
Located in the Mullins Center Practice Ice Rink
Welcomes you back to Campus!



We accept the UCard for all purchases!

Watch for our FREE DONUT offer coming soon!

DUNKIN' DONUTS

New WORLD Theater
Celebrating 25 Years of New WORLD Theater

Undesirable Elements/ Pioneer Valley
September 24 and 25, 2003
8pm, Bowker Auditorium
A part of Ping Chong's innovative interview-theater project. Culture, community and identity collide to form a living history on stage
Created by Ping Chong and Talvin Wilks

Ping Chong

Eyewitness Blues
November 19 and 20, 2003 8pm, Place: TBA
A new poetic work and musical journey created by Mildred Ruiz and Steven Sapp, Carlos Pimentel and Paul Thompson.
Directed by Talvin Wilks

ReOrientalism October 23, 2003
8pm, Bowker Auditorium
Western images of Islam and the East are redirected, reshaped, and reclaimed in this new collaborative "pocket-opera" by Alan Shawarsh Bardezbenian, Palestinian poet Suheir Hammad, and Egyptian designer, multi-media artist and percussionist Karim Mohammed. Inspired by the writings of Edward Said.

ReOrientalism

Eyewitness Blues

Students (with valid ID) are $5

Call FAC Box Office 545-2511.
For more info about the shows, call NWT at 545-1972.

LIVE MUSIC

Cher says a final goodbye

Continued from page B11

To be performing hits and wearing little more than a leather jacket and fishnets when you're approaching 60 is an accomplishment in itself, so we're not going to mention how many times the dancers came forward to add some much needed energy to the performance. Songs like "All I Really Want to Do," "If I Could Turn Back Time" and "Believe" were perfect examples of an artist's successful transition through the years. The last of these songs, garnered Cher a Grammy Award in 1998 for best dance recording.

In a gesture of compassion, "I Got You Babe" was only performed in a montage sequence from an early recording of the Sonny and Cher show. The audience seemed a little quieter seeing pictures of the late Sonny Bono happily playing with his wife at an amusement park.

During the dozens of costume changes, Cher's dance troop would take center stage and perform acrobatics a la Cirque du Soleil. Other pauses in performance were filled with video montages of Cher with former husband Sonny Bono, Cher in her various movie roles over the past 20 years, Cher singing with other superstars such as Elton John and Raquel Welch and even a clip of Cher playing all the roles in West Side Story by herself. If you saw this tour and your appetite for Cher was not satiated, then you — my friend — are obsessed beyond help.

To get down to smaller details, the costuming and pyrotechnics were phenomenally put together. Designers Bob Mackie and Hugh Durrent showed a leaning towards southern Asian and tribal patterns with their costumes. During numbers such as "Bang, Bang (My Baby Shot Me Down)" and "Half-Breed" the largest of all the headpieces belonged to Cher, obviously. And her entrance upon the back of a full-sized mechanical elephant pretty much drove home the idea that nothing in the show would be less than flamboyant.

After the proverbial curtain fell, something rare occurred. A special montage was created for all the people who work behind the scenes to make such an elaborate concert possible. Everyone from the band to the stage crew got onscreen to show how much work goes into each performance. In this gesture of appreciation shows that Cher really hasn't forgotten the first rule in being an icon is never forget the ones who help you get where you are.

'Idols' get the good vote in Providence

By Lizzy Nielsen
Collegian Correspondent

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — Swarms of controversy swirled around the outcome of the second season of "American Idol" in May when Clay Aiken lost to Ruben Studdard by a fraction of a percent; this had the public demanding a recount.

Well, if the atmosphere at the Dunkin Donuts Center was any indication of who "really" won, Aiken took it by a landslide.

Thousands of pre-pubescent females dragged their moms and dads toting Clay or Ruben posters and T-shirts. There was even the mildly disturbing scattering of middle-aged men and women carrying signs for the American Idols.

COURTESY FREEWEBS.COM

Rubin Studdard

The Idols came out in the order that they were voted off. Hearing most of them live made it quite apparent to the listener why they were voted off when they were. Kimberly Caldwell (the one who did the Maxim spread), couldn't carry a tune in a basket during her rendition of Stacie Orrico's "Stuck." Julia Demato covered Christina Aguilera's "Beautiful," and tried to sing it exactly as Aguilera did. Demato lacks the pipes and singing power that Aguilera has, and her rendition came across as a performance directly out of a karaoke bar.

Kimberly Caldwell
Julia Demato
Ricky Smith
Treynece
Kimberly Locke
Rubin Studdard
Clay Aiken

'America Idols Live'

Dunkin Donuts Center
Providence, R.I.
Aug. 2

Ricky Smith was the biggest surprise of the night, covering Michael Jackson's "The Way You Make Me Feel," and setting the standard for the rest of the performances. However, Treynece, Kimberly Locke, Studdard and Aiken were the brightest and best performances of the night.

Treynece made Tina Turner proud with her arena shaking take on "Rollin' On the River." Locke, easily the most talented of the group, was awarded a standing ovation for her performance of "Over the Rainbow."

And then there were two.

The opening chords of Aiken's "This is the Night" could hardly be heard over the deafening roar inside the arena. Aiken rose out of the floor dressed in a suit, and had the crowd eating out of the palm of his hand with the incredibly passionate performance of his first single.

The energy in the crowd was noticeably lost when Studdard came out and sang his rendition of "Superstar." Studdard then sang the first single off his new album, which came across as a G-rated Usher or R. Kelly, and was a bathroom break for many in attendance that evening.

The Idols then took a 20-minute intermission, and the crowd was then treated to a live version of the hit Fox show. The cast came out and sang in different groups, with the most entertaining being Aiken and Studdard singing the Michael Jackson and Paul McCartney classic "The Girl is Mine," while making up some kind of BS dialogue regarding a fictional Kelly Brown they both met and dated at the "Today" show. The other highlight would be the Idols doing a rendition of "I've Had the Time of My Life," from Dirty Dancing, as it captures the essence of the experience for most of the Idols minus Aiken, Studdard, and possibly Locke, because for the rest of them, this ride is pretty much over.

Aiken also got the opportunity to perform the first single from his new self-titled album, "Invisible," for the crowd, and it again, received a far better reaction than Studdard's. With Aiken's incredibly passionate stage antics, and the slightly creepy lyrics about "if I were invisible I would just watch you in your room," the nine-year-old girls were ready to start tossing their Hanes-her-ways at the spiky haired popstar-in-training.

COURTESY FREEWEBS.COM

Clay Aiken

American Idol isn't showing any sign of going away. Plans for a third season are already underway and auditions took place throughout August. Simon and company look like they have a good thing going. Each year, the groups get more popular and more talented. The only contestant from season one that could even hold a candle to Studdard, Locke or Aiken would have been Tamyra Gray. Hopefully Aiken and Studdard will take some notes from the "From Justin to Kelly" book and stay away from any dreadful, waste of everything movie scripts.

Dylan strolls by the Pines

Continued from page B11

The Waifs led off the night. The acoustic Australians warmed a crowd with a twinge and a twang and a well-harped sensibility. The rumor surrounding the opening act is that Dylan spotted them at the 2002 Newport Folk festival and liked what he saw.

Northampton did too, and the female leads both joked about their new shoes bought downtown as they mixed Australian folk with well-placed instrumentals. For a main act that simply needs no introduction, The Waifs did well to earn their position as the first step for Dylan, "rambling outta the wild west."

Classic rock-stars prove age is only a number

Continued from page B11

Whitbourne, who stresses people can't be categorized "old" until they are over 65, also chalks it up to the self-important mindset rock stars seem to have.

"It's their egos and I suppose they still think they're making contributions," she says. "They will take on those roles as long as people are willing to give them the part."

She uses Cher, who's had more plastic surgery than farewell tours, as an example, saying, "she doesn't know the difference between denial and reality."

What's clear is the generation of the forever young, the perpetually hip, and the eternally iconoclastic intend to keep it that way. The Peter Pan generation will simply redefine growing old just as it redefined growing up.

"There's always this sort of motto or theme," says Schewe, "that 'when you get them when you're young you'll have them for life.'"

Springsteen

Jagger

Indeed, according to Shewe, the way to forecast who and what will (again) be popular among each graying generation is to look back at what was all the rage when the generation was 17 to 23 years old.

"That's the way to predict who's going to be hot in the future," says Shewe.

Jokes Whitbourne: "I'd like to see what nursing homes will play when this generation is 90."

Perhaps a then white-hot VH1 Classic blasting Eminem in 2073?

TRUST
"Before locking into a long term contract for a fitness facility with no machinery in place, why not give the veteran professionals a visit."
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
"Big enough to own the best equipment, but small enough to know your name."
* In business 22 years
* Locally owned & operated 0043606
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0000 90 AMHERST

Arts & Living
Arts@dailycollegian.com

FREE
WIRELESS • HIGH SPEED
INTERNET ACCESS
@
Bart's ice cream & coffee bar
SERVING DEAN'S BEANS
100% ORGANIC & FAIR TRADE
FRESH ROASTED COFFEE
103 NORTH PLEASANT ST. AMHERST

4th Anniversary Celebration
MERCYhouse
it's a church
celebrates its 4th year anniversary as a church in Amherst. All of Amherst is invited to enjoy a full schedule of festivities under and around the big yellow tent on the Common.
Sunday, September 7th
11:00am - Sunday Morning Celebration
12:30pm - Free Hotdogs
1:00pm - Musical treats every hour including jazz, funk, classical, rock'n'roll.
- Free kids carnival with face painting
- Arts and crafts booth for both kids and adults
- Volleyball tournament with prizes
4:00pm - Free concert under the tent
www.knowmercy.org
413-374-7532

Phish delights fans at festival

Continued from page B14

underway, and they didn't stop for the entire weekend.

It is rare to find oneself in a place where everybody appears to be genuinely enjoying themselves, especially 70,000 people. This is what "IT" delivered — there was something for everyone to enjoy. Phish provided a number of interesting and entertaining diversions including "Sunk City" — a strange area where pieces of a fake city were buried underground, creating the illusion that the city had simply sunk into the ground. For the technology lovers of the crowd there was the House of Live Phish and its 20 IMAC digital music stations where one could make a CD of their favorite live Phish tracks. Others spent their time on 'Shakedown Street' perusing the goods offered by the hundreds of vendors that had been allowed to set up shop. And, the "Hundredth Running of the First Annual Runaway Jim 5k Road Race" (yes, that is what it was called) was enjoyed by all those who got up in time to watch it.

Finally, the other major non-musical distraction was recreational drug and alcohol use. It is safe to say that the opportunity to do drugs and drink beer without fear of arrests ranks a close second to seeing Phish play music. This is not to say that people would not attend if they could not get wasted — I think they would. However, one cannot deny that drugs and alcohol were an extremely prominent part of many peoples "IT" experience. Beer flowed like water, the smell of weed was omnipresent and the sound of nitrous tanks filled the air. A simple yell of "who's got my (insert slang term for drug of choice)" was enough to acquire any illicit drugs one desired. Undoubtedly some individuals took things too far (gotta love those kids who get too wasted to go to the show), but on the whole, people were safe and obeyed their limits.

All other distractions aside, "IT" was about the music first and foremost. In the span of two days Phish played the equivalent of three non-festival shows of music (six sets), and true to form, they never repeated a song. The first set began at approximately 5:45 p.m. Saturday night and it was undoubtedly one of the best sets of the entire concert. Trey and company seemed very relaxed, but also energized to be playing in front of such a large crowd. Highlights were a rocking "Ya Mar," "Meatstick" (with Japanese lyrics!), and crowd favorites "Reba" and "AC/DC Bag." This high paced set was just what the traffic-tired crowd needed to get moving.

The second set was good, but I would not call it anything special. Although, the "David Bowie" that closed the set out is defiantly worth another listen. My favorite set of the day was the third. The "Rock and Roll" that opened the set was a highlight of the whole concert — it truly demonstrated how great a Phish jam could be when the band is focused and in sync. From this song the band seamlessly flowed into three consecutive songs before concluding with an alternatively worded "Bug."

The surprise of the concert occurred after the first night of music had ended. Throughout Saturday rumors of a late-night Phish performance spread like wildfire throughout the crowd. Rumor turned into reality at 2 a.m. when the Air Traffic Control Tower suddenly lit up and loud ambient music began filling the night air. Throughout the performance the shadowy figures of Phish could be seen in the control room atop the tower, their forms obscured by the spectacular light show provided by lighting guru Chris Kuroda. One got the distinct impression that the Loring Air force control tower could lift off the ground at any time. However, the Cirque du Soleil performers that spun their way down the side of the tower were probably happy that it did not.

The second night of "IT" picked up where the first left off; tight jamming, energetic playing and eclectic song selection continued to be Phish's modus operandi. The best set of the night was undoubtedly the second. The song "Ghost," like "Rock and Roll" the night before, demonstrated what Phish is all about. Mike, Trey, Fishman, and Page were a cohesive musical machine, improvising their way through 15 minutes of funky riffs and intriguing melodies. Additionally, the music of "Ghost" spurred what was one of the highlights of the night — a 10 minute glow stick war. A glow stick war occurs when all the fans possessing glow sticks repeatedly hurl them into the air during a particularly good jam. The result is to fill the sky with thousands of neon objects that seem to be dancing along with the music — very cool!

Other highlights of the evening included crowd favorites "YEM" and "Antelope," as well as a particularly rocking "Julius." Phish elected to close out the night with the Led Zeppelin classic "Good Times Bad Times" punctuated by a fantastic fireworks display just to the right of the stage. Despite pleas for a second encore that went unheard, it is safe to say that no one left the stage area feeling disappointed. Everyone came for a weekend of good times and great music, and this is exactly what Phish gave them.

Dancehall reggae infiltrates the pop scene

GERALD H. LINGK/COLLEGIAN

Trade Roots, located at 233 North Pleasant Street in the center of Amherst, sells all things reggae ranging from clothing, art, books and rare LP's.

Continued from page B14

Artists such as Beenie Man, Shabba Ranks, Shaggy, Bounty Killer, Super Cat, Sizzla, Buju Banton and even a young Sean Paul found a medium outside of Jamaica for their music to be played and more importantly they found an enthusiastic audience for it. Female dancehall icon Patra's 1994 "Romantic Call" and Mr. Vegas' 1997 "Heads High" became staples in urban clubs and can still be heard when a DJ plays a set of dancehall jams at your local dance club. There has been a consistent underground following of dancehall since the early '90s but the artists of today have never seen a brighter spotlight.

When Atlantic teamed up with VP last year, Atlantic Co-President Craig Kallman, with the rich history of reggae music in mind, was well aware of the importance of the new partnership. "Reggae has been mistaken for an underground phenomenon for much too long, despite Bob Marley's place among as the most influential figures in contemporary music in rock music since the 1970s, and even though Jamaican DJ culture spawned American rap," he said in a press release from Atlantic Records. "Reggae, and specifically dancehall, have been the most prolific sources of musical advances in R&B, hip-hop, club music, and even pop in the last twenty years."

The contemporary dancehall surge can be attributed to its assimilation into the hip-hop culture. The beats and even lyrical content of the music have transformed since its birth in 1979 and as a result there is a brand of dancehall closer to hip-hop than reggae. This is no more evident than on Paul's "Dutty Rock." Producers at VP Records used many of the tactics hip-hop artists use in their beat-making and constructing songs. The Neptunes, a popular producing tandem for pop hip-hoppers, produced the track "Bubble" on "Dutty Rock."

Reggae music has seen this kind of transformation before. Before he became a force in the American music business in the '70s, Marley chose to alter his music to appeal to a broader audience. In 1971 after Marley signed with Island Records, producer Chris Blackwell added a rock guitar and keyboards to the "Catch a Fire" LP. He also marketed the album as a rock record rather than reggae. The project was a success, as the burnt-out hippies of the '60s found a way to chill out during the high-wired disco-era '70s.

COURTESY MARQUEST.COM

Jamaica is the birthplace of reggae music.

Paul chose to change aspects of his music as well. He admitted to MTV that he toned down his Jamaican accent for "Dutty Rock" and used different language that would appeal to American youth. In the May interview with MTV.com, Paul says, "In my songs I'm trying to express myself in a way that people can understand but still be hardcore. 'Get Busy' is a hip-hop term. For me [to use that term] paid off because [the song reached #1]." It is much easier for record companies to market to the American public when the audience can understand or relate to the lyrics. Plus, Paul's lyrics are about the fun parts of life, like drinking, smoking, partying and, of course, sex. It is no surprise then that Paul became the breakthrough dancehall superstar considering the themes in his songs match the subjects examined in many songs of today's rap stars like 50 Cent and Nelly.

That begs the question: Can the more politically and religiously driven dancehall artists infiltrate the American pop music scene? Sizzla, Capelton and Anthony B are artists that use dancehall "riddims" but with lyrics that mimic the likes of Marley, Peter Tosh, Steel Pulse or Culture. Basically these artists consider themselves Rastafarian and their words represent a lot of what Rastafari believe and the characteristics of the Rastafarian religion.

The religion is heavily based on the ideals of Jamaican political poet Marcus Garvey who was fighting racism poetically in the 1920s. It's a religion that formed in response to the horrid racial oppression black people have faced since captured from Africa during colonial times. The primary philosophy is people of African descent should perform an exodus to Africa or Ethiopia — to be exact — because that is where Emperor Haile Selassie, a black king, ruled in the 1930s.

Is there a place for this in pop culture? There has been politically fueled hip-hop in the pop world as former underground rappers Mos Def and Talib Kweli can be seen on the charts, MTV, television series and even movies. Plus, other than being a growing religion, Rastafarism and its distinct way of life is popular in the fashion world as well.

More so than ever, people of all ages and ethnicities are growing dreadlocks. Dreads, is one of the more popular hairstyles today, especially for college-aged kids in the new millennium. The combination of red, yellow and green on clothing and accessories is a fashionable trend today as well. These colors together, which resemble the pattern of the Ethiopian flag, have the distinct meaning of liberation to Rastas, [red representing blood, yellow representing the gold stolen by colonists in southern Africa and green representing the land].

Locally in Amherst, the trend has been noticed and it has resulted in a new popular business devoted to anything reggae in the center of town, Trade Roots, 233 North Pleasant St. Trade Roots sells reggae music, books, African art and clothing. Store Manager Trinity Proctor has seen a difference in sales since the adaptation of dancehall into the pop world.

"We had 'Dutty Rock' in the store, but all the teenagers came in and now we are sold out," Proctor said. "We also got all types of people coming in buying the [red, gold, green] clothing even though they are not Rasta."

"People like the colors because they represent freedom, peace, life and Africa."

And after all thats what reggae is about.

Information from MTV.com and "Reggae Bloodlines" by Stephen Davis and Peter Simon was used in this article.

BEACH CLUB TANNING STUDIOS
It's Our Grand Opening!
Student Specials • Open 7 Days • No Appointment Necessary
All New High-Pressure Tanning Beds and Booths
FREE Week of tanning in September
Register to WIN a Spring Break Trip to Cancun! See store for details.
65 University Drive • ph 549-HOTT

Daisy's RESTAURANT
Opening Soon
Breakfast, Monday through Saturday 6am-3pm
Lunch, Monday through Saturday 11am-3pm
Sunday, Brunch 6am-3pm
OCMP Friendly
Featuring a brand new menu including vegan & vegetarian options
413 549 4085
1185 North Pleasant St.,
N. Amherst
Next to House of Teriyaki

Welcome Back! Welcome Back! Welcome Back! Welcome Back!
THE HARP
All Credit Cards Accepted
Lots of Daily & Weekly Food & Drink Specials
Great Food!
OCMP The Off Campus Meal Plan
Just off Campus
North Amherst
163 Sunderland Road
www.theharp.net
Irish Pub
413-548-6900
16 Taps!
Huge New Deck
Eat, Drink, & Smoke until midnight
International Satellite Sports:
(EPL Soccer, International Rugby, etc.)
Introducing the "Monday 'til Midnight" munch-out. All you can eat from 8 'til midnight! Includes ribs, boneless chicken, Irish Nachos, meatballs, mussels, sausages, cajun spuds, and more! Only $7.95
Get $1.00 off with this ad
Every Tues: Team Pub Trivia
Every Wed: Reggae Night
Every Thurs & Sat: Live Music
Every Fri: Traditional Irish Seisiún
Every Sun: Homestyle Dinner Buffet 6-9 pm
$7.95 all you can eat
Welcome Back! Welcome Back! Welcome Back! Welcome Back!

Reggae's exodus into POP

Modern Dancehall artists light up the

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

REGGAE MUSIC. IT'S THE CULMINATION OF PULSATING HEARTBEAT RHYTHMS, [illegible] BASS DROPS AND AN UNDENIABLE BLISSFUL VIBE.

Jamaica's pride and joy is arguably the most universal music in the world. Its followers are cross-continental; from Europe to South America to Asia to Africa and, of course, the Caribbean.

In the United States though — like most imported music — reggae (whether it be roots, dancehall or dub styles) has been overlooked by the general public. There was, of course, Bob Marley, the reggae king who received significant acclaim in America during his career spanning nearly two decades. In the late 1970s and before his passing in 1981 due to cancer, the honorable Robert Nesta Marley headlined tours in major arenas across the country. However, reggae artists during his time and after have had difficulty finding a spot in the ears of America's music listeners. Whether the reason is the difference in English dialects, socialist ideals, religious sentiments, or pro-marijuana views in the lyrics, reggae music has barely scratched the surface of American pop culture.

But, as Marley did in the mid-to-late '70s, reggae artists in 2003 are "bubbling on the Top 100, just like a mighty dread" once again. This time around, dancehall reggae has taken center-stage and it is not only scratching the surface, it's altering the way popular m usic is being produced. The catalyst in this matter is dancehall superstar turned pop star, Sean Paul.

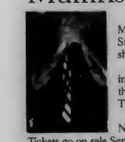
Once a household name to any modern reggae listener, Paul is now being recognized for the first time by the average American suburban white teen flipping between, MTV, VH1 and BET searching for what cool new music to like.

At print time, Paul's name could be seen in three spots on the top 30 Billboard singles chart. "Like Glue" at 15 and "Get Busy" at 26 — both off his crossover-smash record "Dutty Rock." Also, at 29, his assistance on pop diva Beyonce's "Baby Boy" is climbing the charts.

"Dutty Rock" was released in the States Nov. 12 2002, exactly one month after leading dancehall reggae record company, VP records, and Atlantic Records inked a deal to become partners. Paul is one of many top dancehall artists under the VP label. With the help of the ganja-smoking party anthem "Gimmie the Light" to kick start the dancehall reggae revolution; "Dutty Rock" received a tremendous buzz in its first month. Since its release date it has spent 39 weeks on Billboard's Top 100 Albums chart. "Dutty Rock" has exploded reggae onto the pop scene similar to what Ricky Martin's English-language debut in 1999 did for Latin music in the States. Now, because of the exposure, other dancehall artists are being noticed.

Wayne Wonder — the squeaky-clean Usher-type dancehall artist —followed the road Paul paved with the hit single "No Letting Go" in February. The break-beat quick-time jam couldn't be missed in any club or on any Hip-Hop/R&B radio station across the nation. His crossover album, "No Holding Back," was released in March.

Dancehall reggae may be new to the pop scene but it is far from being a cutting-edge genre of music. Like the majority of reggae music it started in Jamaica. It is believed to be invented in 1979. Dancehall, a sub-genre of reggae, can simply be described as the type of reggae one can dance to rather than the mellow moods generated by listening to Marley or Burning Spear roots-style songs. It has a heavier bass, quicker rhythms and rather than full bands producing the music, it is DJs or "Sound Systems" — as they are known in the reggae world — laying down "riddims" or rhythms. The "MC," as it is known in the hip-hop world, is called a "deejay" in the dancehall world. Paul would be considered a "deejay."



Some of the early dancehall hitmakers were Barrington Levy and Yellowman. But due to a lack of funds in Jamaica's top recording studios, the artists struggled to get their work produced worldwide, particularly in America.

It wasn't until the early-to-mid 1990s that dancehall found a home in the States. The emergence of African-American targeted radio stations in the early '90s — which coincided with a growth in hip-hop popularity — led to more room on the airwaves for reggae music. Many stations in urban areas, like Hot 97 in New York City, would play reggae programs once a week.

Continued on page B13

Mullins books full bill

• The Red Hot Chili Peppers play the Mullins Center Sept. 9. Queens of the Stone Age and French Toast open the show. Tickets are $41 and are now on sale.

• Pop-punk band Good Charlotte invades the Mullins Oct. 10. Opening for them will be Something Corporate and The Living End. Tickets are on sale at $26.

• Ani DiFranco returns to Amherst Nov. 15 for a performance at the Mullins. Tickets go on sale Sept. 12. Ticket prices were not available as of press time.

For more information about these event contact the Mullins Center at 413-545-3001. For ticket information contact the Mullins Center box office at 413-545-0505 or ticketmaster.com

—Glen Straub

Phish brings 'IT' at summer festival

By Aron Israelite
Collegian Correspondent

LIMESTONE, ME — On Aug 1, all fans entering the concert venue at Phish's weekend long festival, "IT", passed under an archway that bore the following inscription in neon red letters: "Our intent is all for your delight." Despite the jumbled English of this sentence, the message was perfectly clear for the 70,000 fans that made the trek to Limestone, Me. Phish put on "IT" to show fans a great time. I am happy to report that they succeeded at this goal admirably.

Phish
'IT' Festival
Loring Air Force Base
Limestone, Me.
Aug. 2-3

However, before "IT" could be enjoyed, fans were forced to overcome incredibly long lines of traffic. As all music festival veterans know, traffic is an unpleasant but necessary part of the experience. In this case, the time spent waiting to enter the festival grounds bordered on the ridiculous. Nearly every concertgoer, whether arriving early or late, was forced to wait at least 10 hours in bumper-to-bumper traffic (in my case the number was closer to 17) before entering the festival grounds.

Despite the inconvenience, people took the traffic in stride. Almost everybody got out of their cars to play Frisbee, have a barbeque, drink beers, and just plain hang out. In fact, the way in which people embraced a bad situation set a tone for the entire weekend. Most concertgoers came to "IT" for a party — nothing was going to deter them from having a good time. Thus, before most people entered the Loring Air Force base venue, the festivities were well

Continued on page B13

COURTESY OF LIVINGSTONE.COM

Guitarist Trey Anastasio and bassist Mike Gordon jam 'IT' up.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Welcome to UMass sports

Andrew Merritt

The sea of metaphors that describe the state of UMass sports is vast. From the changing of leaves and uniforms, to the cooling winds of autumn and budget cuts, there is a bounty of imagery that describes the current situation faced by UMass athletes, coaches, and fans.

The real common thread this fall, though, is questions. The questions that have arisen in the UMass sporting world in just the three months since the last baseball was thrown are diverse and plentiful.

The important questions are already on the table: How can a football team survive in the rock-and-hard-place situation of losing money in 1-AA, but not having the financial support – or conference spot – necessary to jump to the big leagues?

Not to mention: How does an athletic department convince alumni and supporters that it was really worth spending $25,000 to come up with the same mascot it had before, in the middle of a grinding budget crisis?

There are also questions that are just a little further down the road: Is it possible for a hockey team that didn't exist 15 years ago to become the prime attraction at what has long been considered a basketball school? What happens to a lacrosse team when its conference disintegrates right in front of its eyes?

The biggest story in UMass Athletics this summer is the change in what the brass calls the "identity system." The new logos and marks are a marked (pun intended) improvement over the old script U logo, and the Minuteman finally looks like he could actually take on a 21st-century foe.

What the logos represent, though, is a truly new and improved identity for the Bay State's beleaguered flagship university. Those of you who will trudge down to McGuirk on those cold, foggy November mornings this season can finally rejoice in rooting for a team that has the authentic look of a college football tradition. And as the winter months draw nearer, this improvement in the image and culture of UMass sports will take shape in all new ways, be it a rumored third jersey for the hockey team, or an improved Mullins Center court.

Maybe the pretty logos and jerseys shouldn't mean anything, but in the cutthroat world of college sports, having an image you can be proud of makes a big difference.

Needless to say, it will be an eventful year here in the Pioneer Valley. Those who are entering the hallowed halls of UMass for the first time are fortunate enough to come in at the dawn of a new image for the athletic department, and those who have been here a few years will be rewarded with teams that will both look good, and play well enough to give you a reason to show up to every game.

Things won't be all rosy though. Starting with the fall, there will be plenty of reasons for UMass fans to develop high blood pressure. The football team is at the center of it. There is a push from fans and media alike to bring the team to the 1-A level. It's something that was thrown on the back burner by the athletic department until recently, when a consulting group was hired to examine the possibilities of making The Jump.

While a half-full McGuirk Alumni Stadium doesn't hold up well to the amount of money the department is said to lose on the team, the costs of renovations to the facility are just one roadblock between UMass and the elite conferences in college football. Besides, any increase in expenditures is hard to justify right now, when department jobs are being eliminated and teams are losing funding.

Just a few hundred yards down Stadium Drive, Jim Rudy and Sam Koch will have their hands full with the women's and men's soccer teams, respectively. Rudy's squad is coming off a season in which it missed the playoffs with a 5-6 conference record (6-11 overall). The team is now one full season removed from the tragic death of freshman standout Stephanie Santos, and if there's any coach on this campus that can revive a team, it's Jim Rudy.

Koch has a whole different monster to deal with. The loss of graduates Jeff Deren, Yuri Morales, and Derek Rhodes from a team that took the Atlantic 10 regular season title last year puts three large holes in the roster. And

Continued on page C5

Facelift for Minuteman

GERALD H. LINDO/COLLEGIAN

University of Massachusetts Athletic Director Ian McCaw introduces the new Minutemen mascot at Fenway Park on July 23.

UMass mascot completes change

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — The more things change, the more they stay the same.

On July 23, upon arguably the most well-known sporting stage in the state, Fenway Park, the brand new Massachusetts athletic logos and word marks were unveiled. With the assistance of hockey player Greg Mauldin and Field Hockey player Rachel Skorupski, Athletic Director Ian McCaw officially unveiled the revamped Minuteman character, along with updated word marks and logos in a press conference held three hours before the Boston Red Sox game against Tampa Bay.

The new Minuteman is a modernized version of the old University of Massachusetts mascot. The character is depicted charging forward, rifle slung behind his back, with his sleeves rolled up to reveal muscular forearms. Beneath the character, block script word marks appear, with some logos using "UMass," and some implementing "Massachusetts," a new direction for the University's identity system.

There is also an alternate crest with "Minutewomen" appearing below the block UMass logo, a first since the Minuteman became the school's mascot in 1972.

While there was no drastic change in the color scheme, the addition of a gray and black trim was evident, as well as the complete block letter word markings, a departure from the script U that was a part of the former logo.

An emphasis on the word "Massachusetts" is also evident in many of the word marks, and while McCaw said "UMass" is not being phased out, the inclusion of Massachusetts is intended to show a stronger image as the state's flagship university.

"That's been a personal plea of mine, and I'm happy to see a lot of people feel the same way," hockey coach Don "Toot" Cahoon said. "I grew up in the Bay State, and [the school] was always 'Massachusetts' and 'University of Massachusetts,' and I think UMass is a great quick phrase, people recognize it, but we are the University of Massachusetts, just as Ann Arbor is the University of Michigan, just as in Madison, it's the University of Wisconsin. It's not

Continued on page C5

A talented bunch

Minutemen ready for competition

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

The sun was shining brightly in the high sky over McGuirk Alumni Stadium, as a cluster of reporters had gathered around Massachusetts football coach Mark Whipple in the south end zone as Football Media Day trudged along through the sickening New England humidity.

They were waiting to hear how the well-spoken field boss of Amherst's grid-iron crew would sum up what he expected from his extremely talented and experienced team, following a year in which it missed the 1-AA playoffs in heart-breaking fashion.

Each of them had already asked Whipple about how pleased he was to have his golden-armed quarterback back, and how he planned to utilize the reigning Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Year, who was returning following a 1,000-yard season.

They listened intently as he reminded them that both his projected starting receivers had started for him in the past, and were more than ready to do it again. And they laughed when he spoke of his massive offensive line, declaring that he was thrilled to have "some really big butts up there."

They knew he didn't need to tell them much about his stellar defense – 10 returning starters, three of whom were All-Americans, speak for themselves.

And the special teams? They knew he'd tell them that kicking only matters when you can't score touchdowns, and punting only comes into play when you can't move the ball.

They were all dipped in curiosity about how his team would stack up against Kansas State, and how they would perform in such a hostile environment. And they took comfort in the fact that he was as well.

What was left was to ask was what the Brown-educated mastermind, endowed with the task of not only winning a National Championship but doing so in a way most conducive to the effort afoot to springboard his team to Division 1-A, thought about his team. A team that publications across the country, from Sports Illustrated to Street and Smith's, thought was going to be among the class of 1-AA.

That, and they wanted to hear how, in fact, he was going to say it.

Well, coach?

"We're way ahead of where we were last year," he said.

Not going to cut it.

"Our level of tempo of practice is much higher because we don't have that confusion of not knowing each other," he added.

Not good enough either, my friend.

"I'm pretty pleased with what I've seen so far. I know the guys are working hard for me and that's always good to see."

Keep trying.

"Well, you know something? I watched Tiger Wood's "Ten Best Shots" on TV last night before I went to bed, and almost all of them came after he had pushed drives or hit awful shots. It just seemed like whenever he was faced with any adversity or wasn't playing smoothly, he reached down and pulled out what he needed to get it done."

"Because when you have all the talent and the experience needed to get things done, it just comes down to making it happen on the field and performing when you're up against it, because that's when you have to do something."

Bingo.

Fresh off a logo change and amidst talk of making the quantum leap to the big leagues of college football, Whipple has assembled one of the best 1-AA football teams in the nation, right here in the Pioneer Valley.

He has all the horses he needs to charge towards that big game in Chattanooga, Tenn. that was so good to him just five short years ago. His players are experienced, smart, tough and not only do they love to play football, they love to play football with each other.

He is one of the premiere coaches at the 1-AA level, and with the addition of proven defensive mind Tom Masella to his staff last season, his core of coaches certainly provides a more than satisfactory compliment to his troops on the field.

Continued on page C6

GERALD H. LINDO/COLLEGIAN

Wide receiver Greg Scott is among the many offensive weapons that give the UMass squad an improved attack.

This attack is worthy of recognition

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

After a number of dropped passes and missed opportunities, it was difficult for Mark Whipple to come up with anything positive about this year's offense after a late-August scrimmage.

"Oh no, we're not very good," said the Massachusetts football coach. "We're not ready to play a game."

Of course, much of that is words from a coach who was two weeks from his team's first real game experience — thanks to the tricky scheduling that gave the University of Massachusetts the first week of the season off. But when Central Connecticut State strolls into McGuirk Alumni stadium on Sept. 6, the picture will be clearer: This UMass offense might not be as distinguished as the highly-touted defensive corps, but there's no reason to think the McGuirk scoreboard won't need a few light bulbs changed by the end of the season.

Without question, it all starts with the man under center. Jeff Krohn, now in his second year with the Minutemen after transferring from 1-A Arizona State, has the ability — and the expectation — to be the best passer in the country on the 1-AA level, let alone in the Atlantic 10. Krohn placed right around fourth in the conference in the quarterback statistics, but has more weapons to gun for this year.

The concern about Krohn comes with his decision-making, specifically with protecting his body. The blow to the offense was devastating when Krohn went down not once, but twice with head injuries last season. His head-first dive against Villanova produced a violent helmet-to-helmet collision that left Krohn sprawled out on the field. Just a few weeks

Continued on page C7

MEN'S SOCCER
PAGE C3
AIMING FOR THE GOAL
MEN'S TEAM READY TO ROLL THIS SEASON

WOMEN'S SOCCER
PAGE C4
STARTING FRESH
EXPERIENCED PLAYERS MAKE FOR A PROMISING LINEUP

MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL
PAGE C8
THE PASSING OF A GIANT
BOBBY BONDS DIED ON AUG. 23 , BUT WILL BE REMEMBERED AS A LEGEND

MASCOT PHOTO PAGE
PAGE C10
FORMAL INTRODUCTIONS
SEE SHOTS FROM THE MINUTEMAN'S OFFICIAL UNVEILING AT FENWAY

HEALTH EDUCATION WANTS YOU!

GET INVOLVED! MAKE A DIFFERENCE!

CALL 577-5181 FOR MORE INFORMATION ON ANY OF THESE PROGRAMS.

SEEKING VOLUNTEERS:

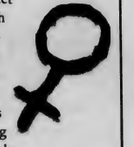
1. Not Ready for Bedtime Players

Come and Audition on Wednesday, September 10, 7:30 pm in the Campus Center. Students perform on campus on Wednesday evenings. Our lively and entertaining skits address sex, masturbation, coming out, relationship violence and much, much more. Call Diane (577-5188) for details. Theater experience not required.

2. Peer Health Educators

Community Health Studies 213, Tuesdays 10-12:30. You've seen Sex Pictionary, Drug Jeopardy, Getting More than Lucky and Life is Not a Stress Rehearsal — now learn how to be a peer health educator! Earn 6 credits in this year long course while learning a ton about yourself and educating others at the same time. Call to set up an interview for a class that will change your life! Call Amanda (577-5185) for details.

3. The Student Health Advisory Board (SHAB)



SHAB is the officially recognized voice of the student body in matters pertaining to UHS, and participates in the planning, financing, implementation and evaluation of student health programs. SHAB provides input into the recruiting of health professionals, reviews and makes recommendations regarding the Student Health Trust Fund and the Supplemental Health Benefits Program, and serves as a liaison to other student organizations. Call Tom (577-5181) for details.

4. ALANA Health Education and Outreach

The purpose of the ALANA Health Outreach and Education program is to support students of color to access health care at University Health Services, raise awareness about health issues and concerns that impact ALANA communities, promote healthy lifestyles, and provide advocacy, education and referral. This is done through customized workshops, educational forums, consultation, and leadership development. Call Lisa, Rani, or Tom (577-5068 or 577-5181) for details.

5. The Women's Health Project

Our first meeting for New Volunteers is on Thursday, Sept. 11 from 7-8pm in Room 302, University Health Services. Returning Volunteers meeting 8-9pm. Come and be a part of a group that educates students at UMass and the surrounding communities on issues that affect women! The Women's Health Project conducts weekly workshops on contraception in the residence halls, sponsors the clothesline project, breast health workshops and UMass Orgasm Week, all while having a great time! Independent study credits available. Call Amanda (577-5185) or Iccha (577-5182) for details.

6. Queer Peer Education

Volunteer meeting Tuesday, September 9 in UHS Room 302. Educate yourself and others about issues that have an effect on GLBT people! We are looking for committed, fun and excited people to learn and teach. QPE volunteers sponsor tables, teach Sexaware workshops and sponsor other events. Independent study credits are available. Call Diane (577-5188) for more information!

7. Health Reach International (HRI)

HRI helps international students, scholars and their families to stay healthy while facilitating easier access to the health services offered at UMass by providing information, organizing and presenting workshops on health related topics, and networking and collaborating with other organizations to address the concerns of international students. For more information, call Yeshi or Tom at 577-5168 or 577-5181.

8. Healthy Eating/ Healthy Bodies

Nutritionists are seeking students interested in supporting others on ways to eat healthy while on campus and feel good about their bodies. Students majoring in Nutrition, Exercise Science and Public Health, or those with a strong interest in these fields are encouraged to call or e-mail Caren Weiner 577-5174 cweiner@uhs.umass.edu or Arleen Thomson 577-5171 athomson@uhs.umass.edu.

OTHER SERVICES:

Health Education will be happy to meet with individuals or groups to discuss any health related topic. Come to our offices on the 3rd floor of UHS to obtain information on contraception, safer sex, alcohol, drugs, stress or any health topic.

Call 577-5181 for more information about these topics or any of the services listed below:

AHEP (THE ATHLETIC HEALTH ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM)

Provides information and education to student athletes.

ANONYMOUS HIV ANTIBODY TESTING

Call 577-5126 to make an appointment for anonymous testing.

CONTRACEPTION EDUCATION

Classes are offered Wednesday evenings in room 302 of UHS and Monday evenings in the residence halls. Contact Health Ed. for additional dates and times.

MEN'S HEALTH PROGRAMS

Workshops on topics such as Sexual Health, Body Image, Masculinity, and more.

VOICES AGAINST VIOLENCE

The Voices Against Violence program is seeking peer educators. Voices Against Violence is committed to working with the UMass community to address violence in all its forms, with a particular focus on men's violence against women. Utilizing a bystander approach to violence prevention, the Voices Against Violence program regards student participants not as potential perpetrators or victims, but as empowered bystanders who can confront abusive / violent peers. Academic credit available. Call Tom at 577-5181.

NUTRITION SERVICES

Nutritionists are on staff to meet with students individually to discuss concerns about eating, proper diet and weight loss. Please call 577-5314 to schedule an appointment at UHS.

TOBACCO TREATMENT SERVICES

Assistance to quit smoking. Individual and Group Sessions. Presentations.

University Health Services • Health Education Division •
150 Infirmary Way (third floor) • 577-5181• www.umass.edu/uhs

uhs

Uphill climb on the pitch

Depleted men's crew now ready to roll this season

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

While planning the course for the 2003 season, the Massachusetts men's soccer team noticed it was without captain, navigator and nearly half of its scoring.

After losing Jeff Deren, the all-time leading scorer at the University of Massachusetts, the Minutemen find themselves with a major hole on offense. It is a burden that will be taken over by a foursome of seniors that look to bring the Maroon and White back to the Atlantic 10 championship.

Leading the way will be senior Ptah Myers, a starter for three of his four years with the Minutemen. Myers was an intricate part of last year's A-10 regular season title, scoring nine goals and feeding seven assists during the season.

Gerald H. Lino/Collegian

Senior Ptah Myers will shoulder most of the offensive load for the Minutemen this season in the absence of All-American Jeff Deren.

UMass coach Sam Koch is looking for Myers to take more shots, more often, and be more accurate than last year.

"We hope [Myers] can finish with a high percentage this year. He has to be more aggressive than in the past," Koch said.

Complementing Myers will be fellow seniors Dan Colwell, Devlin Barnes and Andrew Eicher, whom will all be getting more touches than in the past.

Koch has also been impressed with Devlin Barnes, who has been steadily increasing his production since being integrated into the Minutemen's starting lineup.

Barnes has improved his ball-handling ability and has emerged as a vocal leader on offense.

"(Barnes) has definitely picked it up over the last year. He had a great spring and is having a fantastic pre-season ... he is going to surprise a few people this year," Koch said.

Andrew Eicher has had a solid career for UMass and has an opportunity to boost his stats with the absence of a true offensive superstar. Eicher started in every game he played last year and will be a major cog in this year's offensive machine.

"(Eicher) is one of the best in New England. He is going to have a great season," Koch said.

Colwell was primarily used as a setup man last year, feeding seven assists over the course of the season. He has exhibited a sharp field sense at the midfield position and needs to increase his leadership for the offense to be successful.

Adding to the scoring attack is the aggressive game play of sophomore Jason Scudamore, converted to midfield from defender. Scudamore had a decent amount of offensive production as a freshman and has potential to erupt this season.

The biggest question mark for the Maroon and White, however, will be on the defensive side of the field.

UMass is returning two important defensemen in sophomore Tim Kitchell and junior Chris Camerota, but lack the cohesiveness of years past.

"Defense is a big issue for us this year," Koch said. "We need to get the guys together, see how they fit into the mix and get comfortable with each other."

The Minutemen will be looking toward recently acquired transfer Craig Canavan to solidify its relatively inexperienced defensive squad.

Canavan comes to UMass after serving in the Navy and possesses the leadership and ability to take control of the squad.

"(Canavan) is a good organizer and is already solidifying our defense," Koch said.

In goal there will be a three-way fight for the starting position. After losing last year's starter Enzo Altomare, Koch is left with two keepers who had brief stints in goal last year.

Both junior Colin Burns and senior Dave Douchette saw action last year but never solidified the starting position. Koch also sees promise in sophomore Lester Melendez, who has potential to slide into the starting role.

Melendez has college-level experience at Florida International and is currently involved with the Nicaraguan national team. He will be participating in the Olympic qualifier with Nicaragua in early September.

This year's team exhibits nine new players, eight of which are freshmen. The new wave of talent will be seeing time on a team that lacks depth on both sides of the field.

One freshman that has Coach Koch interested is Hawaiian native Richard Higa. In an exhibition game against University of Montreal, Higa netted his first UMass goal off a corner kick.

Higa won't be starting this year but will be used to boost offensive production from game to game.

UMass has also set up one of its hardest schedules in recent history. The Minutemen start things off with an exhibition against nationally ranked St. John's Aug. 23 and Alabama-Birmingham on Sept. 9.

Koch isn't concerned with the difficulty of schedule and is looking forward to the challenges that lie ahead.

"We want to play the best teams we can play. We want to show that we are out there," Koch said.

Pre-season rankings show the Maroon and White picked to finish fourth in the A-10. This, after winning the regular season title last year and the conference championship the year before.

Koch sees the ranking as a type of motivation for his players, and wants to make believers out of the other teams in the A-10.

"It's understandable, over two years we lost our offense and our defense," Koch said. "It definitely motivating, we'll use this season to prove them wrong."

Everything would seem to indicate that this year is a rebuilding year for the Minutemen. Coach Koch knows his team doesn't have the same look as they did last year but believes that they can do as well, if not better than last year.

"If there was a rebuilding year this is it," Koch said. "But we have a solid group of seniors who are not going to wait until next year. We won't call it a rebuilding year, we'll call it the 2003 season."

The 2003 season officially kicks off at Hartford Aug. 30.

UMass Men's Soccer
2003 schedule

Sat 08/30/2003 Hartford / Hartford, Conn. 7:00 PM
Fri 09/05 Birmingham Southern (UAB Nike Classic) / Birmingham, Ala. 5:00 PM
Sun 09/07 Alabama-Birmingham (UAB Nike Classic) / Birmingham, Ala. 2:30 PM
Fri 09/12 Mercer (UMass Adidas Classic) / Amherst, Mass. 4:00 PM
Sun 09/14 Navy (UMass Adidas Classic) / Amherst, Mass. 1:30 PM
Wed 09/17 Boston University / Amherst, Mass. 3:30 PM
Sat 09/20 Siena / Loudonville, N.Y. 1:00 PM
Sat 09/27 New Hampshire / Durham, N.H. 1:00 PM
Fri 10/03 *George Washington / Amherst, Mass. 3:30 PM **
Sun 10/05 *Richmond / Amherst, Mass. 1:00 PM **
Fri 10/10 *Xavier / Cincinnati, Ohio 7:00 PM **
Sun 10/12 *Dayton / Dayton, Ohio 1:00 PM **
Fri 10/17 *La Salle / Amherst, Mass. 3:30 PM **
Sun 10/19 *Fordham / Amherst, Mass. 1:00 PM **
Fri 10/24 *Duquesne / Pittsburgh, Pa. 7:00 PM **
Sun 10/26 *St. Bonaventure / St. Bonaventure, N.Y. 1:00 PM **
Fri 10/31 *Temple / Amherst, Mass. 2:30 PM **
Sun 11/02 *St. Joseph's / Amherst, Mass. 1:00 PM **
Sat 11/08 *Rhode Island / Kingston, R.I. 1:00 PM **
Thu 11/13 Atlantic 10 Quarterfinals Richmond, Va. TBA
Fri 11/14 Atlantic 10 Semifinals Richmond, Va. TBA
Sun 11/16 Atlantic 10 Championship Game Richmond, Va. TBA

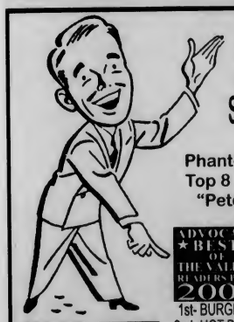
* denotes Atlantic 10 contest

dailycollegian.com
dailycollegian.com
dailycollegian.com
dailycollegian.com



TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
$139
★ Student Special ★
4 months
Best Aerobics~Best Machines
KEISER • NAUTILUS • FREE WEIGHTS • CYBEX • STAIRMASTERS • LIFECYCLES • TREADMILLS • ELLIPTICALS • LIFEROWER
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0080 90, AMHERST
www.amherstathletic.com

Celebrating 30 Years
MEN'S AND WOMEN'S HEALTH SERVICES
Emergency Contraception
Birth Control • Pregnancy Testing
GYN & Breast Exams
STI Screening & Treatment
HIV/AIDS Counseling & Testing
27 Pray St. Amherst 548-9992
M 8:30-4:30 T - F 10-6 Sun 12-4
www.tapestryhealth.org
1•800•696•7752
TAPESTRY Health

Northampton • Athol • Holyoke • Springfield • Westfield • Pittsfield • Great Barrington • North Adams • Amherst • Greenfield

Burgers • Hot Dogs • Chicken
Seafood • Fries • Onion Rings
Shakes • Smoothies • Soft Serve
Phantom Gourmet's 2003 Pick
Top 8 Burgers in New England
"Pete's Big Bopper Deluxe"
Advocate ★ Best of the Valley Readers Poll 2003 ★
1st- BURGERS
2nd- HOT DOGS
3rd- FRIES
287 RUSSELL ST
ROUTE 9 • HADLEY
585-0241
PETE'S DRIVE-IN
petesdrivein.com
CREDIT CARDS OCMP

WELCOME BACK STUDENTS
WE HAVE YOUR NEEDS!

•Cinder blocks
•Plywood
•Shelving and brackets
•Desktops
•Keys
•Bookcase material
•Paints
•Brushes, rollers
•Hardware
•Picture Hangers

10% OFF WITH THIS AD

150 College Street
LEADER HOME CENTERS
: 413-253-3411

Write For Sports

No strangers to a struggle

Women's soccer prepares following star-crossed season

By Todd Foster and Sean Holmes
Collegian Staff

Adversity is something an athlete will face physically, emotionally and mentally throughout the ups and downs of a trying season. The Massachusetts Women's soccer team experienced incredible adversity last season trying to overcome a difficult schedule and critical injuries while the tragic death of a close friend was still fresh on their minds.

On June 9, 2001, freshman soccer standout Stephanie Santos was killed in a late night car accident. Though the incident was over a year old when the 2002 UMass women's soccer season started, it still weighed heavy on the minds of everyone during the season, especially the older players and head coach Jim Rudy.

"It was a reminder of how precious life is," said Rudy. "There were also a few messages, like when are we ever going to get it? It was a rude awakening of how dangerous a combination of alcohol and vehicles can be. Though it was only a little alcohol, there was still a combination. Though, the lesson learned is how much love, respect, and support there is for our program. Also, how well we are connected and it's not about winning."

Adversity struck again when the team stumbled out of the gate 0-5. Though they came back to play .500 soccer the rest of the way, the Minutewomen's 2002 campaign was ultimately a disappointment as they finished with a 6-11 record (5-6 Atlantic 10) and missed the A-10 tournament for the second straight season. Despite everything that has gone on, Rudy expects everyone to step up for the 2003 season.

"All of the [players] need to step up, because we were all down last season," Rudy said. "Last season was a really tough year for us in every which way. Anything better than that would be good, but it has to be better than last season."

Most of the women will take the field this year with the comfort of familiar faces surrounding them as 85 percent of last year's roster returns. The experience of having played together for a full season, and the advance knowledge of each other's strengths and weaknesses that comes as a result, should be a huge advantage as they head into the 2003 season.

Having a solid goalkeeper is a basic foundation for any good soccer team, and the Minutewomen have exactly that in senior Kelly Nigh. Last year she recorded 140 saves, the second highest single-season total in UMass history, and posted 8.24 saves/ game average, which ranked seventh in the nation.

"We expect her to be an A-Nigh-ilator," Rudy quipped. "We are looking for her to finish her career in grand style. She got real big chance last year to step up and start, so she got a lot of work in. She'll save all the shots she should as well as pick off some of the big ones."

UMass struggled to find some offensive consistency to back up Nigh last season — they were out shot 404-212 and outscored 40-26 by their opponents — and so Rudy has installed a new formation this year, which will feature a striker to increase scoring opportunities.

The new formation didn't seem to have an immediate impact in an exhibition game against Northeastern University, though the Minutewomen out shot the Huskies 19 to 13. The new offensive attack could also be credited for the lead in corners, 8 to 3.

"We are developing a different system now," Rudy said. "Our team got out shot badly in the beginning of the year, but we played against some heavy hitters. We hope that's going to change and I think it will in time."

The big gun on offense in 2003 is senior Erin Lilly. The speedy forward is ready for a breakout season after turning in a solid junior campaign in which she led the team with 18 points (6 goals, 6 assists) and was named to the All-Conference Second Team. She also scored four goals in a 6-1 win over Temple, tying the school record for most goals in a single game set by Nancy Feldman in 1980, then equaled by Carolyn Micheel in 1985.

"She's just a non-stop bundle of energy," Rudy said. "Whether she scores or not, she bothers the opposing defense. She is just so active throughout the game and very dangerous once she gets the ball. [By being so active] she can drag the opposing defense all sorts of poor shades, creating for others to score."

Along with her accurate shot, Lilly positions herself well on the field and has the ability to win foot races to loose balls. Despite high expectations, Lilly doesn't feel that the pressure is all on her.

"I don't think I'll have to take over on offense," Lilly calmly explained. "With a new formation, we have only one on top, so a lot of teams will be keying on me."

If opponents do key too much on Lilly, they may find themselves victimized by a storm — that is, junior transfer Lindsey "Stormy" Fairweather.

Fairweather provides a formidable offensive complement to Lilly at midfield, something they were lacking last season. Transferring from in-state powerhouse Boston College to UMass, Fairweather will replace the Minutewomen's biggest loss from last season, midfielder Martha Conover, who was a 2002 NCAA North Region third team All-America pick as well as a Second All-Atlantic 10 selection.

Fairweather has speed, hustle and a touch unmatched by most players to go along with tremendous field awareness and a powerful shot.

"We hope she can be a major piece within the system," Rudy said. "Stormy got a lot of sharp stuff on the ball that she does differently than players here. Though, I hope she can impact without having to carry the whole show."

Sophomore Lindsey Bellini could also be a major offensive threat this year. She is a skilled attacking midfielder who may see time up front. Her 13 points (5 goals, 5 assists) were second on the team, and those numbers should increase in her second season. Bellini's intense, physical style makes her a threat defensively as well as offensively.

"With Bellini and Stormy coming through the middle, we have two with excellent long range shots from the outside," Lilly said. "There definitely isn't going to be one player scoring this season."

Adair Blyler will also take the pressure off Fairweather, Bellini and Lilly. Blyler was third on the team in scoring as a freshman with 13 points while tying Lilly for the team lead with six assists.

Obviously, the midfielders must be focused on the attack as well as defending. Junior Carly Turman, who is coming off a foot injury from the summer, is now healthy and will be the defensive specialist in the midfield. Senior Rayney Meisel is one of the team's most versatile players and will see most of her action in midfield. Senior Erin Muir started all but one game last season and may move from backfield to midfield this year to complement Turman and Meisel. Senior Maggie LaBrode and sophomores Morgan Czaja and Sarah Davis will also compete for starting spots in the midfield as well.

The defense will be looking to improve upon their 2.33 goals against average while attempting to find a replacement for defensive star Alexi Rudd. Much of the starting defense will be determined by pre-season performance. The only sure lock is senior Michelle Luttati, a Verizon Academic All-District selection. She is a steady defender and the proven veteran Rudy needs to anchor the defense. Sophomores Amy Maffucci and Tiffany Hamill, as well as junior Erica Wideberg will also get looks in the backfield. All-Rookie selections Nadia Villarroel and Stephanie Barrett could make an immediate impact in either the midfield or backfield. Elizabeth Weinsten and Chelsey Hoffman could also impact freshmen.

Kelly Rutland, who led her 2003 U-19 team to a national championship, recorded seven saves in the exhibition against Northeastern and, with Nigh and freshman goalie Kristin Walker, give UMass three solid keepers. With depth in goal and a host of players that could make an impact on defense, Rudy is optimistic about the defense.

"Well, I hope our goal average will change a little bit," Rudy said. "We are trying hard on defense. We have a lot of people returning and I think the key is just staying healthy."

Staying healthy has been a problem this preseason for the Maroon and White. With the regular season closing in, the list of injuries so far includes Lilly (groin), Fairweather (concussion) and most of the defensive players.

Adversity was the strongest theme of the team's season last year, and with the top three squads in the Atlantic 10 staring it down to start the season, life won't get much easier. But with the talent that fills the roster, and the Minutewomen's experiences dealing with the rough stuff, they may be due for a stroke of good fortune in 2003.

Umass Women's Soccer
2003 Schedule

Sat 08/30/2003 Quinnipiac / Agawam, Mass. 7:00 PM
Fri 09/05/2003 *Rhode Island / Kingston, R.I. 7:00 PM **
Wed 09/10/2003 New Hampshire / Durham, N.H. 7:00 PM
Sun 09/14/2003 Syracuse / Amherst, Mass. 3:00 PM
Wed 09/17/2003 Boston University / Boston, Mass. 7:00 PM
Wed 09/24/2003 *Central Connecticut State / Amherst, Mass. 4:00 PM **
Sun 09/28/2003 Binghamton / Amherst, Mass. 3:00 PM
Fri 10/03/2003 George Washington / Washington, D.C. 4:00 PM
Sat 10/04/2003 *Richmond / Richmond, Va. 7:00 PM **
Fri 10/10/2003 *Xavier / Amherst, Mass. 3:00 PM **
Sun 10/12/2003 *Dayton / Amherst, Mass. 1:00 PM **
Fri 10/17/2003 *La Salle / Philadelphia, Pa. 3:00 PM **
Sun 10/19/2003 *Fordham / Bronx, N.Y. 1:00 PM **
Fri 10/24/2003 *Duquesne / Amherst, Mass. 2:00 PM **
Sun 10/26/2003 *St. Bonaventure / Amherst, Mass. 12:00 PM **
Fri 10/31/2003 *Temple / Philadelphia, Pa. 2:30 PM **
Sun 11/02/2003 *St. Joseph's / Philadelphia, Pa. 1:00 PM **
Thu 11/06/2003 Atlantic 10 Quarterfinals / Richmond, Va. TBA
Fri 11/07/2003 Atlantic 10 Semifinals / Richmond, Va. TBA
Sun 11/09/2003 Atlantic 10 Championship Game / Richmond, Va. TBA

 denotes Atlantic 10 contest*

ANTONIO'S PIZZA
WELCOME BACK STUDENTS

BEST IN THE VALLEY 12 YEARS RUNNING
OVER 50 VARIETIES OF SLICES AVAILABLE
OPEN LATE
CALL: 253-0808

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club
90 Gatehouse Road, Off Rt. 9, Two miles East of Amherst Center
On the Bus Route
TEL: 256-6446
JOIN NOW!
for our Semester Special
15 weeks - For Students: Only $179!
Inclusive membership / No additional fees / Includes free T-Shirt
Shopping for a health club?
Do your homework first
Hampshire Fitness Club has it all for you
•FULL SIZED INDOOR POOL
•AQUA AEROBICS
•CYBEX/NAUTILUS CIRCUIT
•BOXING STUDIO
•CYBEX FREE WEIGHTS
•FULL COURT BASKETBALL
•VOLLEYBALL
•INDOOR TENNIS
•YOGA/PILATES
•AEROBICS/STEP/BOSU
•JACUZZI/SAUNAS
•CARDIO-VASCULAR EQUIPMENT
Open: 6am to 10pm Mon-Fri
8am to 9pm Sat-Sun

Welcome to UMass

Continued from page C1

while senior Ptah Myers has both the speed and skill to provide plenty of fireworks this season, it'll be a struggle for the squad to make up for the loss of its three top players.

As for UMass Field Hockey, the autumn tenants of Garber Field, the bitter taste of last year's 5-17 record might be lingering for Patty Shea and the Minutewomen, however the previous glory enjoyed by the team isn't so far gone that a trip to the NCAA Tournament is out of reach. Of course, for this squad, that trip won't be too arduous – the tournament is being hosted by UMass, and the final will be played at Garber in late November. It's the first time an Atlantic 10 school has hosted the Field Hockey Championship, and don't be surprised if Shea's crew – picked to finish second in the conference by A-10 coaches – has a shot at defending the home turf.

And that's just the fall. Winter brings an exciting, ever-improving hockey team, one loaded with young talent. It's a little early to start stitching the Hockey East banner, though, because the big four of Hockey East – Boston College, Boston University, New Hampshire and Maine – certainly won't be all too willing to relinquish the top spots. Do be sure, UMass fanatic, to be there on October 9 when the Minutemen open up against Connecticut. It should be quite a show.

...It will be an eventful year here in the Pioneer Valley. Those who are entering the hallowed halls of UMass for the first time are fortunate enough to come in at the dawn of a new image for the athletic department...

The basketball teams will provide any number of emotions. This year, the men's squad will kick off the season not against some touring semi-team of former college players, still looking to compete in campus gyms. Coach Steve Lappas and the Minutemen will host St. Francis (N.Y.) in the preseason NIT. The tournament also features the University of Connecticut, and it could provide the two rivals with an early-season clash.

Marnie Dacko certainly has her hands full, but of course she did last year, her first at the helm of UMass women's hoops. Can she find a way to replace all-world center Jennifer Butler, and quiet leader Nekole Smith? All eyes will turn to junior point guard Katie Nelson, to see if her shoulders can handle the load of a team that lost three of its five starters to graduation.

So welcome, new students and old friends, to this year's edition of UMass sports. It's sure to be a helluva ride.

Andrew Merritt is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at merritt_collegian@yahoo.com

New marks unveiled at Fenway

Continued from page C1

'at Ann Arbor,' and when you say 'University of Wisconsin,' people know what you're talking about. I think in the state of Massachusetts, it's got to be the same."

Sport-specific word marks were also introduced, though there are no immediate changes planned for any uniforms.

In all, the project cost the University $25,000 to $15,000 more than the originally announced price. But Athletic Director Ian McCaw defended the extra expenditure to the cash-strapped school.

"You have to make an investment if you're going to generate revenue," McCaw said. "Obviously, we were not going to be successful in terms of licensing and merchandising with the previous logos, that much is clear. This is a very necessary step, and one we think will play tremendous dividends over the coming years."

The University also got a big assist from 1989 graduate Greg Rothman, who donated $10,000 to the athletic department to help cover the cost of the image renovation after it was decided that the Minuteman would remain the mascot.

After the unveiling press conference, the festivities went out to the ballfield, where UMass officials and the athletes present met with some of the Red Sox players and coaches, including a photo taken with the primary players in the identity system process and Sox coach Grady Little.

Cahoon also threw out the ceremonial first pitch, a high fastball that might have been called a strike by a generous umpire.

McCaw's presence was visible as well. The second-year Athletic Director appeared on the New England Sports Network's telecast, as well as the WEEI radio broadcast of the game. In addition, the new logo was shown on the park's giant video screen in centerfield, accompanied by "Fight Mass" on the Public Address system.

"It's critical for us to have a strong presence in Boston because of our 150,000 alums that are concentrated in this area," McCaw said. "Obviously the sixth-largest media market in the country is important to us, and the fact that quite honestly, [Fenway Park] is the center of the sports world in New England around this time of year."

Also in attendance at the press conference was Jay Williams, a representative of the Phoenix Design Group. Phoenix Design was brought into the proceedings early this year, and among a number of ideas, produced a proposal that would change the UMass mascot to the Grey Wolves. Though there was no change in the school's mascot, the group assisted with the renovation of the UMass Identity system.

"Part of what Phoenix did with us was ask us to identify logos we found attractive, and tell them why we like them," McCaw said. "We also had a lot of feedback from focus groups as to what people liked and got reactions as we started going through this process.

This wasn't entirely reinventing the wheel, we built off the old UMass script, which was unique, and we built off the strong presence of the Minuteman."

Interestingly, the two common complaints about the old Minuteman, which depicted a Caucasian male holding a rifle, were not addressed in the new character. It is still clearly a white male, and though the rifle is now more subdued, it is still visible and unmistakable.

McCaw, however, dismissed any future problems with the two controversial elements.

"We worked on trying to be inclusive," McCaw said. "For the first time we have a Minutewoman (word) logo. The ethnicity issue is something we definitely talked about and built into the development of the Minuteman character.

"As far as the issue of the firearm, the two characteristics that are mostly associated with the Minuteman are having the musket and the tri-cornered hat, so we thought those were two imperatives in developing the Minuteman logo."

The Minuteman has been the University's mascot since 1972. Prior to that, Massachusetts teams were known first as the Aggies, and then as the Redmen, until a New York-based Native American group strongly urged the University to change its nickname, due to its derogatory connotations. The Student Senate polled the student body that year to harvest suggested nicknames, and the winner was the Minuteman.

Briggs released; recruit added

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Stephen Briggs, a 6-foot-9-inch, 220-pound redshirt freshman from Houston, Texas, was dismissed from the Massachusetts basketball program by head coach Steve Lappas July 23 for a second unspecified violation of team rules.

Briggs originally signed with the University of Massachusetts during the 2001 early signing period, but was released by Lappas Oct. 11, 2002 after violating team rules and did not play during the 2002-2003 season.

He was reinstated into the program Jan. 17, 2003, and had practiced with the team from that point until his second and final transgression.

"We are sorry that it didn't work out for Stephen at UMass," Lappas told UMass Media Relations. "We wish him and his family well in the future."

Briggs, who was set to team with fellow redshirt Rashaun Freeman in giving the Minutemen a formidable frontcourt for the upcoming season, averaged 18 points and 11 rebounds per game as a senior at Houston's Westside High School. He captained the team to the 2002 district championship, and was voted team MVP in earning All-State, All-District and Regional All-Star recognition.

Another Lasme

Two days prior to Briggs' dismissal, Lappas announced the signing of Yann Stephane Lasme, a 6-foot-8-inch, 190-pound forward who is of no relation to former Minuteman guard Michael Lasme.

A native of Libreville, Gabon who currently lives with his guardians in Dorchester, Mass., Lasme has enrolled in second summer session classes and will have four years of eligibility beginning this winter.

"We are excited to have Stephane join our program," Lappas told UMass Media Relations. "We believe that he is a quality student and athlete. It is very exciting to find someone of his caliber at this point in time, and we feel he will be a very good addition to our program."

Before moving to Massachusetts, Lasme spent three seasons playing for the Gabon National Team, and was first recruited by Lappas after a strong performance in the Eastern Invitational's (N.J.) All-Star Game.

He graduated from Leon MBA High School after playing four years for coach Ebolo Firmin in the African High School Federation. Lasme also recently competed for Gabon in the All-Africa Games.

Oasis Body Wraps and Tanning
243 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 587-9742
NOW FEATURING SUN SPRITZER
UV FREE TANNING
• The first UV FREE tanning machine in the area
• Get $5.00 off your first visit
• A rich golden tan in just a few seconds
• You'll look and feel great
1/2 Price tanning every Tuesday
Conveniently Located
OASIS • Hampshire Mall • University Drive • UMASS
Route 9

TRUST "Before locking into a long term contract for a fitness facility with no machinery in place, why not give the veteran professionals a visit."
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
"Big enough to own the best equipment, but small enough to know your name."
* In business 22 years
* Locally owned & operated"
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0000 Rt. 9, Amherst

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
Why not be a bartender?
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
Call TODAY! (413)747-9888
www.bostonbartender.com

Futon Special

Black Metal Arm
6" Black or Natural
(Foam & Cotton)
$169.95

Wood Arm
6" Black or Natural
(Foam & Cotton)
$229.95
Yankee Mattress Factory
FREE DELIVERY
Or Stop In At:
Yankee Mattress Factory Outlet
455a Breckwood Blvd.
Springfield, MA 01119
Order Yours Today By Calling:
413.426.9741 or
Toll Free
888.980.9741
(Across from Western New England College)

Firm Quilted
Twin Set
$167
Full Set
$244
Queen Set
$277

THE WELCOME BACK AND KEEP-THAT-SUMMER-BODY LOOKING-GOOD
BODY SHOP DISCOUNT MEMBERSHIP SPECIAL
COME TO THE BODY SHOP in TOTMAN Rm. 8
FROM SEPTEMBER 3rd – 5th and 8th – 10th
FROM 4 pm to 7 pm FOR MEMBERSHIP SIGN-UPS AND IMMEDIATE WORKOUTS!!
PAY THE DISCOUNTED MEMBERSHIP OF ONLY
$70 FOR A FULL FALL SEMESTER MEMBERSHIP
$120 FOR A FULL FALL & SPRING MEMBERSHIP
FULL WORKOUTS AND FULL PRICES BEGIN ON SEPTEMBER 11TH TO WORK EVERY MUSCLE IN YOUR BODY WITH POWERLINE® WEIGHT TRAINING MACHINES
LIFEFITNESS® STATIONARY BICYCLES
& STAIR CLIMBERS
CONCEPT II® ROWING MACHINES NORDIC TRACK® SKI MACHINES
LANOICE® TREADMILLS
PRECOR® EFX ELLIPTICAL TRAINER
and
FREE WEIGHTS
The Body Shop Fitness Center
DISCOUNT
EXPIRES 9/10/03
FULL REFUND AVAILABLE FOR 14 DAYS AFTER DATE OF PURCHASE
WITH ORIGINAL RECEIPT AND YOUR UNIVERSITY IDENTIFICATION CARD

Talented squad gunning for gridiron glory

Continued from page C1

What Whipple has in this group of Minutemen is a collection of proven winners — players he knows will step up and make plays when plays need to be made simply because he's seen them do it before.

So what he alluded to in referring to his late-night television habits is this: He knows his team can get it done, and they themselves know they can get It done.

But as talented as they are, he cannot prevent injury, adversity or the strength of an opponent from overcoming them. So that's when he needs them to step it up and perform — on the field, when it matters, and where the only way to survive is to lay it all out on the line.

Not against the second team defense in the middle of two-a-days in August. Not in the Spring Game. Not in helmets and shorts under the practice lights at Gladchuk. Not when no one is watching, when the plays you make mean nothing.

Rather, in front of 50,000 purple-clad maniacs in the heart of Wildcat Country. On third-and-six on a September Saturday night in Orono. With a goalline stand on fourth down the day after Halloween. When the scoreboard reads fourth quarter and all they want to do is give up.

This team has the talent, the smarts and the personnel to go wherever they want to go.

All that's left is to go out do it.

Offense

The offense will once again rely on the one-two punch of sophomore R.J Cobbs and senior Jeff Krohn, although in a somewhat different capacity.

Last year Krohn found himself a reliable safety valve in Cobbs, who dodged and weaved his way through opposing defenses in rushing for 1,067 yards and 14 touchdowns in earning A-10 Rookie of the Year honors.

This year, however, the talented Cobbs will find himself deployed as a flanker, both wide and in the slot, more so than he will line up as a tailback. It's an experiment Whipple thinks will maximize Cobbs' effectiveness with the ball.

"We're going to use Cobbs as receiver and a tailback, but a little more of a receiver early on because [sophomore tailback Raunny] Rosario has really played well both in the spring and in camp," Whipple said. "We think it'll go a long way towards giving R.J. a lot of different looks in an effort to try and make plays."

The experiment's success will rely on whether the offense can get enough production out of fellow sophomore tailback Raunny Rosario to eliminate the need Cobbs out of the backfield and allow him to be effective with the boatload of talent around him.

"We have a ton of talent this year on offense, more so than we did last year I think, Krohn said. "Moving R.J. around will make us a lot more dynamic. We can move Raunny Rosario in at tailback and not miss a beat. It'll give us a lot more explosive power to do a lot of different things and give teams a lot more different looks and it certainly makes us more exciting."

Quarterback

Starter: Jeff Krohn, a Preseason All-American will return for his senior season as a tri-captain of the Minutemen, and will look to continue the success he had last season when he completed 152 of 287 passes for 2,032 yards and 16 touchdowns.

A transfer from Arizona State prior to last season, No. 7 led UMass to an 8-2 record last year in games he started. However it was the two he didn't start — late season losses to Hofstra and conference doormat New Hampshire after Krohn was sidelined following a pair of concussions — that cost the Minutemen a trip to the 1-AA playoffs. No need to emphasize that his ability to stay healthy will go along way in determining the fate of the team.

Backups: As a true freshman last season, Tim Day did an admirable job of filling in for Krohn. He made plays when he had to, but it was a pair of crucial mistakes — one which cost him and one which didn't — that surely proved to Whipple that the mobile young signal caller could use some experience. It will come in the form of a redshirt year, during which Day will run the scout team.

In Day's absence, 6-foot-5 junior college transfer Steve Howell will serve as Krohn's backup. Sophomore Scott Ratliff and freshman Randy Polillio will fill in behind him.

Running Back

Starters: Taking arguably your best player and moving him away from the position in which he excelled is certainly a daring move on Whipple's part, but he did so knowing he has a more-than-capable ball carrier to fill Cobbs' shoes in Rosario, who ran for 758 rushing yards and three touchdowns on 154 carries as a red shirt freshman in 2002.

"Raunny is more physical than you think at almost 190 pounds," Whipple said. "But we really don't want to be handing the ball off to him 20 times a game early in the season."

His carries will increase as he becomes more of an every down back — Whipple still plans on Cobbs carrying the ball at times — and UMass is banking on his production doing the same. If Rosario should fail, Whipple does have the option of again calling on Cobbs as his workhorse, but he certainly hopes that won't be the case.

At fullback, junior Steve Wysocki is a devastating blocker and is guaranteed to open more than a few holes for whoever is behind him. He's not much in the way of a pass-catcher — none of the fullbacks Whipple can trot out will take the place of Terrance Glover, who is academically ineligible — but they don't need him to be. Freshman Kyle Harrington has improved greatly and will serve as Wysocki's compliment if one is needed.

Backups: This is one of the few questions marks on this team. Freshman Justin Montgomery has gotten the bulk of the workload with the second team in scrimmages, and seems to be a somewhat powerful runner with a low center of gravity, but shouldn't factor into the equation barring an injury.

UMass-Lowell transfer Rich Demers showed some versatility in handling both tailback and fullback duties at times, but he will take some time to learn the system and shouldn't factor in much either.

Wide receiver

Starters: Gone are last year's top three pass catchers to graduation, among them Adrian Zullo, the last holdover from the '98 National Championship squad. With them went plenty of experience, but that's not something this group is lacking.

Senior Jimmie Howard will take over at one receiver after sitting out the 2002 season as a medical redshirt. One of the fastest players on the team, his speed as well as his experience — he started for the Minutemen as a freshman before getting hurt and has 22 career receptions for 379 yards — will certainly free up space for his teammates.

Junior Jason Peebler will look to fit in as another wideout after spending big chunks of 2002 lost in the depth chart.

Peebler began his UMass career catching passes — 17 to be exact as a receiver in 2001 — before converting to tailback at the outset of last season, but found himself as a man without a position after the emergence of Cobbs and Rosario.

He'll be back as a flanker this year, and has decent size at 6-foot-1-inch 202 pounds and blocks fairly well for a wideout. A decent possession receiver, he'll serve as a good compliment to Howard.

Quarterback Jeff Krohn

Cobbs is certainly the X-factor here. He is going to be the most dominant player on the field wherever he plays and certainly rivals Howard as one of the quickest, but whether it's split out or in the backfield again depends on Rosario.

"This group is a much faster, more physical group of receivers." Whipple said. We just don't have that marquee guy like a Jimmy Moore or an Adrian Zullo, although R.J. is certainly as talented as either of them."

Backups: UML transfer Johnson Owumi is someone who Whipple expects to be able to step in and contribute once he learns the system, and Greg Scott is another tough, physical possession receiver in the mold of Peebler and former Minuteman Neal Brown who will also play some valuable downs.

Tight End

Starter: Each of last year's top three tight ends are back, and along with the addition of another former River Hawk in senior Glen Opie, Krohn will have a deeper set of targets.

Sean Young returns as the starter, and his 6-foot-5-inch, 251-pound frame is prototypical tight end-size. If his hands improve like many hope they will, he could become a vital cog in the offense after catching only six balls in 2002.

Backups: Eugene Sigmund is the best blocker of the bunch, but also probably has the weakest hands. He will often be the second tight end in running situations.

Mike Douglas also gives Whipple another big body at the position, and he too is expected to step up in the passing game. Opie's athleticism makes him a factor catching the ball down the middle.

Offensive Line

Starters: Three starters return along this massive O-line, and among them are both tackles in four-year starter Carmen Collins and junior O.J. McBride, as well as junior Rob Kane at right guard.

Collins should continue to do a solid job protecting Krohn's blind side, and other than finding a second guard, the key to the line will be Alex Miller. The redshirt freshman will be the first center other than departed co-captain Maikel Miret to start a game for the Maroon and White in five years.

"Alex Miller has done a good job for us taking over for [Maikel] Miret and solidifying the interior of the line, and Carmen Collins has been consistent for us at left tackle. How well they stay healthy and stay together is the key. We just can't afford an injury."

Defense

Where do you start with a unit that boasts three All-Americans, returns 10 of 11 starters from an 8-4 team and can plug an experienced performer into the lone hole?

"The experience helps us because we all know how each other plays," said Anton McKenzie, senior safety and tri-captain. "I know how Jeremy Cain thinks in front of me and he knows how I think. I know how Shannon [James] thinks at safety and we communicate very well."

"With the experience coming back from what's been a pretty good defense the last few years, we feel that we have a pretty solid group here and we just need to go out there and prove it," added fellow tri-captain Jeremy Cain.

This is potentially the most dominating defense the A-10 has seen in years, and it could be the best defensive unit in school history. Of course, it's all-academic until the ball is snapped, but Whipple and Masella expect very big things from this group.

"This could be as good a defense as we've had since 1999," Whipple said. "We're far more experienced, faster and a little deeper.

Continued on page C7

Umass Football
2003 Schedule

Sat 09/06 Central Connecticut State / Amherst, Mass. 1:00 PM
Sat 09/13 Kansas State Manhattan, Kan. 2:00 PM
Sat 09/20 Maine / Orono, Maine 6:00 PM *
Sat 09/27 James Madison / Amherst, Mass. 1:00 PM *
Sat 10/04 New Hampshire / Amherst, Mass. 1:00 PM *
Sat 10/11 William & Mary / Williamsburg, Va. 1:00 PM *
Sat 10/18 Hofstra / Amherst, Mass. 12:30 PM #
Sat 10/25/2003 Villanova / Villanova, Pa. 3:30 PM *
Sat 11/01/2003 Northeastern Amherst, Mass. 12:30 PM *
Sat 11/08/2003 Richmond / Amherst, Mass. 12:00 PM *
Sat 11/15/2003 Delaware / Newark, Del. 12:00 PM *
Sat 11/22/2003 Rhode Island / Amherst, Mass. 12:00 PM *

* denotes Atlantic 10 contest
conference game for Hofstra, non-league game for UMass

Introducing UMass football

Continued from page C6

"There's not a guy on the defensive side of the ball you're going to hear me say we're not expecting big things from," Masella said. "It's a team game and defense is only part of that. Our goal is to win a National Championship."

Defensive Line

Starters: Masella's 3-4 alignment will hinge on the nose guard, and the Minutemen have a very good one in the undersized but physically strong senior Ian Dyche, who recorded 26 tackles and 2 sacks in 2002. However the key to this group is and always has been the health of senior All-American Valdamar "T" Brower, who totaled 53 tackles, 14 tackles for loss and seven sacks last season. He ranks fifth all-time at UMass with 22 career sacks.

Brower is coming off knee surgery, and his availability and playing strength remains uncertain. However Masella knows simply having big No. 99 out there will go along way in helping the defense.

"If he comes back and he's 85 to 90 percent, then we have a pretty good football player," he said. "And if he's 100 percent than we have a great one."

Senior Doran Davis also returns at defensive end after recording 103 tackles and 8 sacks in 2003.

Backups: Masella is comfortable with the depth he has along the line, and because of this will use a lot of bodies up front.

"We've got a lot of guys back up front with a lot of experience." Masella said. "We're going to do it by committee up front and get a lot of work from a lot of different guys."

Among them will be sophomore Keron Williams and seniors Mike Haynes, Malik Hall and mammoth 305-pound Indiana transfer Colin Christopher.

"We just want to keep them all healthy," Masella said. "We don't have any open weeks and it's a long season, so we're just going to rotate them as much as we can to keep them from getting banged up."

Linebacker

Starters: Masella loses his only starter here (Corey Potter), but should not miss a beat with this extremely talented group.

"We have a very good linebacking crew, and a lot of them," Masella said. "We're going to take advantage of the athletes we have at that position, because I think they're better than they were a year ago."

As a redshirt sophomore, L.A. Love will look to take over for the departed Potter at inside linebacker, and regain the starting role he had prior to missing the entire 2002 season.

Senior Mark Kimener is back on the inside after recording 93 tackles and 4 sacks last year to go along with two interceptions — one of which he returned for a crucial touchdown against Delaware. He's a sure tackler who is decent in pass coverage and gives the coaching staff the ability to mix and match coverages.

2003 Buck Buchanan Award candidate Jeremy Cain returns to outside linebacker for his senior season, and is as good as any linebacker in 1-AA. He will look to improve upon a monster 2002 campaign which saw him record a whopping 133 tackles, 97 of them solo, in earning second team All-America honors.

Opposite Cain will be classmate Mike Ziccardi, who proved to be an excellent pass rusher last year in recording 10 sacks. Masella will be forced to rely on Ziccardi's ability to rush the passer even more, however, if Brower's knees preclude him from performing the task.

"We have a very good linebacking crew, and a lot of them." Masella said. "We're going to take advantage of the athletes we have at that position, because I think they're better than they were a year ago.

"If they stay healthy, it's certainly as good as any group in this league and maybe as good as any in 1-AA."

Backups: Mobile 6-foot-5-inch redshirt freshman Ola Sanusi should provide some valuable help off the bench, but sophomore Serge Tikum is the player Masella expects to step up and contribute at an already loaded position.

Defensive Back

Starters: If linebacker is the Maroon and White's strongest area, the defensive backfield is certainly a close second.

McKenzie and sophomore Shannon James form the best safety tandem in the A-10 and possibly the nation. They will team with ball-hawking corners Steve Costello, who tied for the team lead with four interceptions, and Bobby Boyer to give Masella a group that is not only talented and versatile, but determined to get the most out of each other.

"I can't wait to start playing with this secondary. I love those guys," McKenzie said. We're just so critical about every mistake we make and the coaches are critical of us because we want to eliminate every little mistake so that the team will get better.

"I feel that we can be very, very good as a secondary."

McKenzie and James give Masella two capable run stoppers who each recorded 100-plus tackles last season, and are both skilled in pass coverage.

"Both of our safeties are very good players, and both are very good run players," Masella said. "But they're expected to do a lot for us in terms of getting us in the right looks and the right coverages, and they make a lot of plays for us."

The one knock on Boyer and Costello in 2002 was their lack of tackling proficiency. However, they have both improved dramatically, much to Masella's delight.

"Both [Costello and Boyer] can run well and cover well, but what's pleased me the most this preseason is that they both have tackled well."

Masella is also confident in the pair's ability to play man coverage, which will free up opportunities to blitz in passing situations.

"We didn't blitz with man coverage as much last year, but we're going to take some more shots this year because of our corners." "What I think you'll see more is man-up on third down and say, 'Hey, you guys can do it' and I have confidence that they can."

Backups: Senior Ryan McHugh and redshirt freshman James Ihedigbo will be called upon as understudies to the stellar pair of safeties, while capable juniors Leroy Brooks and Ricky Appiah, along with freshman Tracy Belton will help fill out nickel and dime packages at corner.

Also look for Costello to see some time at safety, as he did in 2002.

Special Teams

Starters: Gone are solid All-Conference kickers David Sanger and Doug White, and while Whipple has yet to find someone to step in and fill either's shoes, he has some raw talent he hopes will develop and solidify the positions. Freshman Michael Torres, who has earned the placekicking duties, has a very strong leg and has impressed the coaching staff with the distance on his kickoffs. Rumor also has it he booted a 48-yard field goal with plenty to spare in practice. It remains to be seen, though, how well he kicks in game situations. Backup quarterback Scott Ratliff will retain holding duties for Torres, and Cain will be featured again as the long-snapper.

Another freshman, Christian Koegel, will serve as the team's punter, and also appears to have a strong leg.

Peebler, Howard, Cobbs and Costello will all figure in the mix as kick returners, with the former pair regularly handling kickoff return duties and the latter duo taking the punts.

Backups: Sophomore Mike Stoller and senior Ryan Chevers will serve as the backup placekicker and punter, respectively.

Schedule

After the week one warmup against Central Connecticut State, UMass will travel to Manhattan, Kan. to face a Top 5 1-A team in Kansas State.

The Wildcats are far and away the best team UMass has ever faced, and the game will certainly prove to be an interesting test for Krohn and the Minutemen.

"I'm really looking forward to Kansas State because it'll be a big game for us," Krohn said. "It's a test to see what kind of character we have on this team and where we'll be able to take things this year."

The key to the schedule, however, will come in week 3. It is then that Whipple will lead his troops into Orono, Maine to face a tough Black Bears squad in their A-10 opener. Whipple has never won a league opener on the road as coach of the Minutemen, and if he hopes to lead his team to good things, he will need to get off on the right foot with a win.

UM will then return home for a pair of conference games against weaker opponents in James Madison and New Hampshire, before hitting the road for a tough contest at William & Mary.

The Minutemen play their final non-conference game at home against Hofstra, in a contest that will count in the league standings for the Pride, but not for UMass.

After a date at Villanova, the Minutemen return to McGuirk Stadium on Nov. 1 to play another crucial game against predicted A-10 frontrunner Northeastern, the only team to beat a full-strength Minuteman squad last year, other than nationally-ranked North Carolina State.

They will follow that up by hosting Richmond, and following a road trip to Delaware, UMass closes out the regular season at home against the Rhode Island.

Buck is the trend

DB Cain up for Buchanan award

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

For a second consecutive season The Sporting Network, presenters of the Buck Buchanan Award given to the nation's top defensive player in Division 1-AA, is trying to draw attention to an individual member of the Massachusetts football team.

And for a second consecutive season, that individual player isn't interested in being singled out.

That is unless, of course, it's the product of something bigger.

"Winning individual awards is not really something I think about at all," said Minuteman linebacker Jeremy Cain, who succeeds Valdamar Brower as UMass' latest nominee for the Buchanan Award. "If we win then maybe I have a chance to get the award, but it's really just a label. It doesn't mean nearly as much as winning does."

"Any individual is just a small part of a bigger picture, and to me I'm only concerned about how the team does. If my success helps the team and we win, fine. But an award doesn't mean anything if it doesn't translate into winning. And that's our goal, winning."

Although if Cain truly isn't interested in being singled out from a defense that returns 10 starters and a plethora of talent in 2003, his play on the field certainly isn't helping.

A 2003 tri-captain and three-year starter at outside linebacker for coach Mark Whipple, Cain's uncanny nose for the ball helped him establish himself as one of the nation's most dominant linebackers in 2002. His 97 solo stops were a team high, and brought his career total to 179, good for ninth all time in Massachusetts history.

His 133 total tackles also led the Minutemen, as did his 18 tackles for a loss, while his seven sacks ranked second. His career numbers are just as staggering, as the Tamarac, Fla. Native has racked up 256 career tackles — 113 of them for a loss — and 65 career sacks.

"He's a playmaker who does a lot of things very well," said Tom Masella, second-year defensive coordinator. "I think he gets overlooked by a lot of people. I thought he was one of the better linebackers in the league last year, and I expect him to be better this year."

A 2002 Second Team All-American and 2003 Preseason All-American as named by Don Hansen's National Weekly Football Gazette, Cain was also a second team All-Atlantic 10 choice in 2002 and a Preseason First Team selection for 2003. He was also voted as UMass' Outstanding Defensive Player by his coaches and teammates following last season.

"He had a great year last year," Masella said. "Not only is he a very good football player, but he's a real good person and a great leader."

"He's just a pleasure to coach because he just works so hard and is such a great kid."

"I think he might have a shot at ending up [in the NFL] someday," Whipple said. "He certainly has the tools and the football smarts, it just comes down to what he does on the field and how well he performs."

"I told him if he stinks it up this year, that shot [at going pro] won't be there for him. But at the same time, I don't see a player of his talent and ability having a bad year."

The complete list of candidates for the 2003 Buck Buchanan Award:

Defensive Line
Jared Allen — Idaho
Tim Bush — Montana
Isaac Hilton — Hampton
K.T. Stovall — Appalachian State

Linebacker
Dante Balestracci — Harvard
Jeremy Cain — Massachusetts
Liam Ezekiel — Northeastern
Boomer Grigsby — Illinois State
Nick Ricks — Eastern Illinois
Roderick Royal — McNeese State
Lee Russell — Western Illinois
Renauld Williams — Hofstra

Defensive Back
Levy Brown — Florida A&M
Kane Ioane — Montana State
Alexis Moreland — Southern Illinois
Chris Thompson — Nicholls State
Tony Tiller — East Tennessee State

University of Massachusetts, Amherst
Campus Activities
FIRST WEEK
presents...
DARRELL HAMMOND
LIVE!!!
SATURDAY, September 6 2003
Fine Arts Center, 10pm
Now entering his eighth season on TV's "Saturday Night Live," Darrell Hammond has been applauded by television critics and viewers alike for his uncanny, accurate impressions of a wide range of celebrities and politicians.
$8 for UMass Students/ $12 General Admission
Tickets will be available at the FAC Box Office starting Sep. 2nd for Students only, and Sept. 5th for general admission

UMASS FOOTBALL HOME OPENER
SATURDAY
SEPTEMBER 6TH
McGUIRK ALUMNI STADIUM
5TH RANKED UMASS VS. Blue Devils Central Connecticut State University
JEFF KROHN
1:00 PM
Visit MinuteFAN Park
presented by the UMass Amherst Alumni Association
THE ULTIMATE PRE-GAME TAILGATE EXPERIENCE!
OPENS TWO HOURS PRIOR TO KICKOFF - FREE ADMISSION
STUDENT TICKETS FREE!
MUST PRESENT YOUR VALID UMASS STUDENT ID AT THE STUDENT GATE - NO TICKET NECESSARY (UMASS UNDERGRADUATE STUDENTS ONLY)
UMASS STUDENT TICKETS FREE!
1-866-UMASS-TIX
WWW.UMASSATHLETICS.COM
UMASS STUDENT TICKETS FREE!

PRINTING Bread and Circus
Sunraise 413-586-7133 print@sunraiseinc.com
Posters & T-Shirts
Custom Screen Printing!
BOXERS SHORTS! YOUR NAME HERE
STADIUM CUPS!
CUSTOM CAPS!
www.sunraiseinc.com

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
$139
★ Student Special ★
4 months
Best Aerobics~Best Machines
KEISER • NAUTILUS • FREE WEIGHTS • CYBEX • STAIRMASTERS • LIFECYCLES • TREADMILLS • ELLIPTICALS • LIFEROWER
AMHERST 256-0000
www.amherstathletic.com

UMASS Campus Recreation
Get those forms in by:
Flag football (M/W/C) 9/8
Soccer (M/W) 9/8
Co-ed Softball 9/9
Field Hockey (W) 9/9
Cross Country (M/W) 9/16
Ice Hockey (M/W) 9/18
On The Web: www.umass.edu/umim
LATE ENTRANTS SHOULD CHECK FOR EXTENSIONS IN BOYDEN 215

This is Ted.
Ted had no friends.
Ted had no future
Then Ted got a job selling ads at the Daily Collegian.
Look at Ted now.
Sell, Ted. Sell.
Follow Ted down to the Campus Center Basement where the Collegian is now accepting applications for advertising representatives for Spring, 2002. Freshmen and Sophomores are encouraged to apply. Stop by 113 Campus Center or call 545-3500.

Mourning Bobby Bonds; defense for Reds

Mike Marzelli

The Passing of a Giant

By the time his career is over, Barry Bonds very well might be the best baseball player who ever lived.

The Giants slugger continues his assault on his godfather Willie Mays, who sits in third on the all-time home run list, and he will pass him in the next few weeks.

But if you ask him, he will tell you he owes every bit of his success to one man, and one man only. One half of the greatest father-son combination in baseball history: his father, Bobby.

Bobby Bonds died Aug. 23 at the age of 57, after a lengthy battle with several serious illnesses, including lung cancer. He was one of the games true underrated players — a prototype leadoff hitter with a sprinter's speed and a potent bat. They were tools that allowed him to carve out his own legacy during a 14-year career despite playing alongside the immortal Mays and fathering a legendary son.

The elder Bonds was in his 23rd season with the Giants as either a player, coach, scout or front-office employee, and despite his recent failing health, never strayed from the game and the franchise he loved nor the son he cherished so much.

He was known to have said that watching Barry play his first Major League game was one of — if not his greatest — thrill, and whenever the younger Bonds found himself in a slump, it was dad he would call to fix his swing and get him back on the right track.

Could Bonds break Hank Aaron's record of 755? Only time will tell. But one thing Barry knows for sure: whether he does it or not, dad will be watching, and dad will be proud.

In the Red?

I'm not quite sure I understand why everyone who's anyone in the baseball media is up in arms over the Reds for supposedly holding a fire sale. Sure, fire sales are hardly good for baseball, but I can't see how what Cincinnati chose to do was an example of one.

The true definition of a fire sale is when a team unloads all of its talent for young, unproven prospects in an attempt to save or make money. When San Diego did such in 1993, the likes of Gary Sheffield, Fred McGriff and Benito Santiago were sent packing. When Florida followed suit following their 1997 World Series title, Sheffield was gone again, along with Kevin Brown, Moises Alou, Robb Nen, Al Leiter and a host of others.

So how does the collection of deals that dispatched Aaron Boone, Gabe White, Jose Guillen and Scott Williamson fit in with the previous two examples? It doesn't. Sure it's all being done in the name of money, and no one likes to see a team give up, but let's think about this.

Jose Guillen began the season at Triple-A and hit his way into the everyday lineup, all while making somewhere in the vicinity of six figures. Shipping him to Oakland was hardly a cost-cutting move, and it brought them Aaron Harang, a promising righthander groomed for success in Billy Beane's arm factory.

Williamson is a very solid reliever who is still cashing in on an All-Star season despite recently having Tommy John surgery. However, when you're not a playoff-caliber team, you can't afford to dish out serious cash to protect leads that don't exist.

Finally, the Reds did give up on the oft-injured White and a Gold Glover in the making in Boone, who many expected to be their third baseman of the future. Yet what they managed to do in the process was what 29 other GM's were unable to do: convince Brian Cashman to part with super prospect Brandon Claussen.

The Reds managed to keep their young nucleus of Austin Kearns, Adam Dunn, Sean Casey and Jason LaRue, and added three potential top of the rotation starters, while parting with four pieces of a puzzle that wasn't going to get put together in the near future anyway.

So if there is a reason to condemn them, I guess I just don't see it.

Getting By With a Little Help From His Friends

Albert Pujols has as good a shot as any have had to win the Triple Crown since Carl Yastrzemski last won the award back in 1967. However, the Cardinals slugger is going to need some help from his teammates, namely Jim Edmonds, if he hopes to accomplish the monumental feat.

Simply put, Pujols is the best hitter this side of Barry Bonds, and a sure lock for the batting title. Yet if he hopes to top the other statistical categories, then that is where Edmonds comes in.

The slick centerfielder is, in his own right, one of the best power hitters in the National League, but has an uncanny knack for landing on the DL. Without Edmonds' bat behind him, Pujols is going to fall victim of the very strategy his own manager, Tony LaRussa, loves to employ. Without sufficient protection, he will be singled out as the one player teams won't let beat them, and will see about as many good pitches as Bonds.

So if Edmonds is able to stay healthy, and Edgar Renteria continues to shine in front of Pujols, a Crown is hardly out of the realm of possibility.

Rocky Mountain Reunion

When Marlins rookie phenom Dontrelle Willis traveled to Denver, it wasn't just the Colorado Rockies he had to prepare for.

Willis grew up in Alameda, Calif., was raised by his mother Joyce and never knew his father. At the same time, his father settled in the Denver area and had no idea his son was taking Major League Baseball by storm. However, Dontrelle decided to change that, and organized a meeting with his father for when the team arrived in town.

Beginning with a handshake and ending with a hug, the Willis men, who had never even seen a picture of each other in Dontrelle's 21 years, spent an hour together for the very first time discussing family members, among other things.

It's stories like those that remind us that athletes are real people too, and that just because they appear to have everything going for them does not mean they are not faced with adversity and hardship in ways you or I don't know or can't understand.

In a world where players rarely appear to be driven by anything other than the money, its guys like Willis who remind us how baseball should be played. His genuine enthusiasm and the joy he takes each day from playing baseball is refreshing. He knows his gift of throwing a baseball is not something he can take for granted, and in finally reuniting with his father, he has clearly found the peace in his life he so rightfully deserves.

> "The one constant through all the years has been baseball. America has rolled by like an army of steamrollers. It's been erased like a blackboard, rebuilt, and erased again. But baseball has marked the time. This field, this game, is a part of our past. It reminds us of all that once was good, and what could be again."
>
> -James Earl Jones

A Case of Pennant Fever?

Pedro Martinez has certainly tried to make life easier for Red Sox GM Theo Epstein.

Epstein has a series of big decisions coming up following the 2004 season, and they all center around who out of his four major free agents, Martinez, Nomar Garciaparra, Derek Lowe and Jason Varitek, the Red Sox will be able to sign.

While Lowe and Varitek will not command top dollar, Garciaparra and Martinez should. What Martinez did to aid in the decision process was skip the team photo session, and then call in sick for his scheduled start the following night, which just happened to be the biggest game of the season. The Sox won the game anyway, behind Casey Fossum, but Martinez let Red Sox Nation down big time and again proved his eternally fragile nature.

He may still be the best pitcher in baseball, but he is hardly as dominating as he was when he left hitters without a chance in his two stellar seasons of '98 and '99. His velocity is down, and his soft right shoulder keeps him from letting his pitch counts elevate. Without the ability to pitch on short rest and take over a playoff series à la Curt Schilling or Randy Johnson, can Martinez truly be counted on as a money pitcher anymore?

Epstein already made one mistake in picking up Pedro's $17.5 million option for 2004 too far in advance, but he won't make it again with a new contract if the pride of the Dominican Republic continues to fail to live up to his title as ace and stopper of the Olde Towne Team.

Little Boys Show Big Heart

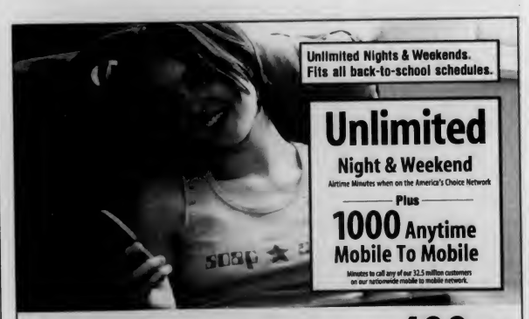
Allow me to digress from the big boys for a little and talk about one of the most unbelievable games I have ever seen. Of course I'm talking about the U.S. Semifinal game between Saugus and Richmond, Texas in the 2003 Little League World Series.

These kids are only 11 and 12 years old, and a mere fraction of a percentage of them will go on to play baseball for a living, yet the sheer guts, heart and determination in one game rivaled anything you could hope for from any other facet of the real world.

They're playing for no other reason than a love for the sport, and on this stage, they are playing a game that will remain with them for the rest of their lives. Win or lose, they will take away from it what they've learned on the field, from their coaches and from a game that, for them, is being played at its purest state. What it teaches them and what they choose to take from it will go a long way in determining who they will be when the diamond is just a distant memory.

So when the boys from Texas refused to give up and were able to battle back from six runs down in the final frame, it wouldn't be out of line to say that the town of Richmond just watched a group of fifth- and sixth-graders take the first step towards becoming fine young men. And when their counterparts from Massachusetts were able to put forth a similar effort and eventually win the game, Saugus could claim to do the same.

Mike Marzelli is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached and Marzelli_Collegian@yahoo.com. Touching 'em all will appear every Tuesday during the baseball season. Information from MLB.com, the Florida Marlins, San Francisco Giants and Montreal Expos was used in this column.



ERIC RISBERG/ASSOCIATED PRESS

The San Francisco Giants' Barry Bonds, left, sits with his father Bobby Bonds in the Giants' dugout prior to their game against the Pittsburgh Pirates in San Francisco, on Aug. 9, 2002.

TRUST "Before locking into a long term contract for a fitness facility with no machinery in place, why not give the veteran professionals a visit."
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
"Big enough to own the best equipment, but small enough to know your name."
* In business 22 years
* Locally owned & operated
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0090 RTE. 9, AMHERST

$300 rebate on the system that does everything a college student needs.*
Well, almost.

Buy an Apple laptop, an iPod, and a printer. And clean up.
Buy a qualifying iBook or PowerBook, an iPod and a qualifying printer from the Apple Store for Education individuals or a participating campus reseller between May 30 and September 27, 2003. See Terms and Conditions for details.
* Mail-in rebate. Student ID or letter of acceptance required. Additional terms apply.
The University Store
Campus Center
Amherst, MA 01003
(413) 545-2619
© 2003 Apple Computer, Inc. All rights reserved. Apple, the Apple logo, Apple Store, iBook, and PowerBook are trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc., registered in the U.S. and other countries. iPod is a trademark of Apple Computer, Inc. L29374A
Authorized Reseller

Unlimited Nights & Weekends. Fits all back-to-school schedules.
Unlimited Night & Weekend
Airtime Minutes when on the America's Choice Network
Plus
1000 Anytime Mobile To Mobile
Minutes to call any of our 12.5 million customers on our nationwide mobile to mobile network.
Back to School Special!
Buy a Motorola V120E for only $49.99 and receive a FREE Hands-free Headset & Car Adapter
SAVE $40!
New annual agreement required. Select accessory models. While supplies last. Limited time offer
AMERICA'S CHOICE
400 anytime minutes FOR $39.99 monthly access With 1 or 2 year agreement.
Unlimited nationwide long distance. No roaming charges coast-to-coast.
All when calling on the America's Choice® network.
The America's Choice network covers more than 265 million people in the U.S. Network not available in all areas. Calls placed outside the calling plan area are 69¢/min. Mobile to Mobile not available throughout the America's Choice Network.
@Wireless
www.shopatwireless.com
HADLEY
322 Russell St. • 413.587.3248
HOLYOKE
50 Holyoke Mall • 413.533.2500
Camera phone NOW here! Bring in this ad and receive $10 OFF.
At participating @Wireless locations.
verizon wireless
Authorized Retailer
NSm/Lg1
Important Consumer Information: Night & weekend hours: Mon-Fri. 9:01pm-6:59am Sat. 12am-Sun. 11:59pm. Subject to Customer Agreement and Calling Plan. $35 activation fee applies. $175 early termination fee applies. Requires credit approval. Cannot be combined with other service promotions. Usage rounded to next full minute. Unused allowances lost. Subject to taxes & other charges. Not available in all markets. Geographic and other restrictions apply. See brochure and sales representative for details. ©2003 Verizon Wireless.

Dangerous offense prepares for '03

Continued from page C1

later, Krohn was injured again, this time while trying to throw a block to allow tailback R.J. Cobbs to run for paydirt. Krohn wouldn't be the same for the rest of the season, and missed two games before returning for the Minutemen's win over Rhode Island. By that time, however, it was too late — a loss to Hofstra effectively ended the season.

This year, just as the rest of the offense, Krohn is bigger and badder, and the man who once quarterbacked Arizona State in the big-time Pac-10 Conference is ready to rumble, after fully recovering from shoulder surgery early in the year.

"[This season is] the first time in his career that he's ever played in the same offense two years in a row," said Whipple of his gunslinger. "When he was at Arizona State he had one, and then they switched his second year, then he got a third one here, and now he's got the same one, so he is so much more refined.

"The thing he's his own best critic, whatever he does isn't good enough. He's a really good leader and a great kid. When he plays, we tend to play better on defense. Why? I don't know why that is, we tend to kick the ball better when he's in there too. Especially in our system, it's the most important position."

Which is good, since the main backup from last year, sophomore Tim Day, is in all probability going to be redshirted for the season in order to retain his services after Krohn graduates. Junior college transfer Steve Howell should fill the hole that this leaves, but he is as yet unproved in 1-AA competition.

Krohn will also benefit from an improved weapons system that begins with the conversion of R.J. Cobbs, last year's prime ball carrier, to wideout. Cobbs, who Krohn says is the team's best athlete, will still line up at tailback in the early part of the season, but Whipple is ready to put the 5-foot-11-inch, 190-pounder from Parsippany Hills, N.J. out on the sidelines.

What this provides is a balanced aerial attack, something the Minutemen were lacking last season, thanks to the focus that was due Adrian Zullo, one of the most notable and popular players to don the maroon and white. Zullo notched 52 catches last season for 762 yards, and while the smallish, speedy wide receiver gave UMass a potent downfield option, it tilted the field and created all sorts of havoc for the offense.

"With Adrian Zullo, we weren't able to spread the ball out as much, because everybody was focused on him," said senior Jimmie Howard, who missed last season due to injury. "But this year, we really don't have a big name at wide receiver, so everybody's going to get a fair share of the ball, so it's going to be better that way."

While Whipple conceded there's no true replacement for Zullo in the lineup, he sees no weak links in the wide receiving corps. The services of Jason Peebler, Greg Scott and Howard are expected to be in full force this season.

Howard will see plenty of action this fall. At 5-foot-11, 178 pounds, the Camden, N.J. native might not be the heftiest player on the field, but his quickness and big-play ability is something the Minutemen hope to bank on. So well-regarded is his speed by his teammates, that when senior defensive back Anton McKenzie — no turtle himself — ran him down just yards short of the goal line in an intrasquad scrimmage after a long catch, the whole squad reacted, and Howard blushed at the mention of the play.

It might be unusual for a wide receiver squad to be comfortable with a lack of a stud wideout, but the balance that comes with Cobbs' move to the position puts everyone at ease.

"That takes a lot of pressure off me," Howard said of Cobbs' joining him at wideout. If they double [Cobbs], I'll be open, and if they double me, Jason [Peebler] will be open. We've got a lot of weapons, and we can't wait to get started."

Taking the place of Cobbs at tailback is the ever-ready and able Raunny Rosario. Any downgrade in quality from the tailback position will be negligible, though, because Rosario is one of the tougher players to tackle on this squad.

"Raunny runs so hard and he never gets tackled by the first guy," Krohn said. "You can't say enough about the guy, he never says anything. Raunny came in and still had a ton of yards last year and did a great job for us. We'll be fine, that's a one-two punch you can't replace, so I'm happy."

The offensive line in front of Rosario will be equally important, and while the line did allow 28 sacks last year — four fewer than the UMass defense recorded — three starters return in the forms of juniors Rob Kane and O.J. McBride, as well as the player that Cobbs calls the best player on the offense, senior Carmen Collins.

"Definitely a leader, definitely a player," Cobbs said of Collins. "He's 100 percent, he goes out there, he does a lot of hard work. I think he deserves to be one of the best players on the offense, because he knows what he has to do to help out the line, and it all goes on him."

GERALD H. LINGUQUELBIGIAN

Senior wideout Jimmy Howard

The UMass fullbacks, who classically don't see many carries, look to have an increased role this year. A number of pass plays used in practice and scrimmages have been geared towards Steve Wysocki and redshirt freshman Kyle Harrington. While Wysocki's backfield protection for Krohn, Harrington has decent speed, and his toughness gives him an almost guaranteed handful of yards after each catch.

Another key is the year of experience gained by everyone involved in the offense, players and coaches alike.

"We're way ahead of where we were last year," Whipple said. "Because of [Krohn], because the tight ends and offensive line has been here together, and staff-wise, we're farther along with [Offensive Line] Coach [Chris] Malone, [Wide Receivers] Coach [Paul] Gorham, so our level of tempo in practice is much higher, because we don't have that kind of confusion."

The Minuteman offense certainly won't be lacking in weapons this season, and that gives them plenty of confidence.

"We have a ton more talent than we did last year," Krohn said. "We've got enough firepower that we can hit everyone from all angles, so I think we'll be fine."

'Miracle' coach dies

Brooks, 66, was builder of 1980 Olympic squad

By David Campbell
Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) – While his team rushed onto the rink and America began to celebrate, Herb Brooks simply headed to the locker room.

Even later, the magnitude of the "Miracle on Ice" seemed to escape him.

"In the early years, he thought it was just part of his job — being a coach," recalled announcer Al Michaels.

Brooks, a master motivator who spent a lifetime getting the most out of his hockey teams, died Aug. 11 in a car wreck at age 66.

"It seems like all the great innovators die young," said Ken Morrow, a defenseman on the 1980 U.S. Olympic team. "Coach may have been the greatest innovator the sport has ever had."

And his greatest victory came when Team USA beat the Soviet Union at Lake Placid.

The young Americans were given no chance against a veteran Soviet squad that had dominated international hockey for years and had routed them 10-3 in an exhibition game at Madison Square Garden the week before the Olympics.

On Feb. 22, 1980, the U.S. team scored with 10 minutes to play to take a 4-3 lead against the Soviets and then held on. As the final seconds ticked away, Michaels exclaimed, "Do you believe in miracles? Yes!"

That shocking victory, plus the win over Finland for the gold medal, assured the team a place in sports immortality.

Interviewed years later on why he headed to the locker room shortly after the game ended, Brooks said he wanted to leave the ice to his players.

"It was not my spot," he said. "I always say sort of flippantly, 'I had to go to the bathroom.' Or, 'If I'd have went on the ice when this thing happened, someone would have speared me or something.' It's a great feeling of accomplishment and pride. They had to do it. It was their moment."

Each one of the players on the Olympic team was hand-picked by Brooks.

"You're looking for players whose name on the front of the sweater is more important than the one on the back," Brooks once said.

Players kept a notebook of "Brooksisms," sayings the coach used for motivation like: "You're playing worse and worse every day, and right now you're playing like it's next month."

Before the game against the Soviets, Brooks told his players: "You're meant to be here. This moment is yours. You're meant to be here at this time."

Brooks attended a U.S. Hockey Hall of Fame celebrity golf event Aug. 11 in northern Minnesota, leaving around noon to catch a flight from Minneapolis to Chicago, USA Hockey spokesman Chuck Menke said. Tom Sersha, executive director of the Hall of Fame, which is based in Eveleth, attended the golf event.

"He truly was part of our American hockey heritage," Sersha said. "There was nobody like Herb Brooks."

The Hall of Famer was killed when he lost control of his minivan, which veered onto a grassy area at a highway intersection north of the Twin Cities and rolled over.

Brooks apparently was not wearing a seat belt, and his body was found about 40 yards from the vehicle, state patrol Lt. Chuck Walerius said.

Police weren't aware of any preexisting health problems, and there were no signs to indicate that alcohol was a factor in the crash.

Brooks is survived by his wife, Patti, son Dan, and daughter Kelly.

"My gut reaction is Minnesota lost its head coach today," said Minnesota Gov. Tim Pawlenty, a hockey fanatic. "Herb Brooks was a Minnesota legend, a Minnesota treasure."

Brooks also coached the New York Rangers (1981-85), Minnesota North Stars (1987-88), New Jersey Devils (1992-93) and the Pittsburgh Penguins (1999-00). He also led the French Olympic team at the 1998 Nagano Games.

Born in St. Paul, Brooks played hockey at the University of Minnesota, where he later coached from 1972-79 and won three national titles. The last player cut on the 1960 U.S. gold medal team, Brooks played in 1964 and 1968. He was inducted into the U.S. Hockey Hall of Fame in 1990.

Last season, Brooks was the director of player development for the Penguins. He rejected a multimillion-dollar offer to coach the Rangers last summer, saying he didn't want to be away from his wife and family in Minnesota.

Brooks returned to lead the 2002 U.S. Olympic hockey team to a silver medal. Players from the 1980 team, led by Mike Eruzione, lit the Olympic cauldron at the opening ceremony in Salt Lake City.

He was asked why he wanted to return after writing the most improbable story in hockey.

"Maybe I'm sort of like the players — there's still a lot of little boy in me," Brooks said. "And maybe I'm a little smarter now than I was before for all the stupid things I've done."

THE BIGGEST BACK TO SCHOOL
POSTER SALE
1000's of Choices
Where:
STUDENT UNION BALLROOM
When:
Mon. Sept. 1 thru Fri. Sept. 5
Time:
9 AM - 4:30 PM
Sponsor:
WMUA 91.1
Incredible Selection
CHECK OUT OUR GREAT POSTERS AND PRICES!!
MOST IMAGES ONLY $6, $7 AND $8

SET YOUR ALARM FOR FRIDAY.
WAKE UP SLEEPYHEAD. SOMETHING IS DIFFERENT TODAY. MAYBE IT'S THE PAVLOVIAN EXPECTATION OF FEELING A GLOSSY SPORTS ILLUSTRATED ON CAMPUS NESTLED SAFELY IN YOUR CAMPUS PAPER, WAITING FOR YOU TO INHALE PAGE UPON PAGE OF PHOTOGRAPHY AND ARTICLES DEVOTED TO THE MYSTICAL REALM THAT IS COLLEGE SPORTS. FULL COLOR. AS FREE AS THE WEATHER IS FUSSY. REASON ENOUGH TO EXIT BED, WIPE FACE, AND THINK TO YOURSELF: IN HEAVEN, EVERY DAY IS FRIDAY.
Sports Illustrated ON CAMPUS
ON FRIDAY.
SI.COM

UMASS MINUTEMEN

UMASS MINUTEWOMEN

Meet the new face of UMass

MORE Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!

USE YOUR CARD TO SAVE ON ALL THE ITEMS ON THIS PAGE!

Mt. Olive Stuffers
16 oz, Regular, Kosher or Bread & Butter or No Sugar Added
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
LESS THAN 07¢ EACH

Cains Salad Dressing
8 oz, All Varieties
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
LESS THAN 64¢ EACH

Colonna Flavored Bread Crumbs
15 oz
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
LESS THAN 26¢ EACH

Big Y Brown Gravy Mix
.87 oz Envelope
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
150 POINTS
LESS THAN 26¢ EACH

Geisha Mandarin Oranges
11 oz
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
LESS THAN 37¢ EACH

Mueller's Rotelle or Penne Rigate
16 oz
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!

Orville Redenbacher Mini Popcorn Cakes
3 to 3.5 oz, Assorted Varieties
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
LESS THAN 07¢ EACH

Big Y Cheese Twists
7 to 8 oz, Original, Crunchy or Jalapeno
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
150 POINTS
LESS THAN 31¢ EACH

Keebler Fudge Shoppe Cookies
8.5 to 11.5 oz
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
STOCK UP & SAVE!

In Our Seafood Dept.
Arctic Sea Alaskan Pollock
1 lb Package
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
LESS THAN $1.34 EACH

In Our Seafood Dept.
Big Y Breaded Fish Sticks
12 Count, 8 oz
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
150 POINTS
LESS THAN $1.50 EACH

In Our Seafood Dept.
Big Y Grilled Fillets
7.6 oz, All Varieties
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
150 POINTS
LESS THAN $1.30 EACH

In Our Seafood Dept.
Big Y Cooked Salad Shrimp
5 oz
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
LESS THAN $1.00 EACH

In Our Seafood Dept.
Schooner Imitation Crab
1 lb
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
LESS THAN $3.34 EACH

BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

Just Use Your Card!

In Our Seafood Dept.
Schooner Bay Scallops
12 oz, Frozen
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

In Our Seafood Dept.
World Class Cocktail Sauce
8 oz, Hot or Mild
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

Lincoln Apple Juice
64 oz
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

Martinson Coffee
12 to 13 oz, Fine Grind, All Purpose, Colombian or French Roast, Except Decaf
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

Tetley Round Tea Bags
80 Count
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

La Spagnola Olive Oil
16.9 oz
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

Big Y Steak Sauce
10 oz, Original or Bold
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE
100 POINTS

Luigi Vitelli Italian Peeled Tomatoes
35 oz, Imported
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

Near East Rice Pilaf
6.09 oz
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

Pasta Roni Side Dish
4.4 to 5.1 oz, Assorted Varieties
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

Cains Kosher or Polish Spears
24 oz
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

Mrs. Cubbison's Croutons
5 oz
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

Progresso Meat Soup
18.5 to 19 oz, Ready To Serve, Assorted Varieties
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

Musselman's Apple Sauce
46 to 48 oz, Regular, Natural or Cinnamon
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

Champion Raisins
15 oz Canister, Regular or Golden
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE
100 POINTS

Libby's Fruit
15 oz, Fruit Cocktail, Pear Halves, Sliced Peaches or Chunky Mixed Fruit, 100% Pure
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

River Queen Cashew Halves
9 oz, Regular or Honey Roasted
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

Smucker's Snackers
Peanut Butter & Grape or Strawberry, 3.3 oz
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

Cozy Cottage Sugar Free Syrup
12 oz
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

Big Y Dog Biscuits
26 oz Box, For Large Dogs or Snack Size
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE
100 POINTS

©Copyright Big Y Foods, Inc. 2003

Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!

USE YOUR CARD TO SAVE ON ALL THE ITEMS ON THIS PAGE!

In Our Meat Dept.
Butterball Turkey Franks
16 oz
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
LESS THAN $1.17 EACH

In Our Meat Dept.
Armour Meat Franks
16 oz
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
LESS THAN $1.10 EACH

In Our Meat Dept.
Armour Lunch Makers
Great For Back To School!
2.6 to 3.5 oz
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
LESS THAN 77¢ EACH

In Our Meat Dept.
Butterball Sliced Turkey or Ham
16 oz
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
LESS THAN $1.77 EACH

In Our Meat Dept.
Butterball Turkey Bologna
16 oz
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
150 POINTS
LESS THAN $1.34 EACH

In Our Meat Dept.
Margherita Pillow Pack Pepperoni
4.5 to 6 oz
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
LESS THAN $1.34 EACH

In Our Meat Dept.
Butterball Fresh Ground Turkey
Buy 1 Get* 2 FREE!
*Packages of equal or lesser value
LESS THAN $1.43 EACH

In Our Meat Dept.
Butterball Turkey Kielbasa
14 oz
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
LESS THAN $1.34 EACH

In Our Meat Dept.
Armour Kielbasa
16 oz
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
LESS THAN $1.34 EACH

Mardi Gras Napkins
250 Count
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
LESS THAN 67¢ EACH

Good Sense Freezer/Storage Bags
20 Count, Zipper Seal, Quart Only
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
LESS THAN 67¢ EACH

Good Sense Jumbo Trash Bags
10 Count
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
LESS THAN $1.00 EACH

BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

Just Use Your Card!

In Our Meat Dept.
Oscar Mayer Meat Franks
16 oz
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE
100 POINTS

In Our Meat Dept.
Farmland Meat Bologna
16 oz
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE
100 POINTS

In Our Meat Dept.
Certified Hereford Stew Beef or Round Cube Steak
BUY 1 • GET 1* FREE
*Package of equal or lesser value

In Our Meat Dept.
Oscar Mayer Beef Franks
16 oz
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

In Our Meat Dept.
Hillshire Farms Kielbasa Links
16 oz, All Varieties
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE
100 POINTS

In Our Meat Dept.
Armour Premium Ham
3 lb Can
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE
100 POINTS

In Our Meat Dept.
Armour Meat Bologna
16 oz
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE
100 POINTS

In Our Meat Dept.
Armour Beef Franks
or Cheese, 16 oz
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

In Our Meat Dept.
Margherita Stick Pepperoni
10 oz
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

In Our Meat Dept.
Healthy Choice Meat Franks
14 oz
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE
100 POINTS

In Our Meat Dept.
Oscar Mayer Corn Dogs
Great For Back To School!
16 oz Box, Frozen
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

In Our Meat Dept.
Colonial Boneless Ham Steak
16 oz
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE
100 POINTS

In Our Meat Dept.
Perdue Fresh Whole Chicken
Grade A
BUY 1 • GET 1* FREE
*Package of equal or lesser value

Cremora Non Dairy Creamer
16 oz, Regular or Lite
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

Big Y Thirst Splashers
1 to 2.2 oz, Assorted Varieties
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE
100 POINTS

First of the Season!
In Our Bakery Dept. Made From Scratch!
Assorted Nut Breads
16 oz, Blueberry, Apple, Cranberry, Date & More
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

In Our Dairy Dept.
Hood Instant Whipped Cream
9.3 oz
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

In Our Dairy Dept.
Hood Country Creamer
32 oz
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

In Our Frozen Food Dept.
Trix Pops
Rockin' Red or Fruity Flavor, 21 oz
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

In Our Frozen Food Dept.
Edy's Ice Cream or Frozen Yogurt
48 to 56 oz, All Flavors
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE
100 POINTS

In Our Frozen Food Dept.
Pepperidge Farm Garlic Bread
10 oz
BUY 1 • GET 1 FREE

©Copyright Big Y Foods, Inc. 2003

Service Never Goes Out of Style...

Certified Hereford Beef
Boneless Strip Steaks
BUY 1 · GET 1* FREE
*Package of Equal or Lesser Value

Certified Hereford Beef
Boneless Bottom Round Roast or Rump Roast
BUY 1 · GET 1* FREE
*Package of Equal or Lesser Value

4 MINUTES OR LESS

Certified Hereford Beef
Ground Sirloin ..... lb 2.97
90% Lean, 10% Fat

Did You Know?
WE WILL SHARPEN YOUR KNIVES FOR FREE!
Our Butcher Shop staff will gladly sharpen your favorite set of steak knives or chef knives. Just bring them to the Butcher Shop today and they will be ready for you the next day.

FRESH POULTRY

Smart Chicken Boneless Chicken Breast ..... lb 3.99
Skinless

Smart Chicken Boneless Chicken Breast Tenders ..... lb 3.99
Skinless

Smart Chicken Chicken Leg Quarters 50 POINTS ..... lb 97¢

Butterball Boneless Turkey Breast Strips ..... lb 3.77
or Fillets or Tenders

Butterball Seasoned Boneless Turkey Roast ..... lb 3.77

HORMEL Always Tender
Enhanced To Ensure Tenderness

Hormel Always Tender Assorted Pork Chops 100 POINTS BUY 1 · GET 1* FREE Bone-In.
Enhanced to Ensure Tenderness
*Package of Equal or Lesser Value

Hormel Always Tender Country Style Ribs 100 POINTS BUY 1 · GET 1* FREE
Bone-In.
Enhanced to Ensure Tenderness
*Package of Equal or Lesser Value

FRESH LAMB & VEAL

Fresh American Lamb Loin Chops 10 MINUTES OR LESS ..... lb 6.95

Fresh Veal Shoulder Chops ..... lb 2.97
Bone-In

SAVE WITH YOUR CARD

Mama Rosa Pizza Twin Pack 50 POINTS $1 OFF
14 Inch, 44 oz, All Varieties

Armour Italian Style Meatballs 50 POINTS 2 FOR $5
16 oz Bag, Frozen

Oscar Mayer Meat Bologna 50 POINTS 97¢
16 oz

Redi Crisp Cooked Bacon 3.77
3 oz

Cumberland Gap Boneless Ham Steak 50 POINTS 3.47
12 oz

Las Campañas Taquitos 5.95
32 oz, Frozen

TIME SAVERS

GREAT FOR BACK TO SCHOOL!
Scobee Sandwich Kit With Chips ..... 2 FOR $5
7.5 oz, Ham or Turkey

Blue Ridge Macaroni & Cheese BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE
32 oz

Smithfield Sliced Ham or Turkey 3.27
16 oz

Healthy Choice Kielbasa 50 POINTS 2 FOR $5
14 oz

Claussen Pickles 50 POINTS 2 FOR $5
20 to 32 oz

Ocean Fresh
NORTH ATLANTIC FISHING CO.

Bay Scallops & Chips Dinner
Includes Cole Saw and Condiments
BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE

Fresh Boneless Steelhead Trout Fillet
Farm Raised, Similar To Salmon
4.95 lb

10 MINUTES OR LESS

Fresh Boneless Haddock Fillet
or Flounder Fillet
6.99 lb
From The Cold North Atlantic

We Will Gladly Steam Your Shellfish Purchases For FREE!

Fresh Live Mahogany Clams 1.55 lb

Bay Scallops ... lb 2.99
Previously Frozen, Farm Raised, Imported From China

Fresh Boneless Swordfish Steak ..... lb 6.99

World Classics Cooked Cocktail Shrimp 100 POINTS BUY 1 · GET 1* FREE
70 to 90 per lb, Frozen or Thawed For Your Convenience
*Package of Equal or Lesser Value

Van de Kamp's Breaded Fish Sticks 33% OFF or Portions, Battered Fillets or Crisp & Healthy, 10.92 to 26.4 oz

Phillips Crabmeat Crab Cakes 5.98
or Mini Crab Cakes, 3 to 8 oz

Some items not available in all stores.

©Copyright Big Y Foods, Inc. 2003

THE FRESHEST DAIRY Guaranteed!

If you find any dairy item in our case that is past its expiration date, we'll give you a fresh one FREE!
or it's FREE!

Use Your Express Savings Club™ Card To Save On Items On This Page!

Big Y 1% Lowfat or Fat Free Milk
Gallon
1.86 50 POINTS
got milk?

Tropicana Pure Premium Orange Juice
96 oz, All Varieties
2.99

Florida's Natural Premium Orange Juice or Grapefruit Juice, Assorted Varieties, 64 oz
2 FOR $4

Breyers Yogurt
8 oz, All Varieties
10 FOR $5

Friendship Sour Cream
16 oz, Regular or Light
BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE

Big Y Half & Half 50 POINTS 1.38
32 oz

World Classics Fresh Heavy Cream 1.29
16 oz

Big Y Refrigerated Pie Crust 50 POINTS 1.56
15 oz

Fleischmann's Egg Beaters 2 FOR $4
15 to 16 oz, Assorted Varieties

Big Y Sour Cream Dips 50 POINTS 1.18
12 oz, Assorted Varieties

Hood Cottage Cheese
16 oz, Assorted Varieties
2 FOR $3

Ahh, the power of Cheese:
Cabot Shredded Cheese
8 oz, Assorted Varieties
BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE

Philadelphia Cream Cheese Bar 1.16
8 oz, Regular or Light

Heluva Good Cheese Bar 2 FOR $4
8 oz, All Varieties

Yoplait Go Gurt 2 FOR $4
18 oz, All Varieties

Gringo Pete's Fajita Tortillas BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE
16 oz

Tyson Soft Flour Tortillas 1.36
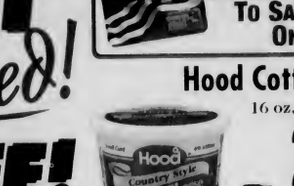
14 oz



FROZEN FOODS

Our Card Saves You More!

Farmland Cider House Sausage Links or Honey Maple, 12 oz
Made With Real Apples
BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE NEW!

Chef Gusto Pizza Bagels
13 oz, Cheese, Pepperoni or Sausage
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!

Angy's Tortellini or Stuffed Rigatoni
12 oz
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!

Swanson Pot Pies
7 oz, Chicken, Turkey or Beef
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!

Philly Gourmet Steaks
or Mama Lucia Meatballs, 12.25 to 15 oz
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!

Bertolli Dinners
24 oz, Assorted Varieties
4.71

Bakers Dozen Pierogies BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE
16 oz, Potato & Onion or Potato & Cheese

Big Y Pizza 50 POINTS 82¢
6.5 oz, Hamburger, Cheese, Pepperoni or Sausage & Pepperoni

Mama Celeste Pizza 3.99
27.7 to 30.7 oz, 4 Cheese, Supreme or Pepperoni

Marie Callender's Pie 5.63
Thaw & Serve, 31 to 43 oz

Jamestown Sausage Rolls BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE
16 oz

Willow Wind Organic Vegetables 2 FOR $3
12 to 16 oz, Mixed Vegetables, Peas & Carrots, Super Sweet Corn, Green Peas, Cut or Whole Green Beans or Broccoli

Pepperidge Farm Garlic Bread BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE
10 oz

Bacardi Mixers 50 POINTS 2 FOR $4
10 oz

Hood Ice Cream or Frozen Yogurt
64 oz, All Flavors Except No Sugar Added
BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE

Eskimo Pie Bars
15 oz
BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE

Peak Treasures Ice Cream BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE
64 oz, All Flavors

World Classics Fruit Bars 2 FOR $5
18 oz, Assorted Varieties

©Copyright Big Y Foods, Inc. 2003

Some items not available in all stores.

THE FRESHEST DELI

Big Y
Roast Beef
or Pastrami or Corned Beef
Sliced Fresh To Order
5.99 lb
SAVE 60¢ lb

Carando Slicing Provolone Sliced Fresh 4.99 lb

Big Y
Turkey Breast
Sliced Fresh To Order
Oven Roasted To a Golden Brown & Seasoned To Perfection
5.49 lb

ARMOUR.
Lite or Cooked Ham
Sliced Fresh To Order
SAVE $1.00 lb
3.99 lb

CARANDO
Genoa Salami ..... lb 4.99
SAVE 50¢ lb
or Hard or Grande Pepperoni, Sliced Fresh

Wunderbar German Bologna ..... lb 1.99
SAVE 50¢ lb
Sliced Fresh To Order

BUTTERBALL
Turkey Pastrami ..... lb 4.49
or Turkey Ham, Sliced Fresh

BUTTERBALL
Chicken Breast ..... lb 5.99
Country Style or Honey, Sliced Fresh

HEALTHY CHOICE
Premium Deli Meats .... lb 6.49
SAVE 50¢ lb
All Varieties

Kayem Old Tyme Bake & Grill
Natural Casing Franks .. lb 3.93
50 POINTS
Fresh From The Deli

Kayem Old Tyme Bake & Grill
Skinless Franks ..... lb 3.93
50 POINTS
Regular or 9 Inch Skinless, Fresh From The Deli

Just Like Mom's! HOMESTYLE DELI SALADS

Potato, Egg & Potato, Red Potato, or Macaroni Salad or Cole Slaw

- Freshest ingredients!
- NO preservatives!
- Cut & mixed by hand!
- Fresh every day!

You're Going To Love These!

INTRODUCING... NEW! WORLD CLASSICS BUFFALO TURKEY BREAST

SAVE 70¢ lb

Our Newest World Classics Premium Deli Meat. Not Too Spicy, Not Too Mild, Just Right! Ask for a Sample and You Decide! Sliced Fresh to Order

WORLD CLASSICS Premium Deli Meats
Are the Highest Quality Deli Meats Found Anywhere!
- No Artificial Ingredients
- No Fillers or Binders
- No MSG

Only At Big Y!

6.79 lb

Big Y
INTERNATIONAL CHEESE SHOP

Brie ..... lb 6.43
Fresh From Our International Cheese Bar

Sorrento
Shredded Italian Cheese ..... lb 5.97
50 POINTS
Romano, Parmesan or Asiago, Great For Salads or Pasta

PRESIDENT
Crumbled Feta 3.47
6 oz, All Varieties

PRESIDENT
Madrigal Swiss Cheese ..... lb 6.76
You Won't Believe The Flavor

THE FRESHEST BAKERY

World Class Big Muffins
Blueberry, Cranberry, Chocolate Chip & More 89¢

1st Season Fresh Baked
Pumpkin Pie
8 Inch, 23 oz
2.98

World Class Breads
Tuscan
From the Tuscany region of Italy, this simple, rustic, wheat flour dough has been kneaded the same way for centuries and is the perfect accent to any meal.
15 oz
2.87
Garlic Expressions Dipping Oil 12.5 oz 3.87

Fresh Baked
French Bread ..... 2 FOR $2
9 oz

Fresh Baked
Bolillo Rolls ..... BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE
6 Count, 16 oz

Assorted Danish Rings 3.98
16 oz, Pecan Walnut, Raspberry or Cheese

World Class Pies
Apple Walnut
Available Monday Through Thursday
42 oz, Made with delicious Ida Red apples, chopped walnuts and sweetened with a touch of spices
7.96

From Our Kitchen

Large World Class Chicken Tenders Grinder
$6

Cheddar Cheesy Breadsticks For One With Sauce $2 NEW!

1 lb Honey Stung Drummies
Hot or Cold
BUY 1lb · GET 1lb* FREE
*Purchase of Equal or Lesser Value

Bigger Rotisserie Chicken 7.99

Sandwich Value Meal #3
Includes a Hot Corned Beef or Pastrami Sandwich, 1/2 lb Potato Salad and a Regular Fountain Soda
$4

Party Size World Class Cheese Pizza
40 Pieces
$12

Our Fresh Pizza Dough 1.35 lb

Super Fries
Goes Great With Fried Chicken!
3.49 lb

Pizza Value Meal #2
Includes 2 Slices Of Pizza Your Choice and a Regular Fountain Soda
$3

Some items not available in all stores.
Big Y We've Got It All!
visit bigy.com
©Copyright Big Y Foods, Inc. 2003

From Our Kitchen

SHE'S BACK!

NEVADA ANNIE'S SOUTHWEST CHILI

Our Hearty and Delicious Chili with Beans is Made From Only the Freshest Ground Beef, Jalapeños and the Ripest Tomatoes. Try our Special Recipe
It's the Most Mouth Watering Chili You'll Ever Eat!

Just Heat & Serve!

FAMILY SIZE NEVADA ANNIE'S CHILI
32 oz
BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE

In Our Bakery Dept.
Baked Soup & Chili Bread Bowls
8 oz
2 FOR $3

Some items not available in all stores.
visit bigy.com
©Copyright Big Y Foods, Inc. 2003

Receive At Least 50 Golden Rewards POINTS

Big Y

When You Purchase Any Brand Item From Our Grocery, Dairy or Frozen Food Depts., Now Through September 10, 2003.

Any Size, Any Variety

Big Y Reserves The Right To Cancel This Program At Anytime, Without Notice

Treats & Snacks

La Cocina de Mexico Mild Diced Chilies NEW! or Whole Green Chilies or Sliced Jalapeno Peppers, 4 to 5.25 oz
4 FOR $3
50 POINTS

Dannon Spring Water LESS THAN HALF PRICE!
24 Pack, 16.5 oz Bottles
3.94

Hostess Donuts
11.2 to 20 oz, Plain, Powdered, Chocolate, Donettes & More!
25% OFF

Big Y Spanish Queen Olives 50 POINTS 99¢
5 oz

Big Y Fruit Snacks 50 POINTS 1.42
5.4 oz, Assorted Varieties

Big Y Peanut Butter 50 POINTS 2.52
28 oz, Creamy or Crunchy

Big Y Grape Jelly or Jam 50 POINTS 1.39
32 oz

Big Y Pepperoncini 50 POINTS 1.17
16 oz

Nestea Cool Iced Tea 3 FOR $9 or Minute Maid Lemonade, 12 Pack, 12 oz cans

Big Y 100% Cooking Oil
48 oz, Vegetable, Canola Canola Blend or Corn
2 FOR $4
50 POINTS

Big Y Ketchup
46 oz, Squeeze Bottle
1.92
50 POINTS

Libby's Whole or Cream Style Corn
14.5 to 15.25 oz, or Sweet Peas, Cut or French Style Green Beans
2 FOR $1

Newman's Own Salad Dressing
16 oz, Assorted Varieties
2 FOR $5

Prince Pasta
16 oz, Regular or Thin Spaghetti, Vermicelli, Elbow Macaroni, Ziti or Ziti With Lines
2 FOR $1

Hellmann's Mayonnaise 2 FOR $4
14 to 18 oz Squeeze Bottle, Regular, Light, Flavored or Dipping Sauce

Big Y Cream Soup 50 POINTS 69¢
10.75 oz, Mushroom, Chicken, Broccoli or Celery

Newman's Own Spaghetti Sauce 2 FOR $4
26 oz, Assorted Varieties

Campbell's Family Size Soup 4 FOR $5
26 oz, Chicken Noodle, Tomato, Cream of Mushroom or Cream of Chicken

Newman's Own Salsa 2 FOR $4
16 oz, Assorted Varieties

Big Y Beef Ravioli 50 POINTS 4 FOR $3 or Mini Ravioli, Super Stuffed, Rings With Franks, Rings With Meatballs, Macaroni & Beef or Spaghetti & Meatballs, 15 oz

Big Y Solid White Tuna 50 POINTS 99¢
6 oz, In Water

Big Y Diced Tomatoes 50 POINTS 5 FOR $3
14.5 oz, Assorted Varieties

Big Y Chili Powder 50 POINTS 1.37
2.5 oz

Tostitos, Sun Chips or Baked Lays
10 to 13.5 oz, Assorted Varieties
2 FOR $5

Newman's Own Microwave Popcorn
8.5 to 10.5 oz, 3 Pack, All Flavors
BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE

Big Y Quick & Easy Microwaveable Macaroni & Cheese Dinner 50 POINTS 2.25 NEW!
6 Pack, 12.9 oz

Big Y Deluxe Macaroni & Cheese 50 POINTS 2 FOR $3 or Shells and Cheese, 12 to 14 oz

Kraft Grated Cheese 2.99
8 oz, Parmesan or Parmesan & Romano

Prego Pasta Bakes Dinner 50 POINTS 2 FOR $4
27.5 to 27.75 oz, Assorted Varieties

Big Y Gravy 50 POINTS 97¢
12 oz Jar, Brown, Chicken, Turkey or Pork

Taco Bell Taco Dinner Kit 2 FOR $4
10.7 to 16.3 oz, Hard or Soft

Taco Bell Salsa 50 POINTS 1.72
16 oz, Regular or Garden, Mild or Medium

Our Card Saves You More!

Pepsi, Diet Pepsi or Mountain Dew
2 Liter, Plus Deposit
3 FOR $3

Combos Snacks 2 FOR $3
8.5 to 8.8 oz, Cheese Filled Pretzels or Crackers

Sunshine Cheez Its 2 FOR $4
13.5 to 16 oz, Assorted Varieties

Nabisco Newtons 2 FOR $5
11 to 16 oz, Fig or Fruit, Assorted Varieties

Keebler Club Crackers 2 FOR $3
14 to 16 oz

Nestle Treasures or Bite Size Turtles 2.25
7 to 12 oz, Assorted Varieties

Nabisco Wheat Thins or Triscuits
12 to 16 oz, Party Size Box
2 FOR $5

Big Y Candy Mix & Match!
16 oz, Choose From 42 Varieties.
Not Available In All Stores
1.95 lb
50 POINTS

A & W Root Beer
or Sunkist Orange Soda, 12 Pack, 12 oz Cans, Plus Deposit
5 FOR $10

Delivered Fresh Daily

Coca Cola Classic or Diet Coke or Sprite, 12 Pack, 12 oz Cans, Plus Deposit
2 FOR $5

Big Y Giant White Bread
20 oz, Round Top or Sandwich
BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE
100 POINTS

Arnold Hearty Bread
24 oz, 100% Wheat, 7 or 12 Grain, Honey Wheat, Oat Bran, Oat Nut or Health Nut
1.99

Big Y Rye Bread 50 POINTS 98¢
16 oz, Plain, Seeded, Marble or Pumpernickel

Country Kitchen Wheat Bread 2 FOR $3
20 oz, Buttersplit

Entenmann's Snacks 2 FOR $5
8 to 11 oz, Little Bites, Cereal Bites, Cookie Bites or Snack Bars

©Copyright Big Y Foods, Inc. 2003

THE BEST Week After Week...After Week SALES

And No Coupons to Clip!

Use Your Card to Save on Items on This Page.

Breakfast

Kellogg's Special K Cereal
or Crispix, 12 oz or Smacks, 17.6 oz
2.79

World Classics Flavored Whole Bean Coffee
12 oz Bag, Assorted Varieties, Except Regular or Flavor Ground
5

Big Y 100% Natural Quick Oats 50 POINTS 1.89
or Old Fashioned, 42 oz

Big Y Frosted Shredded Wheat 50 POINTS 2.32
19 oz, Bite Size

Big Y Honey 50 POINTS 6.47
40 oz

Heartland Granola Cereal 50 POINTS 2 FOR $5
14 to 16 oz, Original, Raisin or Low Fat

Melitta Cone Coffee Filters
40 Count, #2, #4 White, #4 Brown or #6
1

Eden Soy Soy Milk 1.83
33 oz, Original, Carob or Vanilla

Quench Your Thirst

Apple & Eve Cranberry 100% Juice Blend
64 oz, or Juice Boxes or Pouches, 54 oz, 8 Pack
2 FOR $5

Similac Advance Baby Formula or Isomil Advance, 32 oz Ready To Use Bottle
1 OFF

Sunsweet Prune Juice 2 FOR $4
64 oz

Minute Maid Coolers 50 POINTS 2 FOR $5
67.5 oz 10 Pack, Pink Lemonade, Fruit Punch, Tropical Punch, Berry Punch or Cherry

Welch's 100% Grape Juice
46 oz, White or Regular
2 FOR $4

Paper Goods

Kleenex Cottonelle Double Roll Bath Tissue
6 Pack, Regular Only
2 FOR $5

Mardi Gras Paper Towels
6 Pack
3

Wet Ones 50 POINTS 2 FOR $4
40 Count, With Vitamin E & Aloe or Antibacterial With Citrus

Sunlight Dish Liquid $2
Original, 28 oz, Automatic Dish Gel, 50 oz or Powder, 45 oz

Purex Liquid Laundry Detergent
128 oz, Assorted Varieties
3

Kleenex Facial Tissue
144 to 230 Count, White, Assorted, Scented, Coldcare Ultra or Lotion
2 FOR $3

Big Y Specially Soft Bath Tissue 50 POINTS 1.88
4 Pack Double Roll, 1600 Sheets, 2 Ply, Unscented

Hefty Cinch Sak Trash Bags 2 FOR $5
10 Count, or 20 Count Handle Sak Tall Kitchen Bags

SAVE ON OUR BRANDS!
THE ONLY Difference IS THE PRICE
1 Manufactured To Big Y's Highest Quality Standards.
2 Name Brand Quality At A More Affordable Price.
3 Over 2,900 Different Items To Choose From.
4 We Back Our Big Y Brand Products With A Money Back Guarantee. If You Are Not Completely Satisfied, We Will Gladly Refund Double Your Money.

For Your Pets

Big Y Gourmet Cat Food
3 oz Can, Assorted Flavors
FOR 384¢
50 POINTS

Just Use Your Card!

Big Y Premium Blend Wild Bird Food
5 lb Bag
1.79
50 POINTS

Big Y Tasty T Bones Dog Treats 50 POINTS 2 FOR $4
10 oz, Beef Flavored

Big Y Cat Litter 50 POINTS 1.43
10 lb, Scented or Clay

Big Y Premium Blend Sunflower Seeds 50 POINTS 2.69
5 lb Bag

Glamour Kitty Clumping Cat Litter NEW! 50 POINTS 4.12
10 lb Scoopless

Pick Up Your FREE Colors of Autumn Magazine at Any Big Y. It's Filled with Great Autumn Recipes and Informative Articles and More Than 240 Electronic Coupons!

Quaker Instant Oatmeal
11.8 to 16.2 oz, Assorted Varieties
2 FOR $4

Quaker Breakfast Squares
12.6 oz, Baked Apple, Brown Sugar & Cinnamon or Oatmeal Raisin
2 FOR $5

Get A $5 Refund

When You Purchase Five (5) Quaker, Tropicana Pure Premium, Tropicana 100% Juice Blends and/or Dole 100% Juice Blends Products.

Pick Up An Official MAIL-IN Refund Form At Any Big Y World Class Market.

Tropicana Pure Premium

See Store For Complete Details.

Quaker

©Copyright Big Y Foods, Inc. 2003

HOME, HEALTH & WELLNESS SOLUTIONS

Use Your Express Savings Club™ Card To Save On Items On This Page

We Double Manufacturers' Coupons... Wal★Mart Doesn't!

COMING SOON
Prilosec OTC { Prescription Strength 24 Hour Heartburn Relief With One Pill

COMING SOON...
Schick Quattro
The World's First 4 Blade Razor with 2 Conditioning Strips.

Personal Care

Kotex Maxi Pads
14 to 24 Count or 40 to 64 Count Lightdays Pantiliners or 18 Count Tampons
2 FOR $4

St. Ives Shampoo or Conditioner
20 oz
BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE

Dove Bar Soap
2 Pack, Original, Pink, Sensitive, or Unscented or Caress Bar Soap. Excludes 2 Pack Dove Nutrim Bar Soap
1.99

Arrid Deodorant or Anti-Perspirant
1 to 2.7 oz, XX Solid, Gel, Cream, Soft Solid or Total Invisible or 4 to 6 oz Spray
30% OFF

Nivea, Nivea Body, Visage or Nivea For Men
Your Choice
20% OFF

FOR HOME, HEALTH & WELLNESS SOLUTIONS: VISIT BigY.com

Diet & Nutrition

Clif or Clif Luna Nutritional or Energy Bars
1.6 to 2.4 oz
79¢

Power Bar
1.69 to 2.3 oz, All Varieties, or .98 oz Pria Sugar Free Nutritional 99¢ Bar

Health Care

Tums Antacid Tablets
45 to 150 Count, Smooth Dissolve, Ultra or Cool Relief, Sugar Free, Extra or Original, Excludes 3 Pack Bone Health
3.99

3M Bandages
10 to 50 Count, Aetive, Comfort, Waterproof or Nexcare
25% OFF

Halls Cough Drops
25 to 30 Count, Menthol, Honey, Cherry or Defense
99¢

Bausch & Lomb No Rub Renu Multi Purpose Contact Lens Solution
12 oz
7.99

Family Dental Care

Ultrabrite Toothpaste
6 oz, Regular or All In One 99¢

Sensodyne Toothpaste
4 oz, Tartar Control, Fresh Impact, Original, Mint or Whitening
3.99

Sensational SUMMER · 2003 · Just Use Your — May 26, 2003 Through October 13, 2003

Save With Your At Over 90 Great Family Attractions Throughout MA, CT & RI!!

29 NEW ATTRACTIONS THIS YEAR!
SOME OF THIS YEAR'S ATTRACTIONS INCLUDE:

- Mashantucket Pequot Museum & Research Center, Mashantucket, CT
- Springfield Museums At The Quadrangle, Springfield, MA
- New England Air Museum, Windsor Locks, CT
- Basketball Hall of Fame, Springfield, MA
- Roger Williams Park Zoo, Providence, RI
- Old Sturbridge Village, Sturbridge, MA
- Salem Witch Museum, Salem, MA
- Southwick's Zoo, Mendon, MA
- Mystic Aquarium, Mystic, CT

For Complete Details, Pick Up A FREE Brochure At Any Big Y World Class Market. Most Discounts Valid Through October 13, 2003.

©Copyright Big Y Foods, Inc. 2003

FOR YOUR HOME

ONEIDA Kitchen™

IMMACULATE 18/10 STAINLESS STEEL COOKWARE

This Weeks Feature
Stainless Steel One Quart Open Saucepan..... 3.98
Single Count

Always on Sale...

ONEIDA Kitchen
Covered Saucepan..... 2.29
Single Count, One Quart

ONEIDA Kitchen
Tea Kettle..... 14.99
Single Count, 2.5 Quart

ONEIDA Kitchen
Steamer Insert..... 17.99
Single Count, 5 Quart

ONEIDA Kitchen
Pasta Insert..... 19.99
Single Count, 8 Quart

Quality Craftsmanship...For Every Occasion!

Winnie The Pooh It's Fun To Learn Books What's That Sound?
Volume #7
2.98

Kodak Max Flash Camera
Single Count
6.99

Kodak 200 Speed Film
4 Count
6.99

Fisher Price Magnetic Pals Baby Toy
Single Count, or Aqua Teether Pal or Security Kitty
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!

RayOVac Batteries
12 Pack, AA or AAA
4.99

Gladware Food Storage Container
3 to 5 Count, Choose From Entree, Soup & Salad, Divided Dish, Deep Dish, Small or Large Bowls
2 FOR $4

Top Crest Charcoal
20 lb Bag
4.99

Top Crest Instant Light Charcoal
15 lb
5.99

Top Care Disposable Bottle Liners
50 Count
COMPARE TO PLAYTEX!
BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE

RayOVac Batteries
4 Pack, C or D, or 2 Pack, 9 Volt
2 FOR $5

Big Y World Class Film Developing

3 1/2" Prints	4" Prints	PREMIUM PROCESSING 4 INCH SINGLE PRINTS
DOUBLE PRINTS $3.99 Any Size Roll	DOUBLE PRINTS $4.99 Any Size Roll	$8.99 Any Size Roll — Includes Free Index Print

Applies to 3 1/2" or 4" Prints from C-41 process 35mm or 110 color print film. Does not apply to Advanced Photo System films, Premium Processing, Panoramic or Seattle FilmWorks.

ENTER FOR A CHANCE TO WIN A Mercedes-Benz C230 Kompressor

Pick Up An Official Mail-In Entry Form In-Store From September 4 to October 1, 2003.

Big Y PEPSI

Mercedes-Benz

No purchase necessary. One entry per envelope. Visit the customer service desk for complete details and official rules.

©Copyright Big Y Foods, Inc. 2003

Big Y
WORLD CLASS MARKET
We've Got It All!

BUY UP TO 5 GET UP TO 10 FREE!

2 Buy 1 Get FREE!

JUST USE YOUR CARD TO SAVE ON ITEMS ON THIS PAGE!

All Stores Join In The Grand Opening Celebration of Our 49th Big Y World Class Market In Walpole, Massachusetts

THOMAS' ENGLISH MUFFINS
12 OZ PACKAGE OF 6, White Only
LESS THAN 94¢ EA
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!

BIG Y AMERICAN SINGLES
12 OZ, 16 COUNT, WHITE OR YELLOW
LESS THAN 94¢ EA
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
150 POINTS

ITALIAN SAUSAGE
HOT OR MILD, LINKS OR PATTIES
LESS THAN $1.54 lb
Great on the Grill
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
*Package of Equal or Lesser Value

STOCK UP & SAVE!
SPRITE
OR DIET SPRITE
6 PACK, 12 OZ CANS, PLUS DEPOSIT
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!

CHICKEN OF THE SEA CHUNK LIGHT TUNA
6 OZ, IN WATER
LESS THAN 34¢ EA
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!

BIG Y STRONG & THIRSTY PAPER TOWELS
96 COUNT, BIG ROLL
LESS THAN 54¢ EA
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!
150 POINTS
(27.9cm x 27.9cm) 80.6 SQ FT

TOO HOT TO COOK? Try our Homestyle Fried Chicken. It's crispy on the outside and juicy on the inside. It's mouth watering, old fashioned fried chicken. It's hard to find chicken this good north of the Mason-Dixon line!

PIZZA IS OVEN BAKED NOT FREEZER BURNED. Our dough is hand-tossed and made from scratch for an authentic "pizza parlor" pizza crust. Our authentic Italian sauce is made from a blend of ripe tomatoes and the perfect mix of spices. Our pizza is topped with whole milk mozzarella, fresh diced vegetables and a variety of the freshest meat toppings.

CAN'T FIND AN ITEM IN OUR AISLES? TRY OUR Unlimited CHOICES™
Big Y We've Really Got It All!
If there's something special you can't find at Big Y, visit Bigy.com. Just click on Unlimited Choices. Then, select from thousands of products we don't currently carry in our stores.

$5 OFF Any Order of $20 or More*
And right now, when you shop Unlimited Choices, you could save money, too! Make a purchase of $20* or more and $5 will be taken off the total purchase price.* For more information or to order online, go to www.bigy.com or call toll free 888-779-9797.
*$20 total is for merchandise only and excludes shipping charge.

PERDUE. CHICKEN THIGHS
*Packages of Equal or Lesser Value
Great on the Grill
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!

POWERADE SPORTS DRINK
32 oz, All Varieties
LESS THAN 52¢ EA
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!

In Our Frozen Food Aisles
PEPPERIDGE FARM LAYER CAKES
19.6 oz, Assorted Flavors
3-Layer Cake
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!

VERMONT MAID SYRUP
24 oz, Regular, Lite or Butterlite
LESS THAN $1.30 EA
Buy 1 Get 2 FREE!

REAP YOUR Golden Rewards!
Sale Effective September
4 Thur | 5 Fri | 6 Sat | 7 Sun | 8 Mon | 9 Tues | 10 Wed

Artwork is for display purposes only and does not necessarily reflect the items on sale. Not responsible for typographical errors. We reserve the right to limit quantities on all electronic coupon items, unless otherwise noted. Not available in case lots or to other dealers or wholesalers or restaurants. Some items in the flyer not available in all stores. ©Copyright Big Y Foods, Inc. 2003

Page 12BY

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 2

Readership program begins

GERALYN LYNG/COLLEGIAN

Stephen McKenna, a Freshman philosophy major, takes advantage of the new Collegiate Readership Program by picking up a newspaper.

By MICHAEL D'ANELLO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

USA Today launched its Collegiate Readership Program across the UMass campus yesterday as a part of a nationwide campaign.

The program is designed to provide students with free on-campus access to some of the nation's best newspapers in the hopes that it will add to the learning environment on campus, and also increase student awareness of local, national and world events, while fostering a lasting habit of newspaper reading.

The papers are available for students at the Hampshire, Franklin and Worcester Dining Halls, as well as in the Campus Center.

The program has already been launched at other institutions of higher learning such as Baylor University, Pennsylvania State University and Ohio State University, among others.

Copies of USA Today, The New York Times and The Boston Globe will be available at UMass, initially.

According to Student Government Association (SGA) Speaker Jared Nokes, the program is designed to please University members, and should the student body feel that a different lineup of newspapers or different delivery locations would be more beneficial, such changes can be carried out.

"I think it's great that students can read the paper while eating breakfast," Nokes said. "I believe it will help to keep students informed."

Studies have pointed out that the program also benefits college newspapers such as The Collegian. In many cases, when students picked up copies of the mainstream papers they also took copies of their school's newspaper.

Currently, the project is being financed by the funds from the SGA after the idea was proposed to the Senate.

During the Senate election on Sept. 17, a referendum will be voted upon in which students can elect to pay $2.50 each per semester to continue the program. The $2.50 would not mean an additional increase in student fees, but would be provided for in the $750 student fee increase that will be introduced for the spring semester.

Domestic partners await new rights

By STEVE LAWERENCE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Same-sex partners would get many of the same rights as married couples under a bill sent to the governor's desk yesterday that critics said amounted to gay marriage.

California already has a strong domestic-partner law, but gay-rights advocates say the legislation approved by the Assembly yesterday – and expected to be signed by Gov. Gray Davis – would put the state on the same footing as Vermont.

The bill does not endorse "civil union" ceremonies as Vermont has, but otherwise the legislation differs only in the state-specific rights it grants, said Geoffrey Kors, executive director of Equality Now, a statewide civil rights group.

The measure expands the rights of gay couples in areas ranging from health coverage to funeral arrangements.

"It's an extremely historic day in a historic summer that we are beginning to call the summer of gay love in California," Kors said of the bill.

The 41-32 Assembly vote was marked by heated debate. Opponents argued the legislation would violate the will of voters when they approved Proposition 22, a 2000 ballot measure that defined marriage as a union between a man and a woman.

"Gay marriage is wrong; it is an aberration to God," Assemblyman Dennis Mountjoy said.

"May the wrath of the people of California come down on you," Assemblyman Jay La Suer, also a Republican, told the measure's supporters.

The bill's backers denied any conflict with Proposition 22 and said most Californians draw a distinction between gay marriage and giving domestic partners greater rights.

"This is catching up government with where the people of California are," said Assemblyman John Laird, a Democrat.

A recent Field Poll found that 72 percent of California voters surveyed supported expanded rights for same-sex couples.

The bill, scheduled to take effect in 2005, would allow domestic partners to seek child support and alimony and would give them the right to health coverage under a partner's plan.

Other provisions would give domestic partners access to bereavement and family care leave, and exemptions from estate and gift taxes. After a partner's death, they would have the authority to consent to an autopsy, donate organs or make funeral arrangements.

The bill also would prevent courts from forcing a domestic partner to testify against the other partner in a trial.

The bill, by Assemblywoman Jackie Goldberg, a Democrat from Los Angeles, also would place greater legal responsibilities on domestic partners. For instance, they would be responsible for their partner's debts.

In 1999, California became the first state in the country to allow gay and lesbian couples, as well as elderly heterosexual couples, to register as domestic partners. Since then more than 22,000 couples have signed up with the secretary of state.

New dining option hits Hillel

By COURTNEY CHARLES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"You know what you're eating when you come to us," Tayla Sahler, head chef at Wabby's Café said. "We're not serving junk."

Wabby's Café, a new eatery located on the lower floor of Hillel House on North Pleasant St., specializes in Mideastern cuisines and is Glatt Kosher certified. According to Sahler, there is a high demand for their services.

"Students are looking for homemade, clean, made-from-scratch food," she said. "Just like mummy's kitchen."

The atmosphere will also go along with a relaxed theme. Sahler said there will be couches, recliners and magazines for students. She said the café will be a good place for students to sit down and have a cup of coffee, listen to music or talk to friends.

Although the café will not be fully opened until next Monday, there will be small-scale hours in the evenings for a "taster," according to Sahler. As of Monday, lunch and dinner will be served regularly. The café is open Monday through Friday, with normal hours of 11:30 a.m. through 2 p.m. for lunch and 5:30 p.m. through 8 p.m. for dinner.

She also said that Wabby's Café can be used as an alternative meal plan where students can register with the cafe as they would UMass. Students can register for lunch or dinner, or both. There is a whole-semester plan, a half-semester plan and a quarter-semester plan.

The café offers a variety of Middle Eastern style cuisine, as well kosher and vegetarian meals. The café also offers typical American fanfare such as hot-dogs and hamburgers, according to Mosha Sahler, manager.

Included on the regular menu are an Israeli salad combo, muffins, vegetarian specials such as couscous with grilled vegetables and falafel. There is also baklava, potato latkes and sweet potato kugel. The cafe will also feature a deli with pitas and wraps.

The Sahlers have a long history of cooking, catering and managing a food business.

Tayla Sahler grew up cooking. Her parents owned several different restaurants and she helped out and worked for years in each establishment.

The Sahlers have been in Amherst for two years. They started out locally as kosher caterers through the Kosher Farm Project in Sunderland, according to Mosha Sahler. The project is currently under development.

Originally, the Sahlers got the idea to get into the commercial food business catering to local groups in the five-college area, including the People's Market, to which they marketed falafel. They also catered various functions in the community and briefly marketed products to Big Y supermarkets.

"We actually got things on their shelves," Mosha Sahler said.

Unfortunately, since the Sahlers did not have their own facilities, they were not able to market these products for long, and they ran into problems with zoning.

They were able then to rent their own kitchen in Springfield, where they were able to see "what's in demand."

Tayla Sahler said that people were contacting them to see if they would be expanding their business. According to Sahler, they were contacted by "Muslims and vegetarians concerned with nutrition" and people interested in other kosher specialties.

"Only we could offer uniquely Glatt Kosher foods," Mosha Sahler said.

The Sahlers are very excited for the full opening of the cafe.

"Our kitchen is to provide food for the community," said Sahler.

For more information on the cafe, call 413-210-3565.

Wabby's Sample Menu

Snacks & Salads

- Israeli salad combo with falafel balls
- Egg roll
- Grilled vegetables
- French fries

Vegeterian Specials

- Eggiant parmigiano (with toto)
- Couscous with grilled vegetables
- Tofu & vegetable kaboob with fries
- Falafel

Wabby's Dinners

- Rib steak
- shish kabob
- Chicken kabob
- Hot dog with fries
- Meatballs and mashed potatoes
- Baked chicken and potatoes
- Potato kugel

Dessert

- Pie a la mode
- Cake deluxe

Bush administration to share control over Iraq with U.N.

By BARRY SCHWEID
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – Shifting tactics and reaching out for help, the Bush administration offered yesterday to share with the United Nations the long-dominant U.S. role in Iraq's postwar reconstruction.

Secretary of State Colin Powell described the effort as "essentially putting the Security Council in the game," and European governments reacted favorably to the revised U.S. approach.

France, which led opposition to the war on Iraq, said a new U.N. resolution proposed by the United States should ensure that political power will be transferred quickly to an internationally recognized Iraqi government to help restore peace.

"The question is how to win the peace – and how to have the situation stabilized," France's U.N. Ambassador Jean-Marc de La Sabliere said in New York. "So we will see the resolution with this in mind."

Under the resolution, American commanders would remain in charge of peacekeeping operations in Iraq, but there, too, "we are asking the international community to join us even more than they have in the past," Powell said.

The resolution may be ready for submission to the Security Council next week, he said as he telephoned foreign ministers. U.S. Ambassador John Negroponte circulated a draft to other U.N. ambassadors in New York, and Powell said initial reactions were positive.

The canvassing was described by Powell as aggressive.

In Brussels, Belgium, meanwhile, the United States and other donors pushed ahead with plans to channel billions of dollars in reconstruction aid to Iraq through an international fund independent of the U.S.-led administration in Baghdad.

In Iraq, the United States handed military control over a large belt of Iraq south of Baghdad to a Polish commander. Powell said the rest of the area, around Najaf where a prominent Muslim cleric was killed last week in a bombing, will be turned over "once things settle down a little bit."

The Polish military is leading the international force of about 9,500 that includes troops from 21 countries.

In Najaf, the brother of slain Ayatollah Mohammed Baqir al-Hakim said Shiite Muslims would not attack the U.S.-led occupation force, but he suggested his Badr Brigade had rearmed against

Continued on page 4

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 5
LIECHTENSTEIN TAKING A CLOSER LOOK
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 6
WICKED WILLY WATCHIN' OUT FOR WHALES
SPORTS PAGE 14
READY TO ROLL FOOTBALL READY FOR OPENER
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 13

U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell answers questions from the press at the State Department on Wednesday, Sept. 3, in Washington.

Big Y® WORLD CLASS MARKET™
We've Got It All!

WELCOME BACK UMASS® STUDENTS!

175 University Drive
Amherst · 413-253-0416
Monday-Saturday
7am-11pm
Sunday 7am-10pm

WE ACCEPT OCMP!

Prices Effective September 4th to 10th
In Our Amherst Store Only.

From Our Kitchen

Sandwich Shop Hours:
7am to 9pm Every Day
Pizza Shop Hours:
9am to 9pm Every Day

8 Piece
Fried Chicken
BUY 1 · GET 1
FREE
Save On Up To 5

Honey Stung
Drummies
BUY 1lb · GET 1lb*
FREE
Save On Up To 5
*Package of equal or lesser value

To Place A Grinder Order
Call: 253-8098

Large Grinder
Your Choice of Ham & Cheese, Philly
Steak, Chicken Tender & More!
$5
Save On Up To 5

Just Heat & Serve!

1/2 Rotisserie
Chicken Dinner
With Your Choice Of Two Sides and Corn Bread
$5
Save On Up To 5

Big Y Day
UMASS Football
vs.
Central CT State
Saturday, September 6, 2003 1:00 pm
BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE Tickets With Your
(Up To 4 General Admission Tickets)
First Game of the Season!
Big Y Is A Proud Sponsor Of UMASS ATHLETICS
Tickets Must Be Purchased By Friday, Sept. 5, 2003. Tickets Are Available At The Mullins Center Athletic Ticket Office or Call 866-UMASS-TIX.

Come In and Sign Up
For Your
FREE
Big Y® Express Savings Club™ Card
To Save On Items Throughout The Store Week After Week... After Week!
See Store For Details On More Ways To Save!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Robert Krzykowski
Editorial Editor Erika Lovley
News Editor Courtney Charles
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resources Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Jessica Pelletier
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Kelly Farrell
Assistant News Ferron Salniker
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marzelli

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper became a daily in 1971; the Weekly Collegian in 1934 and the Tri-Weekly in 1967. The Collegian has been a daily since first January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call advertising between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

John Kerry ends tour in New Engand as official Presidential candidate

By Steve LeBlanc
Associated Press

BOSTON – Democratic presidential hopeful John Kerry brought his campaign home yesterday, addressing cheering supporters at a rally at historic Faneuil Hall.

Kerry arrived in Boston at the end of a two-day announcement tour that began in South Carolina and Iowa on Tuesday and continued with a swing across southern New Hampshire yesterday morning.

"This is where my grandparents and parents lived," said Kerry, flanked by fellow Sen. Edward Kennedy, Boston Mayor Tom Menino and other prominent Massachusetts Democrats. "It's where I was raised ... I come back here today truly with a wonderful sense of coming home."

Earlier in the day, Kerry met with six unemployed residents at a Derry, N.H., diner. The decorated Vietnam veteran's eyes filled with tears as he listened to Barbara Woodman, 46, who lost her customer service job at a health insurance company last winter.

"I don't care how many jobs I have to work, those kids are going to college," she said of her two sons.

"That's very moving," said Kerry.

After a rally later in Manchester, N.H., Kerry said he will keep campaigning as he has for months – energetically and focused on issues.

"I have been one of the most consistent candidates in laying out a specific agenda," he told reporters. "I'm not going to take a back seat to anyone on specificity and energy."

He brushed aside questions about how he would catch up to former Vermont governor Howard Dean, the front-runner in New Hampshire's first-in-the-nation primary, according to recent polls.

"The challenges we face are the same as they were a month ago or six months ago," he said. "People have not made a decision yet."

Joining Kerry on a Boston-bound bus were the Doghunters, a group of fellow veterans who have supported his past campaigns.

"It's a special connection to my life," Kerry said. "They are themselves the beginning of a journey, as this is the beginning."

As he did the previous day in South Carolina and Iowa, Kerry bashed President Bush's handling of the economy.

At the diner in Derry, he listened as Ronnie Alt told him she has sold her home and cars and cashed in her retirement savings since getting laid off from Hewlett-Packard Co. 14 months ago.

"Don't forget about us little people," said Alt, an Alton resident in her mid-40s.

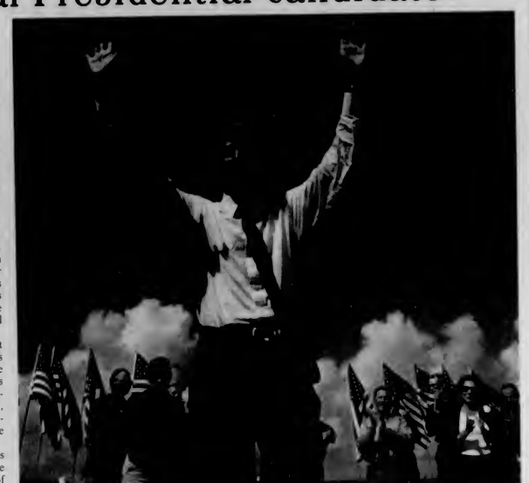
Kerry promised he wouldn't.

"You are the reason I'm running for president," he said. "All six of you sitting here surrounding me, you are American courage."

Kerry's lead in New Hampshire polls eroded for months before a poll last week put him 21 points behind Dean.

That and other signs of a Dean surge prompted Kerry to deny on Tuesday that he planned to shake up his campaign.

Supporters with Kerry yesterday indicated no changes are necessary. Jeanette Ferlo, of Goffstown, said Dean's fiery, pounding-the-podium style left her cold.



"We don't deserved to be screamed at," Ferlo said.

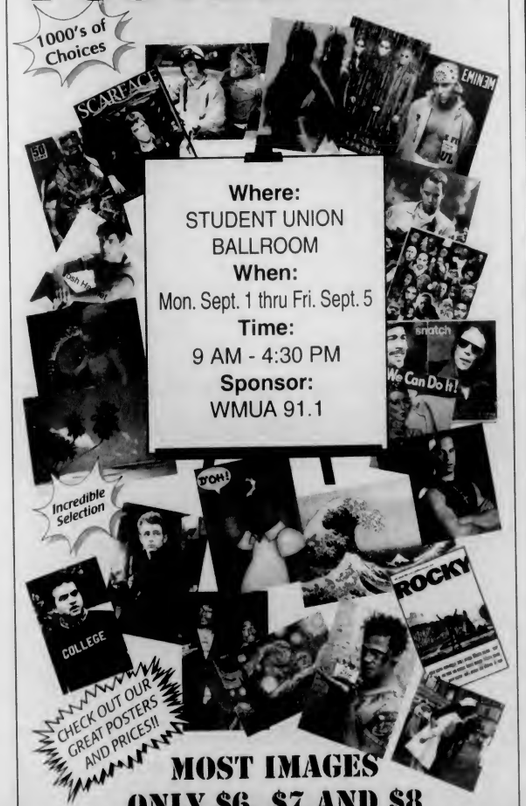
Greg Warner, an environmental analyst from Londonderry, agreed.

"I think Dean has captured early polls because he's done a mass media campaign. It's not due to the man's competence," Warner said. "The man has an ego bigger than Mount Rushmore, and no experience to back it up."

Supporters in Manchester hesitated to assess the campaign, but one said privately, "I think he's getting too much advice from too many people. Let Kerry be Kerry."

From Manchester, Kerry headed south to speak to a hometown crowd in Boston.

Lawrence Jackson/Associated Press



Senator John Kerry, D-Mass, takes a standing ovation on Tuesday, Sept 2, after formally announcing his candidacy to be President of the United States at Patriot's Point, S.C.

News meetings Mondays at 4:00 P.M. in the Newsroom

All-staff meeting Wednesday Sept. 10th at 6:00 p.m. in the Newsroom

TRUST "Before locking into a long term contract for a fitness facility with no machinery in place, why not give the veteran professionals a visit."
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
"Big enough to own the best equipment, but small enough to know your name."
* In business 22 years
* Locally owned & operated 0043606
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0090 90, AMHERST

THE BIGGEST BACK TO SCHOOL
POSTER SALE
1000's of Choices

Where:
STUDENT UNION BALLROOM
When:
Mon. Sept. 1 thru Fri. Sept. 5
Time:
9 AM - 4:30 PM
Sponsor:
WMUA 91.1

Incredible Selection
CHECK OUT OUR GREAT POSTERS AND PRICES!!
MOST IMAGES ONLY $6, $7 AND $8

SAVE $$$ ON TEXTBOOKS AT JEFFERY AMHERST!
We have these and many other UMASS courses at discounted prices:

ACCT-222	COMM-118	GEO-354	PLSOIL-102
ACCT-311	COMM-121	HRTA-230	PLSOIL-105
ACCT-312	COMM-226	HUMDEV-270	PLSOIL-200
ACCT-331	COMM-250	ITALIAN-230	POLSCI-360
ANI SCI-220	COMM-397-P	LING-201	PSYCH-100-1
ANI SCI-332	ECE-221	MATH-101	PSYCH-100-2
ANTH-100	ECE-313	MATH-102	PSYCH-100-3
ANTH-103	ECON-103-A	MATH-103	PSYCH-100-6
ARABIC-126	ECON-103-C	MATH-104	PSYCH-100-7
ARTHIS-100	ECON-104-A	MATH-127	PSYCH-100-8
ARTHIS-537	ECON-104-B	MATH-235	PSYCH-240-A
ASTRO-100-1	ECON-203	MATH-331	PSYCH-240-B
ASTRO-100-2	ECON-204-1	MNGT-361	PSYCH-240-C
ASTRO-100-3	ECON-204-4	MICBIO-106	PSYCH-305
BIO-103	ED-210	MICBIO-160	PSYCH-307
BIO-104	ED-276	MICBIO-310	PSYCH-308
BIOCHEM-285	ENG-112	MIE-201	PSYCH-315
BIOL-285	ENGLWP-112	MIE-210	RESECON-212
CEE-240	ENGLWP-113	MKTG-301	SOC-210
CEE-241	EXCSCI-130	MKTG-410	SOC-211
CHEM-102	EXCSCI-210	MNGT-314	SOC-241
CHEM-111	EXCSCI-301	MUSIC-100-2	SOM-680
CHEM-112	EXCSCI-304	MUSIC-100-3	SPAN-126
CHEM-261	EXCSCI-370	NUTR-130	STAT-140
CHINESE-155	FOMGT-250	NUTR-352	W&FCON-260
CLASSICS-224	FOMGT-320	PHIL-100-E	MNGT-361
CMPSCI-121	FRENCH-110	PHYS-100
CMPSCI-201	FRENCH-120	PHYS-125
CMPSCI-250	GEO-103	PHYS-151
COMDIS-211	GEO-131	PHYS-152

Remember to sell us your old textbooks and get instant cash!

Jeffery Amherst College Store -
Located between A.J. Hastings and La Veracruzana

Sat 8/30	8:30-6:00
Sun 8/31	12:00-5:00
Mon-Thurs 9/1-9/4	8:30-8:00
Fri & Sat 9/5-9/6	8:30-6:00
Sun 9/7	12:00-5:00
Mon 9/8	8:30-8:00
Mon-Sat 9/9-9/13	8:30-6:00

Vote blocked for Palestinian Prime Minister

By Karin Laub
Associated Press

JERUSALEM – Postponing a showdown, the Palestinian parliament speaker temporarily blocked a confidence vote yesterday that was sought by Prime Minister Mahmoud Abbas in his power struggle with Yasser Arafat.

If a vote is held in the coming days, the U.S.-backed Abbas could be toppled, dealing a heavy blow to efforts to end three years of violence and move toward Palestinian statehood. The prime minister has minimal support among Palestinians, many of whom say they distrust him because he has Israel's backing.

Abbas is to address parliament today to sum up his first 100 days in office, a period marked by somewhat reduced violence but also disappointment over a lack of movement in implementing the U.S.-backed "road map" peace plan.

Abbas' report will be debated, but legislators said a confidence vote is not expected for at least another week. In the meantime, parliament will try to help end the wrangling between Arafat and Abbas over their authority, particularly control of the security forces.

Israel has warned of dire consequences should Abbas be ousted, saying it won't do business with a government hand-picked by Arafat. Several Palestinian legislators said they were told by local U.S. diplomats that with Abbas gone, Washington might lower its profile as Mideast mediator.

Secretary of State Colin Powell, meanwhile, said in Washington that Arafat – whom the U.S. and Israel have sought to isolate – "has not been playing a helpful role."

"If he wanted to play a helpful role he would be supporting Prime Minister Abbas, not frustrating his efforts," Powell said.

Abbas has told a senior Palestinian official he wants today's debate to be followed by a confidence vote but has not made a formal request. Abbas has declined public comment, spending most of Wednesday sequestered at his office.

Winning parliament's support would help Abbas in his confrontation with Arafat, who is accused by Israel of fomenting terrorism. Defeat would allow him to step down without being blamed for the consequences, such as the possible collapse of the road map. The ongoing deadlock indicates that each man needs the other. The international support enjoyed by Abbas helps shield Arafat from possible Israeli action, such as expulsion. Abbas, in turn, needs Arafat to provide legitimacy for his government among Palestinians.

"They depend on each other, kind of like an old couple that can't stand each other, but can't live apart," said Israeli analyst Mark Heller.

Palestinian Parliament Speaker Ahmed Qureia said yesterday that parliament should not be dragged into the Arafat-Abbas struggle.

"Parliament will not accept being turned into a place of conflict or to be part of the current crisis," Qureia said.

The speaker said there is no need, for now, to hold a confidence vote in parliament because Abbas already won the legislators' confidence when his appointment was affirmed in April.

However, parliament will hold another session Sept. 10, and if Arafat and Abbas have not reached a power-sharing agreement by then, a confidence vote might be held, legislators said.

The power struggle between Abbas and Arafat has intensified in recent weeks.

Abbas, with the backing of the United States and Israel, demands that Arafat relinquish control of four security branches; Abbas commands the other four security services. Arafat has balked, fearing he would lose his main source of power.

State Department spokesman Richard Boucher said Powell "has made clear that Arafat is part of the problem at this point and is not helping to bring a solution."

Still, Boucher said Israel had informed the U.S. government there was no plan to expel Arafat and "our view was that was the right decision."

Israel and the United States want Abbas to crack down on Hamas and other militant groups, as required by the road map. Israel's Cabinet decided earlier this week to freeze implementation of the road map until Abbas orders a clampdown.

Abbas has been outspoken in his criticism of the militants' anti-Israel violence. But although he and his security chief, Mohammed Dahlan, have taken some measures, including freezing the bank accounts of Islamic charities with alleged links to Hamas, it remains unclear whether they would order a full crackdown even if given control of all security services.

Ahead of the parliament session, Israel sent strong warnings to the Palestinians.

Gerald H. Lingo/Collegian

Marching Band jumps into action

The University of Massachusetts Marching Band gave a preview performance to a small crowd last Friday at the Mullins Center field.

Powell announces proposed resolution to include U.N.

Continued from page 1

American orders, in his words, to "defend ourselves."

As outlined by Powell, State Department officials and U.N. diplomats at the Security Council in New York, the draft U.S. resolution would:

– Transform the U.S.-led coalition force into a U.N.-authorized multinational one under a unified command, with an American officer in charge. The force would be required to submit periodic reports to the Council.

– Ask the U.S.-appointed Iraq governing council to cooperate with the United Nations and U.S. officials in Baghdad to produce a timetable for restoring Iraq's sovereignty.

– Ask all 191 U.N. member states and international financial institutions to provide financial and other support for Iraq's reconstruction.

The administration has been under pressure from European and other governments, as well as from members of Congress, to share responsibility on Iraq. The pressure has increased as U.S. casualties have mounted. According to the Pentagon, 285 U.S. soldiers have died since the war began in mid-March, 147 of them since May 1 when President Bush declared major combat operations were over.

Powell said the decision to seek a U.N. resolution was not related to casualties. "It is related to the evolutionary process that we have always had in mind to eventually restoring sovereignty back to the Iraqi people," he said.

On Tuesday, German Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder, who had adamantly opposed the U.S.-led war to depose President Saddam Hussein, stressed "the necessity of giving the United Nations a significantly greater role in the political process in Iraq."

In London, a spokesman for the British Foreign Office said Britain had always seen the United Nations as playing a vital role in Iraq.

On Capitol Hill, Sen. Carl Levin of Michigan, the senior Democrat on the Senate Armed Services Committee, said, "We should be willing to agree to a reasonable sharing of decision-making with respect to the physical and political reconstruction of Iraq."

"If we are willing to do so, Germany and Russia will probably go along, and France would then have little choice, I believe, but to go along as well," he said. By contrast, Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., was skeptical of "this notion on the part of some of my colleagues that all we need to do is to get greater international support, including the U.N."

Roberts, chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, said, "If you get more foreign troops in there, obviously you have a more international presence that will lead to more of a financial contribution, But if you cannot do that specific mission you're just spinning your wheels."

Powell said one of the two key goals of the resolution was to invite the Iraqi governing council to submit a program and timetable for political evolution with a constitution and free elections. He called this effort "creating a political horizon."

The second goal, Powell said, was to have the Security Council authorize a multinational force to which other nations might contribute troops.

The United States now provides the bulk of the peacekeepers, with Britain and other countries contributing smaller numbers.

U.N. authorization is perceived by the administration as a way to induce India, Pakistan, Turkey, Bangladesh and other countries to send troops.

Oasis Body Wraps and Tanning
243 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 587-9742
NOW FEATURING SUN SPRITZER UV FREE TANNING
• The first UV FREE tanning machine in the area
• Get $5.00 off your first visit
• A rich golden tan in just a few seconds
• You'll look and feel great
1/2 Price tanning every Tuesday
Conveniently Located
OASIS • Hampshire Mall • University Drive • UMASS • Route 9

THE HARP
413-548-6900
www.theharp.net
Just off Campus in North Amherst
163 Sunderland Road
Irish Pub
All September
Labatt Blue
$1.75 Pint
$6.25 Pitcher
Great Live Music
Every Thursday amd Friday
This Thursday
Flying Lessons
"Best Groove Rock Band."
-Valley Advocate
This Saturday
The Equalites
Reggae & Roots Dubb

The Harvard Bartending Course
Now held in Amherst!
• The ideal first step towards a bartending job!
• Recieve your Mixology Diploma and TIPS certification in two days!
• Located at the holiday Inn Express!
617-495-9657
www.harvardbarcourse.com

WELCOME BACK STUDENTS
WE HAVE YOUR NEEDS!
•Cinder blocks
•Plywood
•Shelving and brackets
•Desktops
•Keys
•Bookcase material
•Paints
•Brushes, rollers
•Hardware
•Picture Hangers
10% OFF WITH THIS AD
150 College Street
LEADER HOME CENTERS
: 413-253-3411

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

Thursday, September 4, 2003 editorial@dailycollegian.com

Feeling the effects of UMass budget cuts

It's no secret that UMass suffered from severe budget cuts for the upcoming year. We were all warned long in advance, but it's only now, with the beginning of the fall semester, that the real effects of the budget crisis can be felt.

While the University did a fairly good job of keeping many programs intact, the ones that did suffer suffered greatly. And for those who are returning students, the difference is obvious.

Some programs were completely wiped out, which is hard to ignore. Particularly, if you sign on to SPIRE to find that there will not be a single physical education class offered this fall. Or, for another example, try to find a copy of the Campus Chronicle. Its funding was cut so severely that it was forced to shut down for the year, and its disappearance has left a deafening silence.

The other noticeable loss, unfortunately, comes out of the pockets of UMass students. We were all fairly warned that student fees would be increased, and increased they were, with another rise on the way for spring semester.

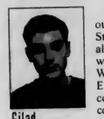
Most of these changes are only noticeable to the returning students here at UMass, subtle little differences that would slip right past you if you didn't know any better.

So the incoming students are the lucky ones, except for that little matter of over-enrollment. In an attempt to make up for some lost funds, more people were accepted to the University this year, which puts a considerable strain on space. The incoming freshman class is far bigger than UMass housing services was prepared to handle. In fact, the University was forced to send out letters during the summer, asking students who live close enough to commute to remain off campus this semester.

There is no longer such a thing as a lounge in any dorm building on campus, because they have all been turned into triple or even quadruple rooms. Those who were not lucky enough to be placed in one of the remodeled lounges were moved to hotel rooms off campus.

And it's not only the students who have suffered from the cutbacks. Many staff members were laid off when entire positions were eliminated from the departments that lost funding.

Although these effects are certainly noticeable, we must acknowledge that the University has done the best it can under the circumstances. With a budget cut by 18 percent, there was clearly a call for some drastic measures. The University has managed to maintain as much as it possibly could, and the damage that was done was unavoidable. Programs had to be cut; decisions had to be made.



If there is any blame to be placed for the current state of our beloved UMass, it certainly does not lie with anyone within the school, but instead with the government and the politicians who forced us to have to choose between things we absolutely need, and things we just like to have.

This year will be different. The school has undergone many changes, but we will adapt. We are all in this together, and we must make the best of our situation. We must remember that if it wasn't for all of the people who worked so hard to cause minimal harm to the University, it could have been much worse.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

Liechtenstein: The Bad and the Ugly

Gilad Skolnick

It's time that our United States cuts off all relations with a certain Western European country. This country, an economic hub in the heart of Europe, stands against everything that we Americans stand for. It is time for economic boycott, sanction and if necessary, military intervention.

And no, I'm not talking about France, although they deserve it. It was a sad time this past spring when the dangerous nation of Liechtenstein moved a bit closer to becoming a dictatorship, endangering us all.

Just because we can't pronounce or spell a country's name doesn't mean that it doesn't exist and that it isn't an integral part of the world scene. The influence of Liechtenstein is under-appreciated and is regrettably far greater than one would expect. Much to my disappointment, the United States – despite all logic – has nonetheless retained good relations with this rogue state, which has sought nothing more than to spread misery across the global spectrum.

Yes, Liechtenstein is a country. It may not be as large as ours, but then again, what country is these days? For those of you who don't go to the fine higher learning institute of UMass, Liechtenstein is a prosperous, landlocked country nestled between the ruthless Swiss and unpredictable Austrians.

Unfortunately, this past March, Prince Hans Adams II put through changes in the constitution giving him the ability to sack the government, veto legislation and nominate judges. Unlike our nation, where the executive, judicial and legislative branches limit each other's powers and are each separate, Liechtenstein is controlled by one mad man.

Liechtensteimians are, alas, sexist as well. Women were only given the right to vote for parliament in 1984. A few years ago, proposals asking for equal rights for women to be protected in the constitution had been rejected. It's just one more of the many differences between them and us.

As America throws troops around to protect democracy and freedom throughout the world, where are they in Liechtenstein? Why are we supporting such a country at such a time when even the Czech Republic doesn't recognize the sovereignty of Liechtenstein? In fragile Europe, where a war sparks up every century, such threats simply cannot be allowed to exist. I'm sorry if I'm offending any of the Liechtenstein Americans who attend UMass, but this has to be put to an end.

It's a real shame that UMass is so pro-Liechtenstein, with its powerful student organization holding rallies, throwing around petitions and other nonsense. But if there is a country out there that we should oppose, it's certainly Liechtenstein.

Just because we can't pronounce or spell a country's name doesn't mean that it doesn't exist and that it isn't an integral part of the world scene.

To start, all Liechtenstein foods should be banned from the DC and Liechtenstein Studies should be cut as a major. This would save us money and help put a halt to the spread of their anti-freedom like ways.

Not to mention that dictator Hans Adams II is hoarding his nation's wealth and keeping it from his people. In fact, its hard to believe, but the queen of England is no longer the richest monarch in Europe, beat by the greedy Liechtenstein monarchy to third place. Hans Adams II and family has over three billion pounds in wealth, which regardless of what a pound is, is a heck of a lot more than Bulger's going away present. Only beat by the sketchy Swedes and sly Luxembourgians, Liechtenstein is definitely axis of evil worthy.

One might dismiss such a nation as being not much of a threat, as it claims that its defense forces are only made up of about 100 policemen, but Liechtenstein is one country we should keep our eye on. With a land area totaling hundreds of square kilometers and laws in place that state that every male between 18 and 60 in a "national emergency" can be called up for military service, their armies could roll right through Europe.

Recently, some progress in the matter has been made, but sadly not enough. Not too long ago, the banks of Liechtenstein bowed to international pressure and agreed to stop allowing customers to operate accounts anonymously by going through intermediaries. Now all banks must know who their clients are. This will hopefully help stifle money laundering and hurt drug lords and mafias around the world.

The question is, why isn't the media talking about this? They talk about other countries but always seem to stealthily avoid Liechtenstein. Maybe it's because American companies have money in Liechtenstein banks, or Liechtenstein is controlling our media. But just because the media isn't talking about this topic doesn't mean it isn't an issue. If you're still wondering, I'm sure the UMass Communications Department has a good conspiracy story that can explain all of this.

The issue of Liechtenstein is an issue that each and every American is and should be worried about, and I must admit to have lost many a night's sleep over this. Once again, a democracy in Europe is folding and turning into a dictatorship. This can only cause a domino effect, spreading country by country, nation by nation, until all of Europe becomes a dangerous continent of dictatorships hoarding wealth and limiting freedoms.

It is not only what is right, but it is a matter of national duty to embrace our values of freedom and democracy and let the Liechtensteinians know that they can't take that away from us.

Gilad Skolnick is a Collegian Columnist.

Information from the BBC Web site was used in this article.

Rules of walking

Sanam Hakim

There are three things that all UMass students have in common. One: we will always make fun of school cafeteria food when, deep down, they are dimmers we genuinely look forward to. Two: the bus we squint to see down the road is rarely the bus we need to get on. Three: Therefore, we have to walk ... everywhere.

It amazes me that our school is filled with a group of people who are capable of mastering the arts, mathematics and sciences, but are incapable of mastering the art of walking.

The rules of walking are basically the same as the rules of driving. In crowded hallways, for example, the majority of the people will evenly flow down the hall, staying to the right side. The ones who are in a rush smoothly weave in and out of the crowds of people, staying within the invisible boundaries. The right-side-of-the-hall method, although perfect in its description, remains flawed due to the four basic groups of uncooperative walkers.

Group one consists of cell phone users. One interesting aspect of being alive is the ability to move multiple body parts simultaneously. It is a pretty fascinating concept if you break it down and think about it. You can move your arm, kick your legs, bob your head, AND sing show tunes, all at the same time. Henceforth, we come fully equipped with the ability to multitask. For instance, this is the ability that allows us to stir soup and flip pancakes at the same time, or talk on a cell phone and walk simultaneously.

It is not a rare occurrence, however, to mess up this task combination. Be it the cause of wave radiation or a lack of consideration to the basic flow of traffic, cell phones tend to interfere with the walking speed. If your phone rings while you're walking, remember these three key points: just because your mouth is moving doesn't mean your legs have to slow down; "getting good reception" is no excuse to halt in the middle of a crowded hallway; and answering the phone by saying, "I'll call you right back," is acceptable and not considered rude or harsh in any way.

Group two consists of people who think it would be faster to walk on the left side of the hall. It doesn't even seem logical to me. It doesn't get you going any faster and you ruin the day of every person whom you slam into in the hallway.

Group three includes people who feel the need to stand side by side at all times. If you're walking on a sidewalk that only fits five people across, "Awesome, we all fit!" is not a proper mentality. It is common courtesy to move aside for the people coming from the opposite direction.

If separating from the chain is too much of a sacrifice, hop on someone's back. That way you'll be close to your friends and out of the way of oncoming traffic.

Just because your mouth is moving, doesn't mean your legs have to slow down.

Finally, in group four, we have the daydreamers. Granted, the pipes by Franklin Dining Commons and the glistening water in the campus pond are beautiful landmarks here at our University. However, slowing down to admire them while you're walking in front of people is rude and obnoxious. Schedule a break between classes, set up a lawn chair and admire the landscape then. While you're walking, your focus should be on keeping one foot in front of the other at a reasonable pace, not on mud water and rusty pipes.

In general, walking is an extremely easy task with a simple conscious attempt. The phrase, "one foot in front of the other," is the only instruction you need to remember. Please don't form bad habits to kick off your first semester. Walking is not a sightseeing tour or a scenic phone booth. Walking is walking: keep up a decent pace and you will not incur the wrath of your fellow side walkers.

Sanam Hakim is a Collegian Columnist.

Dining down under

World Perspectives
Australia

Adrienne Bossi

Well, another school year begins at UMass. For those of you moaning and groaning at the ideas of getting back into the grind of classes, buying books, never getting dressed, eating DC food, taking late buses and all the administrative crap UMass has to offer, here are a few things to be grateful for.

I had to go all the way to Australia this semester to realize how great UMass is despite all of the stupid things the University does wrong (i.e., spend millions on a replacement power plant only to realize steam can't be pumped downhill).

I know it may be hard to imagine, but the UMass DCs are five-star fine dining resorts compared to what I have experienced here in Australia. Not only are the DCs only open four hours a day here, but the food choices are extremely limited. If you are like me, and are not a fan of lamb, pumpkin or meat pie, there are not many options available for your meals.

I don't consider myself a picky eater, but I have never been a fan of meat with bones. That's too bad for me. Bones are all the rage here! Apparently, chicken breast hasn't made it to this corner of the world. Also, if you are one to use dressing on your salad, you're just out of luck. There simply isn't any salad dressing on the continent.

Lastly, for those breakfast fans out there, imagine waking up to a nice steaming plate of Spaghetti-O's, fish sticks and baked beans. Mmm mmmm! Next time you eat only Lucky Charms for a week at the DC because everything else looks too gross, be grateful there is at least cereal to fall back on.

Another central factor of UMass life is ordering food. I think it is relatively well understood that Amherst has a great selection of delivery options. I know we all appreciate having Wings, Sugar Jones, Bruno's, Pinocchio's and DP Dough at our fingertips. What I think goes unappreciated is how easily accessible these places are.

Ordering pizza in Australia is as difficult as brain surgery. Campus phones can't make local calls without calling cards. At the same time, calling cards can't reach the two delivery places in town: Pizza Hut and Dominoes. To order pizza here, you have to find a pay phone and take a bus to the shopping plaza or hit up someone with a car.

Imagine waking up to a nice steaming plate of Spaghetti-O's, fish sticks and backed beans. Mmm mmmm!

College kids are notorious for dressing badly. Many of us don't dress at all and just sport permapajamas. However, here in northern Australia, the dress code is even worse. Somehow, 1985 never ended. The clothes are straight out of Degrassi High. Even the bars are stuck in the 80s. They still pump MC Hammer and Vanilla Ice through the system.

So what if it's hard to find a hot guy (or girl) at UMass because they all dress like crap. Look beyond the sweat pants and be glad you don't go to class surrounded by DJ Tanner and Def Leppard look-alikes. People can still look good in sweat pants, while there is no way a person can be remotely attractive sporting teased hair and tapered pants.

Despite my complaints, Australia is amazing. Obviously, there are perks to being here despite the bad food, bad clothes and poor phone system. The Aussies definitely got some things right. For example, on a course outline, a professor usually includes all the exam questions that will be asked on every test in the semester. While walking to class, it's much more fun to see wallabies hopping around than the black squirrels.

Here, it doesn't matter that I am 20, because you can drink at 18. The dorms are great too. The suckers in Sylvan will love to know that my suite style single room is as big as a Sylvan double.

UMass weather is incomparable to Australia's as well. Although it is winter here, I can count on each day being 75 degrees, with crystal clear skies. Tropical North Queensland is simply beautiful. Having a real beach 20 minutes away from campus is far better than Southwest's horseshoe beach. It's also safe to say that having the Great Barrier Reef and World Heritage rainforest at my fingertips is absolutely amazing.

One thing I have learned since coming to Australia is to not sweat the small stuff. My patience has increased by leaps and bounds. So when UMass starts to get under your skin (as it undoubtedly will) just remember that it isn't all that bad.

Just the same, when the inconveniences of my Australian university become overwhelming, I can always relax my cares away by lying on a real tropical beach.

Adrienne Bossi is a Collegian Columnist on exchange in Australia.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Back to the glory of 'Graceland'

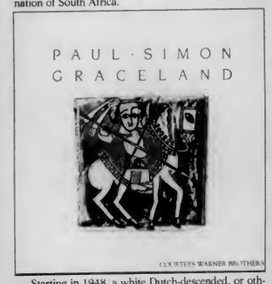
Retro Review

Glen Straub

Music is forever changing. Genres, styles, faces and even instruments have evolved over time.

There is the weary cliché that says, "music like fashion becomes outdated."

Parents love to say to their offspring, "Oh that band was before your time. You won't like them." Nine-times-out-of-10 this holds true, but for all those albums that just don't seem to have the same power they did a decade or two before their release, there is that one special LP that is simply titled, as "timeless."



Throughout the school year, this column will examine those albums that, no matter what the new trend in music is today, have and will forever withstand the test of time.

To determine an album's timelessness is to look at how it has affected the music industry, but more so how it has affected the world. In saying that, Paul Simon's "Graceland" is the first installment of "Retro Review."

■■■

Released in 1986, "Graceland" is arguably singer/songwriter legend Paul Simon's most successful experiment throughout his 35-year musical career. The experiment at hand was to bring music from two totally separate parts of the world together, in order to draw attention to a country in need of an immense amount of world aid.

The primary subject in the experiment was the nation of South Africa.

COURTESY WARNER BROTHERS

Starting in 1948, a white Dutch-descended, or otherwise known as Afrikaner, government ruled with more than just an iron fist over the majority black and mixed population of South Africa. The society the government created institutionalized racism, leading to absolute abuse by the minority over the indigenous people of South Africa. Black and mixed people were violently beaten, thrown into prison, forced to speak in Afrikaans while in school and relocated from their homes to poverty-stricken townships outside the cities. This infringement on the rights of the natives was titled "Apartheid" which means apartness in the Afrikaans language.

However, thanks in part to a brutal internal struggle led by African National Congress president Nelson Mandela, external world pressure and strong sanctions put on by the United Nations, the Afrikaner reign diminished and South Africa enjoyed its first ever democratic elections in 1994 – ending the Apartheid regime.

Where does "Graceland" fit into this equation? Out of pure curiosity in 1985, Simon visited Johannesburg, South Africa in order get a firsthand listen of this new music that was evolving within the townships in South Africa's biggest cities.

The new music, called "township jive," would soon become the cornerstone of "Graceland" and put the culture and history of South Africa's black and impoverished population on a worldwide scale, which led to the necessary world intervention. The sound is a combination of fluid guitar riffs, high-pitch steel drums, lacy flute sounds and Zulu chants.

After hearing this peaceful and inspirational music while visiting Soweto, located right outside Jo'burg and the largest township in South Africa, Simon was inspired to use his superiority in the American music industry and create an album that would mimic the sounds heard throughout the country.

So he met with South Africa's version of the Beatles, Ladysmith Black Mambazo (a Zulu-speaking accapella group started by Natal native Joseph Shabalala in 1960) to construct 11 eclectic songs that would prove to be Simon's most successful work.

With a combination of Simon's mastermind lyrics, soft-spoken vocal chords and Ladysmith's traditional chants in front of those "township jive" instrumentals, the record captures the happiness that existed, but was in powerful contempt in the lives of so many South Africans.

The album goes on many different paths throughout its 44 minutes, but keeps a core of South African spirit. Songs such as "You Can Call Me A," "Graceland" and "I Know What I Know" are fun-filled westernized anthems twisted with an African flavor.

"Diamonds on the Soles of Her Shoes" and, more so, "Homeless," which was originally part of Ladysmith's catalogue, display the music that truly originates from the rural and urban sections of South Africa.

"Graceland" won the 1987 Grammy award for Album of the Year and with the honor, it boosted Ladysmith Black Mambazo onto the worldwide stage. The group became a representative for their home country. They showed the world that a lot of good is coming out of South Africa and for more to occur the stifling must end by the government.

Unfortunately, as time has gone on since the "Graceland" release, evidence has surfaced that Simon did not compensate all of his South African musical mentors accordingly, respective to the album sales that were produced in America and Europe. Many critical musical journalists have dubbed "Graceland" as a project that was two-thirds Ladysmith and one-third Simon. However, the message music spreads and the pure sounds experienced while listening to the record show that no matter who deserves the credit, it is still and will forever be one of the finest culminations of songs on one disc, tape or vinyl ever.

Glen Straub is a Collegian Columnist.

Breaking the surface: New England Aquarium whale watches show marine life up close and personal

By Jessica Pelletier
Collegian Staff

The notion that humans have an undeniably strong connection to the sea isn't a new concept. Our art and literature in New England has proven this fact time and again.

Over many years, however, pollution and ship traffic have threatened the ecosystem of the ocean's environment and the organisms therein. With these facts in mind, educational institutions such as the New England Aquarium have offered the public a closer view of marine life with whale watches that depart steps away from the aquarium at Central Wharf in Boston Harbor.

A chance at seeing a wild animals that was once hunted to the brink of extinction is something that strikes a chord in many individuals. Having said that, reserving tickets for the cruise is highly recommended as cruises sell out well before departure time. Due to the highly restrictive time frame, it is necessary for any passengers to check in a half hour before departure, as the boat will leave at its scheduled time.

Ticket prices for adults 21 and over are $30.45. Discounts are available for senior citizens and college students (ID must be presented), who can purchase tickets for $25.20. Prices for children range from $18.90 to $24.15, depending on the Disney movie that made a gigantic splash in box offices. Every few years or so, Hollywood will inadvertently produce a film that will fill young imaginations with dreams of underwater life. The computer-animated film "Finding Nemo" has done more than entertain the child-oriented audience – it has provided them with an insatiable curiosity for the oceanic world.

Parents are reminded that no strollers or infants are allowed on board. However, children who are both over the age of three and at least 30 inches in height are more than welcome aboard the ship. [illegible] progress and a coloring book [illegible] five hours, depending on the levels of activity of the animals. The number of whale sightings cannot be predicted, but due to calm weather and a plentiful food supply, the average number of sightings at the end of August was between six and 12 humpbacks and six to eight minke whales per cruise.

Whale watching season peaks during the spring and summer month, when humpback and minke whales can be viewed at Stellwagen Bank, their communal feeding grounds. Whale watch tours run twice daily from May through mid-October and on weekends in April running through late October. Further information can be provided by [illegible]

UMass student band breaks away from the herd and shatters the Valley's music scene

By Russ Juskalian
Collegian Correspondent

Their shows are some of the best in The Valley, but can NBFB really bring that stunning live performance energy to anyone with a cheap stereo and six bucks to spare?

No Bud for Bisson
'NBFB'
Independent

After listening to their latest studio release, "No Bud For Bisson," the answer is an overwhelming affirmative. The band features Ron Peleg bringing a noticeable fusion of Zeppelin, Santana and the Doors to his jam-based guitar solos. Darby Wolf on the keyboard straddles between psychedelic and P-funk, while Dan Rehm supplies dub baselines that leave even the least limber of fans no choice but to dance.

If that wasn't enough, Bob Moriarty's saxophone injects groove wherever it wasn't already, and borders on the dreamlike. Dave Bisson is of course the puppeteer who holds everyone together – always poised to bring the audience back to reality with his impeccably timed drums, or ready to push people into pure oblivion with break-beats and groove.

Relaxing and entrancing, 'The Police Are Your Friends' is the kind of song you would want to hear at 4 a.m., after drifting off into the funky melodies and grooves of a NBFB show.

Though the first few tracks are all well played, they present no coherency for the album, no consistent mood. From the chilled out, pop-dub track "Deep Analog," to "Rippington" with an intro clearly reflecting the influence of early Red Hot Chili Peppers, the songs all work on their own – and together if only as a sampling of what NBFB is capable of. These first songs are indeed high in quality, but in the end detract from an otherwise tightly realized project.

The new album really gets started with "Nameology," a track replete with audible influences combined to birth a completely new sound. Peleg's clean and dreamlike opening riff reminds me of the similarly clean melodies from Dave Matthews Band's hit, "Crush."

From here the rest of NBFB join the fray. Immediately heard is Herbie Hancock's "Headhunters" – less frantic but with more groove – with Moriarty teasing at being oneiric with his perfectly placed saxophone.

Just as it seems that the song has reached a plateau, Wolf brings some Parliament Funkadelic to the table with the sound of that band's now trademark funky-synth. It's not over before Peleg gives listeners some Santana inspired guitar.

The pace of the song gets rushed, but sounds right, and finally it comes full circle to the original groove of the opening minute of the track, which feels like home after such a collage of musical thoughts.

"Nameology" is a starting point from which the rest of the album unfolds to display intricacy and skill. "Strictly Nightvision" and "Delayed Reaction" feel like epics – the listener is trapped in these journey pieces.

Listeners will feel as though they are hypnotically being brought on some sort of fantastic, psychedelic adventure: Moriarty's sax draws people in while Peleg's guitar guides the listener along a funky path through a surreal wilderness of sound and reality.

If the penultimate track and its preceding track are the first two chapters in a prolonged journey, then the final track, "The Police Are Your Friends," serves as a perfect conclusion.

Relaxing and entrancing, "The Police Are Your Friends" is the kind of song you would want to hear at 4 a.m., after drifting off into the funky melodies and grooves of a NBFB show. If life had a soundtrack, this is the song that would play when you woke up from a dream feeling content – somewhere between dreaming and waking life.

What NBFB really excels at is providing a coherent feeling to their music in concert – it's really one big show as opposed to a loosely strewn sampling of different sounds. "No Bud For Bisson" captures this and the energy of their live jam-sessions magnificently, but it doesn't quite get it right for the first handful of songs. The best songs on the album are part of a larger landscape of sound, and tend to be the songs without vocals.

The album is a keeper, but why not get a little more for your money?

NBFB, in a record release show, will be giving away a free copy of "No

Bud For Bisson" with every ticket to their Sept. 6 show at the Iron Horse in Northampton. Tickets cost $6 advance and $8 at the door (includes free CD); the show starts at 9.30 p.m.

COURTESY NBFB

No Bud for Bisson, a UMass student band, hits the scene.

This flop's a hit! 'The Producers' shines at Broadway in Boston

By Jessica Pelletier
Collegian Staff

BOSTON - Reserve your tickets now folks, because the best-worst show to hit Broadway is going to be at Boston's Colonial Theater until Sept. 16. That's right, Mel Brook's "The Producers" hit the bay area like a freight train with greasy wheels, and it's not going to leave until fall.

'The Producers'
Directed by Mel Brooks
Colonial Theater

This acme of black comedy reinforces what the entertainment industry knew about Mel from the start ... he's funny. The musical garnered twelve Tony awards after its release and the star studded marquis outside the theater quickly turned tickets to the show into an endangered species.

With the failure of his latest musical fresh on his mind, producer Max Bialystock retires to his apartment with nothing ahead of him except for the prospect of being a male gigolo to the nearest retirement village. That is, until mild mannered accountant Leopold Bloom enters the picture and casually mentions the profits that could be made from producing a flop as opposed to a hit.

Imagining the piles of money that can be made from such a ruse, the two set out to find the worst script, the stupidest director, singers who can't sing and chorus girls who can't dance. A night full of pouring over books yields a play that is "guaranteed to close by page 4." The neo-Nazi tribute to der Fuehrer titled "Springtime for Hitler" is a romp through the fields of Rhineland, complete with girls dressed in sausages and pretzels.

No social group is excluded from Mel Brook's humor, whether it is gay, Jewish or elderly. During at least one point in the show, you may find yourself asking, "Should I be laughing at this??"

Another moment of pure hilarity occurs when the inept director, Roger DeBris, flirts with Leo so intensely that the pencil pusher is reduced to cuddling with his blue baby blanket to escape the stress.

The next twist in the Producer's knot comes in the form of a blonde Swedish bombshell named Ulla. Sure, she can't really speak English, but has that quality ever been necessary in a secretary? Neither Max nor Leo thinks so, and the leggy blonde is given the job.

All the pieces are in play for the worst musical to hit Broadway since Fame; but unfortunately for Max and Leo, the musical turns out to be a huge success. As the two bemoan their fate back at the office, the neo-Nazi writer decides to extract his revenge for making Adolf look like a prancing queen. When the police arrive, they soon discover how Max and Leo have been cooking the books. It isn't long before Max is hauled away to prison while Leo goes to Brazil with Ulla and the two million dollars.

A smidgen of heart is thrown into the mix when Leo realizes how wrong he was to leave his friend and returns to make his confession in court. The two land themselves in Sing Sing prison for their debauchery, but the musical doesn't end without one last song and dance for Max and Leo.

Brad Oscar takes the lead as Max Bialystock, a role formerly played by Nathan Lane. His performance is stellar, owing in part to the fact that Oscar was Lane's understudy in the Broadway production of "The Producers." When vocal nodes and illnesses caused Mr. Lane to step out of the spotlight, Oscar stepped in and performed the role in over seventy occasions.

The role of the Leopold Bloom, the cowardly accountant, is filled by Andy Taylor in this production. Although the New York cast had Matthew Broderick as the nerdy Bloom, Taylor's performance is terrific nonetheless. The lack of superstar names in Boston's "The Producers" doesn't diminish the quality of the performances therein.

COURTESY ENQUIRER.COM

The musical scoundrels who started it all: Nathan Lane and Matthew Broderick in their performance of 'The Producers.'

Ida Leigh Curtis played Ulla's character, in both this version and the original. Her accent can only be described as a sexy version of the Muppet Show's Swedish chef. Her choreography is amazing, and it's clearly true, as she chirps in her solo, "when you've got it, flaunt it."

"The Producers" exudes a level of fun you're just not going to get at "Les Miserables." Ticket prices aren't much lower than those found on the Broadway scene (decent seats can be found in the $60 to $75 range) but the steeper price is worth it for the show that Boston's "The Producers" are putting on this fall.

Dishing out a second helping of the crazy cinematic creeps

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

The Creeper, the snarling star of the "Jeepers Creepers" movies, has slimy, gray-green skin, giant, translucent batwings and pointed teeth that he forms into a leering grin whenever he sees a victim he likes. As a demonic ambassador of the horror movie world, he doesn't have the iconic power of, say, Freddy or Jason, but he certainly holds his own in the horror villain pantheon. As played by Jonathan Breck, the Creeper displays a witty silent menace – he's Jason Voorhees with more personality.

'Jeepers Creepers 2'
Directed by Victor Salva
Starring Ray Wise, Jonathan Breck
United Artists
Rated R
103 mins.
Grade: B

"Jeepers Creepers 2," the inevitable sequel to come down the pike, opens with a title card stating that "every 23rd spring ... for 23 days ... it gets to eat." And so it does, as the Creeper descends upon a busload of high school jocks and cheerleaders rumbling down a remote Midwestern highway.

The original "Jeepers Creepers" begins on a note of suggestive spookiness. A squabbling brother-and-sister team travels down remote farmland roads when they are stalked by rusted jalopy of a van driven by a cloaked and deranged villain.

After the movie's big reveal, however, the movie descended into a standard issue – if competently made – monster movie freak-out, with a winged demon flying around and climbing up walls in order to rip various body parts from unlucky souls.

In "Jeepers Creepers 2," there's no pretension that the movie is anything more than an action-packed creature feature with the various young cast members facing an otherworldly force that fancies them for a snack. In that regard, the movie is a better film than the original, as it wastes no time in getting into the down-and-dirty basics. The bus breaks down, the coaches and driver are picked off and the kids are left to fend for themselves in the lonely, desolate farmland.

The movie opens with a spectacular scene in which the Creeper, in the guise of a scarecrow, carries off a 12-year-old boy in front of the boy's father (Ray Wise, the Ahab to the Creeper's Moby Dick). And there is another terrific scene in which the snarling beast goes shopping for his future meals as the teens cower on the bus.

There is also a not-so-terrific scene in which a blonde cheerleader named Minxie (yes, Minxie – and she's played, blandly, by Nicki Lynn Aycox) has a psychic vision that explains everything to the confused teens. It is the most awkward example of piling on the horror movie exposition since, maybe, "Freddy vs. Jason."

There's not much variation on how the Creeper picks off victims (it swoops down form the sky and carries them away), which makes the attacks rather repetitive. But writer/director Victor Salva – who also did the honors for the previous installment – uses the claustrophobic, single setting of the bus and surrounding springtime fields to maximum advantage (Salva certainly knows how to turn open fields into ominous landmarks). And smartly, he plays with audience expectations when it comes to black characters, blonde cheerleaders and horror movies.

The larger cast means the characters – who also include a virulently racist homophobe (played with full iron-eyed sleaze by Eric Nenninger) and a heroic African Jock (Garikayi Mutambirwa) – aren't as fully fleshed out (actually, they are really nothing more than canon fodder) but they effectively establish his ensemble.

Alas, Salva still can't give the Creeper a proper back-story. He's crafted an intriguing addition to the pantheon of modern monsters and madmen – it's just too bad he couldn't actually give us any idea what the hell it is.

COURTESY UNIVERSAL.COM

Mr. Creeper hangs out waiting for his next victim in his return film, 'Jeepers Creepers 2.'

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
$139
★ Student Special ★
4 months
Best Aerobics–Best Machines
STAIRMASTERS • FREE WEIGHTS • CYBEX • NAUTILUS • LIFECYCLES • TREADMILLS • BODYBIKES • TREADCLIMBER
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0080 90 AMHERST
www.amherstathletic.com

THE Umass Roman Catholic student center invites you to kick-off the year at a

Student Mass and Open House

Sunday Sept. 7

7pm Mass
8pm Open House and pizza

Begin the new school year with other Catholic students, and learn about programs the Newman Center offers at the Open House afterwards:

- Social events
- Liturgy
- Newman Student Association
- Grad Group
- Retreats
- Faith education
- Service projects

COME JOIN US!

The Newman Center
Umass' Roman Catholic Faith Community
472 North Pleasant St.
Amherst, MA 01002
413-549-0300
www.umass.edu/catholic

4th Anniversary Celebration

MERCYhouse
it's a church

celebrates its 4th year anniversary as a church in Amherst. All of Amherst is invited to enjoy a full schedule of festivities under and around the big yellow tent on the Common.

Sunday, September 7th

11:00am - Sunday Morning Celebration
12:30pm - Free Hotdogs
1:00pm - Musical treats every hour including jazz, funk, classical, rock'n'roll.
- Free kids carnival with face painting
- Arts and crafts booth for both kids and adults
- Volleyball tournament with prizes
4:00pm - Free concert under the tent

www.knowmercy.org
413-374-7532

DJ Mark Ronson crosses genres with his unique sound

By Brendan Lee
Collegian Correspondent

The name Mark Ronson probably won't ring any bells for most hip-hop and R&B listeners.

That's not a problem for the English-born, New York-bred DJ on his debut album, "Here Comes the Fuzz," as it showcases an assemblage of guest stars that would make any hip-hop radio station jealous.

Ronson, whose few production credits include a handful of remixes and the criminally-ignored 2001 debut from Nikka Costa ("Everybody Got Their Something"), manages to bring in enough A-list talent to keep heads nodding to his brand of hybrid funk production.

He gained fame in the New York City club scene as a DJ who was just as likely to drop the needle on something by the White Stripes as he would the new Jay-Z single. On "Here Comes the Fuzz," he doesn't deviate from the formula.

Ronson seems to favor a live production style, rife with the fresh snare kicks, smooth bass lines and heavy doses of Wurlitzer organ that A Tribe Called Quest/Native Tongues made popular in the early 90s. Despite a guest appearance by Tribesman Q-Tip, it seems the "golden era" nostalgia extends only to the beats. In fact, most of the guest MC's on the record are content to lyrically tread water – a problem further compounded by Ronson's frequent and unnecessary stylistic discretions.

Mark Ronson
"Here Comes the Fuzz"
Elektra

Courtesy Shawn Mortensen

Ronson collaborates with some of today's top MC's in hip-hop on 'Here Comes the Fuzz.'

The country-fried opener "Bluegrass Stain'd" by Nappy Roots and Anthony Hamilton is marginally appealing, yet virtually indistinguishable from the glut of "dirty south" groups and MC's currently flooding airwaves nationwide.

Rivers Cuomo (of Weezer fame) makes an ill-advised cameo on the aptly-titled "I Suck," where the normally deft rock lyricist turns in a performance worthy of a faceless teen movie soundtrack. Ronson even mines the dancehall crossover trend, utilizing Sean Paul's rough flow over a bland hip-hop beat and singer Tweet's crooning on "International Affairs."

As a producer, Ronson fares much better when he leaves the platinum-selling guest list at home and lets his friends go to work. On the title track, the aforementioned Costa rescues her producer from a forgettable verse by Roc-A-Fella affiliate Freeway and his own tired, plodding rap/rock riffage. Ronson protégés Rhymefest and Saigon outshine their better-known counterparts on their showcase tracks.

For heads willing to wade into Ronson's muddied waters, there are few handsome rewards. Still, both of the albums' lead singles feature the perfect combination of dazzling production work and game-tight lyrics that Ronson strives for and ultimately fails to achieve throughout "Here Comes the Fuzz".

Ghostface Killah serves up a restaurant quality verse on "Ooh Wee," featuring a Nate Dogg hook hotter than a New York minute. Ronson successfully marries the Brooklyn underground fraternity of Mos Def and MOP with a Lenny Kravitz sample for "On the Run" and the results should be heating up mixtapes and college radio for months to come.

Whale watch cruises delight Bostonians camera at home. A full-service galley runs throughout the duration of the tour and offers simple fare including sandwiches, pretzels and candy bars.

Continued from page 1

Alcoholic beverages may be purchased onboard, however beverage containers may not be brought onboard initially. During the long trips to and from Stellwagen Bank, a short film about life in and around Boston Harbor is shown. There are three levels of seating aboard the catamarans, which are handicapped accessible.

Wearing the right clothing on your whale watch can mean the difference between enjoying your trip and stumbling around a deck while dealing with goose bumps. The first of these suggestions would be for anyone with long hair (male or female) to tie it back before reaching open water. Top speeds on the Voyagers are between 35 and 45 miles per hour, and if you don't cop a squat inside the galley lounge you'll end up gulping mouthfuls of hair.

Courtesy Tom Kleckhefer

A humpback whale disappears below the waves of the North Atlantic.

Another tip goes out to any whale-loving ladies who may be reading. Sacrifice the heels for a couple hours and wear rubber-soled shoes because any waves you may encounter will land you face first on a metal deck. Lastly, the weather out on the open ocean will be colder than it is inland, so do like mama told you and bring a sweater.

The whale watch season will continue in Boston until the fall season causes the whales to migrate to a warmer climate. So if an Indian summer should hit the area, a trip to Boston for a leisurely day out on the water is definitely worth it.

Boyd Tinsley wholeheartedly takes center stage

Courtesy Barnaby Draper

Tinsley's debut CD takes his music far beyond DMB.

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

Long-time violinist of the Dave Mathews Band Boyd Tinsley released his first solo effort this summer entitled, "True Reflections." The album's emotional lyrics leave listeners with the impression that they have had the chance to get to know Tinsley on a personal level. Though the album is Tinsley's story, it holds emotional truths that all listeners can understand and relate to.

"I finally got to the point where I needed to write these songs. I started putting together ideas and recording them on the tour bus, at home, wherever I could," Tinsley said in the album's release statement. He wrote or co-wrote all 11 tracks on the disc.

The album's first track is an acoustic song entitled "It's Alright," which is very catchy and is a bit like a Beatles tune. The next track, "Show Me," sounds as if it was actually recorded in a smoky bar room, which enhances the album's colloquial feeling.

"We didn't try to get a slick, overproducing thing," Tinsley said. "It's just a raw sound coming from the musicians at the moment. When something felt good, that's when it was right. That was the guideline."

Tinsley's country music influences show through in "Run" and "So Glad," providing a counterpoint to the bittersweet "Long Time To Wait" and the '60s style song, "Listen."

Boyd Tinsley
"True Reflections"
RCA

At first, "Perfect World" may seem a bit out of place with its topical sound, but the lilting pop melody still packs serious lyrics.

"['Perfect World'] was for my two kids," Tinsley said. "How do I explain war to a child, something that makes no sense even to me?"

For those who view covers as deadly sins, the slow burning ballad remake of the Neil Young/Crazy Horse classic "Cinnamon Girl" may not be anything compared to the original, but it does make for a great listen.

"I've always been a huge fan of Neil Young's," Tinsley said. "We started out trying an electric approach as Neil did it, but I felt he had done that version and nobody can touch it. So we decided on a quieter, acoustic approach. Toshi Reagon did a great job on the background vocals as well."

Tinsley's retooling of the song is done seamlessly, and unlike most covered songs today he felt no need to omit any of the original lyrics.

A Charlottesville, Va. native, Tinsley grew up in the same neighborhood as DMB drummer Carter Beauford and saxophonist Leroi Moore. He was raised in a musical household, with his father the director of the church choir and his uncle a staple in local jazz bands.

Tinsley began playing the violin in middle school. He quickly became proficient, though he notes that his dog and his family "hated me for a good couple of years."

In his teens, he co-founded the Charlottesville-Albemarle Youth Orchestra, which was later joined by DMB bassist Stefan Lessard. During this time he studied under Isador Saslav of the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra. At age 16 Tinsley turned down the possibility of becoming a young virtuoso and dove head first into the fiddler's world of Stephan Gappelli, Jean-Luc Ponty and Papa John Creach.

During his time at the University of Virginia, Tinsley headlined many all-night coffee house jams.

Upon meeting the young South African singer/songwriter Dave Mathews in 1991 all of Tinsley's side projects were dropped and the Dave Mathews Band came into being.

"I knew it was something special," Tinsley said. "This was some of the most powerful music I'd heard in a long time."

In his career with DMB, Tinsley has performed and recorded in front of countless numbers of fans and sold millions of records. Even with his new solo career, Tinsley still toured with DMB on their 2003 summer tour and performed solo numbers.

"I know my life is gonna be a little crazier than it has been, but I feel more prepared to do it," he said. "The most important thing is to play music, have fun, pour my heart out and move people."

Tinsley will have no problem moving people with this new record.

University of Massachusetts, Amherst
Campus Activities
FIRST WEEK
presents...
DARRELL HAMMOND

LIVE!!!

SATURDAY, September 6 2003
Fine Arts Center, 10pm

Now entering his eighth season on TV's "Saturday Night Live," Darrell Hammond has been applauded by television critics and viewers alike for his uncanny, accurate impressions of a wide range of celebrities and politicians.

$8 for UMass Students/ $12 General Admission

Tickets will be available at the FAC Box Office starting Sep. 2nd for Students only, and Sept. 5th for general admission

TRUST "Before locking into a long term contract for a fitness facility with no machinery in place, why not give the veteran professionals a visit."
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
"Big enough to own the best equipment, but small enough to know your name."
* In business 22 years
* Locally owned & operated"
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0000 90, AMHERST

• Pool Table
• Darts
• Horseshoes
• Keno
• Smoking
• Public Invited
Free Munchies with this ad!
Bud Giveaway Sunday Sept. 7th
Transportation Available
138 East Street Hadley, MA 413-584-9728
Rt. 9
Monday - Sunday 10:00 - 1:00

Need some extra cash?
Come work at a local DB Mart!
Apply in person at the following locations:
• East St. & Plumtree Rd., Springfield
• Old South St., Northampton
• Federal St., Belchertown
• West St., South Amherst
• Triangle St., Amherst.
Fun work environment
Cashier positions with all shifts available.
dbmart
For more information contact Diane at 1-800-255-1525 Ext. 287 EOE

$$ NEED EXTRA CASH? $$
Sign up to participate in upcoming decision-making experiments by the Department of Resource Economics!
For more info & to sign up, please go to:
http://www.umass.edu/expecon
Only a little time required for significant earnings!

Being a student, you can live without a lot of things.

Cable shouldn't be one of them.

Get your first month of select Comcast Digital Cable packages featuring HBO for just $1!
Add Comcast High-Speed Internet for just $1 more! Plus get FREE basic installation!

1-877-407-7806 • comcast-ne.com
Comcast

HBO MTV Discovery Channel MTV2

*Comcast may not service your address. All services are not available in all areas. Offer available in Comcast serviceable areas only. Restrictions may apply. For restrictions, minimum requirements and complete details about service and prices, call 1-877-407-7806. Comcast Digital Plus, Digital Silver, Digital Gold and Comcast High-Speed Internet, dollar offer includes basic installation and one month of service for each product. Offer does not apply to services to which customer currently subscribes. Offer does not include Standard Cable, Federal, State and Local taxes, franchise fees, other related fees or equipment charges. After first month, published rate card rate for Comcast Digital Plus, Digital Silver, Digital Gold and Comcast High-Speed Internet applies. Installation offer is valid for new customers only and does not apply to non-residential or non-standard installations, including installations over 150 ft. from outside cable system. Offer available to residential customers located in Comcast Cable wired and serviceable areas only and is not available to current or former Comcast customers with unpaid balances. Additional charges for non-standard installation, wiring time, and materials may apply for homes not yet wired for cable. Certain services are available separately or as part of other levels of service, and all programming and services are not available in all areas. You must rent a converter and remote control for an additional charge to receive certain services. Installation, additional outlet, change of service, programming access and other charges may apply. Franchise fees, taxes and other fees may apply. Pricing, programming, channel location and packaging may change. Offer applies to one TV. Not valid with any other discount or coupon for Comcast services. Basic Service subscription is required to receive other levels of service. Comcast Digital Cable service is subject to terms and conditions of Comcast Cable Policies & Practices. Ethernet device is required for Comcast High Speed Internet service and may be purchased from Comcast or through a local retail location for an additional fee. Actual speeds vary. Minimum computer system requirements apply. Offer expires 10/05/03. ©2003 Comcast. All rights reserved. ©2003 Home Box Office, Inc. All rights reserved. HBO® is a service mark of Home Box Office, Inc.
A15-090103-Ark

Kiss army and Aero-force: aged but still rocking

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

MANSFIELD, Mass. - On Aug. 24, fans were treated to roughly 10 million watts of electric lighting and enough pyrotechnics to torch a forest at the Tweeter Center in Mansfield as two rock-and-roll legends, Kiss and Aerosmith, united for an unprecedented event. It was a scene of jeans and black t-shirt clad baby-boomers and similarly dressed millenials gathered in mass to rock out together.

Right before the show began, the darkening of the stage signaled the impending arrival of Kiss. There was a hush in the murmurings of the crowd as a deep E-note was emitted from the sound system that was more felt than heard. The pyres of flame erupted and the four painted members of Kiss swarmed the stage in there classic costumes.

Vocalist Paul Stanley gyrated to a crowd of girls, who willingly forgot the fact the man they were swooning for was old enough to be their father. The rock legends cranked out an hour-and-a-half set with stage theatrics bold enough to rival Broadway.

Bassist Gene Simons was the target of the band's one and only cover of the night, "Happy Birthday." With a sadistic grin, demonic tongue and all, Simons gorged himself in birthday cake and resumed playing. Later in the show, he would be hoisted over 50 feet into the catwalks above the stage where he played and then almost instantly reappeared back on ground level.

Kiss and Aerosmith
Tweeter Center Mansfield
Aug. 24

Drummer Peter Chris got involved in the acrobatics when, in the middle of a solo, his entire drum kit was lifted nearly to the ceiling of the stadium. Easily the most stationary of the band, guitarist Ace Freely was not one to be overlooked with his huge silver shoulder pads and earsplitting guitar licks.

COURTESY REVIEWJOURNAL.COM

Sexy, wired and weathered, Aerosmith still delivers.

For their closing scene, Chris, Freely and Simons were all elevated above the stage while Stanley destroyed his guitar, all of this as a Fourth of July-like display of fireworks erupted around them. Then the mad dash of 10,000 restroom-bound rockers ensued.

One could have easily left the show at this point with a good, healthy ringing in the ears and a great story to tell. But when the PA system boomed to life announcing that Aerosmith would be taking the stage in 10 minutes, not even eight-dollar nachos kept people from getting back to their seats.

Then it came: the first whining chords from Joe Perry's guitar tore through the stands. Front-man Steven Tyler in all his mad hatter grandeur emerged on stage accompanied as always by his signature scarf-covered microphone.

Twenty-thousand voices rivaled the screeching vocals of Tyler as he wailed out contemporary hits as well as classics from as far back as Aerosmith's first album, "Toys in the Attic." While singing the intro to "Cryin'," Tyler stopped and with a laugh said, "Oh! So you know the bitch too."

COURTESY ANGELFIRE.COM

Cartooney, decadent and ancient, Kiss still rocks.

Unlike their predecessors, Aerosmith did not have lighting that could be seen from space, but the stage setup was still amazing. With naked neon women and other bar-style signs, as well as a stage-wide projection screen that displayed images to go with the music, they proved to be the true rulers of the stage.

The ambiance of their risqué images fit perfectly with the two tracks they played from their upcoming release due out in early 2004. These tunes were more jazzy and bluesy than most of the band's recent work, but to long-time listeners it should sound quite familiar.

Age was not a factor in the performance of Aerosmith. Tyler and Perry both worked the entire stage, including the catwalk that went out into the crowd. They cranked out song after song with barely any pause in between. And for all those who would say that Steven Tyler has lost his voice over the years, all that can be said is that he still sounds great live.

After jamming for just over an hour, Aerosmith fled the stage much to the dismay of the crowd, which for a moment nearly turned to rioting in demand of an encore. Instead the crowd simply filed out of the stands wearing smiles and shouting, "Huh?!" at each other.

This was truly a once in a lifetime tour for not only Kiss and Aerosmith fans, but for all lovers of rock music. Some may scoff at how old bands like these two are still going strong. Blame it on the mass midlife crises of their fan base or whatever else you want, but it does make for awesome concerts.

•••

Southern natives Saliva opened the event. Try as they might with their angry lyrics and booming sound, they could not quite get the crowed pumped up and into their set.

The Mercantile
NORTHAMPTON 108 MAIN ST. 584-1205 · AMHERST Carriage Shops 549-1396 · Mon-Sat 10-6 Thur & Fri to 9 Sun 12-6

AMHERST COLLEGE

DINING SERVICES OPPORTUNITIES

Amherst College is accepting applications for the following part-time positions beginning late August/early September.

COOKS · FOOD SERVERS
DISHWASHERS · KITCHEN RUNNERS
Weekday and weekend shifts (breakfast, lunch & dinner). Previous food preparation and kitchen experience preferred.

MEAL CHECKERS
Breakfast, lunch, dinner and weekend schedules available. Must be able to work a minimum of three shifts (approx. 3 hours each) up to a maximum of 19 hours per week. Light cleaning duties (including tables) during and after hours. Will train.

CATERING
Banquet Captains · Waitstaff · Bartenders
Drivers/Setup · Catering Dishwashers
Work special function/catered events. Previous experience preferred but will train.

CAMPUS CENTER COFFEE HOUSE
Counter Service - weekday late afternoon shifts available.

We offer competitive starting rates. No benefits. Interested candidates may submit a resume or complete an application at: Office of Human Resources, 201 Converse Hall, Amherst College, Amherst, MA 01002-5000.

Amherst College is an Equal Opportunity/Affirmative Action employer and encourages women, minorities and persons with disabilities to apply.

CVS pharmacy
1 Hour Photo
Student Discount
$1.00 off 1 hour processing (prints only)
$2.00 off 1 hour digital processing (prints & cd)
Valid Student ID required.
Available at both Amherst locations only.
Original roll developing only.
Offer ends:
Sept. 30, 2003

Natural selection.

How smart is this: All the textbooks you need for up to 60% off retail prices. And all you have to do is go to half.com and type in the book titles, or ISBN numbers. Then let nature take its course.

For a limited time, first-time buyers
Save an additional $5
on purchases of $50 or more!
Simply use this code:
Amherst2003

half.com by ebay
Same textbooks. Smarter prices.

*Average retail price of a new college textbook $73 based on 2002 data from Follett Corp., Associated Press, 1/27/03. Average Half.com college textbook price $26 based on site statistics, January 2003. †First time buyers only. Limited time offer, excludes shipping and handling; offer subject to change or termination without prior notice. Copyright 2003 Half.com, Inc. All rights reserved. Half.com and the Half.com logo are trademarks of Half.com, Inc. eBay and the eBay logo are registered trademarks of eBay, Inc.

Milloy fits Bill

Former Patriot rejoins Bledsoe

By John Wawrow
Associated Press

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. (AP) – Lawyer Milloy agreed to sign with the Buffalo Bills on Wednesday, a day after being cut by the New England Patriots.

The move adds more drama to an already intriguing season-opener – the Bills host the Patriots on Sunday. Besides Milloy, Buffalo quarterback Drew Bledsoe was a star in New England.

Milloy significantly upgrades a young Buffalo defensive backfield and could provide insight into the Patriots' plans as the Bills prepare for New England.

Milloy was expected to join the team for his first practice on Thursday.

Coach Gregg Williams said he would have to first speak with Milloy before determining whether he would be ready to play Sunday.

Milloy was released by the Patriots for salary-cap reasons on Tuesday. The move created a stir, in part because Milloy was a team leader and had started 106 consecutive games in his seven NFL seasons.

Adding the bonus to his $4.4 million salary for this season, Milloy was to count $5.25 million against New England's cap.

The Bills, projected to have $4 million of room under the cap, were one of a handful of team that had made offers to sign the player.

Terms of Milloy's new deal were not immediately available.

Milloy led the Patriots in tackles in 2001, when New England won the Super Bowl, and recorded 100 or more tackles five times. Last year he had no sacks, no forced fumbles and no interceptions. His 91 tackles were the fewest he'd tallied since becoming a full-time starter.

He's the latest addition to a revamped Bills defense that was bolstered last spring by the additions of linebackers Takeo Spikes and Jeff Posey and tackle Sam Adams. Together, they improve a unit that gave up 25 points a game, and managed a league-low 19 turnovers and 31 sacks.

Buffalo's current starters at safety are Coy Wire, who's coming off an encouraging rookie season, and Pierson Prioleau, a four-year veteran who was a first-time starter last season. Neither recorded an interception last year.

Bills president Tom Donahoe denied speculation that Milloy might have lost a step.

"We think he's still a good football player. Obviously the Patriots do too, they tried to keep [him]," Donahoe said.

Bledsoe had high praise for Milloy, having spent six seasons with the player in New England.

"I will tell you this that everybody that plays against Lawyer is aware of where he is and aware of his ability to make big plays," Bledsoe said. "As far as his speed, his aggressiveness, his physical style, I haven't seen a falloff at all."

Besides improving the Bills defense, Milloy would be valuable for Bledsoe to provide insight into the Patriots defensive plans.

"I would certainly love to sit down and pick his brain," Bledsoe said.

Wire welcomed the chance of the Bills landing Milloy, even if it meant Wire losing his starting job.

"Any time you can have a guy like that come in and help your defense, you're excited about it," Wire said. "This is a team game."

Earlier in the day, New England fullback Larry Centers didn't want to consider the prospect Milloy joining the Bills, their next opponent.

"That would be a nightmare," Centers said during a conference call with members of the Buffalo media.

Bouncing back

Continued from page 14

Fairfield 2-1 in a thrilling double-overtime showdown Saturday.

Sophomore Jaime Bawden got the Minutemen out to an early lead, beating Fairfield goalie Lauren Thomas at 17:56. The UMass defense held strong until Fairfield's Lauren Pizzi tied it up in the second half and forced overtime.

The game remained knotted up until Katelyn Woolfrey, set up by teammate Rachel Skorupski, knocked it home to end the game in the second extra frame.

"The outcome of the first game was positive," said Shea. "But our performance in the second game was by far better than that of our first game."

Maryland out-shot UMass 42-2 in their impressive victory. Tocco made a career best 21 saves in the contest as well.

Conference games will be crucial for the Minutewomen this season, and they will only have two regular season conference games at home –against Temple on Oct. 10 and St. Joseph's on Oct. 12.

Arguably the biggest game of the season will be on Oct. 19 in Richmond. The defending conference champs are predicted to repeat, and will surely be a tough test for the Maroon and White.

"Every team that we play is great and there's always a dogfight," said Shea. "Each opponent brings something different to the table."

If the Minutewomen perform well enough this season to advance to the Final Four, they will have a distinct advantage over the competition. UMass will play host to the NCAA Division I Championships, starting with first and second round action the weekend of Nov. 15-16 and the finals on Nov. 19 and 21.

BC prevails

Continued from page 14

UMass. The momentum of the game shifted and the Maroon and White went on the attack.

Caitlin Beresin single-handedly jumpstarted the UMass offense a few minutes into the second half, when she broke through the BC defense and rocketed a shot that was stoned by BC goal keeper Jillian Savoy (two saves).

Beresin continued to spark the Minutewomen, driving deep into the circle and colliding with Savoy, nearly getting off a game-tying shot.

The Eagles and Minutewomen traded offensive rallies for the duration after Beresin's play.

Kim French nearly added to the Eagles' advantage with a blast that rang off the far post. Jaime Bawden followed up a few minutes later, sprinting into the circle and getting off a shot that barely went wide of the Eagles' goal.

Boston College put the game away with 13:06 remaining. After Tocco was bombarded with an array of shots, BC forward Sara York chipped a rebound the home to put the game out of reach.

The upcoming schedule doesn't get easier for the Minutewomen. They have four consecutive road games before returning home to host Providence on Sept. 20.

Want to write? Come to the Welcome Meeting on Sept. 10 @ 6 p.m.

TRUST
"Before locking into a long term contract for a fitness facility with no machinery in place, why not give the veteran professionals a visit."
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
"Big enough to own the best equipment, but small enough to know your name."
* In business 22 years
* Locally owned & operated"
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0090 90 AMHERST

COWLS
BACK TO SCHOOL
Great Ideas!
Organize your study space!
• Install shelving
• Build a bookcase
• Design a computer station
Choose shelving of Melamine, Plywood, COWLS pine or COWLS oak. Select from a variety of fastening systems using clips, standards or brackets.
NOTE: We cut shelving to your specifications!
Customize a school tool box!
Be the HANDY PERSON in your dorm!
Tool boxes, tools, fasteners, supplies and the expertise you need ...
ALL AT COWLS!
For All Your Building and Remodeling Needs
COWLS BUILDING SUPPLY
125 Sunderland Road, North Amherst
7-5 M-F • 8-3 Sat. • FREE local delivery
413-549-0001 • www.cowls.com

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
Liquor:
Wild Turkey 101* 1 liter...$21.99
Bushmills 1 liter...$22.99
Chivas Regal 750 ml...$24.99
Seagram's Vodka All Flavors 1.75 lt...$14.99
Margaritaville 1.75 lt...$27.99
Rubinoff All Flavors 1.75 lt...$9.99
Beer:
Molson 36 pk cans...$18.99* Free Cooler Bag
Rolling Rock 30 pk cans...$17.49* Free Cooler Bag
Millwaukee's Best 30 pk cans...$10.99*
Busch & Busch Light 24 pk btls...$10.99*
Coors Light 20 pk btls...$12.99*
Michelob Ultra 12 pk btl. $8.99*
*all beer prices plus deposit
Wine:
Jacobs Creek Reserve Char., Cab., Shiraz, Riesling 750 ml...$9.99
Canyon Road Chard., Cab., Merlot 750 ml...$5.99
Talus Chard., Cab., Merlot., P. Grigio 750 ml...$5.99
Nathanson Creek Chard., Cab., Merlot 750 ml...$3.99
Santa Carolina All Flavors 1.5 lt...$6.99
Inglenook Blush, Chablis, Chianti 4 lt...$8.99
Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon.- Sat. 9am- 11pm
SALE 9/4 THROUGH 9/10

SLEEPY HOLLOW BED CO.
MATTRESSES • FUTONS • BEDS & ETC.
MISMATCH MATTRESS
TWIN SET $199
MATT ONLY $119
FULL SET $249
MATT ONLY $149
QUEEN SET $299
MATT ONLY $189
FUTONS
Full* Queen
4" Cotton + Foam $110 $135
6" Cotton + Foam $135 N/A
8" Cotton + Foam $155 $180
Cushy Coil $195 $230
*twin size also available in select models
NEWYORKER
Full $99
ROMA PLATFORM
Full $149
Queen $179
ALBANY
Oak or Natural*
Full $199
Queen $229
*While supplies last
328 College St. • Rt. 9 • Amherst • 253-2337
M-TH 10-6 • FRI 10-7 • SAT 10-6 • SUN 12-4
WE DELIVER!
Walmart · Rt. 116 N · Stop & Shop · Rt. 116 S · Amherst College · Rt. 9 · Amherst Common · Sleepy Hollow Bed · Spirit Haus

AMHERST SURVIVAL CENTER
"FROM TRASH TO TREASURES"
Furniture Sale and Collection
Saturday September 6 9am - 1pm
Town Common
Rain or Shine
• Buy used furniture at very low prices (delivery available)
• All furniture in good condition will be accepted free charge on the common
• Rugs, mattresses, and unusable furniture will be accepted for a disposal fee of $10 per item
• Call 549-3968 for more information

LIQUORS 44
Welcome Back!
Smirnoff Twist 1.0 liter $12.99
Captain Morgan 1.75 liter $21.99
Jose Cuervo 1.75 liter $30.99
Crown Royal 750 ml $18.99
Smirnoff 80° 1.75 liter $18.99
Baileys Irish Cream 1.75 liter $34.99
Hennessy 750 ml $24.99
1.75 liter $31.99
Tanqueray 1.75 liter $26.99
½ KEGS
Bud / Bud Light $49.99
Coors Light $49.99
Natural Light & Ice $44.99
Michelob & Michelob Light $52.99
Berkshire Brewing (All Flavors) $99.99
All Kegs Plus Deposit
AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA · HADLEY · 253-9344 · FULL REDEMPTION AT ALL LOCATIONS · VISA · MasterCard
NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR TYPOGRAPHICAL ERRORS
DON'T DRINK & DRIVE

Football readies for opener

Continued from page 14

non-conference matchup is rust – a possible result from the 10 months without competition since they downed Rhode Island, 48-21, in the last game of the 2002 season.

"We're worried about execution and penalties," Whipple said. "We're going to miss blocks, we're going to miss tackles – that just goes with it. We haven't scrimmaged in a while. It's just kind of keeping the integrity. If bad things happen, how you're going to handle it; if good things happen, how you're going to handle it."

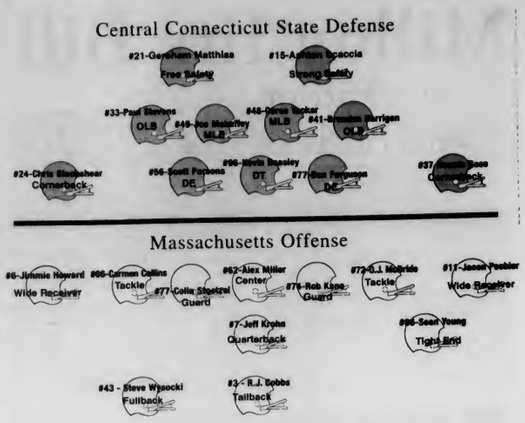
While there's no arguing that 50 points isn't close, the Blue Devils did manage to put up 20 points against UNH – better than the opponents of Villanova, Northeastern and James Madison (Hampton, Stonehill and Liberty, respectively) could do in their first-week contests.

The offense came thanks to junior quarterback Scott Dolch and freshman running back Cory Harge. Dolch threw a 22-yard touchdown pass to senior tight end Mike Malone, and Harge was the brightest spot for the Blue Devils, rushing nine times for 98 yards, including a 60-yard touchdown run that gave CCSU its 20th point.

Significantly enough, the Blue Devils had more first downs and rushing yards, and fewer penalties against UNH than UMass did on Nov. 9, 2002 in a 31-14 loss to the Wildcats.

One aspect to watch will be the use of sophomore R.J. Cobbs. Last year's A-10 Rookie of the Year has become the hottest topic in UMass football, due to the coaching staff's decision to move him out of the tailback spot where he earned the award.

Cobbs rushed for 1,117 yards on 192 carries, an average of 5.6 yards per attempt. It looks like Cobbs will move out to a receiver spot, though, clearing a hole for sophomore Raunny Rosario, who averaged a solid 4.9 yards per carry last year. There were also rumors that Cobbs would play some defensive back, but Whipple eliminated that option, at least for this Saturday.



The Maroon and White enters the game ranked No. 14 in I-AA by The Sports Network, and has an extra incentive to procure the win on Saturday. Whipple currently stands at 59 victories at the helm of the Minutemen. With the win, he would become the third coach in the history of the program to reach 40.

Vic Fusia and Dick MacPherson each reached the 40-win plateau. Fusia went on to record 59 victories with UMass, the team record.

More important to Whipple, though, is that his squad pays enough attention to the game Saturday without looking forward to the rest of the season – which features the other end of the college football spectrum in I-A Kansas State next Saturday.

"[CCSU coach Paul Schudel] is a good guy. He's a good coach," Whipple said. "They have a plan, but I haven't seen any sign that our guys will relax."

"It is a regular game. It counts. It'll be on my record, it'll probably be on my tombstone somewhere."

Hostile Orono a tough visit

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Because of its unforgiving weather and lack of proximity to opponent schools, Orono, Maine has never been a favorite locale for visitors. And if the opening game of the 2003 season is any indication of things to come, football fans in the great northern woods, as well as the team they support, will make it even less inviting.

The Black Bears drew a record crowd of 9,345 to Alfond Stadium for a clash with No. 3 Montana, and then gave the Grizzlies all they could handle before eventually succumbing 30-20.

Starting new eras

One of the primary things the crowd at Alfond Stadium came to see was their new freshman quarterback. His name is Ron Whitcomb, and he, along with Villanova's Joe Casamento, is one of two young signal callers in the A-10 who have the daunting task of replacing legends in their respective programs.

Whitcomb is stepping in to lead the Black Bears following the completion of the Jake Eaton era, and was good on 15-of-31 attempts for 188 yards and two scores against Montana.

The freshman also carried the ball 15 times for 44 yards. Although he was picked off once, he certainly did a respectable job controlling an offense designed around tailback Marcus Williams and keeping Maine in the game.

Casamento was more than efficient in his debut, a 41-6 thumping of Hampton.

Taking over right where reigning A-10 Offensive Player of the Year Brett Gordon left off, the sophomore completed 24-of-30 passes for 252 yards and three touchdowns without throwing an intercept to earn A-10 Offensive Player of the Week honors.

Who let the dogs out?

Northeastern's 78-6 demolition of Division II Stonehill College may have been an example of two teams in different galaxies talent-wise, but the vaunted Husky ground game was certainly more than impressive.

Entering the season with one of the nation's premier one-two punches returning at tailback, coach Don Brown saw last year's leading rusher, Anthony Riley, gain 100 yards on a mere six carries, and finds himself below two underclassmen on the stat sheet when the day was done.

Leading the way was A-10 Rookie of the Week Shawnn Gyles, who finished the day with an astounding line in his first collegiate game: 172 yards and four touchdowns on just five carries.

Fellow freshman Shane Hopkins also eclipsed the century mark, picking up 109 yards and two touchdowns on only six carries.

Tim Gale, last year's second leading rusher, gained only 57 yards on five attempts but did score twice.

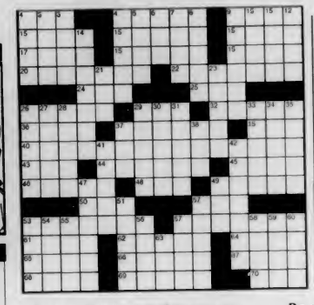
Charlie A10 Conference Notebook

The Area's Best Fitness & Health Club
UltimateFitness
THE HEALTH AND FITNESS CENTER
Located in the Stop & Shop Plaza on Route 9
For more information call 253-7571
SEMESTER SPECIAL $160
5 Year Anniversary Special: FREE UNLIMITED TANNING!
(With purchase of a semester membership by 9/21/03!)
NO ENROLLMENT FEE!!
• Full Aerobics Programs Including: -Cardio Kickboxing -Yoga -And Many More
• Nutritional
• Consultation
• Tanning
• Sauna
• Juice Bar & Supplements
• Personal Training
• Stairmasters
• Precor Treadmills
• Lifecycle Recumbant Bikes
• Lifecycle Upright Bikes
• Precor Crosstrainers
• Body Masters and Icarian Free Weights
• Cybex Circuit Training Equip.
Inquire About Pilates
Now offering Aerobics only memberships

Fabulous Gift!
CLINIQUE Bonus is here!
With your Clinique purchase of $19.50 get this 7-piece gift, Free. Quantities are limited. Now thru Sunday, September 14th.
Fall Gift
7-piece Gift
Clarifying Lotion 7 • Moisture Surge Extra
High Impact Eye Shadow in Sugar Sugar • Colour Surge Lipstick in Wow Violet
Glosswear For Lips in Air Kiss • Clinique Happy Heart Perfume Spray
Cosmetic Bag
Cedar Chest
ARTFUL FURNISHINGS · QUALITY LINENS · IMAGINATIVE GIFTS
Thornes Marketplace · 150 Main St., Northampton, MA · 413-584-3860

sports@dailycollegian.com
sports@dailycollegian.com
sports@dailycollegian.com

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
(32 years of service—and counting!)
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Fall Semester 2003 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Room 163C of the Campus Center for all meetings •Sept. 8 (Mon) •Sept. 9 (Tues) •Sept. 10 (Wed)
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs, Sep 11th @ Boltwood table CC Concourse.
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!



Across
1 Consumer protection org.
4 Like Heidi
9 Challenge for jrs.
13 Vietnam neighbor
15 Pine cousin
16 "Blondie" kid
17 Matty or Felipe
18 Follow upon
19 Midnight opposite
20 Thumbed a ride
22 Ladies
24 Portable bed
25 Green parrot
26 Disprove
29 Marshy area
32 Spunk
36 Midterm or final
37 Computer capacity
39 "— appetit!"
40 Shuttle destination (2 wds.)
43 Nabokov novel
44 Puts forth effort
45 Smooth the way
46 Jaunty hat
48 Pigment
49 Destines
50 Noncom
52 Distress call
53 Band instrument
57 Roomette
61 Annapolis inst.
62 Prima donnas
64 Flashy sign
65 Hang around
66 Jung's feminine side
67 Like horror flicks
68 Tree juices
69 Gulf nation
70 Mermaid's domain

Down
1 Unexciting
2 Romantic island
3 Car-wheel lock
4 Frozen rain
5 Magician's prop
6 Capone foe
7 Move quickly
8 Valentino role
9 Letter answerer (2 wds.)
10 Gin flavoring
11 Love, to Claudius
12 Scads
14 Knuckle under
21 Peppery
23 Diary keeper
26 Fix up an old house
27 Ooze out
28 Storybook elephant
29 Honored in style
30 Manicurist's board
31 "Cannery Row" actor
33 "Lusitania" sinker (hyph.)
34 Grove
35 Trouser parts
37 USA neighbor
38 Thing in law
41 Release (2 wds.)
42 Dessting
47 Literary works
49 Watch pocket
51 Tomorrow's
52 — eve
52 — B. Anthony
53 Sloppy kiss
54 Movie terrier
55 Break suddenly
56 Number of Muses
57 Visited
58 Execs
59 Knowledge
60 New Age singer
63 Robust energy

Previous puzzle solved

Q	U	I	R		M	A	I	N		L	I	D	S
U	A	B	A	N		A	H	S	O		O	N	I	T
A	G	I	L	E		B	I	A	S		A	F	A	R
D	E	S	P	I	T	E		T	I	M	U	N	E
				V	E	T		A	N		I		N	E
H	E	U	B	E	N			G	L	E	N	N
T	A	K	E	S		C	R	O	S	S	T	I	N	G
E	V	E	R		S	H	I	N	S		M	E	I	N
	E	S	C	A	P	I	N	G		V	O	I	L	A
		H	I	L	L	S		W	A	Y	L	A	Y
J	O	B		L	A	D		S	A	Z
E	G	R	E	S	S		C	A	R	A	M	E	L	S
S	L	A	T		H	A	U	S		T	A	B	O	O
S	E	W	N		E	K	E	S		E	T	B	O	W
E	D	N	A		D	A	D			I	S	K	I	S

12-25-02 © 2002 United Feature Syndicate, Inc

New Writers
The first Welcome New Writers Meeting for new writers and comic artists will be held at The Collegian office in the Campus Center basement at 6 p.m., Wednesday, September 10.

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

Lunch
- Oriental Beef and Vegetables
- Chicken Cutlet Sandwich
- Spicy Black Bean Burger

Dinner
Indoor Barbeque Special Worcester/Franklin
- Barbeque Salmon
- Vegetable Kabob Hampshire/Berkshire
- Barbeque Chicken Sandwich
- Vegetable Lo Mein

Daily Weather Forcast

For Amherst, Mass.

Thursday
- High: 79
- Low: 56

Friday
- High: 74
- Low: 50

Saturday
- High: 77
- Low: 50

Production Crew

On staff today

Night Editor
Dan Lamothe

Photo Technician
Gerald H. Ling

Copy Editor
Barbara Lotto

Production Supervisor
Scott Pihl

Production Staff
Shannon Farrington / Jennifer Eastwood

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You may have to wait throughout the day for the information you need.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You prove yourself an excellent listener today if you stop being so stubborn.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Someone may be taking you seriously today when you are just playing around.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Surround yourself with people who give you continual affirmation.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Contact from someone far from home will inspire you to act uncharacteristic.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Your ideas may be challenged today, and it's important for you to hold your ground.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You may be standing on the brink of an unbelievable discovery today.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You're calm, positive approach will be well received and appreciated.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Your intuition is keen, but you may become derailed if intellect controls you.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You may be after a little more gusto from people you associate with today.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Memories will play a big part in how you think and act today.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
This is a good day to be thinking of love and romance.

Quote of the Day

"Take the time to pull the weeds choking flowers in your life."
- Jerry Cantrell

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Auto for Sale

Jeep Cherokee Sport- 1995. Perfect student car, A/C, Great CD system, original owner, excellent condition, 90K, automatic. 413-296-0060 $3,600 or O.B.O.

Childcare

Seeking responsible babysitter for 2 year old. Afternoons and evening availability. Transportation negotiable. 413-256-2134

Employment

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Employment

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals for part time positions. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are must. Call (413) 584-4746

ARHS Varsity Girls Gymnastics Coach needed ASAP. Call Amber 413-262-2272

Earthfoods is hiring Co-Managers for 100% Student Run Café. Salary starts at $6.75 hr. Applications available in Student Union Rm 406. Also across from Commonwealth Room

Employment

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 62

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com

Employment

Experienced part-time linecooks and dishwashers. Apply in person during day before 5:00pm Amherst Brewing Co.

For Sale

Lowest Long Distance Rates! Why let the "Big Three" rip you off? College students save here. www.Ldsavings.cjb.net

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jaguly.com or (413)253-0051.

Furniture

Futon Complete set $80, scanner or CD Burner (brand new) $40 Antique 2-Tier mahogany scalloped end table $30; amherststuff@comcast.net or 427-7109 Walt/Franci

Instruction

Learn to SCUBA Dive Curry Hicks Pool Monday, Tuesday, or Wednesday 7pm to 10pm classes start Sept 8 Call Project Deep 800-282-0977

Jazz Piano Lessons Explore your creativity Beginner to Advanced Learn a wide range of styles Reasonable Rates Contact Stephen Page at 413-297-7910

Miscellaneous

Want to buy/sell TEXTBOOKS & other stuff LOCALLY? ... NO shipping hassles, NO payment middlemen! All 4 FREE! Visit www.collegeshack.com today!

Travel

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

Travel

Spring Break 2004. 1-800-648-4849

Spring Break '04 with StudentCity.com and Maxim Magazine! Get hooked up with Free Trips, Cash, and VIP Status as a Campus Rep! Choose from 15 of the hottest destinations. Book early for FREE MEALS, FREE DRINKS and 150% Lowest Price Guarantee! To reserve online or view our Photo Gallery, visit www.studentcity.com or Call 1-888-SPRING-BREAK!

Wanted

We are looking for women who are breast-feeding an infant less than 6 months of age to participate in a study investigating breast milk and environmental pollutants Gift certificates will be provided One feeding worth of milk is required in a one time visit Contact Dr. Kathleen Arcaro at 413-577-1823 or karcaro@nrc.umass.edu

ADVERTISE WITH COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS! Come visit the Campus Center Basement to learn more!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Eagles storm in, dominate Mass. clash

By Matt Stewart
Collegian Correspondent

Bragging rights were at stake last night when intrastate rival Boston College paid the Massachusetts Field Hockey team a visit at Garber Field.

The Eagles, who came into town after suffering a tough opening game loss, were hungry to get in the win column, and proceeded to down the Minutewomen, 2-0.

The Eagles defense was the dominant factor in the game, keeping UMass out of its zone and holding the Minutewomen to only two shots.

This, coupled with an opportunistic offense, enabled BC to capture the victory.

Boston College	2
UMass	0

"We didn't play particularly well," UMass coach Patty Shea said. "I think that they let themselves down tonight and that's the most difficult thing. UMass is a better team than what played in this game."

BC (1-1) wasted no time getting started. At the 6:08 mark, Boston College forward Kim French knocked in a rebound to give the Eagles the 1-0 advantage.

The Eagles continued to create great offensive opportunities for themselves, but Tocco (7 saves) wouldn't let up, and made a key kick save on a point-blank shot. Moments later, they stuffed Boston College junior Kerri Kulesza when she streaked untouched into the circle.

"She's keeping us in games," Shea said of her junior goalkeeper. "We had some breakdowns on defensive corners and some plays that weren't really well executed, that was the problem. [The goals] weren't her fault, it was the defense in front of her that didn't run the correct plays."

The Minutewomen (1-2) had a few offensive streaks deep into the Eagles' zone in the first half, but were unable to tally a shot.

"In the first half we just kept playing into their hands," Shea said. "We need to go around the mess but we kept trying to smash it through. I think that one of the biggest things is that you have to play with what the defense gives you. Sometimes we try to pinpoint and do the spectacular when we should keep it simple.

"If we do that," she continued, "it may take a few extra passes but we will be successful. But that's a learning process. We have a young team and that's going to happen."

The second half was a different story for

Continued on page 11

Ready to roll

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Sean Young and the Minutemen begin their season against Central Connecticut State University on Saturday. Gametime is scheduled for 1 p.m. at McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

UM football set for opener

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

With the 2003 football season just days away, the Massachusetts football team is ready to play. Enough talk, enough prediction, enough questions about a squad that hasn't played an official down in 10 months.

The team opens up at home on Saturday against Central Connecticut State University (0-1) at 1 p.m. The Blue Devils are coming off a 70-20 whipping at the hands of another Atlantic 10 school, New Hampshire. On Sept. 7 last year, the Minutemen downed CCSU 52-3, and while Saturday's game is expected by many to end in a similarly lopsided result, UMass coach Mark Whipple certainly isn't ready to proclaim victory.

"In first games anything can happen," Whipple said. "I've said that before. I've had teams play terrible the first game, and play for a championship eight weeks later, and I've had teams play well the first game, and sort of go in the pot after that."

CCSU's 50-point loss to UNH wasn't the worst of last weekend's blowouts – A-10 member Northeastern stomped Stonehill, 78-6 – but there's no mystery to Saturday's matchup.

The Blue Devils, while a respectable team in their own right, play in one of the weaker conferences in I-AA, the Northeast Conference. The word "powerhouse" doesn't apply here. Still, CCSU has played one game already, while the only competition the Minutemen have faced recently is themselves in intrasquad scrimmages.

That worries Whipple, whose main concern is that his team will "come out stale" against the Blue Devils.

"We're at the point now where we've practiced enough, we're skilled enough, we're veteran enough that we really need to play the game," he said.

Adding to the dilemmas the Minutemen will have to stare down in this weekend's

Continued on page 12

Return to form

Field hockey bounces back

By Matt Stewart
Collegian Correspondent

After building a very respectable program over the last few years, Massachusetts field hockey coach Patty Shea observed the Minutewomen perform an off year of sorts in 2002.

It was an up-and-down campaign during which they dropped their first 14 games before they found their winning stride and went 4-2 in Atlantic 10 play. They eventually advanced all the way to the conference tournament final before a 4-1 loss to Richmond concluded their season.

The 2003 squad features a wealth of experienced players, including seven starters back from last year's team. This, coupled with a strong incoming freshmen class, poses a serious threat to the opposition.

"We're a new team with a different style of play," Shea said. "We have to evaluate and learn from what we did last year."

The Maroon and White looks to be strong up front in 2003, despite junior forward Ashley Gilbert seeing limited action due to a preseason injury.

Adrianne Monaco (9 points, 4 goals in 2002), Caitlin Beresin (4 points, 2 goals) and sophomore Patricia Borneo are three players Shea hopes will help carry the bulk of the offensive load.

Borneo, who has made quite a name for herself at the collegiate level, also made herself known worldwide this past month.

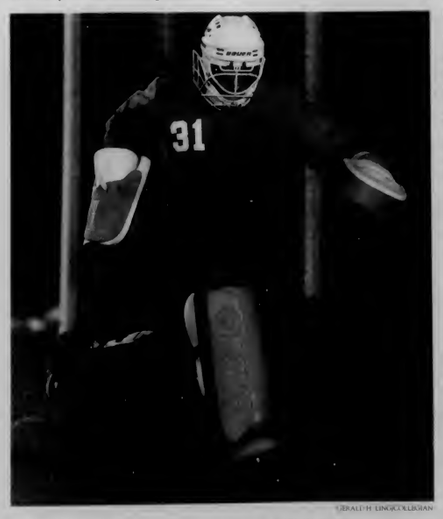
A member of the Atlantic 10 All-Championship Team and the National Field Hockey Coaches Association Division I National Academic Squad, Borneo competed in the Pan-American Games for her native country of Trinidad and Tobago.

Midfield also appears to be an area of strength for the Minutewomen in their upcoming season. Kristen Hopewood, Rachel Skorupski and UMass-Dartmouth transfer Robin Dziedzic, a native of Palmer, Mass., will represent the core of the unit.

The backfield poses the biggest question marks for the Minutewomen.

Sophomore sensation Jaime Bawden – who led UMass in points (12 points, 6 goals) – is back, along with fellow sophomore Katelyn Woolfrey. But those are the only two returning faces in the backfield, and the other spots are up in the air.

UMass is also fortunate to have two top-notch goalkeepers in Ashley Egland and Sophomore Christine Tocco.



Egland was the primary netminder last season, and posted a 2.71 GAA. She also recorded a shutout against rival Rhode Island in the final game of the regular season. Tocco, however, has started every game for the Minutewomen thus far.

The incoming freshmen will also play a vital role this season. Shea picked up many stellar recruits, including midfielder Whitney Hopwood (Lexington, Mass., Lexington High School), Back Kwylan Jaggassar (Longdenville Trinidad and Tobago, St. Augustine), MF Sarah Mulvanity (Tewksbury, Mass., Tewksbury High School), MF Meghan Pawlowski (Moorpark, Calif., Moorpark High School), MF/B Tracy Razzano (Cliffton Parks, N.Y., Shenendehowa High School), MF/F Gina Sanders (Morgan Hill, Calif., Live Oak High School), MF Marije Tigchelaar (The Hague, Netherlands), B Nicole Vreeman (Bloemendall, Netherlands) and F/MF Jackie Zacarian (Amherst, Mass., Amherst Regional High School).

"I think that all incomers have something huge to add to this team," Shea said. "They're going to be important to our success this season."

UMass split their opening weekend of play, suffering a tough 7-0 loss to the Maryland Terrapins on Sunday and downing

Continued on page 11

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore goalie Christine Tocco stopped seven shots in the Minutewomen's 2-0 loss to Boston College. Tocco has taken over the starting role this season.

T-shirt trauma

Yanks fans don't get it

Matt Brady

Boston sucks.

At least that's what some Yankee fans are saying these days.

I got my first glimpse of the new t-shirts during my first visit to Yankee Stadium, only to see the Sox get carved up by Andy Pettitte. But as dismal as the game itself was, the new garb of the Yankee fan was even more upsetting.

Despite the Red Sox-Yankees dichotomy, I had always respected Yankee fans – most of the ones I knew were dedicated to their team, standing by the past success of the Yankees rather than taking pot shots at the Red Sox, who they maintained were not their rivals.

Then I saw a Yankee fan wearing the shirt. A red and white plain t-shirt that read, "Boston Sucks." The fans that had for so long maintained their dignity had stooped to a dismal level. Not only had they decided to go after their "rivals," but they blatantly copied the shirts that the die hard fans of their counterparts had created a few years earlier. A shameless forgery. Yankee fans, who openly mock Red Sox fans for their immaturity in bringing about the "Yankees suck" chant, were now chanting in just the same manner.

The Yankees don't suck. In fact, they are the single most successful franchise in the history of professional sport. Most Red Sox fans are well aware of this fact.

The importance of the "Yankees suck" culture is that it unites Red Sox nation and heightens the rivalry with the far more successful Pinstripers. When someone joins in the chanting, the fan is declaring hatred for the Yankees, not that he believes them to be an inferior team. Chanting "Yankees suck!" at a Sox-Royals contest is overkill, but somehow Red Sox fans have come to identify themselves with what the chant really indicates – they are almost as much Yankee haters as Red Sox fans.

New York fans, who have every reason to love their team, as it has brought them success year in and year out, have stooped to the level of copying the ideas of Red Sox fans. Over the years, the Red Sox have given their faithful as much reason to despise them as to love them.

Yankee fans have no reason to resent the Red Sox or be jealous of the team. They have, for a long time, maintained dignity, staying steadfast in their knowledge that they don't have enough fingers and toes for all their World Series rings. Yankee fans who once tried to insist that there was no rivalry between themselves and Red Sox fans are now going head-to-head with their counterparts. In fact, these fans just brought the rivalry to a new level.

What's even worse is that the t-shirt reads: "Boston sucks." If fans want to heighten the rivalry, they should do it with the team and with the fans, not with the city. As many Bostonians will tell you, if not for their fair city and its Minutemen, we might be watching cricketers rather than baseball players. Not to mention the fact that if anyone ever said anything bad about New York as a city, they would be immediately ostracized. Many Boston-based Yankee fans I have spoken to hold the same objection to the shirts.

To those of you who are dedicated Yankee fans who put up with the taunts of the Red Sox faithful and simply stand tall behind the strength of your team, wear your pinstripes with pride. Even those of you who wear the shirts that simply read "1918" are doing your job as Yankee fans – it's original, it strikes at the hearts of Red Sox fans, and it simply says, "I'm better than you."

The Red Sox-Yankees rivalry is one of the best in sports today, partly because the teams face each other in a tight divisional race, but more than anything because the fans of both teams are easily the most passionate fans in Major League Baseball, and possibly in any professional sport. But Yankee fans who decry Red Sox fans for being immature and jingoistic about their hatred for the Yankees are doing no better when they return the favor.

Matt Brady is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at brady_collegian@yahoo.com.

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 3

'Bulds' save students

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

New traffic control devices, called "bulds," aid in traffic safety along University Drive, pictured above.

By Mike Busack
Collegian Correspondent

Pedestrian fatalities and other pedestrian related traffic incidents over the last several years have led to the installation of new traffic control devices on campus. There have been a number of physical additions to the roads that are most frequently traveled by students, faculty and visitors each day. The University of Massachusetts Police Department is also increasing the number of officers who will be patrolling the campus for the first few weeks of the semester in order to enforce traffic laws and increase safety on campus roads.

"We are first and foremost a pedestrian campus, so there is a need to be on guard so that we do not have accidents as we have had in the past," remarked Environmental Health and Safety officer, Robert F. Laford.

"Not only have large roads like North Pleasant Street and Commonwealth Avenue been problem areas in the past, but we have also seen some serious accidents on the little roads on campus such as Infirmary Way," he added.

Laford is part of a committee formed two years ago that specifically works to improve the safety of UMass pedestrians. One of the duties of this committee is to take an annual walk around campus known as the "Walk for Light." This nocturnal promenade is a way for safety officers like Laford to observe problem areas on campus where there is not enough light to provide safety and comfort.

There also has been an undertaking spearheaded by the acting director of the Physical Plant, Pat Daly. Daly and Laford have worked alongside Daniel Dulaski who is the current president of the student chapter of the Institute of Transportation Engineers. These three operated collectively to introduce a design innovation known as the traffic "buld." The buld is an object that extends into the crosswalk from both sides as to put an end to vehicles passing on the right side when traveling through a crosswalk.

Although the bulds have been introduced to the campus this year, they may not be vital. With the new additions to the roads comes much research from students of the School of Engineering. During the winter plowing season, the bulds may be removed if the research group establishes that they have made more of a negative effect to the roads.

The bulds are expected to assist in safety for pedestrians, but the committee also realized that most pedestrian traffic accidents involve both ignorance of the driver and victim. In order to ensure that both parties are aware of each other, the UMass Physical Plant has installed lit caution signs at the campus

Continued on page 4

Students sent home after housing crunch

By Aleena Bando
Collegian Correspondent

Local students found themselves playing "let's make a deal" with the University of Massachusetts this fall, due to a lack of on-campus housing.

Students who lived less than 30 miles from the University were requested to consider moving back home to make room for some of the 140 students currently in temporary housing, according to UMass Housing Services. The offer did not come without an incentive, however, and many of the 65 local area students who accepted the offer to move back home said that they felt the offer was impossible to refuse. The package offered included a waiver of the cancellation fee as well as a $700 credit towards their spring semester bills.

"This means that a student who accepted the deferment offer and decides to come to live on campus in the spring will have to pay the full housing fee, move into their assignment, and then receive a $700 credit from housing," David Vaillancourt, director of UMass Housing Services said.

The temporary lack of housing was due in part to the influx of freshmen that are accepting their admission to the University. According to Housing Services, 3,393 freshmen were living in the residence halls last fall, compared to 4,100 students who went through the freshman admission process and are living in University housing this fall. Although there were approximately the same number of applicants both this fall and last, more students accepted their admission into the University this fall.

The expansion in the size of the freshman class could be due to many factors, but Vaillancourt credits it to the positive reputation of the University itself.

"My personal belief is that besides the effects of national trends regarding the economy and the affordability of higher education in general, UMass Amherst stands out as a great education at a great value," he said.

All of the 140 students currently in temporary housing should be housed on campus by this Monday at the latest, said Michael Gargano, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life.

The University has already begun to move waitlisted students who already have housing off the waitlist. Due to student and University compromises, a potential housing crisis has been averted.

With the promise of all students being housed by next week and switches already begun, Gargano said he also looks forward to potentially building new residence halls, including state of the art amenities and personal bathrooms, as well as revamping the Student Union.

This is all a part of Gargano's plan to shift the focus of the University completely towards the students and improve the quality of life on campus. Gargano said he would also like to build a new Health and Wellness Center, but his priorities lie among the issues of housing.

"The national trend has been that more and more students are moving on to college campuses for the ease of campus life," he said.

Gargano said he would also like to provide more reasons for students to converge on campus even after classes are over, including more social events sponsored by the University to help the campus to encourage "student life to thrive."

'Jackie' Bulger sent to federal prison

By Mark Pratt
Associated Press

BOSTON — On the same day James J. "Whitey" Bulger was marking his 74th birthday somewhere in the world, his younger brother was back home in South Boston to receive a federal prison sentence for lying to authorities investigating the fugitive mobster.

John P. "Jackie" Bulger, 65, was sentenced Wednesday to six months in prison and given three years of probation — the first six months of which must be served in home confinement — and was fined $3,000.

Prosecutors had asked a judge to sentence Bulger, a former juvenile court clerk, to between 41 and 51 months in prison. Bulger's lawyer had asked for six months of home detention and probation.

Bulger pleaded guilty in April to two counts of perjury and two counts of obstruction of justice.

Bulger admits that he made a mistake, but lied out of "brotherly concern and not criminal intent," his lawyer, George J. Cormley, told the judge. Neither Bulger nor Gormley commented outside of court.

"Mr. Bulger's error in judgment is that he lied to a grand jury because he was interested in protecting his brother," Gormley said.

"My client had no connections with his brother's unlawful activities and I think this is a crucial distinction," Gormley said. "My client has led a law-abiding, exemplary life, as a father, as a hard-working individual, blessed with a loving family."

Bulger is also the younger brother of former University of Massachusetts president William M. Bulger, who was in the courtroom Wednesday along with dozens of other family members.

Prosecutor Brian Kelly argued for the more severe sentence because John Bulger had lied to a

Continued on page 4

Former Iraqi soldiers to provide security

By Matt Kelley
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq — American officials want to speed up training for Iraqi security forces, including former members of Saddam Hussein's military and intelligence services, Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said Thursday.

Making Iraq safe is a job for Iraqis, and no more U.S. troops are needed in the country, Rumsfeld said after meeting in the capital with top military and civilian officials of the American-led occupation.

"Security is a problem, but it's a problem that, ultimately, the Iraqi people will deal with, with the help of coalition forces," Rumsfeld said at an impromptu news conference.

Rumsfeld arrived in Baghdad on Thursday afternoon for his second visit to Iraq in four months. He said coalition forces had completed more than 6,000 humanitarian projects since then.

"It is getting better every day. I can see a change since I was here," Rumsfeld said. "That is not to say it is not dangerous. It is. But it seems to me that the trajectory we're on is a good one."

Despite problems in restoring and repairing Iraq's electrical system, Baghdad at night glows with light, Rumsfeld said after returning on a Black Hawk helicopter from one downtown compound to an American base near the city's airport.

"For a city that's not supposed to have power, there's lights all over the place. It's like Chicago," Rumsfeld said.

Moments after he arrived in searing desert heat on a C-17 transport plane, Rumsfeld shook hands and posed for pictures with grinning Air Force service members on the tarmac. He then stepped over a traffic barrier and visited wounded soldiers in an air-conditioned hospital tent nearby.

One was Chief Warrant Officer Robert Meyerhoff of Valle Crucis, N.C., who was wounded in the right leg Wednesday when his mail convoy was ambushed in Baghdad.

"I'm doing a lot better today than I was yesterday," Meyerhoff said after he shook Rumsfeld's hand.

The daily attacks on U.S. soldiers as well as a series of car bombings that has killed more than 100 have prompted some in Congress to call for more American troops to be sent to Iraq.

Rumsfeld said the top generals in Iraq do not want more than the 140,000 U.S. troops now in the country.

"Mostly what we want is more Iraqi forces," Rumsfeld said. "We want more force protection, more infrastructure protection, more police, more border guards, and that should be done by Iraqis."

The defense secretary said the U.S. military is "looking at ways of accelerating" the process of bringing former members of Saddam's military — and possibly his security services — into the Iraqi security forces.

The United States formally disbanded the Iraqi military and the intelligence and security services that had supported Saddam's rule. Many who served in those organizations can join the new Iraqi forces, Rumsfeld said.

Dean leads after first major 2004 debate

By Ron Fournier
Associated Press

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Eight Democratic presidential candidates targeted the field's new front-runner, Howard Dean, as the fall campaign opened Thursday with the first major debate of the 2004 race.

The 8 p.m. EDT showdown on the University of New Mexico campus was a critical test for Dean, the former Vermont governor trying to maintain his momentum and convince wary party leaders he can defeat President Bush.

Eight other Democrats hoped to slow his ascent and find their own niche atop the field.

"I've got the boldest and I think the best ideas," Rep. Dick Gephardt of Missouri said hours before the debate.

The gathering was to be broadcast live on public television with a Spanish translation available and on Univision Saturday, a nod to the rising influence of Hispanic voters. New Mexico has a large Hispanic population — about 42 percent — and a Hispanic governor, Democrat Bill Richardson.

It is the first of six debates — two this month — sanctioned by the Democratic Party through January, when the first binding elections are held in Iowa and New Hampshire.

Dean has shaken up the presidential race, raising more money than any of his rivals between April and June while promising to widen the financial gap in the current fund-raising period. Polls show him tied in Iowa and opening a massive lead in New Hampshire.

His surge rocked the campaign of John Kerry, who had cast himself as the early front-runner. The Massachusetts senator is counting on a victory in neighboring New Hampshire to propel him to the nomination.

Dean also is a threat to Gephardt, who acknowledges he can't win the primary fight unless he finishes first in Iowa.

The campaigns are unsure how to respond to Dean's rise.

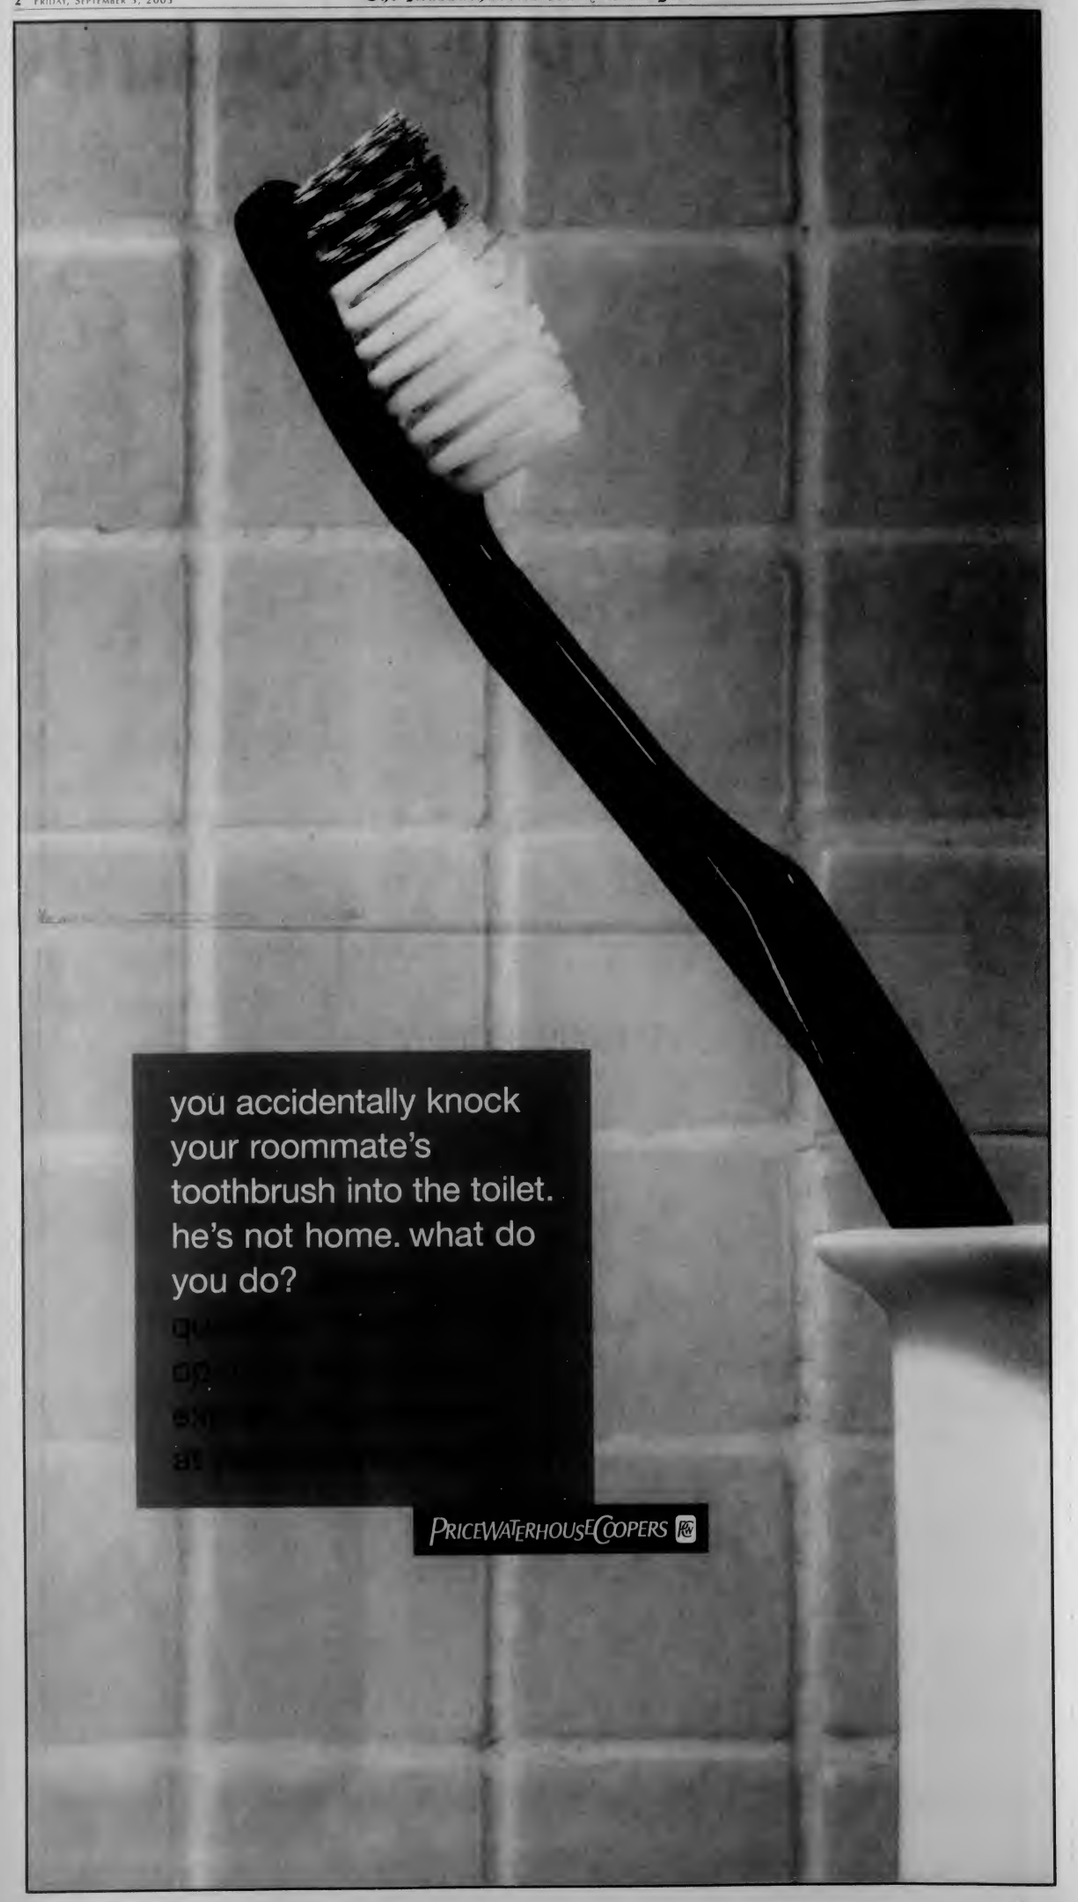
Some strategists fear the former Vermont governor will pull away with the nomination unless he is confronted. Others worry that aggressive tactics will make their candidates look mean while firing up Dean's backers.

Arguments over strategy have deeply divided Kerry's campaign. The senator has criticized his own staff while promising there will be no shakeups. His wife, Teresa Heinz Kerry, complained publicly that the campaign waited too long to air its first television ads.

Kerry is now on the offensive. He said this week that Dean "has zero experience in international affairs." He criticized Dean and Gephardt for seeking to repeal all of Bush's tax cuts, including some that benefit the middle class.

Dean says he would not shy from going to war to protect America's interests but argues that Iraq's Saddam Hussein could have been contained without force. Dean's opposition to the war helped ignite his campaign.

He says voters will gladly give back Bush's tax cuts if the money was used to balance the budget and reform health care.



Each candidate had a strategy to try to break out of the pack during the 90-minute debate. Gephardt hoped to score points on health care reform and his opposition to trade pacts endorsed by his opponents. Sen. Joe Lieberman of Connecticut hoped to flesh out his argument that Dean is too liberal and inexperienced to defeat Bush.

The field is rounded out by Sen. John Edwards of North Carolina, Sen. Bob Graham of Florida, Rep. Dennis Kucinich of Ohio, former Illinois Sen. Carol Moseley Braun and Al Sharpton of New York.

John "Jackie" Bulger, right, arrives Wednesday for his sentencing in U.S. District Court in Boston.

EDITORIAL/OPINION
PAGE 5
BOSTON ARCHDIOCESE
DONATIONS SUPPORT CHILD MOLESTERS
ARTS & LIVING
PAGE 6
SATURDAY NIGHT LIVE
DARRELL HAMMOND TAKES OVER FAC THIS WEEKEND
SPORTS
PAGE 12
ONE YEAR LATER
WOMEN'S SOCCER GETS ANOTHER CHANCE AT URI
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS
PAGE 11

Campus Perspectives

"What do you think about California giving more rights to same-sex relationships?"

By Gerald H. Ling

"I think that anybody can do whatever they want to as long as they don't violate other people's space. If they want to go get married, then go ahead."

- Andrea Romero

junior
Psychology & Pre-Med

"In general, I support the idea of same-sex partners receiving equal rights. It's not an issue of religion, it's an issue of the state recognizing a committed relationship."

- Anna Geoffroy

sophomore
English

"I think that everyone should be treated equally. It doesn't really affect me that much as long as everybody gets along."

- Caroline Linehan

junior
Mech. Engineering

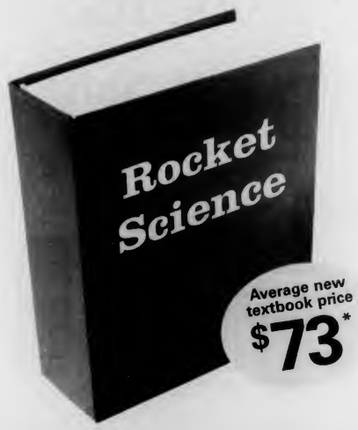
"I like the idea. I am in favor of it. They are people and therefore have as much right as anybody else. I wish more states would follow lead. I think it is good that California is one of the pioneers. I'm surprised that it took this long, but I'm glad they're making progress."

- Jason Colway

sophomore
Undeclared

"I'm for it. Let them do what they want to do."

- Ryan Lavin



freshman
Biochemistry

Welcome Meeting
Wednesday
Sept. 10 at 6 p.m.

News Meeting
Mondays
at 4 p.m.

Fabulous Gift!
CLINIQUE Bonus is here!
With your Clinique purchase of $19.50 get this 7-piece gift, Free.
Quantities are limited. Now thru Sunday, September 14th.
Fall Gift
7-piece Gift

Clarifying Lotion 2 • Moisture Surge Extra
High Impact Eye Shadow in Sugar Sugar • Colour Surge Lipstick in Wow Violet
Glosswear For Lips in Air Kiss • Clinique Happy Heart Perfume Spray
Cosmetic Bag
Cedar Chest
ARTFUL FURNISHINGS · QUALITY LINENS · IMAGINATIVE GIFTS
Thornes Marketplace · 150 Main St., Northampton, MA · 413-584-3860

It's not.

How smart is this: All the textbooks you need for up to 60% off retail prices. And all you have to do is go to half.com and type in the book titles, or ISBN numbers. Bring on the quantum physics.

For a limited time, first-time buyers
Save an additional $5
on purchases of $50 or more!
Simply use this code:
GoUMass

half.com by ebay
Same textbooks. Smarter prices.

*Average retail price of a new college textbook $73 based on 2002 data from Follett Corp. Associated Press, 1/27/03. Average Half.com college textbook price $26 based on site statistics, January 2003. First time buyers only. Limited time offer, excludes shipping and handling, offer subject to change or termination without prior notice. Copyright 2003 Half.com, Inc. All rights reserved. Half.com and the Half.com logo are trademarks of Half.com, Inc. eBay and the eBay logo are registered trademarks of eBay, Inc.

GERALDTH LINDO/COLLEGIAN

Stop and go

Students line up outside the University of Massachusetts Parking Services booth to obtain parking permits for their vehicles. Parking Services saw a huge influx of students as classes started Wednesday.

Campus increases traffic safety crosswalks. The new caution signs are lit with a very radiant day-green bulb and placed in areas where tree branches do not shield them, making it easier for both the driver and pedestrian to see at all times.

Continued from page 1

With all of the new changes this year the number of accidents is expected to decrease dramatically, but an absolute transformation cannot be made possible unless all people using local roads and sidewalks are attentive when traveling on university grounds.

"Safety is very important to all of us on this campus," stated Deputy Police Chief, Patrick Archbald.

"It is always troubling to see an accident on campus, especially when it is something as serious as a pedestrian being hit. It takes a great deal of work to provide safety to the entire community. Both sides need to be more cautious and courteous of each other. That is going to be a lot more than anything that we can do."

Due to the limited funding, the University does not anticipate more road safety construction this year. However, Pat Daly and the Physical Plant have identified University Drive as a planned area of service in the future.

Bulger brother gets six month sentence

Continued from page 1

grand jury on two separate occasions and because of the seriousness of his brother's alleged crimes. He dismissed the "family loyalty" argument.

"These are serious crimes that deserve serious punishment," he told the judge.

"He has a theory that family loyalty comes before public safety," Kelly told the judge. "No one asked the defendant to join the FBI in the hunt for his brother."

James Bulger has been a fugitive since 1995, when he fled to escape a federal racketeering indictment. He also is now wanted in connection with 21 murders.

U.S. Attorney Michael J. Sullivan said he is considering appealing what he considers a lenient sentence.

"Obviously we are very disappointed," he said. "There is a line between family loyalty and corrupting the criminal justice system."

John Bulger has admitted he lied when he told a grand jury in 1996 that he knew nothing about safety deposit boxes at a Clearwater, Fla., bank where James Bulger is accused of stashing money and documents. In fact, John Bulger had made a rent payment for the box earlier that year, prosecutors said.

He also lied to a different federal grand jury in January 1998, saying he had no communication with his fugitive brother, when in fact he had spoken with him on the phone in the summer of 1996.

John Bulger was also photographed wearing a fake mustache to use in false ID documents for James Bulger at the urging of Kevin Weeks, a former Bulger lieutenant turned government informant.

Weeks went to John Bulger's home, where he took pictures of him with the fake mustache, officials said. Weeks used the photos to make false documents that were to be delivered to James Bulger, who was in Chicago at the time, according to prosecutors. But the fugitive dismissed the photos as not good enough, according to Weeks.

AMHERST COLLEGE
DINING SERVICES OPPORTUNITIES
Amherst College is accepting applications for the following part-time positions beginning late August/early September.
COOKS · FOOD SERVERS
DISHWASHERS · KITCHEN RUNNERS
Weekday and weekend shifts (breakfast, lunch & dinner). Previous food preparation and kitchen experience preferred.
MEAL CHECKERS
Breakfast, lunch, dinner and weekend schedules available. Must be able to work a minimum of three shifts (approx. 3 hours each) up to a maximum of 19 hours per week. Light cleaning duties (including tables) during and after hours. Will train.
CATERING
Banquet Captains · Waitstaff · Bartenders
Drivers/Setup · Catering Dishwashers
Work special function/catered events. Previous experience preferred but will train.
CAMPUS CENTER COFFEE HOUSE
Counter Service - weekday late afternoon shifts available.
We offer competitive starting rates. No benefits. Interested candidates may submit a resume or complete an application at: Office of Human Resources, 201 Converse Hall, Amherst College, Amherst, MA 01002-5000.
Amherst College is an Equal Opportunity/Affirmative Action employer and encourages women, minorities and persons with disabilities to apply.

www.dailycollegian.com

The Harvard Bartending Course
Now held in Amherst!
• The ideal first step towards a bartending job!
• Recieve your Mixology Diploma and TIPS certification in two days!
• Located at the holiday Inn Express!
617-495-9657
www.harvardbarcourse.com

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
$139
★ Student Special ★
4 months
Best Aerobics-Best Machines
KEISER · NAUTILUS · FREE WEIGHTS · CYBEX · STAIRMASTERS · LIFECYCLES · TREADMILLS · ELLIPTICALS · LIFEROWER
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0060 90 AMHERST
ON THE SQUARE · OPEN 7 DAYS
www.amherstathletic.com

Calling all college students:
Talk clear across the country with Sprint.
1000 Anytime Minutes for $40/month
Call to anywhere in the U.S. from anywhere on the New England and New York Metro PCS Network.
Nationwide Long Distance Included. Every Minute, every day.
FREE PCS Phone:
Get the LG 1200 & Nokia 3585i FREE after $100 savings (instant or mail-in) with activation of a new line of service.
Flexible credit options available - exclusively for students!
Sprint Store The PCS Center
The Sprint Store At RadioShack.
BEST BUY
Visit the Sprint Store or authorized retailer near you:
West Springfield 1102 Riverdale St.
Manchester 189 Deming St.
Save $36 - now only through September 14th!
Bring in this coupon to receive an activation fee refund at any Sprint Store or authorized retailer.
Area-wide Plan: Offer ends 11.22.2003. Plans only available to customers activating in the Area Markets of New York Metro (includes the Boroughs of New York City, Westchester & Rockland Counties of New York, Long Island, Fairfield County, CT and Northern and Central New Jersey, New England (includes CT, MA, NH, RI, & ME. Subject to credit. Night & Weekend hours are Monday – Thursday 9pm – 7am and Friday 9pm – Monday 7am. A $36 activation fee and $150 Early Termination fee apply. A deposit may apply. Plan minutes may not be used for call-related abuse; this ends 9.27.2003. While supplies last.
Plan: Unused Anytime minutes roll over each month. Unused minutes cannot be rolled over to the next whole month. Minutes are rounded to the next whole minute. Phone: Free phone requires new activation on a new line of service. Limit one free phone per customer. Phone may vary and subject to availability

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'SNL' star Darrell Hammond set to tickle UMass' funny bones

By Reid Davenport
Collegian Staff

Saturday at 10 p.m., "Saturday Night Live" cast member and comedian Darrell Hammond comes to the Fine Arts Center. He will be the second "SNL" member to hit the FAC stage this year as former castmate Jim Breuer came through last spring. Both of these "SNL" alumni are famous for impersonations, and it looks like Hammond will bring this lineup to the University of Massachusetts campus this weekend.

Darrell Hammond
Sat. Sept. 6
10 p.m.
Fine Arts Center Amherst
$8 UMass students
$12 General Admission

Hammond has brought some of the best impersonations to the "SNL" line-up. A few of his most popular include Sean Connery, Bill Clinton, Richard Dreyfuss, Regis Philbin, Dick Cheney and Al Gore. As an eight-season veteran of the show, Hammond is one of the feature players of "SNL." His Sean Connery impersonation can be found appearing on the "SNL" spoof of "Jeopardy!" harassing Alex Trebek (played by former cast member Will Farrell) and normally turning the category titles into sexual references.

Hammond's Bill Clinton impersonation has gotten him the most attention. He was even invited to a dinner in Bill Clinton's honor and performed his impersonation for the former president. He was recently asked to return to D.C. to perform for the White House's Correspondent's dinner and has since performed for Dick Cheney, Secretary Rumsfeld and numerous other politicians.

Since Clinton left the office, Hammond has moved from impersonation to impersonation to follow current events. Hammond's most recent impressions are Geraldo Rivera during the war on Iraq and Reverend Jesse Jackson.

Hammond's impersonations began as a child and continued through college. He was raised in Melbourne, FL and attended the University of Florida in Gainesville. Hammond's acting career did not begin until after college, when he moved to New York to try stand-up comedy and appeared in a few Broadway productions, both comedy and dramatic, for a few years. Later on, he moved back to Florida to improve his impersonations for local and national radio. He currently lives in the Hell's Kitchen area of Manhattan.

While Hammond is a feature player on "SNL," he does not have as many movie roles as some of his former castmates. This year he appeared in "Agent Cody Banks" and will also have an on-screen role in the upcoming sequel "Scary Movie 3." Hammond's previous film work was for the animated version of "The King and I," "Blues Brothers 2000," and "Celtic Pride."

The Darrell Hammond comedy show is presented by the UMass Campus Activities Office and begins at 10 p.m. on Saturday. The tickets are $8 for students and $10 for general admission and are available at the Fine Arts Center box office.

COURTESY NBC STUDIOS

Darrell Hammond impersonating Bill Clinton. The former president is one of his more notable characters on "SNL."

Going to pieces over his act

Actor/author Bruce Campbell shows his candid side in this exclusive — and ever snappy — interview

By Bob Krzykowski
Collegian Staff

Bruce Campbell has acted in some of the world's most revered cult classics and television shows. Just try to bump into a college student who doesn't know what "Army of Darkness" is. Bruce is a talented director and a witty, insightful writer. From "Evil Dead" to Disney, Campbell has done it all. The Massachusetts Daily Collegian recently got a chance to speak with Bruce about what he's been up to lately, from harassing the Bureau of Land Management to mowing the backyard ...

Massachusetts Daily Collegian: Bruce, your book, "If Chins Could Kill: Confessions of a B-Movie Actor" was a New York Times Bestseller. Your next writing project is called, "How to Make Love the Bruce Campbell Way." What can we expect? Will there be diagrams?

Bruce Campbell: You can expect a very silly book that doesn't have much to do with reality. It's a humor book, a gag look at relationships and relationship books.

MDC: Speaking of making love the Bruce Campbell way, most guys have tried that, "Gimme some sugar, baby" line at least once in their lives — some with more success than others. Any comments to all your fans with slapped faces for that one?

Bruce Campbell: Um ... no, it works! There's a guy I met at a book signing last year who had "Gimme some sugar, baby" translated into Mandarin Chinese because he worked in Beijing China, and he went into a nightclub and used it on a chick and got laid. All I know is, its got powerful mojo.

MDC: Do you ever say it to your wife, or would you end up with a red cheek like the rest of us?

Bruce Campbell: Hey, I don't need lame pickup lines to get my wife into bed.

MDC: You live in Oregon, right?

Bruce Campbell: Yeah, and that's how I can tell you're not from here, by the way you pronounced it. You pronounced it in three syllables, "Or-eh-gone".

MDC: How do you say it?

Bruce Campbell: It's, "Oreegin."

MDC: Oreegin?

Bruce Campbell: Yeah, a little more "Eeee," and it's all one thing, "Oreegin."

MDC: Okay, so you live in "Oreegin"?

Bruce Campbell: Yep, very good!

MDC: And you're a pretty outdoorsy fella, right?

Bruce Campbell: I am, I'm sitting outdoors right now.

MDC: So what's your favorite outdoor activity?

Bruce Campbell: Tormenting the Bureau of Land Management. They administer hundreds of millions of acres here in the U.S. And they surround my property on three sides. So, I've got government land on three sides.

MDC: So you've been working pretty diligently on a documentary about land stewardship with your wife. What's the main goal of such an endeavor, and is there a realistic solution?

Bruce Campbell: Well, you know what it is? I don't take any sides. There's no good guy or bad guy in the fight to find out what good land stewardship is.

What we're gonna do is present an issue and cover all sides so there's a fair discussion, so we break down the clichés of environmentalists and loggers ... it's all bologna. It is! What's at stake is a discussion of how best to take care of public land that's paid for by you and me. It's a huge issue. I shot 55 hours of footage and I got it down to about nine hours right now ... I've gotta get it down to two.

MDC: When do you think you're going to be releasing it, and how are we going to get a hold of it?

Bruce Campbell: I have no idea. I mean, this is a serious topic. It's not like "Attack of the Chainsaw Revenge Killers." So, it'll have to be marketed in a different way. Um, I dunno, I just took a flier because it was a topic that interested me, so it's not really designed for ... if nothing else it'll make a hell of an education piece for senators. I'm not really worried about it.

MDC: Did you know "Evil Dead" message boards are talking about it? How'd you pull that off?

Bruce Campbell: (Snorts) I don't know. I mean, I hope they do talk about it. People should talk about what we should do with the uninhabited lands of our country. You know? How much, how little, where, when, how?

MDC: After living the "Evil Dead" legacy for over 20 years, can you go camping in the woods without freaking yourself out?

Bruce Campbell: (Laughs) The only thing that scares me in the woods are people. You know, because, again, I have government land all over here and there's people who're squatters, and mushroom hunters, and a lot of bizarre characters are floating around here.

MDC: Any 'Deliverance' people?

Bruce Campbell: Um ... there might be a little inbreeding around here. But, you know, a little inbreeding goes a long way. It's important just to keep it in the family, though, I say.

MDC: What would you think of a person who sits down and tells the entire "Evil Dead" trilogy as a campfire story?

Bruce Campbell: (Chuckles) I'd say they probably have a little too much time on their hands. You know, look for a different day job.

MDC: You've done some movies that might be considered a guilty pleasure for some. "Crimewave" might be considered a good example if we could ever get our hands on it.

Bruce Campbell: "Crimewave," sure! It would be a guilty pleasure if you could ever find the goddamned thing. Uh, Charter Home Entertainment had it last. You could try to look it up somewhere, I dunno.

MDC: Maybe E-Bay, or something?

Bruce Campbell: E-Bay! Definitely E-Bay.

MDC: Heck, we can probably find locks of your hair and pieces of the cabin on E-Bay.

Bruce Campbell: No, what's even better is that this is one of the Coen Brothers' first writing assignments. You know, they wrote this damn thing. You'll never see it on their resume! And that's why you should see it, because everyone has early works, everyone has embryonic work.

MDC: But they deny it sometimes.

Bruce Campbell: Which they should not because you've gotta come from somewhere, right?

MDC: Absolutely. So what's your all-time favorite guilty pleasure film?

Bruce Campbell: Guilty pleasure? I like Russ Meyer movies. Yeah, give me big boobs any day, and I'm fine. He's the master of big boobs.

MDC: You did a little voice acting in "Darkman," which also has the greatest cameo and helicopter chase of all time, have you ever thought about voicing a cartoon?

Bruce Campbell: I've done some already!

MDC: Oh really, what have you done?

Bruce Campbell: Yeah, I did "Tarzan" for Disney; it was sort of their animated TV show. I've done five or six video games, and then a couple of shorts. I've done a bunch of animated stuff now. I just did ... I was a teenage robot ... you know, for various shows on TV. So, it's been a slow evolution.

MDC: Who was

Continued on page 7

COURTESY SPACE.DERRIS.COM

Bruce Campbell appeared on the TV show "Xena."

Singers hold concert for Jessie's House

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

On Saturday a benefit concert for Jessie's House will be held at P.A.C.E., 41 Union St. Jessie's House is a Northampton-based homeless shelter that currently assists eight families in getting closer to self-sufficient status and safe housing.

The shelter provides a safe environment for families to improve their parenting skills, job skills and education. They also offer a support system that includes children's programming for the families that are on their way back to independence.

The concert will begin at 6 p.m. On the bill are female artists Diana Jones, Lisa Martin, Kate O'Connor, Bonita Oliver, Flora Reed and Jerree Small. The concert is free but there is a suggested donation of $10.

Miranda Brown
Diana Jones
Lisa Martin
Kate O'Conner
Bonita Olivere
Flora Reed
Benefit concert for Jessie's House
Sat. Sept. 6
6 p.m.
P.A.C.E. Easthampton
Free but accepting donations

Rob Caldwell of "Musica" said, "[Diana Jones' show was] one of the most entertaining shows I have seen in years." Jones' music is heavily influenced with the old-time rhythms of country, blues and mountain music. Her music deals with the triumphs and tribulations that are all part of life.

The music of Lisa Martin is a cross breed between folk and rock. She uses strong guitar chords and powerful vocals to carry her messages of love and life.

Sweet and sour are the truthful lyrics of Kate O'Connor. Her seasoned voice tells stories of life's woes, as well as its rewards. She shares her knowledge through song with her audience. O'Connor has shared the spotlight with stars such as Dar Williams, who is a parallel to O'Connor's grace and power.

Bringing with her all the allure of the jazz of yesteryear Bonita Oliver is a virtual time warp on stage. She melds the styles of jazz, afro-folk and smooth electronica, to entrance her audience. As intoxicating as her voice and aura may be, Oliver's lyrics are composed of sobering truths.

From sweet lilting to vocalized roars, the young and powerful Flora Reed is leaving a blazing trail in her ascension to the ranks of artists such as Patti Griffin, Suzanna Vega and Aimee Mann. Her poetic lyrics are delivered with a fierceness that is not to be ignored. Reed is a flaming burst of fresh air in the world of independent artists.

In the essence of a wandering minstrel Jerree Small creates musical snapshots of life's experiences. Her style is a little Midwestern steadiness with the wistful voice of one who has seen the world in its entirety. Ed McKeon of the New Britain Herald summed it up when he said:

"Its simple; songs work or they don't. Jerree Small's songs work. ... infectious melodies, a masterful and apparently effortless control of language and a voice which beckons with it's friendly scratchy warmth Jerree Small is a performer to watch. Better yet, Jerree Small is a performer to listen to."

All donations will go to fund the efforts of Jessie's House organization and their attempts at helping families recover their livelihoods.

Campbell: a master of budget gore and horror

Continued from page 6

your favorite hero when you were a kid?

Bruce Campbell: Zorro. It was with Guy Williams, the same guy who starred on "Lost in Space." "Zorro" was Walt Disney's first live-action TV show, because normally, Disney didn't do much live-action, it was all animation, and it was a very successful show. I watched it all the time and I ran around in Zorro pants with a cape and a sword.

MDC: You once said that you have a little project you'd love to do for under $2 million. What's it about?

Bruce Campbell: It has sort of environmental themes. I'm not like a card-carrying environmentalist but weird things like urban growth and expansion kind of concerns me. So I have a project called "City Limits." It's a project where a developer gets kidnapped by a group of environmental eco-terrorists and they hold him for ransom. Either they kill the development or they kill the developer. They take him to a remote area in the desert where this developer, and all he knows his big city sensibility, he now has to wash his own clothes, he has to make his own food, he has to live kind of like the Anasazis did in old ruins in Arizona.

COURTESY RENAISSANCE PICTURES

Campbell in the cult classic "Army of Darkness."

MDC: So would you be in it, or what?

Bruce Campbell: Yeah, I'd be the developer. I'd be the asshole developer.

MDC: Awesome. Okay, these rapid-fire questions have been burning in the minds of college students everywhere. So they're going to come pretty fast. Are you ready?

Bruce Campbell: Yeah, I'm sure. Yeah.

MDC: "Night of the Living Dead" or "Texas Chainsaw Massacre"?

Bruce Campbell: "Texas Chainsaw Massacre." But you know what, actually, to be fair, that's a dead heat. That's a tie. They're both excellent low budget horror movies that were landmarks at their time. And you know what, tell your readers, neither of them is a guilty pleasure. Both of them are scarier than hell!

MDC: John Wayne or Clint Eastwood?

Bruce Campbell: Oh, John Wayne, no question about it. John Wayne, in his limited range, was still more than Mr. Squinty.

MDC: Okay, remember this is UMass. Red Sox or Yankees?

Bruce Campbell: Um ... my vote would have to be the Detroit Tigers because I'm a Tiger's fan. So I'd say neither.

MDC: Neither, so, the Detroit Tigers then?

Bruce Campbell: Yeah, because the Yankees ... look, the Yankees are the dynasty team. They are the great age-old team. They are the ultimate baseball team. But, you know, it's nothing money can't buy. Steinbrenner, he's a blowhard, let me tell ya. If I ponied up the kind of payroll that he has, hell yeah, I'd have a team, but guess who got knocked out of the World Series pretty damn quick last year? You know? They got eliminated outta the race.

MDC: Tan 1957 Chevy Bel Air or Tan 1973 Oldsmobile Delta 88 (Sam Raimi's Car/Love-child)?

Bruce Campbell: Well, definitely, the '57 Chevy could beat the crap outta the '73 Olds even though Sam would probably invest millions of dollars to try and prepare it for battle. But he would fail simply because I know, from being there, that I watched a '57 Chevy run into a tree, and the tree took it a lot worse than the '57 Chevy.

MDC: You could probably just sabotage it yourself, right?

Bruce Campbell: I have and I will. He thinks it's in a secret place, but I know where it is. I have foot soldiers that will do very nasty things to that car.

MDC: "Simpsons" or "Seinfeld"?

Bruce Campbell: "Simpsons," no question about it.

MDC: "Evil Dead 4" or "Crimewave 2?"

Bruce Campbell: "Crimewave 2." It would be a way better commentary!

MDC: All right, here's the last one and you're free. You've said that you mow your lawn like the rest of us —

Bruce Campbell: I have to mow it again on Saturday.

MDC: What kind of lawnmower you got?

Bruce Campbell: Well, I have a John Deere riding tractor that I use for big work like blading my driveway and stuff, I have, like, a real John Deere tractor, and then I have just a Sears Craftsmen for my riding lawnmower work. So I don't have a John Deere for the riding lawnmower stuff, but I could kick your little Dad's tractor's ass over here.... because I have a real John Deere!

MDC: So you've never done it with the chainsaw then?

Bruce Campbell: (Laughs) Not that I would tell you.

Audiences should file for 'Divorce' due to irreconcilable script indifferences

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

In "Le Divorce," Kate Hudson — the golden-haired, shiny-happy It girl of Hollywood — travels to gay old Paris to watch over her sister Roxy (Naomi Watts), a pregnant poet whose Gallic creep of a husband Charles-Henri (Melvil Poupaud) has abandoned her and, in the process, gets a chic haircut and a married older lover (Thierry Lhermitte), a handsome and worldly politician who presents himself as a morally conservative right-winger in public. She's also given a red alligator leather Hermes handbag, the kind Grace Kelly used to carry, and marks herself as the latest nubile plaything for a rich older man.

'Le Divorce'
Directed by James Ivory
Starring
Kate Hudson
Naomi Watts
Fox Searchlight
Rated PG-13
105 mins.
Grade
D+

"Le Divorce" is just an insubstantial wisp of a movie, and I don't mean that kindly. It's the latest film to spring from the oeuvre of the Merchant-Ivory team, but what the duo have created isn't the flyweight romantic truffle that's promised. Instead, what they have is a very flat soufflé.

The movie centers on Hudson's Isabel as she flirts her way through France, first by falling into bed with a scruffy activist and then with the politician, the uncle of Roxy's husband. The sisters engage in a battle of wills with the husband's starchy mother (Leslie Caron) over a priceless family heirloom, a painting that the husband claims is half his family's. Matthew Modine, whining shrilly, shows up as the disturbed husband of the woman Charles-Henri is sleeping with and begins to stalk Roxy.

This is the kind of movie in which the central question of suspense is over whether or not Isabel and Roxy will be able to keep the painting. "Le Divorce" is a movie with no dramatic thrust; it lurches from scene to scene without purpose or reason to be. There's not one iota of substance here, yet the movie tries so hard to be meaningful that it collapses inward on itself.

There seems to be something approaching satire concerning Franco-American relations, but the biggest insight that "Le Divorce" can muster is that the French are a funny race. It hardly helps matters that director James Ivory and his editors have seemingly put the movie together without any sense of rhythm or flow. "Le Divorce" stumbles and crashes into each scene, despite the fact that none of the sequences seems to match the one that proceeded it. There's no suspense here, no drama and — most deadly for what is supposed to be a romantic comedy — no romance. "Le Divorce" shifts uneasily between comedy, serious drama (as when Roxy attempts suicide, and — most pathetically — thriller (the scenes with Modine) and succeeds at none of them.

Even if Ivory had given "Le Divorce" a better story structure and a wittier script, it still would have fallen apart thanks to the void at its center. That is the sullen and damp pair of Watts and Hudson, who suck the life out of their every scene. There's no sense of sisterly chemistry between these two and no sense of conviction. Watts in particular seems rather boring: there's nothing resembling a poetic spirit in her soul. "Le Divorce" is a Parisian comedy of manners that manages to take the joie de vive out of Paris.

COURTESY FOX SEARCHLIGHT

Kate Hudson and Naomi Watts made disappointing performances in 'Le Divorce.'

Arts and Living meeting Tuesday 5 p.m. in Campus Center Basement. Interested and returning writers please attend. For more information call 545-1361 or e-mail at arts@dailycollegian.com.

THE Umass Roman Catholic student center invites you to kick-off the year at a

Student Mass and Open House

Sunday Sept. 7

7pm Mass
8pm Open House and pizza

Begin the new school year with other Catholic students, and learn about programs the Newman Center offers at the Open House afterwards:

- Social events
- Liturgy
- Newman Student Association
- Grad Group
- Retreats
- Faith education
- Service projects

COME JOIN US!

The Newman Center
Umass' Roman Catholic Faith Community
472 North Pleasant St.
Amherst, MA 01002
413-549-0300
www.umass.edu/catholic

SAVE $$$ ON TEXTBOOKS AT JEFFERY AMHERST!

We have these and many other UMASS courses at discounted prices:

ACCT-222	COMM-118	GEO-354	PLSOIL-102
ACCT-311	COMM-121	HRTA-230	PLSOIL-105
ACCT-312	COMM-226	HUMDEV-270	PLSOIL-200
ACCT-331	COMM-250	ITALIAN-230	POLSCI-360
ANI SCI-220	COMM-397-P	LING-201	PSYCH-100-1
ANI SCI-332	ECE-221	MATH-101	PSYCH-100-2
ANTH-100	ECE-313	MATH-102	PSYCH-100-3
ANTH-103	ECON-103-A	MATH-103	PSYCH-100-6
ARABIC-126	ECON-103-C	MATH-104	PSYCH-100-7
ARTHIS-100	ECON-104-A	MATH-127	PSYCH-100-8
ARTHIS-537	ECON-104-B	MATH-235	PSYCH-240-A
ASTRO-100-1	ECON-203	MATH-331	PSYCH-240-B
ASTRO-100-2	ECON-204-1	MNGT-361	PSYCH-240-C
ASTRO-100-3	ECON-204-4	MICBIO-106	PSYCH-305
BIO-103	ED-210	MICBIO-180	PSYCH-307
BIO-104	ED-276	MICBIO-310	PSYCH-308
BIOCHEM-285	ENG-112	MIE-201	PSYCH-315
BIOL-285	ENGLWP-112	MIE-210	RESECON-212
CEE-240	ENGLWP-113	MKTG-301	SOC-210
CEE-241	EXCSCI-130	MKTG-410	SOC-211
CHEM-102	EXCSCI-210	MNGT-314	SOC-241
CHEM-111	EXCSCI-301	MUSIC-100-2	SOM-680
CHEM-112	EXCSCI-304	MUSIC-100-3	SPAN-126
CHEM-261	EXCSCI-370	NUTR-130	STAT-140
CHINESE-155	FOMGT-250	NUTR-352	W&FCON-260
CLASSICS-224	FOMGT-320	PHIL-100-E	MNGT-361
CMPSCI-121	FRENCH-110	PHYS-100
CMPSCI-201	FRENCH-120	PHYS-125
CMPSCI-250	GEO-103	PHYS-151
COMDIS-211	GEO-131	PHYS-152

Remember to sell us your old textbooks and get instant cash!

Jeffery Amherst College Store -
Located between A.J. Hastings and La Veracruzana

Sat 8/30	8:30-6:00
Sun 8/31	12:00-5:00
Mon-Thurs 9/1-9/4	8:30-8:00
Fri & Sat 9/5-9/6	8:30-6:00
Sun 9/7	12:00-5:00
Mon 9/8	8:30-8:00
Mon-Sat 9/9-9/13	8:30-6:00

RobotZen's debut album send listeners to nirvana

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

COURTESY ROBOTZEN.COM

Dark and electronic, yet surprisingly smooth, RobotZen elevates listeners to an emotionally rich and slightly sensual level with their new CD "Alice Meets the Caterpillar." Composed of singer Sue Oliveira — a native of Vienna — and guitarist/electronic artist Steve Mikes. In live shows the band also includes DJ1988. They consider themselves "industrial trip-hop."

"Alice Meets the Caterpillar" has a dark sound to it, but the ethereal vocals take the music away from the cryptic feel of the instrumentals. In a band press statement, Oliveira describes her singing as, "a voice in search of truth," while letting "thoughts in words [form] sporadically. Sometimes I close my eyes and imagine I am Medusa or Kali — destruction and creation so closely linked."

With songs such as "Little Robot" and "The Circle," RobotZen's music explores the darker parts of human emotion and desire, as well as questioning the very nature of humanity. In the opening track "Secret Lab" they dive right into a message of overcoming the burdens of reality and enjoying life with the lyrics: "sing, sing, sing, along/ break through the wall and party on."

In "Hello New Day" the group changes things up a bit and takes a step away from their incessant electronic style and into reggae. Their vocals and guitar riffs during this track are groovy to say the least.

Unlike so many other electronic groups, RobotZen creates all of their synthesizer sounds and disdains sampling other artists' music. The 11-track disc was written, composed and recorded almost entirely by RobotZen (D. Byrnes wrote one track titled "Little Robot").

RobotZen 'Alice Meets the Caterpillar' Independent

Despite RobotZen being the first project that Mikes and Oliveira have done together, both have had extensive musical careers in the past. Oliveira has sung with a number of traditional gothic and rock bands, which explains her tendency to lapse into the deep tonal vocals hallmark of gothic rockers. Mike says, "I see this as a chance to leave our past-music behind, and re-learn to focus on the creation in the moment."

Though prolonged listening may cause a terminal space-out, "Alice Meets the Caterpillar" is definitely a trip down the internal rabbit hole of the human mind, and is worth listening to.

Southern rock 'still moves'

By Brendan Lee
Collegian Staff

Apparently, the South will rise again.

With music critics all but conceding high marks to current media darlings Kings of Leon and Drive-By Truckers, the state of rock music below the Mason-Dixon line is currently undergoing a Renaissance that would make Creedence Clearwater Revival proud. On their third album, the Brooklyn-via-Kentucky five-piece band, My Morning Jacket do their best to raise the long-dead specter of southern rock and end up bucking the trend by producing a record that is equal parts Lynard Skynard and Neil Young.

My Morning Jacket 'It Still Moves' ATO/RCA

"It Still Moves" finds its roots in MMJ's previous offerings, the same records that drew high profile praise from Foo Fighter (and session drummer to the stars) Dave Grohl and Dave Matthews. The album also serves as a major label debut, through Matthews's own vanity label, ATO. Although singer Jim James and the boys swore up and down that moving to Brooklyn with all the other cool kids wouldn't change them (cough ... haircuts ... ahem), the songwriting on "It Still Moves" has vastly improved over their past efforts, giving a more concise tone to the band's winding, ramshackle style. A major league recording budget didn't hurt the indie-rock superstars either.

Even if the songwriting has changed, the lyrical content thankfully has not. Once again, Jim James is looking for redemption at the end of the bar, in the bottom of the bottle.

On songs like "Golden," James lets his audience know exactly what he means: "People have often told me/ That bars are dark and lonely/ And talk is often cheap and filled with air/ But nothin' could ever chill me/ Like the way they just make the time disappear." Make no mistake; this is the best kind of lost highway, lonely soul record, for late-night listening only.

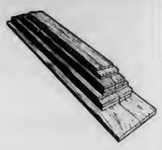
Like all good southern rock though, "It Still Moves" isn't always crying in its beer. "Dancefloors" is powered by a rock solid rhythm section, liberal amounts of piano, and a horn section that kicks out the jams the way they did before they shut down Muscle Shoals. The horn section comes back for "Easy Morning Rebel," with James preaching to his audience about the rebel "come down from heaven ... movin' to get dey blood." For all the beer-soaked nights, hard luck stories, and life-on-the-road musings, the boys in MMJ do their best to be tender. The album's centerpiece, the nine-minute long "I Will Sing You Songs," evokes the same feeling that Neil Young had underneath that Harvest moon. And they pull it off, too.

Despite all the hype about being part of the "new wave" southern rock they will inevitably encounter, MMJ avoid being a one-trick pony. As the group's chief songwriter, James shows that he can write nifty pop songs as well, even if they do come out in his modified Kentuckian drawl. One glance at the lyrics to "Just One Thing" proves he has the chops to back it up, too. Let the Yankee critics have Kings of Leon; My Morning Jacket and "It Still Moves" should be the particular brand of bourbon that everyone seems to be looking for these days

COURTESY ATLANTIC RECORDS

My Morning Jacket has shown, with their newest album, that great rock 'n' roll still exists in the South.

$$ NEED EXTRA CASH? $$



Sign up to participate in upcoming decision-making experiments by the Department of Resource Economics!
For more info & to sign up, please go to:
http://www.umass.edu/expecon

Only a little time required for significant earnings!

TRUST "Before locking into a long term contract for a fitness facility with no machinery in place, why not give the veteran professionals a visit."
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
"Big enough to own the best equipment, but small enough to know your name."
* In business 22 years
* Locally owned & operated 413-549-0600
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0060 90. AMHERST

WELCOME BACK STUDENTS
WE HAVE YOUR NEEDS!

•Cinder blocks
•Plywood
•Shelving and brackets
•Desktops
•Keys
•Bookcase material
•Paints
•Brushes, rollers
•Hardware
•Picture Hangers

10% OFF WITH THIS AD

150 College Street
LEADER HOME CENTERS # : 413-253-3411

University of Massachusetts, Amherst
Campus Activities
FIRST WEEK
presents...
DARRELL HAMMOND
LIVE!!!

SATURDAY, September 6 2003
Fine Arts Center, 10pm

Now entering his eighth season on TV's "Saturday Night Live," Darrell Hammond has been applauded by television critics and viewers alike for his uncanny, accurate impressions of a wide range of celebrities and politicians.

$8 for UMass Students/ $12 General Admission
Tickets will be available at the FAC Box Office starting Sep. 2nd for Students only, and Sept. 5th for general admission

Unlimited Nights & Weekends. Fits all back-to-school schedules.
Unlimited Night & Weekend
Airtime Minutes when on the America's Choice Network
Plus
1000 Anytime Mobile To Mobile
Minutes to call any of our 32.5 million customers on our nationwide mobile to mobile network.

Back to School Special!
Buy a Motorola V120E for only $49.99 and receive a FREE Hands-free Headset & Car Adapter
SAVE $40!
New annual agreement required. Select accessory models. While supplies last. Limited time offer.
©2003 Cingular Wireless® Logo(s)
AMERICA'S CHOICE
400 anytime minutes FOR $39.99 monthly access With 1 or 2 year agreement.
Unlimited nationwide long distance. No roaming charges coast-to-coast.
All when calling on the America's Choice® network.
The America's Choice network covers more than 265 million people in the U.S. Network not available in all areas. Calls placed outside the calling plan area are 69¢/min. Mobile to Mobile not available throughout the America's Choice Network.
@Wireless www.shopatwireless.com
HADLEY 322 Russell St. • 413.587.3248
HOLYOKE 50 Holyoke Mall • 413.533.2500
Camera phone NOW here! Bring in this ad and receive $10 OFF. At participating @Wireless locations verizon wireless Authorized Retailer
NSmrLg1
Important Consumer Information: Night & weekend hours: Mon-Fri. 9:01pm-6:59am Sat. 12am-Sun. 11:59pm. Subject to Customer Agreement and Calling Plan. $35 activation fee applies. $175 early termination fee applies. Requires credit approval. Cannot be combined with other service promotions. Usage rounded to next full minute. Unused allowances lost. Subject to taxes & other charges. Not available in all markets. Geographic and other restrictions apply. See brochure and sales representative for details. ©2003 Verizon Wireless.

Open gets wild

By Howard Fendrich
Associated Press

AMY SANCETTA/AP PHOTO

Top seed Andre Agassi will face No. 5 Guillermo Coria after a wild day in Flushing, NY.

NEW YORK (AP) – The U.S. Open went from the submerged to the ridiculous Thursday.

On a fourth straight day of rain and start-stop-start-stop action, organizers scrambling to finish the tournament on time were deprived of a show court because the Grandstand had absorbed too much water and couldn't be dried enough for play.

Oh, and a women's fourth-round match that began Monday finally finished, but not before being interrupted when the chair umpire was hit and hurt by a ballboy's throw.

There was good news: The weather cleared up enough for 2001 champion Lleyton Hewitt, French Open winner Juan Carlos Ferrero, No. 5-seeded Guillermo Coria, and No. 13 David Nalbandian to reach the quarterfinals. Nalbandian knocked off Wimbledon champion Roger Federer 3-6, 7-6 (1), 6-4, 6-3.

Still, not your average big-time sporting event, huh?

"This was the weirdest situation that I've ever experienced in a Grand Slam tournament," two-time major champion Mary Pierce said. "It was really, really weird to wait four days and play 20 minutes to finish the match."

She lost 7-6 (2), 6-1 to No. 7 Anastasia Myskina, who later was scheduled to return to the court and face No. 2 Justine Henin-Hardenne in a quarterfinal.

Also asked to play more than once Thursday was No. 29 Francesca Schiavone, a 6-7 (5), 7-5, 6-2 winner over No. 15 Ai Sugiyama. Schiavone was supposed to play a quarterfinal against No. 6 Jennifer Capriati at night.

At least tennis was being played, though: A total of only four matches were completed from Monday through Wednesday. The tournament began Thursday with a backlog of 174 matches, which was alleviated somewhat by the cancellation of the junior doubles events. Junior singles matches were moved to an indoor tennis club 25 miles away.

Six men's fourth-round matches either resumed or started Thursday afternoon, though not without touches of the bizarre.

Hewitt had his match, a 4-6, 6-2, 6-4, 6-2 victory over No. 11 Paradorn Srichaphan, switched from the Grandstand to Court 11, where a scoreboard wasn't working. Hewitt next plays No. 3 Ferrero, who will make his debut in the U.S. Open quarterfinals after getting past the unseeded Todd Martin 6-2, 6-4, 3-6, 5-7, 6-3.

The water level underneath the Grandstand is so high that the surface feels soggy even when the water on top has been wiped away, grounds crew supervisor Joe Sexton said.

"We have to wait for the sun. If it sits in the sun for 12 hours, it could be playable again," Sexton said.

Players were ushered out to all corners of the grounds in an effort to squeeze in matches, and Coria checked the map on the back of his credential to figure out exactly where Court 6 is.

Eventually, Coria found his way and finished off a 6-2, 6-3, 4-6, 6-2 victory over unseeded Jonas Bjorkman to set up a quarterfinal matchup with top-seeded Andre Agassi. Coria beat Agassi in the round of eight at the French Open.

Federer's match against Nalbandian started at 3 p.m., and they played five games over 18 minutes until a sprinkling halted the proceedings. Next, they were sent back out 40 minutes later, warmed up and played all of one point before being shuttled to the locker room. Forty-five minutes later, the match resumed.

While an upset on paper — Federer was seeded No. 2 — Nalbandian now has won all five of their pro meetings. Federer was broken at love in the final game, which reached match point on a drop shot by Nalbandian that Federer didn't even chase, and ended on a return winner. Federer had 62 unforced errors, 30 more than Nalbandian.

"It's a disaster, this tournament," Federer's coach, Peter Lundgren, said before the match. "It's too bad. It was so nice the first week. You just try to stay focused. It's the same for everybody, but it's tough."

Schiavone-Sugiyama goes into the books with an official elapsed time of 2 hours, 36 minutes — but the match actually finished 66 1/2 hours after it began.

It started Monday night and was suspended at 6-6 in the first set, then resumed Tuesday, and Sugiyama served for the match at 5-3 in the second. She lost that game, and the match was halted. They were washed out entirely Wednesday, then were called out to play a little before 3 p.m. Thursday, four hours after they were scheduled to start.

Schiavone won three straight games to take the second set, but fell behind 2-0 in the third.

Florida closes the gap

Gators are improving

By Eddie Pells
Associated Press

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — The catchphrase of the week at Miami and Florida is "Talent Gap," as in the one that makes the Hurricanes two-touchdown favorites over the Gators on Saturday.

Clearly, the gap exists, just as it did last season, and the season before, when Miami won lopsided games.

This week, however, it's a touchy subject that is being played differently, depending on whether it's a coach, a player, a 'Cane or a Gator doing the talking.

"You mean experience level?" Florida lineman Max Starks asked. "That's all I see. Not talent gap."

But really, it's more than just experience — a reality Florida coach Ron Zook conceded last weekend when he said the Gators have "closed the gap a little bit, and we're going to continue to close the gap."

Over the past three seasons, No. 3 Miami is 33-2 and has played for at least a share of the national title three times. No. 21 Florida is 28-10 and hasn't played for the national title once, although it was the preseason No. 1 in 2001.

The Gators have three talented quarterbacks — Ingle Martin, Chris Leak and Gavin Dickey — all of whom might not be there had another one-time fantastic Gator recruit, Brock Berlin, not left for ... Miami.

Florida is inexperienced in the middle of the defensive line, where freshman Ray McDonald starts, and has holes at linebacker, where senior Reid Fleming, a career special teams guy, starts in the middle.

At cornerback, the Gators start Johnny Lamar, a one-time walk-on. Keiwan Ratliff starts on the other side. He's such a good athlete, he also returns punts and might line up at receiver.

"He has the athletic ability to be as good a corner as I've ever been around," Zook said.

Miami, on the other hand, has plenty of talented players like Ratliff. But coach Larry Coker has enough players that he doesn't even consider playing them on both sides of the ball. Thus, Antrel Rolle plays cornerback and returns punts, but won't get a chance at receiver.

"Nobody is as talented as us," said Miami tight end Kellen Winslow, who caught eight TDs last year. "That's just the honest truth. But it's not always talent that wins the game, as we saw with Ohio State. We beat ourselves in that game."

In other Top 25 games Saturday, it's No. 1 Oklahoma at Alabama; San Diego State at No. 2 Ohio State; BYU at No. 4 Southern California; Houston at No. 5 Michigan; McNeese State at No. 7 Kansas State; Middle Tennessee at No. 8 Georgia; James Madison at No. 9 Virginia Tech; and Kent State at No. 10 Pittsburgh.

Also, it's Maryland at No. 11 Florida State; Marshall at No. 12 Tennessee; No. 13 LSU at Arizona; No. 14 North Carolina State at Wake Forest; No. 15 Virginia at South Carolina; Bowling Green at No. 16 Purdue; No. 17 Auburn at Georgia Tech; Akron at No. 18 Wisconsin; Washington State at No. 19 Notre Dame; Northern Arizona at No. 20 Arizona State; Indiana at No. 22 Washington; Utah State at No. 23 Nebraska; UCLA at No. 24 Colorado; and Navy at No. 25 TCU.

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
$139
★ Student Special ★
4 months
Best Aerobics~Best Machines
Kenko • Nautilus • Free Weights • Cybex • Stairmasters • Treadmills • Ellipticals • Thrower
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0060 90. AMHERST
www.amherstathletic.com

CVS pharmacy
1 Hour Photo
Student Discount
$1.00 off 1 hour processing (prints only)
$2.00 off 1 hour digital processing (prints & cd)
Valid Student ID required.
Available at both Amherst locations only.
Original roll developing only.
Offer ends: Sept. 30, 2003

The Area's Best Fitness & Health Club
UltimateFitness THE HEALTH AND FITNESS CENTER
Located in the Stop & Shop Plaza on Route 9
For more information call 253-7571
SEMESTER SPECIAL $160
5 Year Anniversary Special: FREE UNLIMITED TANNING!
(With purchase of a semester membership by 9/21/03!)
NO ENROLLMENT FEE!!
• Full Aerobics Programs Including: -Cardio Kickboxing -Yoga -And Many More
• Nutritional
• Consultation
• Tanning
• Sauna
• Juice Bar & Supplements
• Personal Training
• Stairmasters
• Precor Treadmills
• Lifecycle Recumbant Bikes
• Lifecycle Upright Bikes
• Precor Crosstrainers
• Body Masters and Icarian Free Weights
• Cybex Circuit Training Equip.
Inquire About Pilates
Now offering Aerobics only memberships

4th Anniversary Celebration
MERCYhouse
it's a church
celebrates its 4th year anniversary as a church in Amherst. All of Amherst is invited to enjoy a full schedule of festivities under and around the big yellow tent on the Common.
Sunday, September 7th
11:00am - Sunday Morning Celebration
12:30pm - Free Hotdogs
1:00pm - Musical treats every hour including jazz, funk, classical, rock'n'roll.
- Free kids carnival with face painting
- Arts and crafts booth for both kids and adults
- Volleyball tournament with prizes
4:00pm - Free concert under the tent
www.knowmercy.org
413-374-7532

Congress criticizes BCS

By Elizabeth Wolfe
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — While reluctant to take any action, lawmakers put college football on notice Thursday they don't care for what they called an emphasis on marketing over fairness in the way it picks a national champion.

"I think you're throwing the baby out with the bath water by allowing this to continue," House Judiciary Committee Chairman James Sensenbrenner told college football officials during a hearing on the Bowl Championship Series.

Created in 1998 by the six most powerful college athletic conferences, the BCS guarantees that the champions of those conferences will play in one of the four most lucrative postseason bowl games, leaving only two at-large berths.

One of those four bowls each year will pit the top two teams in the BCS standings in a championship game, which will be the Sugar Bowl this season.

Smaller schools complain that the BCS makes it almost impossible for them to win the national championship and puts them at a disadvantage when it comes to making a profitable bowl game and reaping the financial windfalls that come along with it.

"Fundamental fairness trumps the fundamental of good marketing," Sensenbrenner said, telling college executives they need to make changes to the BCS system to assure that the "noble aspirations of amateur athletics do not yield to the cold reality of corporate profits."

Colleges that don't belong to the six big conferences — Atlantic Coast, Big East, Big 12, Big Ten, Pacific-10, Southeastern — can get only two slots in the big bowl games and national power Notre Dame, an independent, is the only school to earn one of those berths in the system's five-year history.

BYU is the only school from a non-BCS conference other than Notre Dame to win a national championship since Army in 1945.

Former NFL quarterback Steve Young, who played at BYU, said the disparities hurt recruiting since athletes will sometimes choose to attend schools that have a better shot of going to a bowl game.

"In soccer, basketball, baseball, tennis, golf, etc., equal access is granted. Not so in football," he said.

The projected revenue for the four 2004 BCS games is $118 million, but only about $6 million will go to the non-BCS schools unless one of them qualifies for a major bowl game.

Big Ten Commissioner James Delany said the long history of absence from bowls by schools outside of major conferences justifies the current profit sharing.

In the 20 years before the BCS started, only one school other than Notre Dame that is not currently in those six conferences played in one of the series' four bowls.

"The large majority goes to those who make the greatest commitment," NCAA president Myles Brand said. "The current revenue structure is a result of the free market at work."

Jeter out

Continued from page 12

of Boston for first place in the AL East. They were 5 1/2 ahead after taking two of three from the Red Sox last weekend, then lost the first two of their three-game series against the Blue Jays.

"We want the feeling we had this past weekend," Torre said. "I think they proved a lot of things to themselves this past weekend."

Torre dropped struggling center fielder Bernie Williams to sixth in the order. Williams, who entered Thursday's game in a 7-for-48 slump, usually bats cleanup. Torre made Jorge Posada the fourth hitter.

Road warriors

By Matt Stewart
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts field hockey squad is packing its bags for this weekend's road trip to Louisville, Ky.

The Minutewomen hope to end their two game slide as they take on a pair of highly talented teams. The University of Massachusetts squares off, Saturday, in a matinee against the St. Louis Billikens at 2:30 p.m., followed by a noon match-up with the Louisville Cardinals on Sunday.

"[These games] are important because it's a chance for our performances to improve," UMass coach Patty Shea said. "We need a better performance than we had on Wednesday, and if we perform well and do the work, the outcome is going to be positive."

The Billikens have struggled throughout the beginning of its season, and are winless through three games. The Cardinals head into this weekend with a 1-1 record, coming off a huge 2-1 double-overtime victory over William & Mary.

"This is the first time that UMass will be playing St. Louis," Shea said. "When I use to coach in the Midwest they were always a tough, tough team to play and also the midwestern teams have a different style. So I think that both opponents are going to be great opponents for us.

"We worked out a few kinks today and it's all about our team getting better. The opponent is nameless and faceless, it's about us doing the things that we need to do to get better, and I feel that's really important."

Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

Senior Kristin Hopwood and the Minutewomen head south to Kentucky for a two-game set this weekend.

Junior Christine Tocco earned the starting goalkeeper position over last season's starter, senior Ashley Egland, who was 2-8 last year with a 2.71 goals against average and stopped 72 percent of the shots she saw. Tocco has proven to be a leader for the Minutewomen. Despite a 1-2 record, she has a 78.3 save percentage, and a 3.06 GAA.

"Christine's playing great right now," Shea said. "Preseason is a great time to be able to get out there and play. There is no rhyme or reason and you can't predict in a crystal ball or anything about the future. Christine was just playing better at the time."

Tocco's most impressive outing was against the powerhouse Maryland Terrapins. She was dazzling on the Garber Field pitch with a career-high 21 save performance.

"[Tocco's] going to be really important," Shea said. "You need your goal keeping unit to stop the savable shots and take care of the ball when it comes to them, that's all that you need them to do. If a team's allowing 20-30 shots a game, you can't ask them to stand on their heads, they have to save the savable shots. Mentally it's pretty tough to do, that's why it's a difficult mental position."

After this weekend's two-game road trip the Maroon and White have the following week off before traveling to Cambridge for a two-game set against the Boston University Terriers and the Harvard Crimson

"On any given day," Shea said. "Anything can happen. We're a young team and are working to get better. We have to get out there and take care of business. We have to be willing to go out there, try something new, and to take risks. When we revert back to our old habits under pressure, it's not working."

The Mercantile
NORTHAMPTON 108 Main St 584-1205 · AMHERST Carnegie Shops 549-1396 · Mon-Sat 10-6 Thur & Fri to 9 Sun 12-6

Youth Men's Club
Monday Night Football
• Pool Table
• Darts
• Horseshoes
• Keno
• Smoking
• Public Invited
Free Admission with this Ad!
Bud Giveaway Sunday Sept. 7th
Transportation Available
138 East Street Hadley, MA 413-584-9729
Rt. 9 · Easthampton Savings Bank · Bay Rd
Monday - Sunday 10:00 - 1:00

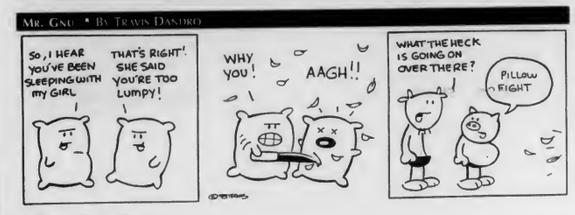
Need some extra cash?
Come work at a local DB Mart!
Apply in person at the following locations:
• East St. & Plumtree Rd., Springfield
• Old South St., Northampton
• Federal St., Belchertown
• West St., South Amherst
• Triangle St., Amherst.
Cashier positions with all shifts available.
dbmart
For more information contact Diane at 1-800-255-1525 Ext. 287 EOE

SLEEPY HOLLOW BED CO.
MATTRESSES · FUTONS · BEDS & ETC.
MISMATCH MATTRESS
TWIN SET $199
MATT ONLY $119
FULL SET $249
MATT ONLY $149
QUEEN SET $299
MATT ONLY $189
FUTONS
Full* Queen
4" Cotton + Foam $110 $135
6" Cotton + Foam $135 N/A
8" Cotton + Foam $155 $180
Cushy Coil $195 $230
*twin size also available in select models
NEWYORKER
Full $99
ROMA PLATFORM
Full $149
Queen $179
ALBANY
Oak or Natural*
Full $199
Queen $229
*While supplies last
Walmart · to Northampton · Rt. 116 N · Stop & Shop · Rt. 116 S · Amherst College · Amherst Common · Rt. 9 · to Belchertown · Sleepy Hollow Bed · Spirit Haus
328 College St. • Rt. 9 • Amherst • 253-2537 WE DELIVER!
M-TH 10-6 • FRI 10-7 • SAT 10-6 • SUN 12-4

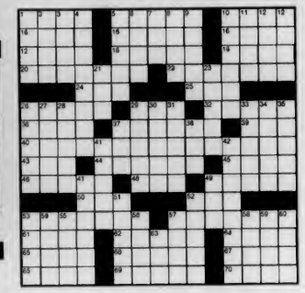
UMass Campus Recreation
Paid Officials Needed for Flag Football, Soccer, Field Hockey, Softball, Ice Hockey & Volleyball
Clinics: Football-Sept. 9, 10, 11
Co-ed Softball-Sept. 15, 16
Ice Hockey-Sept. 23, 24, 25
Soccer-Sept. 9, 10, 11, 12
Field Hockey-Sept. 15
Volleyball-Sept. 30, Oct. 1, 7, 8
Call for requirements, times and locations
Still Time To Enter: Flag Football, Soccer, Field Hockey, & Softball
More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693
On The Web: www.umass.edu/umim

TRUST
"Before locking into a long term contract for a fitness facility with no machinery in place, why not give the veteran professionals a visit."
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
"Big enough to own the best equipment, but small enough to know your name."
* In business 22 years
* Locally owned & operated
413-549-1010 www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0080 90 AMHERST

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
(32 years of service—and counting!)
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Fall Semester 2003 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Room 163C of the Campus Center for all meetings •Sept. 8 (Mon) •Sept. 9 (Tues) •Sept. 10 (Wed)
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs, Sep 11th @ Boltwood table CC Concourse.
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!



Amherst Survival Center
"FROM TRASH TO TREASURES"
Furniture Sale and Collection
Saturday September 6 9am - 1pm
Town Common
Rain or Shine
• Buy used furniture at very low prices (delivery available)
• All furniture in good condition will be accepted free charge on the common
• Rugs, mattresses, and unusable furniture will be accepted for a display fee of $10 per item
• Call 549-3968 for more information



"I didn't know it was going to be that long and everything."
- Britney Spears, on her lengthy open-mouth kiss with Madonna

Welcome Meeting
Sept. 10 at 6 p.m. in the Campus Center Basement
New writers, please attend

Across
1 Shower accessories
6 Rousseau novel
10 Tortoise rival
14 Felipe or Moises
15 Jeans fabric
16 Type of tradition
17 Huff and puff
18 Violinist — Stern
19 Headware item
20 Bugs
22 Cash-back offers
24 Team cheer
25 Yale grad
26 Quagmire
28 Chinese dynasty
32 Turk's neighbor
36 Luke Skywalker's guru
37 Like some oaths
39 Planet warmer
40 Vacationer's pursuit (2 wds.)
43 Down with a cold
44 Reddish dyes
45 Knowing look
46 Houston athlete
48 Sushi morsel
49 Peter in Paraguay
50 Leather punch
52 Woody's ex
53 Cleaned one's teeth
57 Fierce cat
61 Piece of sugar
62 Meadow rodents
64 Hoofbeat
65 What Ali sting like (2 wds.)
66 Make happy
67 Humorous neighbor
68 Proceed
69 Tribal adviser
70 Kind of pilot

Down
1 Astrologers of old
2 Greenspan or Cranston
3 Throw
4 Clark Kent
5 Dame Sitwell
6 Jumble
7 — — pickle
8 Fritzer
9 Seljak or Trabek
10 Windbag's output (2 wds.)
11 Smell — —
12 Go fast
13 Moose kin
21 Salary limit
23 Crepe cousins
26 Damascus locale
27 Fleeces
28 Full-grown
29 Jazzy Lena —
30 Dress style (hyph.)
31 India neighbor
33 Quenied
34 Odd
35 Preface, for short
37 Sault — Marie
38 Geographical abbr.
41 Arab vessels
42 Unambiguous (hyph.)
47 Spoke hoarsely
49 Overwater
51 Embankment
52 Penny pincher
53 Blemish
54 Oil job
55 Warning, perhaps
56 Cutie pie
57 Pierre's head
58 Fashion magazine
59 Boys
60 Skater
63 Terhune collie

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

2-5-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc

Dining Commons Menu
D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
• Chicken Quesadilla
• Fish & Chips
• Fiesta Rice & Cheese (vegetarian)
• Curried Chick Peas (vegan)

DINNER
• Veal Parmesan
• Salmon Miso
• Tofu Fajita (vegan)

Daily Weather Forcast
For Amherst

FRIDAY
• High: 76
• Low:50

SATURDAY
• High: 76
• Low: 51

SUNDAY
• High: 80
• Low: 52

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nikolas Markantonatos
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Gerald H. Ling
COPY EDITOR
Morris Singer
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington
PRODUCTION STAFF
Irene Ros / Emilie Duggan/ Gerry Auger

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Try something daring today. Go skydiving or get a tattoo.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Don't even think of going to the library today. Play hockey instead.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You are better than everyone else, so don't bother talking to them.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Some of your best ideas are accidents.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Be more like Jim Breuer today. Maaaaaa! Goat-Boy is cool.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Did you forget to change your socks again? If not, take a shower.

leo • Jul., 23-Aug. 22
I am too lazy to write your horoscope, see Sagittarius.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Be like someone else today ... see Sagittarius.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Be unique, do something to stand out from the crowd.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Don't step on a mousetrap, even if you are looking for cheese.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Try a semester abroad, because it'd be better if you weren't here.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Go swiming today, but watch out for lightning ... and ducks.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

AUTO FOR SALE

1988 Mazda $950 413-586-5728

Jeep Cherokee Sport-1995. Perfect student car, A/C, Great CD system, original owner, excellent condition, 90K, automatic. 413-296-0060 $3,600 or O.B.O.

CHILDCARE

Seeking responsible babysitter for 2 year old. Afternoons and evening availability. Transportation negotiable. 413-256-2134

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Personal Assistant Wanted Days, Evenings & overnights avail. $10.36 hr. Call Martina 323-9248 Martina@student.umass.edu

Drivers and Kitchen help wanted Apply at D.P. Dough. Downtown Amherst

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals for part time positions. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are must. Call (413) 584-4746

EMPLOYMENT

ARHS Varsity Girls Gymnastics Coach needed ASAP. Call Amber 413-262-2272

Earthfoods is hiring Co-Managers for 100% Student Run Café. Salary starts at $6.75 hr. Applications available in Student Union Rm 406. Also across from Commonwealth Room

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

Experienced part-time linecooks and dishwashers. Apply in person during day before 5:00pm Amherst Brewing Co.

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

FOR SALE

Two desks for sale. Good cond. Call: 508-272-2810.

Lowest Long Distance Rates! Why let the "Big Three" rip you off? College students save here. www.Ldsavings.vjb.net

FOR SALE

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

FURNITURE

Futon Complete set $80, scanner or CD Burner (brand new) $40 Antique 2-Tier mahogany scalloped end table $30; amherststuff@comcast.net or 427-7109 Walt/Franci

INSTRUCTION

Jazz Piano Lessons Explore your creativity Beginner to Advanced Learn a wide range of styles Reasonable Rates Contact Stephen Page at 413-297-7910

INSTRUCTION

Learn to SCUBA Dive Curry Hicks Pool Monday, Tuesday, or Wednesday 7pm to 10pm classes start Sept 8 Call Project Deep 800-282-0977

MISCELLANEOUS

Want to buy/sell TEXTBOOKS & other stuff LOCALLY? … NO shipping hassles, NO payment middlemen! All 4 FREE! Visit www.collegeshack.com today!

ROOM FOR RENT

House on Route 9. Convenient location less than 1/2 mile from campus. On Bus Route. 2 Bathrooms. Contact: clanbabchuck@hotmail.com or call 413-348-5192

TRAVEL

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

Spring Break '04 with StudentCity.com and Maxim Magazine! Get hooked up with Free Trips, Cash, and VIP Status as a Campus Rep! Choose from 15 of the hottest destinations. Book early for FREE MEALS, FREE DRINKS and 150% Lowest Price Guarantee! To reserve online or view our Photo Gallery, visit www.studentcity.com or Call 1-888-SPRINGBREAK! Spring Break 2004. 1-800-648-4849

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. 1-800-648-4849

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

WANTED

We are looking for women who are breast-feeding an infant less than 6 months of age to participate in a study investigating breast milk and environmental pollutants Gift certificates will be provided One feeding worth of milk is required in a one time visit Contact Dr. Kathleen Arcaro at 413-577-1823 or karcaro@nre.umass.edu

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Lawyer's dismissal a stinger

Mike Marzelli

This wasn't how it was supposed to end.

This wasn't how one of the greatest Patriots of them all was supposed to leave town; as an outcast, cut loose into the vast depths of NFL unemployment in an 11th-hour mad dash to sneak under the salary cap.

This wasn't the lasting impression Patriots fans were supposed to have of the man they saw captain the only Super Bowl-winning squad in franchise history.

This wasn't how Bill Belichick, Scott Pioli, Andy Wasynczuk and the rest of the Patriots' brain trust was supposed to honor a player who played in 106 consecutive games, never missed a practice and established himself as one of the most respected leaders in the NFL.

This wasn't a move made with a return to the Super Bowl in mind.

Rather, it was a devastating blow dealt by the front office that hit Patts fans right in the jugular. One that even the most optimistic followers of the club couldn't find any way to accept, and had no desire to do so in the first place.

Lawyer Milloy is arguably the best safety to ever call New England home, but it was never simply his play that made the Foxboro Faithful love him with all their hearts.

Sure he quickly made a name for himself as a premier safety after the Patriots drafted him out of Washington in 1996, but fans in the New England region expect greatness from their stars. What Milloy did was couple his talent as a playmaker with his uncanny ability as a role model for teammates both on and off the field to become as complete a player and a person as you'll ever find in professional sports.

He fed off the energy from the fans because the only thing that eclipsed their love for him was his love for them. He repeatedly said that Patriots fans are the best in the sport, and that he would never want to play in front of anyone else. He was the kind of guy you made a real effort to keep, and when the Pats needed to cut some money, there's no way the only way to do that was to cut him.

So Messrs. Belichick, Pioli and Wasynczuk, what in the name of John Hannah, Tony Eason, Craig James, Andre Tippett, Drew Bledsoe, Curtis Martin and Adam Vinatieri are you doing letting one of your franchise's greatest players walk away? Was this part of your master plan to get back to the Big Game? Is this going to improve the ball club that 68,000 fans will pay to cheer on eight times a year?

Is this the way to end a preseason in which you were the NFL's only unbeaten team, and saw optimism rise to an incredible high around these parts? And is it really about getting under the cap, or do you truly think No. 36 is washed up? Card-holding fans of the Patriots demand to know the answers to those questions.

Along with Drew Bledsoe, the faithful have now seen two marquee players walk out of Foxboro in the last three years. You claim Milloy isn't what he used to be, but he is simply the victim of Antoine Walker Syndrome — a statistical drop brought on by a player's willingness to conform to whatever system his coach preaches. But maybe you're right Mr. Belichick. I can't deny the fact that you often are, even when initial appearances have you dead wrong. Maybe Antwan Harris will have a huge year and all will be right at Gillette Stadium.

But explain this: When you take this team back to the playoffs, who will be that vocal leader along the way? Who will pick off the pass that secures the AFC championship? Who will lead two million strong in chants of "We're No. 1!" in the freezing cold at your championship rally, and do it because, as he said, it was all for them? And who will cross the field at Fenway Park on Opening Day with a Red Sox hat turned back, a glowing smile on his face and the Lombardi Trophy held high, leading another celebration that was just for the fans he loved?

The answer now is that it will not be Lawer Milloy, and excuse me for saying this, but that means it just won't be right.

Mike Marzelli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at Marzelli_Collegian@yahoo.com.

One year later

GERALD H. LINGUS/COLLEGIAN

Junior midfielder Carly Turman battles for possession in UMass' 2-1 win over Quinnipiac on Aug. 30. The Minutewomen travel to Kingston, RI for the opening game of the Atlantic 10 season tonight, the first chance for the Maroon and White to face URI since its emotional 5-0 loss a year ago.

By Sean Holmes
Collegian Correspondent

On Sept. 5, 2002, the members of the Massachusetts Women's soccer team experienced a day of intense and overwhelming emotion. They attended a memorial service for their deceased friend and teammate Stephanie Santos, and hours later, with their hearts still heavy, took the field against a loaded Rhode Island team. Though they trailed just 1-0 at the half, the Minutewomen didn't have enough gas in the tank, and eventually fell 5-0.

Today, one year removed from that trying day, the team will have a chance to gain some measure of revenge as they travel to Kingston, R.I. for a 7 p.m. showdown against the Rams in the second game of the regular season.

After what amounted to a disappointing 2002 season (6-11), the Minutewomen sent a message to the rest of the league Saturday that things may be a little different this year, as they beat Quinnipiac 2-1 in the season opener. Sophomore Adair Blyler was the offensive star, scoring both goals, and senior Kelly Nigh made three saves, including a spectacular diving stop to hold the lead at the end of the first half. Coach Jim Rudy said he saw many things he liked offensively in the opener, including the team's combo play and offensive penetration. Still, he added, there was plenty of room for improvement.

"We tend to play too much possession, and we need be more direct on our approaches to the goal," Rudy said.

As was the case a year ago, URI presents a major early season test for the Maroon and White. The powerhouse Rams have picked up right where they left off last season – when they went 13-4-1 – with two impressive victories over James Madison and Northeastern.

"We're scared of the URI long ball," Rudy explained, pointing to the Rams' explosive offensive attack, which scored 42 goals a year ago and has tallied four goals in each game so far this year.

The Minutewomen's number one priority will be to stop sophomore forward Melanie Kasparek, who scored two goals against them last year and is coming off a freshman campaign in which she finished with 12 goals and racked up 30 points. She was given A-10 player of the week honors for her play in the first two games this year, which included two goals and an assist.

The team will also keep an eye on sophomore forward Sarah Johnston (two goals against James Madison) and junior midfielder Claire Landon (13 points in 2002).

Scoring early will also be a key to victory for Rudy's squad. "We need to get in the goal a little earlier," Rudy said. Indeed, the University of Massachusetts didn't score until the 64th minute against Quinnipiac and failed to score in two exhibition games despite outshooting their opponents 45-24. They will need to find a way to do this against a URI defense that has been simply smothering opponents, having allowed just 21 shots and two clean sheets in the first 180 minutes of the season.

An early score would also give the team a huge advantage mental boost, which Rudy identified as the biggest factor in the game.

"The real game will be psychological," he said.

He quickly pointed out that against URI last year, despite the tidal wave of emotion his players had been through, "we still played a decent first half. We were down 1-0 but she [URI senior goalkeeper Jaime Epperlein] made two or three big time saves that normally would have been goals."

Epperlein has since graduated, and with her went a 0.90 goals against average. Most of the players who participated in last year's game for the Minutewomen will be returning with the knowledge and confidence that they can hang with a quality team like the Rams.

"This is a much more confident team than last year," Rudy says of his squad. "I expect everyone to have a good game."

Senior Erin Lilly, who has been having ankle troubles this year, is reported as being day-to-day. A number of other players have nicks and bruises, but Rudy expects everyone to be in the lineup.

Greats head to Hall

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — James Worthy was an eighth-grader when he first saw Robert Parish play college basketball. It left a lasting impression.

"Robert Parish was a 7-foot center and really exemplified everything that I wanted to be as a player at the time," Worthy said. "I thought it was very cool that he wore double-zero."

From his college days at Centenary, Parish went on to a brilliant career with the Boston Celtics. Worthy starred with the Los Angeles Lakers after playing at North Carolina.

And they were in the middle of the fiercest NBA rivalry of the 1980s.

Tonight, Parish and Worthy will be among seven people inducted into the Basketball Hall of Fame in Springfield, Mass.

"I'm really proud to receive basketball's highest award," Parish said. "I'm proud and excited."

The other inductees are Meadowlark Lemon of the Harlem Globetrotters, NBA pioneer Earl Lloyd, longtime Louisiana Tech women's coach Leon Barmore, Italian player Dino Meneghin and the late Chick Hearn, who broadcast 3,338 consecutive Los Angeles Lakers' games, many involving Worthy and Parish.

Worthy joined the Lakers in 1982, two years after Parish went to the Celtics. They met in the NBA finals three times with Boston winning in 1984 and Los Angeles winning in 1985 and 1987.

Each team had two other players, in addition to Parish and Worthy, among the top 50 in NBA history and who went to the Hall of Fame — Larry Bird and Kevin McHale with the Celtics and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Magic Johnson with the Lakers.

In 1984-85, he and Worthy averaged 17.6 points each.

"Hatred would be a strong word. We really respected each other," Worthy said. "I liked the game the way it was then. It was more respect for your opponents and your own teammates. The game was played way differently. It was played as a team and it seems there was a lot more loyalty to teams."

Worthy averaged 17.6 points a game in his 12 NBA seasons, all with Los Angeles. He won titles in 1985, 1987 and 1988, being named the series MVP in the last one. He retired after the 1993-94 season.

Parish averaged 16.5 points in 14 seasons with Boston, ending in 1993-94. He also won three championships, in 1981, 1984 and 1986.

He played his first four seasons with Golden State then followed his Celtics career with two years at Charlotte and one at Chicago and ended with a 14.5-point average.

The taller Parish was a better rebounder.

"He was a great defender, the best rebounder ever in the game from the defensive point of view," Worthy said. "And a scorer."

Parish holds the NBA record with 10,117 defensive rebounds and is sixth with 14,715 total rebounds. His 21 seasons and 1,611 games also are NBA records.

"It would have been a short career if I had not been traded to Boston," he said when his selection was announced in April. "I was rejuvenated in Boston."

The trade set the stage for the coast-to-coast rivalry. "He brought a lot of stability to the game," Worthy said. "He could guard any center. He was versatile."and "air ball," and didn't miss a game from Nov. 21, 1965, through Dec. 16, 2001.

Jeter out for Boston series

TORONTO (AP) — New York Yankees shortstop Derek Jeter is expected to miss a three-game series against the Boston Red Sox this weekend because of a strained rib cage.

"I know we were hoping he'd be ready for the weekend, but this is certainly far more important than playing those three games," manager Joe Torre said. "We have a lot more games after that."

Jeter sustained a slight muscle strain in his left rib cage Sunday and hasn't played since. He tested it out by jogging Thursday, but Torre didn't have a report yet.

Jeter said earlier this week that the injury doesn't seem as serious as similar ones in 1998 and 2000 that landed him on the disabled list.

He entered the day tied with Magglio Ordonez for the lead in the AL batting race with a .322 average.

"When we get him back we need to keep him," Torre said.

Enrique Wilson has started in Jeter's place.

Torre also said backup infielder Erick Almonte strained his right calf Wednesday and is expected to be sidelined for a week. Almonte's injury means infielder Luis Sojo probably won't be dropped from the roster if Jeter returns early next week. Sojo came out of retirement and was activated Monday.

Torre held a team meeting before Thursday's game against Toronto and told his players not to get frustrated.

The Yankees entered the day three games ahead

Continued on page 10

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 4

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Romney calls new pension plan request 'an abuse of the system'

BOSTON – Gov. Mitt Romney called "nuts" a request by former University of Massachusetts President William Bulger to boost his annual pension, already one of the highest in state history, by about another $30,000.

"I think the effort to take additional pension money from the taxpayers of Massachusetts is as wrongheaded as anything that President Bulger could possibly think of. It's just nuts," Romney said Friday.

Romney called for legislation to bar Bulger's request, saying the move "underscores the need for a complete look at our pension system to make sure that this kind of abuse can't happen again and doesn't happen here."

Bulger's request would allow him to include his annuity and housing allowance as income when calculating his pension benefits.

If just his $309,000 salary were included, Bulger - a longtime Senate president and Democratic leader - would receive about $185,000 annually in pension payments.

If the request is granted, his salary for pension purposes would increase to about $360,000 and his annual pension would increase by about $30,000. His wife would be entitled to about two-thirds of that upon his death.

A spokesman for the University of Massachusetts has defended the request, saying the former head of the state university system simply submitted a straightforward application that lays out his total compensation, as delineated in his contract.

"Those issues are really between the individual retirees of Massachusetts and the pension board and I assume they will be taken up in the appropriate forum," said university spokesman John Hoey.

But Romney said it's unfair for Bulger to use what Romney called a "loophole" to try to inflate his salary and boost his pension.

"That doesn't make any sense to me. I think it's an abuse of the system," Romney said. "We are going to propose that it is reformed."

Bulger stepped down earlier this month under heavy pressure from Romney, who questioned his relationship with his fugitive mobster brother, James "Whitey" Bulger.

Bulger, who was the state Senate president for an unprecedented 17 years, has been on the state payroll for 42 years - 10 as a state representative, 25 as a senator and seven as UMass president.

Because of the length of his tenure, Bulger would be entitled to the maximum pension benefit: 80 percent of his average salary during his three highest-paid years. In an application submitted last week, Bulger chose a second option under which he would receive 60 percent of that average in return for his wife receiving a portion of his pension after his death.

Bulger's request must be approved by the state retirement board, which is headed by state Treasurer Tim Cahill. A Cahill spokeswoman has said the board would likely vote on the request at its October meeting.

—The Associated Press

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Wilson ready for new challenge as UMass interim president

By Morris Singer
Collegian Staff

While Dr. Jack Wilson presides over the University of Massachusetts as interim president, a presidential search committee is in the process of meeting to seek out a permanent leadership solution over the next 12 months to replace William M. Bulger as president of the University.

The UMass Board of Trustees named Wilson as interim president two weeks ago after Bulger stepped down amid continued political pressure from Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney. Bulger, faced with a multi-million dollar budget cut to the University and threatened with closure of the President's Office and the dismantling of the Board of Trustees, announced his resignation on Aug. 6, saying he believed he was acting in the University's best interest.

Chancellor John V. Lombardi said that it is not Wilson's job to affect changes in the University system, but to keep the University proceedings on track during the search process.

"We're not going to be making any immediate changes at this time," Lombardi said. Wilson is instead charged with the task of running the University in a way that is "efficient and effective under the difficult financial circumstances," he said.

UMass Amherst Biology Professor Brian O'Connor, who is serving as one of the members of the search committee, expressed optimism for Wilson's performance during the interim period, citing his academic and administrative background.

"I think he'd be an outstanding interim president," O'Connor said. "I think he's an excellent choice."

"He's a listener, he's very creative [and] he's innovative," O'Connor went on to say. "He certainly is well aware of the position of the University." One aspect of the University's position O'Connor touched on is its relationship with Romney. Perhaps now that a new person has taken the president's seat, the governor will be more willing to work with the University, O'Connor said. "[Romney has] some interesting ideas for the Amherst campus ... and these ideas should be explored, and hopefully some of these ideas will be explored with Wilson," O'Connor said. In this respect, O'Connor does see a positive side to Bulger's relinquishment of the presidency. Although he is saddened by Bulger's resignation, he recognizes an opportunity for potential interplay between the governor and the president, given the new situation.

"Maybe Romney will talk to people [now]," he said. "Maybe Wilson will pick up the phone and talk to him." O'Connor revealed strong admiration for Bulger and his former work with the University.

"Other than [former] President Lederle, Bulger has done more for the University in making the state, the country and the world aware of UMass," he said. "It's sad to see him go, but unfortunately there was no choice.""I think it had gotten to the point where [relations were] very personal between the governor ... and President Bulger," he continued. "I think what really might have been ... the straw that broke the camel's back was when Romney started going after the trustees."

The University hopes to have a replacement for Bulger appointed within the next twelve months, but the actual length of time the search process may take is unclear, O'Connor said. "That's a goal," O'Connor said. "Is it an attainable goal? I don't know."

According to O'Connor, the search committee is working with an unnamed recruiting firm that will aid in bringing candidates for the position to the table.

The search committee, which includes an eclectic mix of corporate executives, lawyers, academic leaders, students, alumni and trustees, will meet for the first time at the end of September.

Bush says U.S. will spend whatever funds necessary

By Deb Riechmann
Associated Press

WASHINGTON – President Bush vowed anew to continue his fight against global terrorism Sunday, but acknowledged that there are challenges ahead and said more U.S. money will be needed to finish the job in Iraq.

"We will do whatever is necessary, we will spend what is necessary, to achieve this essential victory in the war on terror, to promote freedom, and to make our nation more secure," Bush said.

In remarks prepared for a speech Sunday evening designed to bolster his ebbing approval ratings and respond to pressure to tell Americans his strategy for the ongoing U.S. involvement in Iraq, Bush urged other nations to help stabilize and rebuild Iraq.

"Our strategy in Iraq has three objectives – destroying the terrorists ... enlisting the support of other nations for a free Iraq ... and helping Iraqis assume responsibility for their own defense and their own future."

Bush said members of the United Nations have an opportunity and a "responsibility" to assume a broader role to make sure Iraq becomes a free and democratic nation. He also urged the Iraqi people to step up to the task of governing themselves.

"They must rise to the responsibilities of a free people, and secure the blessings of their own liberty," he said.

Bush has been under criticism from Democrats about the unsuccessful effort so far to stabilize Iraq, especially since the postwar U.S. death toll has climbed past the number killed in major combat. Democrats and Republicans alike have urged the president to spell out his plan for getting Iraq under Iraqi control and withdrawing U.S. troops, who are dying at a rate of more than one a day.

Recent polls suggest just over half of the public approves of Bush's job performance after months when his job approval was in the 60- and 70-percent range. With the presidential election just over a year away, Bush would like to bolster his standing with voters.

He urged Americans to be patient during the coming months.

"Two years ago, I told the Congress and the country that the war on terror would be a lengthy war, a different kind of war, fought on many fronts in many places," he said. "Iraq is now the central front. Enemies of freedom are making a desperate stand there - and there they must be defeated. This will take time, and require sacrifice."

Bush also said the U.S.-led coalition's work in Iraq is critical to winning the war on terrorism.

"The Middle East will either become a place of progress and peace, or it will be an exporter of violence and terror that takes more lives in America and in other free nations," the president said. "The triumph of democracy and tolerance in Iraq, in Afghanistan, and beyond, would be a grave setback for international terrorism."

His words mirror the blurring of lines involving the routing of Saddam Hussein in Iraq, problems with the Middle East peace process and the terrorist attacks on America on Sept. 11, 2001.

A poll released Saturday indi-

Continued on page 2

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 6
BULGER GREED
RETIREMENT REQUEST CROSSES LINE
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 7
LIVE FROM UMASS
DARRELL MAMMOND HITS THE FAC
SPORTS PAGE 11
RUNAWAY
THE MINUTEMEN DESTROY CCSU
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 15

9-11 tape resurfaces after two years

NEW YORK – The only videotape known to have captured both planes slamming into the World Trade Center, and only the second image of the first strike, has surfaced on the eve of the second anniversary of the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks.

The footage, obtained by The New York Times, was taken by a Czech immigrant construction worker whose son at one point came close to accidentally erasing the rare, chilling footage, the newspaper reported on its Web site Saturday.

Federal officials investigating the trade center collapse are trying to obtain a copy of the hourlong tape, which could cast light on the cause of the north tower's collapse by helping to determine factors including the exact speed at which the first plane traveled, The Times said.

The only other known footage of the first plane's impact came from a French film crew making a documentary about a probationary firefighter.

Pavel Hlava, an immigrant construction worker from the Czech Republic, shot footage of the first plane hitting the north tower as a sport utility vehicle he was riding in entered the Brooklyn-Battery Tunnel en route to lower Manhattan.

Hlava, who made the tape looking at the camera's relatively low-resolution LCD display, told the Times he did not see the first plane as he focused on the towers. But the tape shows a whitish object hitting the tower, followed by dust spurting from the tower's side and a silvery, expanding cloud.

Passing through the tunnel, Hlava, his brother and his boss heard a radio report that a small private plane had hit the World Trade Center, straight ahead outside the tunnel. That hardly prepared them for what they saw when they emerged: the north tower, looming over them, bursting with flames.

As Hlava continued filming, the second jet shrieked behind him. He caught the plane as it shot into the south tower,

Continued on page 8

GERALD H. LINGUS/COLLEGIAN

Guild Music

University of Massachusetts Theater Guild Pianist Katie Ulmer plays an excerpt from the musical "Blood Brothers" as instructor Kyle Phipps auditions roles for the vocals. "Blood Brothers" will be performed at Bowker Auditorium for three days beginning Nov. 20.

Afghan troops prepare for new offensive on Taliban

By NOOR KHAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

QALAT, Afghanistan – Hundreds of Afghan government troops prepared Sunday for a new offensive against Taliban guerrillas in the south and east, including along the border with Pakistan.

The planned offensive came amid a visit by U.S. Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld, who told a joint news conference in Kabul with President Hamid Karzai that the infiltration of terrorists into Afghanistan "is something that requires continuing attention."

"It's happening all across the globe. It proves the point that the global war on terror is not a problem in one country or for one country," Rumsfeld said.

A spate of attacks on Afghan police positions along the border and inland and heavy fighting in the past two weeks in a remote mountainous region of southern Zabul province have raised fresh doubts about the precarious grip Karzai has over parts of the country.

Karzai, who took power after U.S.-led forces ousted the hardline Taliban regime in late 2001, has postponed for two months the process of approving a new constitution, his spokesman said Sunday.

The president insisted, however, that historic elections – the first in Afghanistan in decades – will take place as planned in June 2004.

The delay in holding a council meeting of 500 delegates to form the constitution followed demands from the commission in charge that it needs more time to get input from ordinary Afghans.

There have been public quarrels between conservative elements, including within Karzai's government, who want the constitution to enshrine Islamic Sharia law, and secularists who want it to embrace liberal traditions.

U.S. military spokesman Col. Rodney Davis said that more than 100 Taliban guerrillas have been killed in the fighting since Aug. 30 – centered on the Dai Chupan district of southern Zabul province. Four American troops have also been killed in the past month, one in Dai Chupan.

The latest raid on the insurgents came Saturday night and involved American aircraft, Davis said.

While the situation in Dai Chupan has calmed in recent days, Afghan officials say forces are still hunting Taliban believed to have moved to nearby areas.

Hundreds of Afghan troops have been sent to the town of Naubaghar, some 45 miles east of Qalat – the capital of Zabul province – to join another offensive against Taliban insurgents, said Ahmad Zia Masoud, a spokesman for the governor of neighboring Ghazni province.

"We have reports about many Taliban are in this area ... but we haven't launched our operation yet," Masoud said.

Dozens of U.S. troops in armored personnel carriers were also deployed in the area, he said.

There were fresh reports of fighting near the Pakistani border, where suspected Taliban insurgents attacked a police station. There were no casualties during the two-hour firefight late Saturday and early Sunday in Ziruk, in eastern Paktika province, said Sayed Khan, a police spokesman in the province.

COURTESY NATACHA PISARENKO/ASSOCIATED PRESS

U.S. Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, left, and Afghan President Hamid Karzai talk during a news conference.

New 9-11 video tape found

Continued from page 1

exploding into an orange fireball and sending papers flying in every direction. Later, after crossing the Brooklyn Bridge, he focused on the buildings again as the south tower tilted to one side and collapsed.

Hlava and his brother, Josef, unsuccessfully tried to sell the tape in New York and in the Czech Republic, the newspaper said.

Hlava said through a Czech-language translator that language difficulties hindered his ability to sell or release the tape to the media. He also said that so much time had passed that he had doubted there was still interest in the tape.

"All his friends, they told him, 'Hey, you made a mistake. You waited too long,'" translator David Melichar told The Times.

Hlava's boss, who was driving the SUV, also had strong objections to selling the tape, Melichar said.

Hlava and Melichar's numbers are not listed and attempts by The Associated Press to reach them were unsuccessful.

In the weeks and months after the attack, the tape sat in Hlava's apartment in the Ridgewood section of Queens.

On one occasion, Hlava said he noticed that his son was playing with the video camera and erasing the tape. Hlava snatched the camera away before either of the plane impacts were erased.

—The Associated Press

Bush swears to end war on terrorism at whatever cost

Continued from page 1

cated that nearly seven in 10 Americans believe it is likely that Saddam was personally involved in the Sept. 11 attacks, which were carried out by al-Qaida, even though terrorism experts and others describe only loose links between al-Qaida and Saddam.

Congressional aides have said the amount Bush will seek for activity in Iraq could top $80 billion in the upcoming budget year.

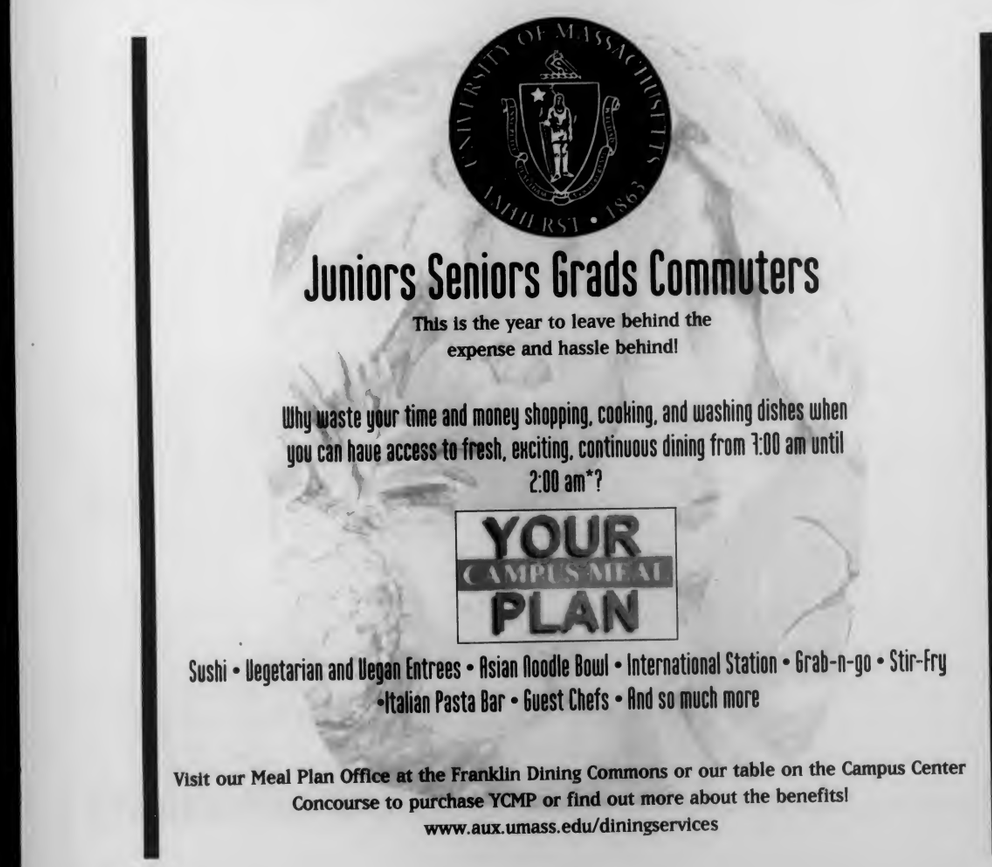
"It's going to cost more, and there will be continued sacrifice on the part of our young men and women," Secretary of State Colin Powell said Sunday. "Hopefully, in the very near future we'll get control of the security situation," he told CBS' "Face the Nation."

National security adviser Condoleezza Rice said the president believes the "cost of freedom and the cost of peace cannot be measured and that it is important that we put adequate resources to this task."

Bush is talking with lawmakers about what is needed and working on ways to increase the participation of Iraqis and other nations in stabilizing and reconstructing Iraq, Rice told CNN's "Late Edition."

"The key here is we must remain resolute," she said.

"There's a reason that foreign fighters are coming into Iraq. There is a reason that we're seeing evidence - not really yet completely clear evidence - of terrorists trying to operate in Iraq," Rice said. "They know that this is the central battle in the war on terrorism."



Powell said the Bush administration is concerned that members of al-Qaida or other terrorist groups may be heading toward Iraq. "I'm not sure how large these numbers are, how significant the threat is, but we will deal with it in Iraq," Powell said on NBC's Meet the Press."

Rice declined to offer specifics on how much money would be needed. Congressional aides, speaking on condition of anonymity, said they would not be surprised if the amount the president requests is higher than the $60 billion to $80 billion figure that has been reported for the budget year beginning Oct. 1.

"I think it could be bigger than $80 billion," said a congressional aide, who is familiar with the president's work in refining how much to request from Congress. "I think the expectation is that it's going to be a very, very big number."

A second congressional aide said: "I'm thinking we're in the $70 billion to $80 billion range and I would lean to the higher end of that."

Sen. Carl Levin of Michigan, the senior Democrat on the Senate Armed Services Committee, said Congress will approve the money needed to support U.S. troops, but lawmakers want the president to tell them what his "exit strategy" is from Iraq.

Juniors Seniors Grads Commuters

This is the year to leave behind the expense and hassle behind!

Why waste your time and money shopping, cooking, and washing dishes when you can have access to fresh, exciting, continuous dining from 7:00 am until 2:00 am*?

YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN

Sushi • Vegetarian and Vegan Entrees • Asian Noodle Bowl • International Station • Grab-n-go • Stir-Fry •Italian Pasta Bar • Guest Chefs • And so much more

Visit our Meal Plan Office at the Franklin Dining Commons or our table on the Campus Center Concourse to purchase YCMP or find out more about the benefits!
www.aux.umass.edu/diningservices

Arafat names speaker

By LARA SUKHTIAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

RAMALLAH, West Bank – Yasser Arafat tapped the Palestinian parliament speaker, an architect of peace with Israel, to take over as prime minister Sunday after a day of intense backroom politicking that followed the resignation of Mahmoud Abbas.

Meanwhile, Israeli helicopters launched a missile attack at the home of Hamas militant Abdel Salam Abu Musa in the Gaza Strip, wounding at least 11 people. The army said the target was a Hamas weapons warehouse inside the building, in the Khan Younis refugee camp.

Sunday's attack came hours after Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon said all Hamas militants were "marked for death."

Several leaders of Arafat's ruling Fatah party confirmed the nomination by consensus of parliament speaker Ahmed Qureia, though it remained unclear if he would accept. Qureia attended the meeting Sunday night but did not comment, Fatah officials said. The parliament speaker "is our only nominee," said Abbas Zaki, a member of the Fatah central committee.

Palestinian officials agreed on Arafat's suggestion of Qureia and asked him to form a new government within 48 hours, said Hanna Amireh, a member of PLO executive committee.

The developments came during a day of heated negotiations set off by Abbas' resignation Saturday. Arafat had refused to grant him more power over the Palestinian security services, capping four months of wrangling between the two since Abbas took office.

Qureia, a moderate who helped cobble together the 1993 Oslo accord between Israel and the PLO, was considered a top candidate to replace Abbas because he has led past negotiations and has credibility with Israel. Israeli officials didn't immediately respond to the development.

Earlier in the day, there were conflicting signals about whether Abbas might be pressured to stay on.

A source close to Abbas, speaking on condition of anonymity, said he would serve again only if he could work out a firm deal with Arafat beforehand on what his powers would be and who would serve in his government. Abbas himself sent mixed signals when asked about heading a new government. "It's something premature to talk about. My resignation is final," he said.

The resignation dealt a serious blow to the U.S.-backed "road map" plan for establishing a Palestinian state by 2005; Israel and the United States have refused to deal with Arafat, whom they accuse of fomenting terrorism, and made Abbas, a critic of terror attacks against Israelis, their partner in peace efforts.

U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell said any Palestinian prime minister must have clear control over security forces and use them to crack down on militant groups like Hamas and Islamic Jihad. "That person has to have political authority and the determination to go after terrorism," Powell said on ABC's "This Week."

The "road map" plan requires the Palestinians to dismantle mili-

Continued on page 4

Weekly Calendar of events

Compiled by Ferron Salniker

September 8 - September 14 2003

Monday 8

* At 7 p.m. in the New York Room in Mary Woolley Hall at Mount Holyoke College Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist Tony Horwitz will present "Blue Latitudes: Boldly Going Where Captain Cook Has Gone Before."

* The lecture is sponsored by the MHC English Department and the Odyssey Bookshop. The reading will be based on James Cook's epic voyages of discovery.

* The ongoing series with MHC alumni "Feature" readers presents the Poets' Lounge with feature reader Krysia Lycette Villon at 7:45 p.m. in the Blanchard Campus Center Lounge at Mount Holyoke College. The event is free and will be followed by an all-campus spoken-work open mic. Sign-ups for the open mic are at 7:45 p.m., the feature poet performs at 8:00 p.m. and the open mic will be at 8:30 p.m.

Tuesday 9

* Beginning today at the Fairchild Gallery in the Mead Art Museum at Amherst College there will be an exhibit honoring faculty from the Amherst College Department of Fine Arts. The exhibit will include paintings by Joseph Ablow, David Gloman and Robert T. Sweeney, photographs by Stephen Petegorsky and Justin Kimball, prints by Betsey Garand and sculpture by Carol Keller. The exhibit runs through Nov. 2. The Mead Art Museum is open Tuesday through Sunday from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., and Thursday evenings until 9 p.m. More information can be obtained on the museum's Website at www.amherst.edu/mead.

* At 7 p.m. in the Mullins Center at UMass the Red Hot Chili Peppers will perform live. Tickets are $41. The show will be opened by French Toast and Queens of the Stone Age. Doors open at 6 p.m. For information call 545-3001.

* From 7:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m. the Community Outreach Program Community Service Fair will take place in the front room of the Keefe Campus Center at Amherst College. Over 30 community non-profit organizations representing a wide range of issue areas will be present, along with over 20 campus student groups. For more information, call 542-5766.

Wednesday 10

* From 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium at UMass, the Community Service Learning Fair will take place. Approximately 70 organizations from education, health care, animal care, correctional facilities and more will be on campus to recruit student volunteers. For more information call 545-2015.

* Student Programs and MIFA at Mount Holyoke College will present one of the leading ambassadors of new Cuban jazz, composer and pianist Omar Sosa in concert at Chapin Auditorium in Mary Woolley Hall at 8 p.m. Tickets are $20.

Thursday 11

* Sponsored by the Five College Early Music Program Renaissance and Baroque Dance Classes are being offered in Kendall Hall, Studio 2 at Mount Holyoke College on Thursdays at 7:00 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. Beginners are welcome. Fore more information, contact mmonahin@amherst.edu or MEPash@aol.com.

* At 8:00 p.m. in the Blanchard Campus Center Great Room at Mount Holyoke College Thursday Night Edge will present local music hero Stephen Kellogg. The special guest will be Nini Camps. The event is free to MHC students and faculty; $3 for Five College Students and $5 for the general public.

Friday 12

* Two artists will present "Off the Beaten Track: Contemporary Mindscapes," in the Stirn Auditorium in the Mead Art Museum at Amherst College. The artists, Julie Hedrick and Shuli Sade, will also show two short films. The event begins at 4:30 p.m., with a reception to follow.

* "Sunset Serenade featuring Catie Curtis" will take place at 6 p.m. on the Skinner Green at Mount Holyoke College. Contemporary folk singer David Linhart will also be there.

Saturday 13

* The UMass Theatre Guild will hold auditions for "Wit" at 10 a.m. "Wit" runs December 4-6. See www.umass.edu/rso/guild for more details.

Sunday 14

* The 3rd Annual Massachusetts Book Awards will take place at 4:30 p.m. in the Eric Carle Museum of Picture Book Art at Hampshire College. A reception will follow at the nearby National Yiddish Book Center.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markanonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COMICS EDITOR Robert Krzykowski
EDITORIAL EDITOR Erika Lovley
NEWS EDITOR Courtney Charles
PHOTO EDITOR Gerald H. Ling
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Julie Beauchamp
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE Sandra Marquez
SPECIAL ISSUES Betsy Feldman
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Ben Ratner
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Mark Lagatic
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lisa Lynch
LAYOUT MANAGER Lindsay Clark
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST ARTS & LIVING Jessica Pelletier
ASST ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Cram
ASSISTANT NEWS Kelly Farrell
ASSISTANT NEWS Ferron Salniker
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marzelli

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE. BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

News meeting today at 4pm

All staff meeting this Wednesday at 6pm in the Campus Center Basement.

Oasis Body Wraps and Tanning
243 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 587-9742

NOW FEATURING SUN SPRITZER UV FREE TANNING

• The first UV FREE tanning machine in the area
• Get $5.00 off your first visit
• A rich golden tan in just a few seconds
• You'll look and feel great

1/2 Price tanning every Tuesday

Conveniently Located
OASIS
UMASS
University Drive
Route 9

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
(32 years of service—and counting!)

A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)

REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!

••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN

Fall Semester 2003 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Room 163C of the Campus Center for all meetings •Sept. 8 (Mon) •Sept. 9 (Tues) •Sept. 10 (Wed)
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs, Sep 11th @ Boltwood table CC Concourse.
No telephone inquiries; YOU (or a friend) must pick up the notification letter!!!

Volunteer, while earning credit!

SAVE $$$ ON TEXTBOOKS AT JEFFERY AMHERST!

We have these and many other UMASS courses at discounted prices:

ACCT-222	COMM-118	GEO-354	PLSOIL-102
ACCT-311	COMM-121	HRTA-230	PLSOIL-105
ACCT-312	COMM-226	HUMDEV-270	PLSOIL-200
ACCT-331	COMM-250	ITALIAN-230	POLSCI-360
ANI SCI-220	COMM-397-P	LING-201	PSYCH-100-1
ANI SCI-332	ECE-221	MATH-101	PSYCH-100-2
ANTH-100	ECE-313	MATH-102	PSYCH-100-3
ANTH-103	ECON-103-A	MATH-103	PSYCH-100-6
ARABIC-126	ECON-103-C	MATH-104	PSYCH-100-7
ARTHIS-100	ECON-104-A	MATH-127	PSYCH-100-8
ARTHIS-537	ECON-104-B	MATH-235	PSYCH-240-A
ASTRO-100-1	ECON-203	MATH-331	PSYCH-240-B
ASTRO-100-2	ECON-204-1	MNGT-361	PSYCH-240-C
ASTRO-100-3	ECON-204-4	MICBIO-106	PSYCH-305
BIO-103	ED-210	MICBIO-160	PSYCH-307
BIO-104	ED-276	MICBIO-310	PSYCH-308
BIOCHEM-285	ENG-112	MIE-201	PSYCH-315
BIOL-285	ENGLWP-112	MIE-210	RESECON-212
CEE-240	ENGLWP-113	MKTG-301	SOC-210
CEE-241	EXCSCI-130	MKTG-410	SOC-211
CHEM-102	EXCSCI-210	MNGT-314	SOC-241
CHEM-111	EXCSCI-301	MUSIC-100-2	SOM-680
CHEM-112	EXCSCI-304	MUSIC-100-3	SPAN-126
CHEM-261	EXCSCI-370	NUTR-130	STAT-140
CHINESE-155	FOMGT-250	NUTR-352	W&FCON-260
CLASSICS-224	FOMGT-320	PHIL-100-E	MNGT-361
CMPSCI-121	FRENCH-110	PHYS-100
CMPSCI-201	FRENCH-120	PHYS-125
CMPSCI-250	GEO-103	PHYS-151
COMDIS-211	GEO-131	PHYS-152

Remember to sell us your old textbooks and get instant cash!

Jeffery Amherst College Store -
Located between A.J. Hastings and La Veracruzana

Sat 8/30	8:30-6:00
Sun 8/31	12:00-5:00
Mon-Thurs 9/1-9/4	8:30-8:00
Fri & Sat 9/5-9/6	8:30-6:00
Sun 9/7	12:00-5:00
Mon 9/8	8:30-8:00
Mon-Sat 9/9-9/13	8:30-6:00

Knowledge is power.
Pass it on.

Join us, and you'll find yourself in an environment where knowledge and learning are shared. An environment where you can expect to learn from your colleagues' ideas. And where they expect you to contribute your own. Don't let this opportunity pass you by.

ey.com/us/careers

ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

Previously banned militia men patrol Iraqi holy city

By TAREK AL-ISSAWI
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NAJAF, Iraq – Militiamen carrying assault rifles and wearing arm bands of a once-outlawed Islamic group patrolled in the holy city of Najaf on Saturday, a week after a key Shiite cleric was killed in a bombing followers blamed on the failure of U.S. security efforts.

In a major – if temporary – policy shift, the top U.S. civilian administrator in Iraq, L. Paul Bremer, said the armed Iraqis have the blessing of the American occupation force.

"The militias ... on the streets of Najaf ... were there with the full authority of the Coalition Provisional Authority and in full cooperation with the coalition forces. That is to say, they were licensed in accordance with our existing programs," Bremer said Saturday at a joint news conference in Baghdad with Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld.

When asked to name which militias had coalition approval, Bremer seemed to backtrack.

"They were not militias. They were members of various groups. There was no one militia," he said.

Yet most of the armed men in Najaf wore black arm bands emblazoned with the word "Badr" – identifying them as members of the Shiite Badr Brigade Militia.

The brigade – the armed wing of the Supreme Council for the Islamic Revolution in Iraq – was ordered to disarm and disband by U.S. forces shortly after the fall of Baghdad five months ago. Its defiant reappearance takes on particular significance because its new leader also sits on the U.S.-picked Iraqi Governing Council.

Abdel-Aziz al-Hakim took over the leadership of the Supreme Council after his brother, Ayatollah Mohammed Baqir al-Hakim, was assassinated in an Aug. 29 car bomb outside the Imam Ali shrine. Between 85 and 125 people also were killed.

The brigade was spotted on the streets shortly afterward. Many of them, searching pedestrians around the shrine Saturday, could not speak Arabic, Iraq's predominant language, and spoke Farsi, the language of neighboring Iran. The al-Hakim brothers formed the Supreme Council while they were in exile in Iran during the 1980s.

Najaf residents said hundreds of Iranians flooded into the city after the ayatollah was killed.

"Some came to pay their respects, but others arrived to join the brigade. Clearly the brigade has regrouped and is leading the effort to secure the city," a businessman, who claimed to supply the militiamen with food and weapons, said on condition of anonymity.

Rumsfeld dismissed suggestions by Iraqi leaders that the Najaf attack showed coalition forces had failed to provide adequate security.

"Instead of pointing fingers ... at the security forces of the coalition ... I think it's important for the Iraqi people to step up and take responsibility for their security by providing information" to U.S. forces, Rumsfeld said.

He said it would be a mistake to boost American troop levels in Iraq because it "would increase the number of targets" for terrorists. He also said more U.S. soldiers would sap resources better spent on reconstruction and training Iraqi security forces.

Coalition officials have said that before the Najaf bombing they provided hundreds of Kalashnikov rifles, money for uniforms and training for a 400-strong security force at the request of municipal and religious authorities. The force was supposed to fall under the command of Iraqi police.

However, the militiamen outside the shrine did not appear to be part of that force, with most of them wearing street clothes instead of uniforms.

The head of U.S. forces in Iraq, Lt. Gen. Ricardo Sanchez, has warned that these conflicts between rival religious militias were a looming threat that could require the assistance of additional international troops. He said Thursday the United States was "not turning a blind eye to any militias" and "will take the right action" if necessary.

At Friday prayers, a deputy of the slain cleric told an overflow crowd of more than 15,000 people at the shrine to support the Badr Brigade.

"The Badr Brigade must continue to exist and thrive. They must be supported and recognized," said the imam, Sadreddine al-Qobanji, as worshippers chanted, "We are all Badr Brigade."

The slain ayatollah was a moderating influence among the Shiites, most of whom do not act on major issues without direction from spiritual leaders. It is unclear whether his brother will follow that line.

The al-Hakim brothers returned to Iraq shortly after Saddam Hussein fell, calling for patience with the American occupation. Yet there are growing indications Shiites are becoming restless with the continuing violence and may take matters into their own hands.

The Shiites, the majority of Iraq's 25 million people, were long oppressed under Saddam's Sunni-led regime.

Also on Saturday, U.S. soldiers in Tikrit, 120 miles north of Baghdad, shot and killed two Iraqis after they fired at an observation post, said Maj. Bryan Luke of the 4th Infantry Division's 1st Battalion, 22nd Infantry Regiment.

MURAD SEZER/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld speaks to the media in Baghdad Saturday. Rumsfeld said that "the Iraqi people are so much better off today than they were four or five months ago."

New Palestinian prime minister named

Continued from page 3

tant groups. Abbas, despite his strong support for the road map in principle, has refused to do this forcefully, appealing in vain to the militants to disarm.

The Palestinian leadership crisis came as Israel dged toward all-out war with the militant group Hamas.

One day after a botched strike Saturday against the group's top leaders, Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon that all of the Islamic militant group members are now "marked for death."

Sunday's missile strike against Musa appeared to confirm the Israelis' determination to step up the campaign against Hamas. The group has promised to exact revenge for the strikes.

It was the eighth such Israeli missile strike since a Hamas suicide bomber killed 22 people on a Jerusalem bus on Aug. 19. Those attacks have killed 12 militants, including a senior political leader, and five bystanders.

Nine people were hospitalized, including three children with moderate injuries due to shrapnel, said Dr. Haider al-Qedra, director of Nasser Hospital. Two others were treated for minor injuries at the site of the attack, he said. Witnesses said Musa escaped.

Israel said it only fired one missile, while Palestinian security official Maj. Gen. Omar Ashour said two were fired.

Another Israeli bombing a day earlier lightly injured Hamas' revered founder, Sheik Ahmed Yassin, was lightly injured in an Israeli bombing on Saturday. The group has promised to exact revenge for the strikes.

Speaking to the Dubai-based satellite channel Al-Arabiya on Sunday, Yassin did not rule out Hamas attacks on Israeli leaders: "Everything is open as they have made everything from our side a target."

Hamas later claimed responsibility for planting a bomb that exploded Sunday as an Israeli army jeep drove over the device near the fence between Israel and the Gaza Strip. The blast lightly wounded three Israeli soldiers, the army said.

At the same time, a debate brewed over the morality of such "targeted killings" and over whether the militants can be deterred.

The decision to ratchet up the war on Hamas – after the group claimed the suicide bombing last month – has considerable public support.

A power vacuum on the Palestinian side might invite an escalation in violence, with Palestinian militants possibly stepping up attacks and Israel taking more dramatic measures, including the potential expulsion of Arafat from Palestinian areas.

Momentum appeared to grow in Israel for expelling Arafat, with Cabinet ministers arguing that Abbas' resignation proved the 74-year-old Palestinian leader is the main impediment to efforts to end three years of violence.

"As long as Arafat is in the region, he won't let any other leader develop," Foreign Minister Silvan Shalom told Army Radio.

Amos Gilad, a top adviser to Defense Minister Shaul Mofaz, said there was a growing understanding in the United States and Europe that Arafat's departure is a precondition for progress toward peace.

U.S. Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, left, and Afghan President Hamid Karzai talk during a news conference.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Bulger's new request is all about greed

Just when it seemed like the battle was over, greed has stirred it again.

With University of Massachusetts President William Bulger's request for an additional $30,000 in benefits onto his pension, he has shown complete disregard for the welfare of citizens in Massachusetts, drawing the ire of employees, state residents and Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney.

"I think the effort to take additional pension money from the taxpayers of Massachusetts is as wrongheaded as anything that President Bulger could possibly think of. Its just nuts," Romney told the Associated Press on Friday, calling for state legislators to bar the request.

While the Massachusetts Daily Collegian has not agreed with the Governor's methods of putting pressure on Bulger before, someone needs to do so now. Even without an increase, Bulger will already draw about $185,000 annually from now until death. And of course, that does not include his million-dollar severance package – a golden parachute if ever there was one, and a gift that had to make stepping out of the political spotlight much easier on Bulger's ego. How much more can the University possibly owe him for services rendered?

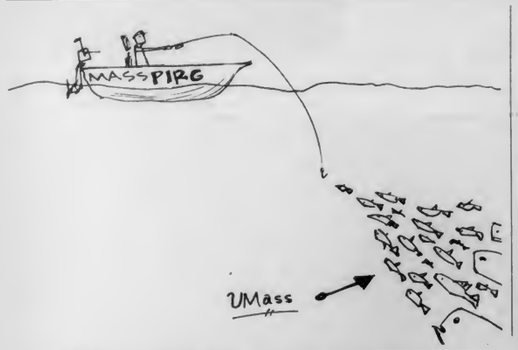
The original terms for Bulger's retirement package included two and a quarter year's salary totaling $695,000, $154,000 for a six-month sabbatical, and a host of other benefits that added up to the million-dollar package.

According to the Associated Press, Bulger will receive 60 percent of the average salary for his three highest-paid years. His wife will then be able to collect two thirds of his pension after his death.

John Hoey, a spokesman for the president's office, has defended Bulger's request, saying that he is simply submitting a formal request based on his contract.

"Those issues are really between the individual retirees of Massachusetts and the pension board and I assume they will be taken up in the appropriate forum," he told the Associated Press.

The issues Hoey speaks of, though, are not simply between retirees in Massachusetts and Bulger, though. Bulger is attempting to take advantage of the system for all that it is worth on his way out the door. After already receiving a king's ransom from the University's Board of Trustees, how much more is it morally acceptable for him to ask for?



When Bulger's retirement package was announced, the board of trustees as a whole took criticism for giving Bulger whatever he wanted in exchange for his resignation. Even Lawrence Boyle, a member of the board, said the he was disappointed by the lack of effort shown by the board as a whole to negotiate a smaller settlement with Bulger.

"We should be much more aggressive in negotiating something that is fair," Boyle told the Collegian during the Aug. 6 press conference announcing Bulger's resignation. "It's fair for him, but not necessarily for the University, and that's who we represent. We represent them."

The fate of Bulger's request now rests with the state retirement board, which is headed by state Treasurer Tim Cahill. As members of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, Cahill and the board have the same responsibilities to the state that the UMass Board of Trustees failed to remember.

One can only hope that the state retirement board is able to overcome Bulger's bullying and prevent him from cashing in anymore than he has already on a departure that was necessitated in large part by his own actions. The citizens of Massachusetts deserve that much.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian Editorial Board.

MassPIRG manipulates UMass students

The MassPIRG fee on your semester bill is not mandatory. You are not required to pay $7 to MassPIRG at any time in order to be a student at the University of Massachusetts. However, in order to not donate your $7 to the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group each semester, you are required to check off a box on the back of your bill and subtract this amount from your total tab, thus waiving the fee.

S. J. Port

This is known as a negative check-off system, as opposed to a positive check-off system in which you check off the campus organizations you would like to help fund via a donation. All UMass students are automatically billed for a contribution to MassPIRG unless they make the effort to waive the fee. Negative check-off fees are manipulative. The MassPIRG, and all other waivable fees that appear on a student's bill should be positive check-off only.

If upon signing up for phone service the company automatically added to your bill a $7 "donation" to Organization X you would, enraged, insist that they discontinue this practice on your monthly statements. Why is it that MassPIRG is allowed to charge students a fee? Should departments on campus, such as languages and athletics also charge fees to increase their budgets?

MassPIRG, according to its Web site, is a "statewide, student directed and funded organization that works on environmental, consumer protection, and democracy issues." Its mission, it says, is to act as a "watchdog for special interests like big banks, oil companies, and auto companies, to hold our politicians accountable, and to ensure that our interests as citizens are protected." However, by automatically billing the possibly impoverished student $7 each semester, MassPIRG is looking out for no one but MassPIRG.

All UMass students are automatically billed for a contribution...Negative check-off fees are manipulative.

MassPIRG was begun at UMass Amherst and Hampshire College in 1971. A campus wide vote by the 1972 student body at UMass Amherst approved and instituted the collection of a mandatory fee added to students' bills as a line item. Every two years the campus votes during spring student government elections to continue this tradition of a negative check-off fee or change the practice. Any organization can go through the referendum process with the SGA and add its waivable fee to our bills. Currently, the only other organization that has does so is the campus childcare center.

The childcare center's $1 fee each semester, although also a negative check-off, waivable fee, is at least a direct deposit to a campus program directly affecting students, staff and faculty. If you choose to pay this small fee, you contribute to the daycare center (ravaged by budget cuts) on the UMass Amherst campus. This center provides childcare for students who are also parents and could not afford daycare otherwise, as well as for the children of offensively underpaid faculty and staff. MassPIRG fees are pooled with fees collected from the 23 separate campus chapters. The fee does not effectively contribute directly to a cause on the Amherst campus.

Furthermore, MassPIRG will only establish a chapter on a college campus when the student body has approved the payment of the $7 waivable fee per semester per student. MassPIRG refuses to reside on campuses that do not support their existence through a negative check-off fee imposed unjustly on students.

It is true that if the MassPIRG fee were a positive check-off, or essentially a true donation, their funding would drop. Less people would virtuously donate than the number of people who are currently duped into paying the waivable fee. However, this is not a reason to continue to allow MassPIRG, or any organization, to have a negative check-off fee.

In addition to being confusing, the negative check-off fee is one more complication to the already tedious UMass bill.

S.J. Port is a Collegian columnist.

The "not-so-golden" state

Mark Ostroff

California – one of the greatest financial powerhouses in America, is considered the fifth largest independent economy in the world. Its own Gross Domestic Profit could finance the nation's military spending nearly three times over. But if California's economy were as rich as its politics, they'd be on par with Paraguay.

The recall campaign to oust Gray Davis is now in full swing and early October could possibly see a new governor in Sacramento. As if a recall election wasn't bad enough on its own, the candidates who have taken the gubernatorial bull by the horns seem mediocre at best for the governorship. A porn tycoon, a washed-up child actor and even a porn star in the race still bring no justice to those who are, for the moment, still running the show in California.

The problem goes way beyond one man. While Gray Davis plays a significant part in the state's budget woes, the bigger picture implicates illegal immigrants, Enron, Republicans, Democrats, and yes, even the Bush Administration.

The wallets of California's working class had been hit harder than a Yankees fan at Fenway Park as illegal immigrants, or "documentally challenged citizens", evaded between $5 to $7 billion dollars in taxes last year. Tabs that were run up from emergency health care, MediCal, and welfare were also picked up by taxpayers. In fact, over 30 percent of California's welfare and MediCal payments were going to illegal immigrants in 2002.

Welfare fraud and tax evasion aren't the only things scamming California. Politicians and energy hustlers from Enron were also having their way with the Golden State. Before managing to siphon some $66 billion dollars out of California over a sham energy crisis, the now-dead energy giant managed to buy out Democrats and Republicans in the State Assembly, spending over $420,000 for lobbies on deregulating the energy market.

Gray Davis himself ended up playing ball for Enron for a cool $97,000 in contributions. As a result, the cost of a megawatt-hour in some parts of California had gone from $30 to $1500.

What did the Bush administration do for California during its energy crisis? Nothing. Literally. When Senator Diane Feinstein tried to get in touch with the White House, she was refused an appointment with the president and vice president. They even spelled her name wrong on the written response. Doesn't it seem rather strange that Enron CEO Ken Lay was able to make an appointment but a Democrat senator wasn't? (Well, "Kenny Boy" is easier to spell.)

The wallets of California's working class have been hit harder than a Yankees fan at Fenway Park.

Afterward, it was found that Dick Cheney had sent an email to the Department of Energy recommending that they need not mention the energy crisis in their annual report. And now, Bush claims to take a "hands-off" approach toward California's recall. How convenient.

Not all of California's problems, however, can be pinned on the conservatives or illegal immigrants. Democrats are running in the red as well from this. In late July, Democrats from the State Assembly were caught on tape, discussing ways to prolong California's fiscal crisis in order to emphasize it better as a Republican problem, as well as to change the Assembly's protocol on voting on taxes.

They were busted when a microphone had been left on and had broadcasted their chat to over 500 "squawk boxes," that allow reporters, staffers and others to listen in. They even had the nerve to downplay what they had been talking about, even though Assemblywoman Jackie Goldberg had been heard yelling curse words after discovering the conversation had been heard.

Now, with a cast of seemingly clueless candidates in line for their share at "Californian Idol," (155 to be exact) the rest of the world gets to watch American politics reduce itself from honorable institution to a sideshow.

We have a 22 year-old porn star who plans on putting web cams throughout the governor's mansion, as well as taking guns off the streets by distributing porn in exchange for them. Did I mention that lap dances might soon be tax deductible? (No, this is not a joke.)

Larry Flynt – yes, that Larry Flynt – will be putting in a slightly calmer approach with plans to grant amnesty to all illegal immigrants residing in California. Seriously, thiscould drop the state census bureaus margin of error by up to 10 percent! The self-proclaimed "smutpeddler who cares" also plans on supporting our troops by sending them copies of Hustler, according to an interview on CNN.

No campaign can be complete without the "please-give-me-a-reality-show" presence of the washed-up TV star and security guard Gary Coleman.

In the end, it looks like Arnold Schwarzenegger could get the coveted office of the governor of California. However, he has broken a few norms that could leave voters skeptical. Sources say that he has recently added Rob Lowe to his roster of aides and advisors. Anyone see a themevolving here?

He has declinedto debate, and at times won't even touch the issues that affect California. He claims to be a conservative, yet has surprisingly liberal views, including his fiscal ones.

Schwarzenegger seems to be the most serious out of the candidates in California, but his competence as governor might only measure up to his ability in acting. Let's hope not.

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian columnist.

Here's to the night

Erika Lovley

According to my allergies, autumn is inching closer to New England by the day. The return of cooler weather and thousands of undergrads has hatched a wild herd of undergraduate runners, who have lain dormant since the hot days of July. They crowd the sidewalks, the Amherst bike trail, and the middle of the driving lanes, leaving motorists to long for the return of runner-repellant negative wind chills.

I am an avid runner myself – I am currently training to run a marathon in Walt Disney World this January. Along with five classes and editing the editorial/opinion section of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, I make time to run about two hours everyday. After running around campus as often as I do, you come to recognize some of these other sweaty faces that you share the sidewalks with.

I am happy to note that over the last few years, the number of recreational runners, especially females, has been on the rise. It's great that more of us are trying to stay in shape and live healthy lifestyles. However, I have noticed several types of behavior from UMass runners that are compromising runners' safety.

I notice that many people, women especially, seem to be choosing to run alone at night. I know classes and extracurriculars require most of our daylight hours, and the warm days make nights the coolest time to run. However, running alone in the dark is not a great idea for anyone, but especially not for women.

I am not saying that females are necessarily more vulnerable or less able to defend themselves in the event of a problem. However, I have observed several runners who have been cause for concern.

The UMass campus and the surrounding areas are usually very safe places to run during the day. As a smaller woman, I feel fairly safe walking around campus at night, even when I have to do so alone. However, running alone at night is a different story. The uneven sidewalks can be treacherous around campus. Visibility is bad for both the runner and for oncoming traffic. Plus, you never really know who's behind or in front of you, until they get too close for comfort.

In one instance, walking back to Central around 10 p.m. the other night, a runner came up behind me with her headphones on. The girl had no idea that I was directly in front of her. She was so busy adjusting her discman that she almost crashed directly into me. She was completely unaware of her surroundings, putting herself in potential danger.

Another time, I witnessed a girl slowly jogging, and, no joke, somehow talking on her cell phone at the same time. She never realized I was walking behind her. When she finally noticed my shadow, she jumped out of her own skin. Both these girls had rendered themselves basically helpless by their technological distractions and by running alone in the dark.

I feel fairly safe walking around campus at night, even when I have to do so alone. However, running alone at night is a different story.

If you must run by yourself, there are several precautions you should take. A self-defense class is an excellent way to learn how to protect yourself. If you can't take a self defense class, (although I highly recommend it) use your common sense. Stick to trails that are well lit and frequented by other people. Take along a running partner or a dog. Don't run on the highways, you could easily be picked off, or picked up.

When you run on a busy road, leave the discman at home. I like my music just as much as anyone else, but try thinking while you run, rather than requiring music to keep you alert. Stay on trails that have several options, such as a shortcut to home in case of injury or fatigue. If you run into trouble, remember that low guttural shouts travel farther and are better heard than high pitched Barbie screams. Above all, listen to your gut. If you think someone looks suspicious, or a trail is empty and far away from safety,don't take it.

I do not mean to discourage anyones running program by this column. However, these are safety issues that all runners, from the beginner to the marathoner, should keep in mind. Have a safe and happy runner's high this fall.

Erika Lovley is a Collegian columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

editorial@dailycollegian.com | 413-545-3699 | Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center Way, Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Why it sucks to be Christina

Rockin' Out

Samara Marblestone

You know what? It really must suck to be Christina Aguilera.

I mean, Christina is an incredible singer and performer, and she has a cool Grammy award to back that up. But despite her millions of dollars and Grammy award winning status, it must suck to be her.

Let's take a recent example to prove why Christina always gets the short end of the stick. During her performance with Madonna and Britney Spears at the MTV Video Music Awards on Aug 28, she didn't get any credit for locking lips with the Material Girl. The camera caught Britney and Madonna going at it, but the camera guy must have been too busy trying to transfer his blood back to his brain, and as a result, only caught the tail end of Christina smooching Mrs. Guy Ritchie. Consequently, it's like it never happened. Everyone has been talking about Britney and Madonna, but not Christina. That really sucks for her.

Oh wait, there's more.

All in all, Christina must be blind in either one or both of the make-up filled holes in her face – the ones once known as her eyes. For her to walk out of her house in the morning with more make-up on than Tammy Faye Baker and say to herself, "I look good," she must be mildly retarded. She has a gorgeous face when she doesn't smother it all in Revlon products. If you check her out when she first became famous during her "Genie in a Bottle" years, she had gorgeous blond hair and blue eyes.

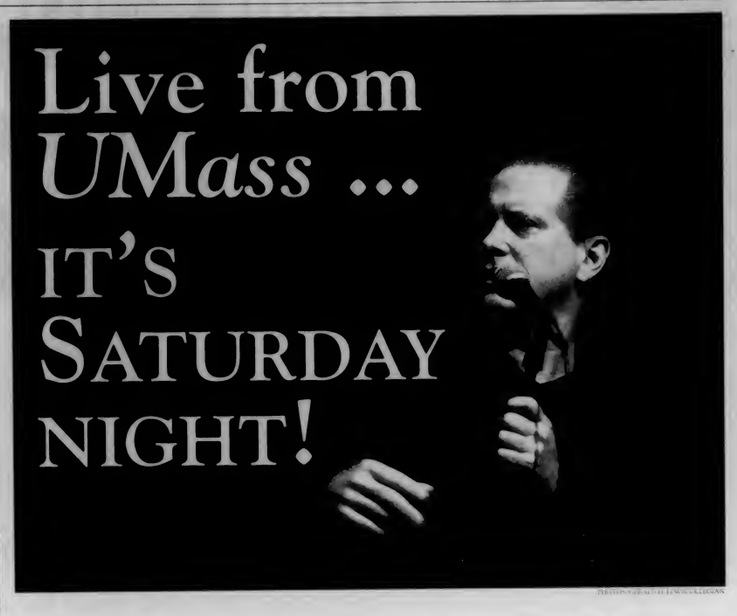
Not anymore.

Not only is her face all covered up with crap, her hair is constantly changing from human hair to grizzly bear hair. She has worn wigs that are bigger than Rupaul's, and it's a scientific miracle that gravity hasn't smashed her head into the ground yet.

The thing that pisses me off the most is how as much as Christina identifies herself as a leader, she is the biggest follower in music today. Although she entered the music world as a pop princess, she says (after the fact) that she was forced to do so. Awww, poor baby. Some mean, big, record executive forced you to become famous and make millions as you sang about how you want to be "rubbed the right way."

COURTESY JASON SQUIER/ROLLINGSTONE.COM

Christina Aguilera on her most recent tour with Justin Timberlake.



In a quest to be different, Christina decided to record an album in Spanish, since she's like 3.7 percent Hispanic. Coincidentally, at the same time, Latin pop music was all the rage, as J.Lo, Ricky Martin, Marc Anthony, and tons of other Latin pop stars were the hottest thing since bottled water. As Christina tried to be "different," she ended up being exactly the same as everyone else, once again.

Once Christina gained a little more creative control in her career, she's like, "if I can't be pretty, I might as well be dirty," hence the birth of her second album, "Stripped." She decided to be herself and be as gross and disgusting as humanly possible.

What a fabulous idea.

So yeah — it sucks to be Christina Aguilera. No matter what she does, she just ends up in the shadow of Britney Spears, and/or on People Magazine's "Worst Dressed" list. Is she happy? I'm not really too sure. I mean, she makes a good living, but the problem is that she isn't being herself. She says she is, but her image changes too much. It's okay to admit that you're not sure about who you are just yet. But if you're saying that your old image as pop-princess was fake, how are we supposed to believe her image now is real?

Samara Marblestone is a Collegian columnist.

Live from UMass ... IT'S SATURDAY NIGHT!

PHOTO ESSAY BY THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

By Reid Davenport
Collegian Staff

"Saturday Night Live" hit the University of Massachusetts this weekend, as veteran star Darrell Hammond entertained a packed Fine Arts Center crowd on Saturday night with an array of his hilarious jokes and incredible impersonations.

The event started with Student Government Association President Dave Carr welcoming the students to one of the many events that are organized for the semester. Carr then stepped aside to allow Hammond to take the stage, which was followed by roaring applause from the crowd.

Hammond started off the night poking fun at the California race for governor. He mainly took shots at Arnold Schwarzenegger and Hustler creator Larry Flynt getting into arguments. He impersonated both men, arguing that Schwarzenegger is only running because he thinks he's a Kennedy. Following the simulated debate, he flowed right into more political humor by taking a shot at President George W. Bush and his Porky Pig-like speech impediment.

Hammond kept the political ball rolling by addressing the behavior of British Prime Minister Tony Blair. He spoke of how in Parliament they yell and scream at Blair for his actions, as opposed to our government's polite attitude towards Bush. Hammond also did his famous impression of former Vice President Al Gore.

"Sometimes you play politicians on TV and they don't like it," Hammond said. "They act real nice and all, but I mean [Al Gore] hates me because on the show I made him (switched to his Gore voice) talk like this."

Hammond then began speaking on how former President Bill Clinton should have helped Gore with the election. At that point, the crowd roared in anticipation of hearing one of the impersonations that made Hammond's career.

"I offered to go down to Florida," Hammond began with his Clinton impersonation. "Press the flesh and mass market the human touch. Hell, I was going to be down there for Spring Break anyway."

"Clinton was in trouble every day," Hammond said. "Everyone would look to the TV and wonder, 'How will President Clinton get out of this one?' Clinton was in trouble all the time for eight years. He didn't get into fender benders. He got into stuff even James Bond couldn't get out of."

After a few more minutes on the subject of former President Clinton, Hammond discussed how he came up with the Sean Connery impersonation. He said, it began when he started watching the movie "The Untouchables" and kept trying to get Connery's voice down.

"I was repeating the lines from the movie," said Hammond. "Then my buddy Will Farrell walked in and he was working on his impression of Alex Trebek from 'Jeopardy!' and for reasons which are not apparent to me, I turned to him and said [in Connery's voice], 'Not a fan of the ladies, are you Trebek?'"

"I know I'd go down in history for something," he continued. "But I never thought it was going to be for saying, [in Connery's voice] 'Famous titties for 500.' We figured it wouldn't work so we loaded the skits up with the dirtiest stuff we could get away with. The censors went out of their minds. I would say things like, 'I could have been your father, Trebek, but the dog beat me over the fence.' And I make a living out of this."

Darrell Hammond
Fine Arts Center
Amherst
Sept. 6

Hammond went on to talk about how horrific his grade point average was in school. He graduated high school with about a 1.9 and finished college with a 2.1. He could barely remember what he did in college, but then he was interrupted by a member of the crowd.

"Been hitting the bottle a little tonight, son?" Hammond asked.

"Did you see the Britney Spears kiss?" Hammond said to change the subject. "Also, she recently came out and admitted she's not a virgin. In a related story, a bear came out of the woods and admitted he left shit in the bushes."

Later on in the act, after doing his Geraldo Rivera, Ronald Reagan, and "Hardball" host Chris Matthews impersonations, Hammond got a few hecklers from the crowd. He brought a freshman named Julie on stage and invited her to sing, which she did to an applause from the crowd. However, the other young freshman named John sang, but the crowd wasn't very happy with his performance of a song from the "South Park" movie.

Hammond would go on to speak about his parents being tough on him as a teenager followed by his luck with relationships. He touched upon how women are able to use both sides of their brains, but men are incapable of doing so. Hammond moved on to talk about how he witnessed his wife giving birth and how he was shocked at how much he didn't know about this world.

"If the baby can't fit out, they make an incision," said Hammond. "And if they made that same incision on a man, there would be one-of-two things: either there will be a homicide, or a suicide."

Hammond topped off his act with a quick Regis Philbin impression and thanked the audience for coming out.

You can see Darrell Hammond, and the rest of the "Saturday Night Live" cast on their season opener on Oct. 4 when "WWF" superstar "The Rock" will be hosting. Hammond will also be seen co-hosting the Emmy Awards later on this year.

Heartwarming children's picture book makes for the perfect 'thank you' gift

'The Bracelet'
Illustrated by Miriam de Rosier
Adapted from Elizabeth Ballard Gibbs Smith

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Staff

Fine details make the world go round.

And illustrator Miriam de Rosier knows it, for fine details abound in her first book, "The Bracelet."

This Elizabeth Ballard story – first printed in a 1986 anthology, "Who Switched the Price Tags?" – showcases a great sense of appreciation for others and makes a perfect "message" gift to accompany any "thank you" present. But it doesn't end there, for the book also hosts a special treat, spotlighting some fancy artistic elements sure to delight the eye.

The narrative itself is simple and heartwarming. Fifth-grade schoolteacher Jean Thompson is a typical educator: she harbors her likes and dislikes about her job and her students, both the over-achievers and the way-wards. Teddy Stallard is one such way-ward; he shows no interest in school and sports an unfocused expression, old, worn clothing and untidy haircuts.

Like the steady beat of a drum, the text flashes through Teddy's past. Image one: Teddy's mother is very ill. Image two: Teddy's mother dies during her son's third grade school year. Image three: Teddy's father lacks interest in his son. Teachers fear his inattentiveness.

And by the time the Christmas holiday season arrives, Miss Thompson has lost hope in her pupil.

Not surprisingly, Teddy's Christmas gift to his teacher stands out from the rest ... disappointingly so.

While other students face Miss Thompson's desk with their colorfully wrapped presents of all inviting shapes and sizes, Teddy's sloppy brown-paper-bag-covered present sporting oddly shaped lumps creates for a foreboding site. If possible, however, the items inside – "a gaudy rhinestone bracelet, with half the stones missing, and a bottle of cheap perfume" – make it even harder for Miss Thompson to praise the boy. Giggles from the other children in the class tarnish the situation even more, and Miss Thompson has no choice but to put the gifts on and prompt the gigglers to share in insincere complements.

Only after class does Teddy revealed to Miss Thompson that both gifts once belonged to his mother: "'Miss Thompson, you smell just like my mother,'" he said. "'And her bracelet looks real pretty on you.'"

As the gesture brings the teacher to tears, it also parachutes her down a different path in approaching her relationships with students for the rest of the year. No longer does she discard the potential in those struggling and quickly leave them behind. Instead, she gives most of her help where it is most needed and begins to focus on all the children fraught by the material.

Continued on page 10

Do you really want to see 22 minutes of drunken behavior and 32 acts of sexual deviancy?

Fellow Students,

Don't log onto college.movielink.com between September 15th and October 15th. Sure, high-speed, reliable downloads of your favorite movies seems like a great idea. But what about the message those films send? The people at Movielink want you to watch movies like American Pie, a film rife with drunken behavior, sexual deviancy, and a very unsanitary display involving food. Choose education over entertainment. Don't be lured in by the prizes. Granted, 'the ultimate PC entertainment system' sounds great, but think of the distraction. Up all night, watching movies, playing games, people stopping by with booze. Is that really how you want to spend your college years?

Tracy Tuckey

StudentsAgainstMovielink.com

STUDENTS AGAINST MOVIELINK COLLEGE FILM FESTIVAL

MondaySeptember8

BOOKS

Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist Tony Horwitz will discuss "Blue Latitudes: Boldly going Where Captain Cook Has Gone Before" in the New York Room (Mary E. Woolley Hall) at Mount Holyoke College. Horwitz is the author of "Confederates in the Attic." The event begins at 7 p.m. and is free and open to the public.

TuesdaySeptember9

MUSIC

Lyambiko, a German-based jazz group, will be performing at the Iron Horse in Northampton at 7 p.m. The tour has been well received in the U.S. and vocalist Lyambiko's style has been compared to the likes of Billie Holiday and Julie London. The rhythm section provides a strong foundation to the music and possesses an excellent subtlety and interplay on both ballads and uptempo grooves. Ticket prices are $10 for advance purchase and $13 the night of the venue.

WednesdaySeptember10

BOOKS

Former journalist and novelist R.A. Scotti will discuss "Sudden Sea: The Great Hurricane of 1938" at The Odyssey Bookshop in South Hadley. A discussion will begin at 7 p.m. The event is free and open to the public.

FridaySeptember12

MUSIC

The Hartford Symphony Orchestra will be opening the weekend with "Rhapsody in Blue!" Other scheduled pieces include Schuman's "New England Triptych" and Berstein's overture to "Candide." Details of the concert's final musical piece will be withheld from the audience in keeping with the season's theme "Symphonies and Mysteries." Conductor Edward Cummings will be leading the Orchestra, with Leon Bates at pianist. A free concert will take place at 7 p.m. The featured concert will begin at 8 p.m. with ticket prices ranging from $15 to $57. Student tickets are available at $7 with valid ID. Discounts are available for groups of 10 or more.

MUSIC

Andrew W.K., High on Fire, and Vaux will be playing the Ballroom in the Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton at 8:30 p.m. The show should contain new material, as Andrew W.K.'s latest album "The Wolf" is released on Sept 9. Advance tickets may be purchased for $15 Ballroom or at the door for $18.

PERFORMANCES

Vocalist Judy Polan will be performing for the Song and Story Swap at the Black Sheep Café. The four-time recipient of "Favorite Musician" in the Valley Advocate readers poll is known for both her repertoire of pop/folk music and her sense of humor. The Story and Swap is held the second Friday of each month at the Black Sheep Café and is sponsored by both the Pioneer Valley Folklore Society and the Black Sheep. The event begins at 7:30 p.m. and is free and open to the public.

BOOKS

Christopher Benfey, author of "Degas in New Orleans," will discuss "The Great Wave: Gilded Age Misfits, Japanese Eccentrics, and the Opening of Old Japan." Benfey is also a Professor of English at Mount Holyoke College and Co-Director of the Weissman Center for Leadership. The event begins at 7 p.m. at the Odyssey Bookshop in South Hadley. The event is free and open to the public.

SaturdaySeptember13

MUSIC

Mark Erelli will be performing at the Iron Horse in Northampton this Saturday at 7 p.m. The performance will undoubtedly contain tracks from his much-anticipated CD "The Memorial Hall Recordings," which was released in 2002. Erelli's sound has been described by critics as sounding "fresh yet oddly familiar." Jeffery Foucault is scheduled to open the show. Advance tickets are available for $12.50, however tickets may be purchased at the door for $15.

MUSIC

The Toasters, The Septics and Disaster 116 will be playing in the Clubroom at the Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton. The concert begins at 7 p.m. and tickets may be purchased in advance for $10 or $13 at the door.

GALLERIES

A reception for Lawrence Siddall will present his photography exhibit "Friends Around the World" at Forbes Library in Northampton. The series of color portraits were taken in eight foreign countries on his travels from 1956 to 2002. The event will take place from 2-4 p.m. Gallery hours are Mondays 1-9 p.m., Tuesdays 9-6 p.m., Wednesdays 9-9 p.m., Thursdays 1-5 p.m., Friday and Saturdays 9-5 p.m. Siddall's exhibit will be free and open to the public until Sept. 30.

BOOKS

At 1 p.m., Jeffrey Amherst Bookshop in Amherst will be holding a reading/discussion of Kathy Harrison's book "Another Place at the Table". It is a story of shattered childhoods redeemed by love. Harrison has been a foster parent for more than 13 years and hosted almost 100 children.

weekly pinup

FLEA INFESTS MULLINS

The Red Hot Chili Peppers return to the Mullins Center for a one-stop show along their current North American tour Tues, Sept. 9. The concert starts at 7 p.m. Opening for RHCP are Queens of the Stone Age and French Toast. Tickets are $41 and are still available at Ticketmaster or the Mullins Center box office.

The Boss plays at Fenway

BOSTON (AP) - Long before the glory days, before the sold-out concerts and HBO specials, Bruce Springsteen was just an opening act at a small Cambridge theater, playing to a crowd that did not yet know each word of his songs.

Out in that crowd one night in May 1974 was a Boston music critic who was soon to write the prophetic words: "I saw rock and roll future and its name is Bruce Springsteen."

Nearly 30 years after that rave review helped launch the Jersey rocker to superstardom, The Boss is traveling the well-worn path back to his Boston roots again this weekend to play at a much larger venue, whose legend nearly matches his own.

On Saturday and Sunday nights, Springsteen will perform the first-ever rock concerts at Fenway Park, bringing his ballads of the working class to the quirky 91-year-old home of Red Sox heroics and heartbreak.

"Boston's become over the years just one of our really special places," said Jon Landau, the writer who penned the famed review, and later became Springsteen's manager in 1978.

- Jennifer Peter, AP

NEW WRITERS: Please attend the first Arts & Living department meeting on Tuesday, Sept. 9 at 5 p.m. in The Collegian newsroom in the Campus Center basement.

$$ NEED EXTRA CASH? $$

Sign up to participate in upcoming decision-making experiments by the Department of Resource Economics!
For more info & to sign up, please go to:
http://www.umass.edu/expecon

Only a little time required for significant earnings!

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club

90 Gatehouse Road, Off Rt. 9, Two miles East of Amherst Center
On the Bus Route • TEL: 256-6446

Shopping for a health club? • Do your homework first

JOIN NOW!
for our Semester Special
15 weeks - For Students: Only $179!
Inclusive membership / No additional fees / Includes free T-Shirt

Hampshire Fitness Club has it all for you
- FULL SIZED INDOOR POOL
- AQUA AEROBICS
- CYBEX/NAUTILUS CIRCUIT
- BOXING STUDIO
- CYBEX FREE WEIGHTS
- FULL COURT BASKETBALL
- VOLLEYBALL
- INDOOR TENNIS
- YOGA/PILATES
- AEROBICS/STEP/BOSU
- JACUZZI/SAUNAS
- CARDIO-VASCULAR EQUIPMENT

Open: 6am to 10pm Mon-Fri, 8am to 9pm Sat-Sun

Fabulous Gift!
CLINIQUE Bonus is here!
With your Clinique purchase of $19.50 get this 7-piece gift, Free.
Quantities are limited. Now thru Sunday, September 14th.
Fall Gift
7-piece Gift
Clarifying Lotion 2 • Moisture Surge Extra
High Impact Eye Shadow in Sugar Sugar • Colour Surge Lipstick in Wow Violet
Glasswear For Lips in Air Kiss • Clinique Happy Heart Perfume Spray
Cosmetic Bag
Cedar Chest
ARTFUL FURNISHINGS · QUALITY LINENS · IMAGINATIVE GIFTS
Thornes Marketplace · 150 Main St., Northampton, MA · 413-584-3860

CVS pharmacy
1 Hour Photo
Student Discount
$1.00 off 1 hour processing (prints only)
$2.00 off 1 hour digital processing (prints & cd)
Valid Student ID required.
Available at both Amherst locations only.
Original roll developing only.
Offer ends:
Sept. 30, 2003

Free People
1 unique you.
OWN IT.
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

New thriller flick is no good order

By Lauren Freeman
Collegian Staff

COURTESY 20TH CENTURY FOX

Heath Ledger and Bennon Furmann duel in "The Order."

Brian Helgeland's newest directorial undertaking is a mixed bag. Upon first glance, "The Order" appears to have potential. In the vein of supernatural thrillers with religious undertones, at it's best, this movie could have been the next "Exorcist." But "The Order" remains in the realm of less inspired movies such as "Stigmata" and "Bless the Child."

In this film, Alex Bernier, played by Ledger, is a Carolingian – an ancient order of Catholic priests whose specialty is exorcisms. Bennon Furmann is cast as the role of William Eden, a 600-year-old sin eater whose specialty is partaking in "the other way", a path to heaven outside of the church. Apparently banished members of the Carolingian sect began the ritual sineating in order so that excommunicated members of the church could find a way to heaven.

Alex and William meet when Father Dominique, Alex's mentor, dies in a suspicious manner and the blame is placed on the sineater. Alex is given the task of killing William, which proves to be a difficult one. Distractions arrive in the form of Mara Sinclair played by Shannon Sossomon. Mara is an escaped mental patient, committed to an asylum after making an attempt on Alex's life during her own excorsism. Things get messy for Alex when he can't resist the sexual temptation posed by this homicidal maniac. Granted, Sossomon is unusually beautiful, but Alex's bizarre decision to give up his priesthood for someone who tried to kill him is never fully explained away.

'The Order'
Directed by Brian Helgeland
Starring Heath Ledger Shannon Sossamon
20th Century Fox
Rated R
102 mins.
Grade C+

Narrative aside, although chock full of gorgeous gothic scenery, the constant shifting of location from Rome to Paris to America and back was unwarranted and a bit confusing. Another source of confusion was the lack of consistency in the actor/actresses various accents. On the one hand Ledger is trying desperately not to sound Australian and in effect speaks with a hybrid accent that is impossible to place on the map. Furmann's character Eden supposedly grew up in Rome but oddly this German actor sounds Irish. Where this film lacked geographic cohesion it also lacked imagination. In a decade of increasing technological ability spawning a whole new breed of horrific special FX it is understood when a film of this genre uses computer graphics for its benefit. However, there are certainly times when less is indeed more. The Blair Witch Project worked because of this simple concept – leave the viewers to the device of their own imagination and they will likely be scared silly. During the sin eating rituals computer graphics produce a liquid-like tendril that exits through the chest of the sinner and, at it's best, looks like giant calamari. Perhaps if this ritual was shot from behind closed doors – as it was the first time it is depicted – then it would have had a less ridiculous effect.

In short, it seems the original concept for this movie was destroyed by the lack of ability to carry it out. The scenes that had potential to be scary were ruined by convention. For example, there are two children that serve no other purpose but to add to the canon of films that exploit the supposed innocence of children for a scary "surprise." However, these children weren't scary because from the moment they appear on screen it is obvious that their only purpose is the eventual spook they will provide. Scary children, underground tunnels, graveyards after dark, mental disorders, it's all been done before and it shouldn't have been done here.

The only thing that helps "The Order" save face is the occasional literary allusion in the dialogue. Like the legendary Dr. Faustus, one of the characters is said to have "sold his soul for knowledge," and everyone knows that "knowledge is the enemy of faith." One of the secondary characters quotes from Nietzsche when he says, "Sometimes when you look into the abyss, the abyss looks into you." Perhaps Helgeland took this quote too seriously when he directed a film that will leave viewers with a 102-minute abyss in their life that they will certainly miss.

Picture book charms

Continued from page 7

especially Teddy. With this attention, Teddy catches up with, and even surpasses, many of his peers by the year's end.

Years rush by in this book as fast as real life often seems, and like all students in teachers' lives, Teddy grows older and contact back to Miss Thompson becomes sparse. Yet a letter arrives one day to Miss Thompson and another drum beat sequence begins.

Image one: Miss Thompson receives word Teddy will be graduating high school second in his class. Image two: She hears Teddy will be graduating college first in his class. Image three: She discovers Teddy has finished medical school, earned his title of M.D., and is shortly to be wed.

The final scene brings the two aged characters full circle, as Miss Thompson honors the spot in Teddy's wedding party where his mother would have been if she were living. Smiling brightly and as proud as any mother ever would, Miss Thompson takes the arm of her pupil and both radiate in the gifts they have given each other.

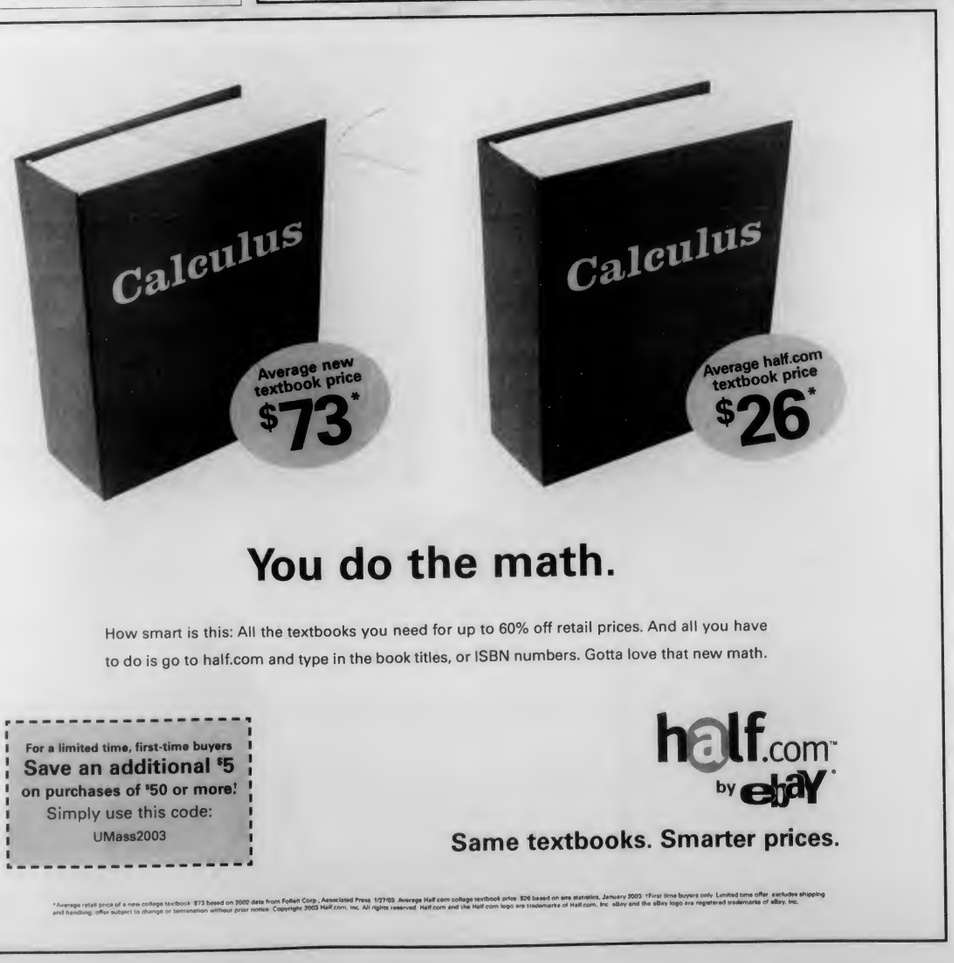
No surprises complicate this theme, and it's the simplicity that douses the 32-page, pocket-sized trinket in warmth and kindness. And no better imagery could capture these straightforward feelings than de Roiser's delightful chalk images.

If there's one key to de Roiser's style, it's in the patterns.

Intricate designs flourish in this work – from the polka dots of a woman's sweater to diamonds on wallpaper to writing on a chalkboard to fine details on the titled bracelet itself. Each drawing encompasses an element of style to keep the eye busy exploring the image's features. The colors are rich and full of earth tones and compliment the soon-changing fall weather well.

COURTESY GINNS SMITH

This simple, touching tale also dazzles with its artwork.



A Washington State native, de Roiser is a freelance illustrator published in newspapers including The New York Times and The Washington Post, and she has outdone herself with this splendid example of the basic "feel good" genre of picture books.

Students of all trades need remember this book next time they seek an emotionally charged gift to please. "The Bracelet" just adds further credence to the old saying: It's the little things that count.

UMASS Campus Recreation
Paid Officials Needed for Flag Football, Soccer, Field Hockey, Softball, Ice Hockey & Volleyball
Clinics: Football-Sept. 9, 10, 11 | Soccer-Sept. 9, 10, 11, 12
Co-ed Softball-Sept. 15, 16 | Field Hockey-Sept. 15
Ice Hockey-Sept. 23, 24, 25 | Volleyball-Sept. 30, Oct. 1, 7, 8
Call for requirements, times and locations
Still Time To Enter: Flag Football, Soccer, Field Hockey, & Softball
More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693
On The Web: www.umass.edu/umim

SALE! BUY DIRECT!
Futons
Frames
Covers
And more!
"Your online treasure of bedding bargains"
(860) 584-0259
www.piratescovebedding.com

Student Jobs
Great Job opportunities for students in humanities and social sciences. Work to protect the environment ad hold corporations accountable. Flexible Hours; fun progres sive workplace, valuable job skills. We are seeking motivated, articulate, and creative people to organize in diverse communities around the valley. Call today, start tomar row. $8-10 hr. plus bonus
Clean Water Action:
584-9830

You do the math.

How smart is this: All the textbooks you need for up to 60% off retail prices. And all you have to do is go to half.com and type in the book titles, or ISBN numbers. Gotta love that new math.

For a limited time, first-time buyers
Save an additional $5
on purchases of $50 or more!
Simply use this code:
UMass2003

half.com by ebay
Same textbooks. Smarter prices.

*Average retail price of a new college textbook: $73 based on 2002 data from Follett Corp., Associated Press 1/27/03. Average Half.com college textbook price: $26 based on site statistics, January 2003. †First time buyers only. Limited time offer. excludes shipping and handling; offer subject to change or termination without prior notice. Copyright 2003 Half.com, Inc. All rights reserved. Half.com and the Half.com logo are trademarks of Half.com, Inc. eBay and the eBay logo are registered trademarks of eBay, Inc.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTSMONDAY
MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Runaway

Baylark takes the spotlight

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Five years after winning a national title in his inaugural season in Amherst, Mark Whipple found himself in a bit of a predicament Saturday at McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

He was already without Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Year R.J. Cobbs, who was in street clothes due to "academic discipline," and had lost starting tailback Raunny Rosario to a leg injury in the first quarter.

So after falling behind early to lowly Central Connecticut State in the opening game of the 2003 season, Whipple went with what worked for him so many times back in 1998.

He handed the ball to No. 5, and let him do the rest.

The end result? 141 yards and two touchdowns to help pace the offense to 51 unanswered points in a rout of the Blue Devils.

So while Whipple's original No.5 – Marcel Shipp – is now carrying the ball on Sundays, his new No. 5 – Steve Baylark – is beginning to become the subject of numerous comparisons between the two.

While Shipp was the unquestioned leader of the '98 team – a superstar good enough to have recently received a multi-million dollar contract with the Arizona Cardinals – Baylark, a sophomore who just recently made the move from full-back to tailback, is in his first year with the Minutemen, and is vastly unproven.

Their physical makeup and running styles are quite similar, yet they now have something much bigger in common: their potential importance to their team's championship hopes.

Shipp was the key to the offense in '98, with plays designed to get him the ball any way possible. Baylark does not have to duplicate Shipp's tremendous junior season for the Minutemen to be successful. He does, however, have to do more of what he did on Saturday.

With Raunny Rosario out for as many as six weeks, Baylark essentially becomes the starting tailback, given that Cobbs' remains at wide receiver upon his return.

Evidence of the ill-effects of being unable to run the football were rampant against CCSU, as quarterback Jeff Krohn was picked off three times before Baylark was able to find a rhythm and gain good yardage, and the offense sput-

Continued on page 13

Wide Receiver Jimmie Howard celebrates his third quarter touchdown catch with tight end Sean Young. UMass cruised past Central Connecticut State 51-7 Saturday at McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

UM stomps Blue Devils

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts football team must be glad it doesn't finish what it starts.

Despite the absence of its two top running backs, and an early score by Central Connecticut State (0-2) that nobody expected, the Minutemen rallied to down the Blue Devils, 51-7 Saturday at McGuirk Alumni Stadium in front of 8,360.

Sophomore R.J. Cobbs, generally regarded as the best athlete on the team, and classmate Raunny Rosario, the heir apparent at the tailback position, were both non-factors for most of the game. Cobbs did not dress due to academic discipline, and Rosario suffered a knee injury early in the first quarter, which put the ball squarely in the hands of Steve Baylark, a sophomore listed at third on the depth chart.

UMass	51
Central Conn.	7

But Baylark, turned his impromptu full-time audition – UMass coach Mark Whipple intended to alternate him and Rosario throughout the game – into a sparkling performance, gaining 141 yards on 22 rushes with two touchdowns.

"One thing I liked about [Baylark], he never made mistakes," Whipple said. "He may have missed a protection on the blitz, but we certainly had to press him into the role, because that's not what we thought going into the game. I think he could be more physical, and I think that's just a lack of experience at the tailback."

The Minutemen (1-0) benefited considerably from Baylark's work, in light of Krohn's three interceptions – more, Whipple said, than the senior quarterback threw during three preseason scrimmages.

Krohn did have his bright spots, though, including a 17-yard touchdown pass to Jimmie Howard and a three-yard dump to tight end Sean Young in the endzone.

While the offense sputtered in the early going, the defense rebounded from the early CCSU score to play solidly the rest of the game. Linebacker Mike Ziccardi was the recipient of an early Christmas gift when Blue Devil quarterback Scott

Continued on page 13

Minutewomen take out URI

Three late goals give UM convincing win over Rams

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

After opening the season with an exciting 2-1 win over Quinnipiac, the Massachusetts women's soccer team traveled to Kingston, R.I. to open its Atlantic 10 season against the University of Rhode Island.

The Minutewomen (2-0, 1-0 A-10) kept things rolling with a dominating second-half performance, and defeated the Rams, 4-1.

UMass	4
Rhode Island	1

With the score tied 1-1 after the 67th minute, the Maroon and White tallied three goals from three different players. Sophomore midfielder Lindsey Bellini struck first off a penalty kick opportunity, and 11 minutes later, junior forward Lindsey Fairweather stole the ball from the defender and quickly found the back of the net as well.

Building off the momentum from the two quick goals, freshmen defender Stephanie Barrett sealed the 4-1 victory with a header in the 80th minute.

When asked about the clutch performance from his players, Coach Jim Rudy reflected on last season and his team's attitude.

"This season, five of the six goals have been scored by a sophomore or a freshmen. By adding young shooters to the lineup, last seasoft's leading scorer Erin Lilly will have less pressure to perform after returning from injury.

"They want to do this so badly and don't want anything to end up like last year," Rudy said. "We got the potential to do, but the fact is we got all these younger people. Right now, the older players are the ones holding it together and the young are really getting it done."

Though UMass dominated the second half, URI had the early momentum. Only 59 seconds into the game, Rhode Island senior Sarah Johnston scored on a cross from senior teammate Sarah McCalligett to give them the early 1-0 lead.

However in the 23rd minute, UMass sophomore defender Maggie LaBrode sent a long free kick from the sideline, where forward Adair Blyler flicked the ball past the goalie to tie the score.

Blyler, herself, has been on a tear in the early season, tying her freshman season total in goals, with three in just two games.

"She's growing up very quickly. Last season, we threw her to the wolves," Rudy said. "She wasn't really ready to start last year, but she was made into a frontrunner. Adair has learned a lot this year. She's very intelligent, attentive and just absorbs of it all.

"Also, she's got a green light to express herself. When you are an attacker, you got to have individuality."

Between the pipes, senior captain Kelly Nigh made seven saves to keep her team in the contest. The late UMass attack was too much for URI goalie Melissa Bargione, who only made one save.

"The things that Nigh had to deal with were basically crosses," Rudy said. "She either had to box or catch the cross and did all of it very impressively."

Lindsey Bellini and the Minutewomen handed URI its first loss of the season, downing the Rams 4-1 on Friday.

Yanks slip past Sox

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) – David Wells bounced off the mound with excitement. He had rebounded, and so had the New York Yankees.

With their AL East lead down to 1 1/2 games, the Yankees needed a win or badly to hunt Boston.

Yankees	3
Red Sox	1

After Derek Jeter talked his way back into the lineup, Wells pitched his finest game this season and Bernie Williams woke up with his first home run since mid-August, propelling New York to a critical 3-1 victory Sunday.

"A game like this, it's huge," Wells said. "Those guys are coming in for the sweep - you want to try to get the momentum back, and that's what we did today."

Williams broke a scoreless tie – and a whole lot of tension – with a two-run homer in the seventh off Jeff Suppan (11-2). Wells took a shutout into the eighth inning, and Mariano Rivera got five outs in the final scheduled meeting this year between the teams.

New York (85-56) boosted its division lead to 2 1/2 games over Boston (83-59) with three weeks remaining.

"There's a big difference between being three games back in the loss column than one," Boston manager Grady Little said.

Without pitcher George Steinbrenner in town and watch

Continued on page 12

LSAT
GMAT
GRE
MCAT
DAT
OAT

higher test scores guaranteed or your money back

Attend all required classes or make-up sessions, complete all scheduled tests, and do your homework. If your score doesn't improve on test day from your Kaplan diagnostic or a prior official test score, you can choose to repeat our program for free or get a full refund of your tuition. It's that simple.

World Leader in Test Prep and Admissions

KAPLAN

1-800-KAP-TEST
kaptest.com

*Test names are registered trademarks of their respective owners.

To be eligible for this offer, you must be enrolled in Kaplan's full classroom, tutoring, or online courses. In addition, you must present a copy of your official score report and your course materials within 90 days.

Wells leads Yanks past Red Sox

Continued from page 11

ing, New York had been blown out by a combined 20-3 in the first two games. Its lead, which had been 7 1/2 games on Aug. 20, was disappearing along with the summer heat.

Boston had won five straight and was on the verge of closing within a half-game of first – the Red Sox haven't been that close in September since winning the division in 1995, according to the Elias Sports Bureau.

While Suppan took a one-hitter into the seventh, the Red Sox twice advanced runners to third base in the middle innings. But Wells (13-6) got out of trouble each time, pumping a fist after escaping.

He had been winless in seven starts since July 19, and pitching coach Mel Stottlemyre had publicly challenged his work ethic after a loss to the Chicago White Sox on Aug. 27. His spot in the rotation was in jeopardy.

"Boomer responds to challenges," New York manager Joe Torre said. "There's no bigger challenge since he's been back here than this game today. He certainly restored order."

After Kevin Millar doubled leading off the fifth and advanced on Jason Varitek's groundout, New York moved the infield in and Gabe Kapler hit a weak grounder to third. Wells then struck out Damian Jackson.

Manny Ramirez doubled starting the seventh, and Millar walked with one out. Jeter then ranged into the shortstop hole to make a nice play on a grounder by Varitek, who just beat the relay throw to avoid a double play. After Kapler grounded out to third, Wells again rushed a fist across the air.

Wells had overcome his summer slump.

"You could see with his body language," Torre said.

Suppan, who dropped to 0-5 against the Yankees, needed just 67 pitches to get through the first six innings as New York forced the outfield to handle just four balls – Jeter's single in the fourth and three weak flyouts. But Suppan wound up throwing 33 pitches in seventh.

He walked Jorge Posada with one out, then allowed Williams' first homer in 65 at-bats since Aug. 19. The Yankees' bench seemed both stunned and relieved – no one jumped out of the dugout as the sellout crowd of 55,212 rocked to the "Disco Inferno" chorus of "Burn, baby, burn."

While he has 11 homers this year, just two have been hit at Yankee Stadium. Williams, who had been in a 9-for-60 (.150) slump, doesn't think the final three weeks will be easy.

"It's going to be a grind," he said. "Very hard."

Torre said it was "inspiring" for Jeter to return from a rib cage injury that sidelined him for five straight games. The team captain wasn't in the original lineup but persuaded the manager to let him play after two batting practice rounds Sunday. Jeter said he had "five or six" conversations with Torre over the weekend.

"I would have kept talking to him, over and over," Jeter said. "Eventually, he'd have to cave in."

To Torre, Jeter looked like he was "on a mission," and the manager trusted the shortstop to tell the truth about his health.

"Once he realized the big picture, I'm an easy mark, I guess," Torre said.

Jeter was 1-for-3 with a walk, and made a high throw for an error on Johnny Damon's one-out grounder in the eighth. After Bill Mueller singled, Torre brought in Rivera to face Nomar Garciaparra.

Rivera, had gotten more than four outs for a save just twice previously this season, struck Garciaparra with the bases loaded a week earlier at Fenway Park to save an 8-4 win. This time, Garciaparra flied out to center field. Ramirez followed with a bloop to right that fell for an RBI single, pulling Boston to 2-1, but Rivera retired David Ortiz on inning-ending forceout.

Nick Johnson gave Rivera some margin for error with an RBI single in the bottom half off Alan Embree, who had allowed a bloop double to Alfonso Soriano.

Rivera gave up a leadoff single in the ninth to Millar before getting three straight outs for his 33rd save in 39 chances.

"It's the heavyweight championship," Embree said. "These teams have always played each other so tough, that why it's the rivalry. What it comes down to now is' how we do against the other teams."

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Jason Varitek and the Red Sox were shut down by David Wells, as the Yankees avoided a series sweep in the last meeting of the season between the two teams.

Lawyer takes case

Buffalo dominant in shutout

By JOHN WAROW
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. – Safety Lawyer Milloy needed less than a week to stick it to his former team. Quarterback Drew Bledsoe's wait was longer, but the victory just as sweet.

Bills	31
Patriots	0

The two former Patriots stars combined for a dominating performance, sparking the Buffalo Bills to a 31-0 victory over New England in their opener Sunday.

The win snapped Buffalo's five-game losing streak against New England. And it capped a hectic, emotional week after the Bills snagged Milloy, a four-time Pro Bowler, on Wednesday, a day after the Patriots released him for salary cap reasons.

Milloy, a Patriots defensive captain, not only started despite getting in only two practices with Buffalo, but also made an impact, causing an interception, recording a sack and taking part on five tackles.

Bledsoe engineered scoring drives of 80 and 90 yards on his first two possessions. Acquired in a 2002 trade with New England, Bledsoe won his first so-called "Bledsoe Bowl" in three tries, and finished 17-of-28 for 230 yards with a touchdown and an interception.

The game was effectively over when the Bills went up 21-0. Travis Henry's 1-yard plunge, Dave Moore's 7-yard reception, and defensive tackle Sam Adams' 37-yard interception return put the Bills up by that margin early in the second quarter.

Henry scored a second time on a 9-yard scamper in the fourth quarter and Rian Lindell added a 44-yard field goal.

As season openers go, it was Buffalo's largest margin of victory since a 40-7 win over the Los Angeles Rams in 1992. It was also the second regular-season opening shutout, and first in any game for the Bills since a 26-0 win over Philadelphia in 1999.

The outcome was a marked turnaround from how the Bills stumbled through two losses to New England last year, in which the Patriots outscored Buffalo by a combined 65-24, and flustered Bledsoe.

The Patriots managed a mere 51 yards in the first half and six first downs, two by penalty.

How bad were they? Six minutes into the second quarter, the Patriots had registered minus-4 yards of offense.

Tom Brady, who replaced Bledsoe as the Patriots' starter in 2001, had an abysmal outing. He finished 14-of-29 for 123 yards and threw four interceptions, tying a career high; he also threw four against Denver in 2001.

Brady wasn't alone among the blundering Patriots.

There was a holding penalty against tight end Fred Baxter, which negated a Bills punt and gave Buffalo an automatic first down, leading to Moore's score. Then, on New England's first drive of the second half, the Patriots were called for an illegal shift during a fourth-and-1 attempt.

And the Patriots couldn't even score on two tries from the 1 in the final 20 seconds, the game ending when Antowain Smith was stuffed for no gain.

The Bills' revamped defense, whose newcomers include Adams and linebacker Takeo Spikes, played up to its expectations.

Spikes had two interceptions and six tackles, while Adams' interception return was the second of his career and first by a Bills defensive lineman since Pat Toomay in 1975.

And Milloy didn't look like he lost a step when he helped force an interception.

With Brady attempting to hit David Patten on a deep post route, Milloy closed quickly and got his hand up to deflect the ball at the goal line. The ball bounced up and was brought down by Bills cornerback Nate Clements.

GERALYN LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Minuteman quarterback Jeff Krohn fires a pass in Saturday's 51-7 rout of CCSU.

Minutemen run away with it

Continued from page 11

Dolch lost his grip on the football while dropping back. Ziccardi scooped up the fumble, and rambled 30 yards to the endzone to give UMass a 14-7 lead.

Whipple, whose feelings after the game were tempered with some worries about the Maroon and White's lack of execution, was mostly pleased with the defensive effort.

"[The defense] made some big plays, and I'm happy about that, but I'm concerned that when we went to four-man pressure, we did not put much pressure on them, and they completed a lot of balls that shouldn't be completed."

The Minutemen finally put together a long, well-executed drive midway through the second quarter. After completions to Johnson Owumi and Sean Young, Baylark punched in a four-yard run to give the Maroon and White a 21-7 lead.

Outside of Baylark, the brightest spot for the Minutemen came from another unlikely source – the guys who put the "foot" into football.

"I thought the best thing today was [freshmen kicker Matt] Torres and [punter Christian] Koegel. The ones everybody worried about, and before this game, watching them in pregame, I said, 'geez, why doesn't the NCAA just make us redshirt all freshmen? And then at halftime I told the team 'I'd recruit three of you, Koegel, Torres, and [safety Anton] McKenzie. And the rest of you, I'd be fired by recruiting them.'"

Torres put up one of the most impressive numbers of the day: zero. The Blue Devils returned none of the freshman's kickoffs, each of which landed at least five yards in the endzone. Koegel got over an early lapse and performed capably the rest of the day, averaging 44.3 yards per punt with a long of 49.

After Rosario went down and lay on the field for five minutes before walking off under his own power (he would not return), Krohn found Young all alone for a three-yard touchdown pass with 5:43 remaining in the first quarter.

The Blue Devils put a shock into the McGuirk crowd with a one-play touchdown drive. Dolch's pass found a wide-open Mike Malone, who had 10 yards of open field before he found the endzone, giving CCSU an early 7-0 lead.

The game also featured the debut of UMass' new Minuteman mascot, which, other than its pale complexion, is a definite improvement over its predecessor.

Tailback Justin Montgomery fights for yardage in the second half against CCSU.

Baylark has big shoes to fill

Continued from page 11

tered at times against a less-than dominant Blue Devil defense.

As it was with Rosario, it's a position that must be a strength for the Minutemen, as it could directly tie into the health of quarterback Jeff Krohn and will determine the success of Cobbs and the rest of the offensive unit.

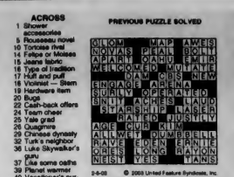
So with a chance to cut his teeth against top-level competition this weekend, and an all-important A-10 opener with Maine just a week away, the time is now for Steve Baylark. He has, for the time being until Rosario or Cobbs return to the position, taken over as a key to Whipple's offense, and given the Minutemen the chance again to rely on No. 5.

Youth Men's Club
Monday Night Football
• Pool Table
• Darts
• Horseshoes
• Keno
• Smoking
• Public Invited
Free Munchies with this ad!
Bud Giveaway
Sunday Sept. 7th
Transportation Available
138 East Street Hadley, MA
413-584-9728
Rt. 9
Monday - Sunday
10:00 - 1:00

UMASS Campus Recreation
Get those forms in by:
Flag football (M/W/C) 9/8
Soccer (M/W) 9/8
Co-ed Softball 9/9
Field Hockey (W) 9/9
Cross Country (M/W) 9/16
Ice Hockey (M/W) 9/18
On The Web: www.umass.edu/umim
LATE ENTRANTS SHOULD CHECK FOR EXTENSIONS IN BOYDEN 215

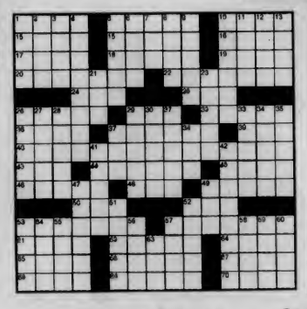
Futon Special
Black Metal Arm
6" Black or Natural
(Foam & Cotton)
$169.95
Firm Quilted
Twin Set $167
Full Set $244
Queen Set $277
Yankee Mattress Factory
Order Yours Today By Calling:
413.584.5858 or
Toll Free
888.980.9741
Or Stop In At:
Yankee Mattress Factory Outlet
104 Damon Road
Northampton, MA 01060

Milk? Yeah, we got milk and homemade brownies
Athletes in Action Weekly Meeting
Mondays 7pm in James Dorm SW
Bible study + milk+ brownies = good times for athletes
Info: LA_Love_35@yahoo.com or Dave at 259-1083
Real Life
Thursdays 8pm in the Campus Center
Teaching, worship, and a whole lot of fun
Info: umasscru.com or brent.vallee@uscm.org



ACROSS

1 Shower accessories
5 Rousseau novel
10 Tortoise rival
14 Felipe or Moises
15 Jeans fabric
16 Type of tradition
17 Huff and puff
18 Violinist — Stern
19 Hardware item
20 Bugs
22 Cash-back offers
24 Team cheer
25 Yale grad
26 Quagmire
29 Chinese dynasty
32 Turk's neighbor
34 Luke Skywalker's guru
37 Like some oaths
39 Planet warmer
40 Vacationer's purchase (2 wds.)
43 Down with a cold
44 Reedish dyes
45 Knowing look
46 Houston athlete
48 Sushi morsel
49 Peter in Paraguay
50 Leather punch
52 Woody's ex
53 Cleaned one's teeth
57 Fierce cat
61 Piece of sugar
62 Meadow rodents
64 Hoofbeat
65 What Ali stung like (2 wds.)
66 Make happy
67 Humerus neighbor
68 Proceed
69 Tribal adviser
70 Kind of pilot



DOWN

1 Astrologers of old
2 Greenspan or Cranston
3 Throw
4 Clark Kent
5 Dame Sitwell
6 Jumble
7 — — — pickle
8 Flibber
9 Sasak or Trebek
10 Windbag's output (2 wds.)
11 Smell — —
12 Go fast
13 Moose kin
21 Salary limit
23 Crepe cousins
26 Damascus locale
27 Fleeces
28 Full-grown
29 Jazzy Lena — —
30 Dress style (hyph.)
31 India neighbor
33 Quarried
34 Odd
35 Preface, for short
37 Sault — Marie
38 Geographical abbr.
41 Arab vessels
42 Unambiguous (hyph.)
47 Spoke hoarsely
49 Overeater
51 Entrainment
52 Penny pincher
53 Blemish
54 Oil job
55 Warning, perhaps
56 Cutie pie
57 Prime's head
58 Fashion magazine
59 Boys
60 Gaiter
63 Terhune collie

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

9-8-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH

- Cavatelli Supreme
- Battered Fish
- California Chili Nachos (vegan)

DINNER

- Chicken Mamou
- Southern Fried Steak
- Thai Seitan (vegan)

Daily Weather Forcast

For Amherst

MONDAY
- High: 74
- Low: 46

TUESDAY
- High: 73
- Low: 47

WEDNESDAY
- High: 73
- Low: 50

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Dan Lamothe

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Gerald H. Ling

COPY EDITOR
Andrew Merritt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington

PRODUCTION STAFF
Fedrich Torres / Corey Rosenberg

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Don't act like a jerk today. It could mean the worst for the rest of the week.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Give someone a hug as soon as possible. This will make your day something else.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Do a little extra work tonight. It will pay off in spades.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Buy that movie you've been thinking about.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
The food you ate will change your day in a surprising manner.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
If you see a dark cloud, go inside quickly. Something bad is on the horizon.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Someone's been watching you all day. Unclear as to their intentions.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
The last time you saw a friend you acted short with them. Be more talkative.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
If you get angry, it's justified. Get angry! But careful, don't overdo it.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
If you see a penny DO NOT pick it up. It will be horrible, horrible luck.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
If you like sweets, today is your day. Someone special will offer you candy.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You will be praised for something you did not do. Take credit anyhow.

Quote for the Day

"There are many here among us who feel that life is but a joke."

- Bob Dylan

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ACTIVITIES

Montreal Weekends $99. Includes R/T Luxury Motor Coach from Springfield. 3 Days-2 Nights- 4 Star Hotel Downtown-Meals-Night Club passes. www.montrealexpress.net 1-781-979-9001 Special Group Rates

AUTO FOR SALE

1998 Mazda $950 413-586-5728

Jeep Cherokee Sport-1995. Perfect student car. A/C, Great CD system, original owner, excellent condition, 90K, automatic. 413-296-0060 $3,600 or O.B.O.

CHILDCARE

Seeking responsible babysitter for 2 year old. Afternoons and evening availability. Transportation negotiable. 413-256-2134

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Mother's helper/PCA Cooking, driving & housekeeping. References & Drivers License required. Own transportation to S. Deerfield. 2 to 3 afternoons per week 8-10hrs $8/hr 665-3914

Experienced Linecook to work in high volume upbeat professional kitchen $13/hr to start plus great benefits. Apply in person after 10a.m. Eastside Grill 19 Strong Ave. Northampton.

Dishwasher Great Part-time Evening/Weekend position 9.25/hr to start. Must be 18yrs old. Apply in person after 12p.m. East Side Grill 19 Strong Ave. Northampton.

EMPLOYMENT

Personal Assistant Wanted Days, Evenings & overnights avail. $10.36 hr. Call Martina 323-9248 Martina@student.umass.edu

Drivers and Kitchen help wanted Apply at D.P. Dough. Downtown Amherst

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals for part time positions. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are must. Call (413) 584-4746

ARHS Varsity Girls Gymnastics Coach needed ASAP. Call Amber 413-262-2272

Earthfoods is hiring Co-Managers for 100% Student Run Café. Salary starts at $6.75 hr. Applications available in Student Union Rm 406. Also across from Commonwealth Room

EMPLOYMENT

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

Experienced part-time linecooks and dishwashers. Apply in person during day before 5:00pm Amherst Brewing Co.

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

FOR SALE

Two desks for sale. Good cond Call: 508-272-2810

Lowest Long Distance Rates! Why let the "Big Three" rip you off? College students save here. www.Ldsavings.cjb.net

Web Hosting 9.95/ month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

FURNITURE

Futon Complete set $80, scanner or CD Burner (brand new) $40 Antique 2-tier mahogany scalloped end table $30; amherststuff@comcast.net or 427-7109 Walt/Franci

INSTRUCTION

Learn to SCUBA Dive Curry Hicks Pool Monday, Tuesday, or Wednesday 7pm to 10pm classes start Sept 8 Call Project Deep 800-282-0977

INSTRUCTION

Jazz Piano Lessons Explore your creativity Beginner to Advanced Learn a wide range of styles Reasonable Rates Contact Stephen Page at 413-297-7910

MISCELLANEOUS

Want to buy/sell TEXTBOOKS & other stuff LOCALLY? ... NO shipping hassles, NO payment middlemen! All 4 FREE! Visit www.collegeshack.com today!

ROOM FOR RENT

House on Route 9. Convenient location less than 1/2 mile from campus. On Bus Route. 2 Bathrooms. Contact: elanbabchuck@hotmail.com or call 413-348-5192

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. 1-800-648-4849

TRAVEL

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplash-tours.com 1800-426-7710

Spring Break '04 with StudentCity.com and Maxim Magazine! Get hooked up with Free Trips, Cash, and VIP Status as a Campus Rep! Choose from 15 of the hottest destinations. Book early for FREE MEALS, FREE DRINKS and 150% Lowest Price Guarantee! To reserve online or view our Photo Gallery, visit www.studentcity.com or Call 1-888-SPRING-BREAK!

WANTED

We are looking for women who are breast-feeding an infant less than 6 months of age to participate in a study investigating breast milk and environmental pollutants Gift certificates will be provided One feeding worth of milk is required in a one time visit Contact Dr. Kathleen Arcaro at 413-577-1823 or karcaro@nre.umass.edu

Reach thousands of readers! Advertise in the Collegian Classifieds! Come down to the Campus Center Basement or call 545-3500.

Don't miss the special
FREE SCREENING!
Wednesday, September 10th at 7:00PM at the Pleasant Street Theater
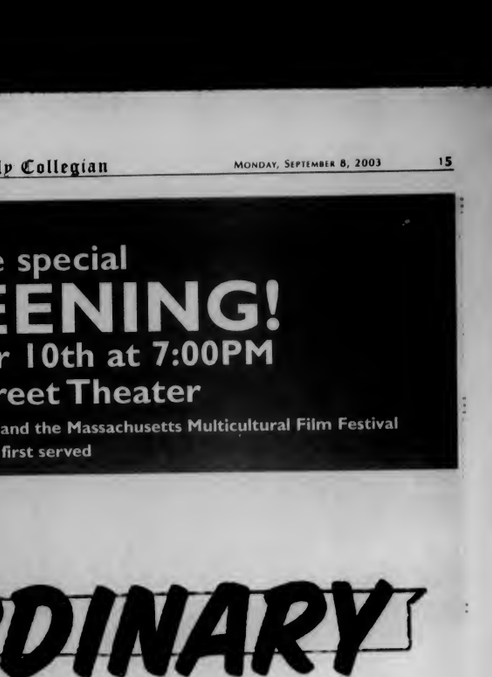
Sponsored by the Interdepartmental Program in Film Studies and the Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival
Admission is first come, first served

EXTRAORDINARY
"AN EXTRAORDINARY CREATION THAT BURSTS CINEMATIC BOUNDARIES."
-LISA SCHWARZBAUM, ENTERTAINMENT WEEKLY

EXHILARATING
"EXHILARATING...A ONE-OF-A-KIND MARVEL!"
-PETER TRAVERS, ROLLING STONE

BRILLIANT
"THIS ONE IS PLAIN BRILLIANT!"
-ROGER EBERT, CHICAGO SUN-TIMES



★★★★!
-BRUCE HANDY, VANITY FAIR

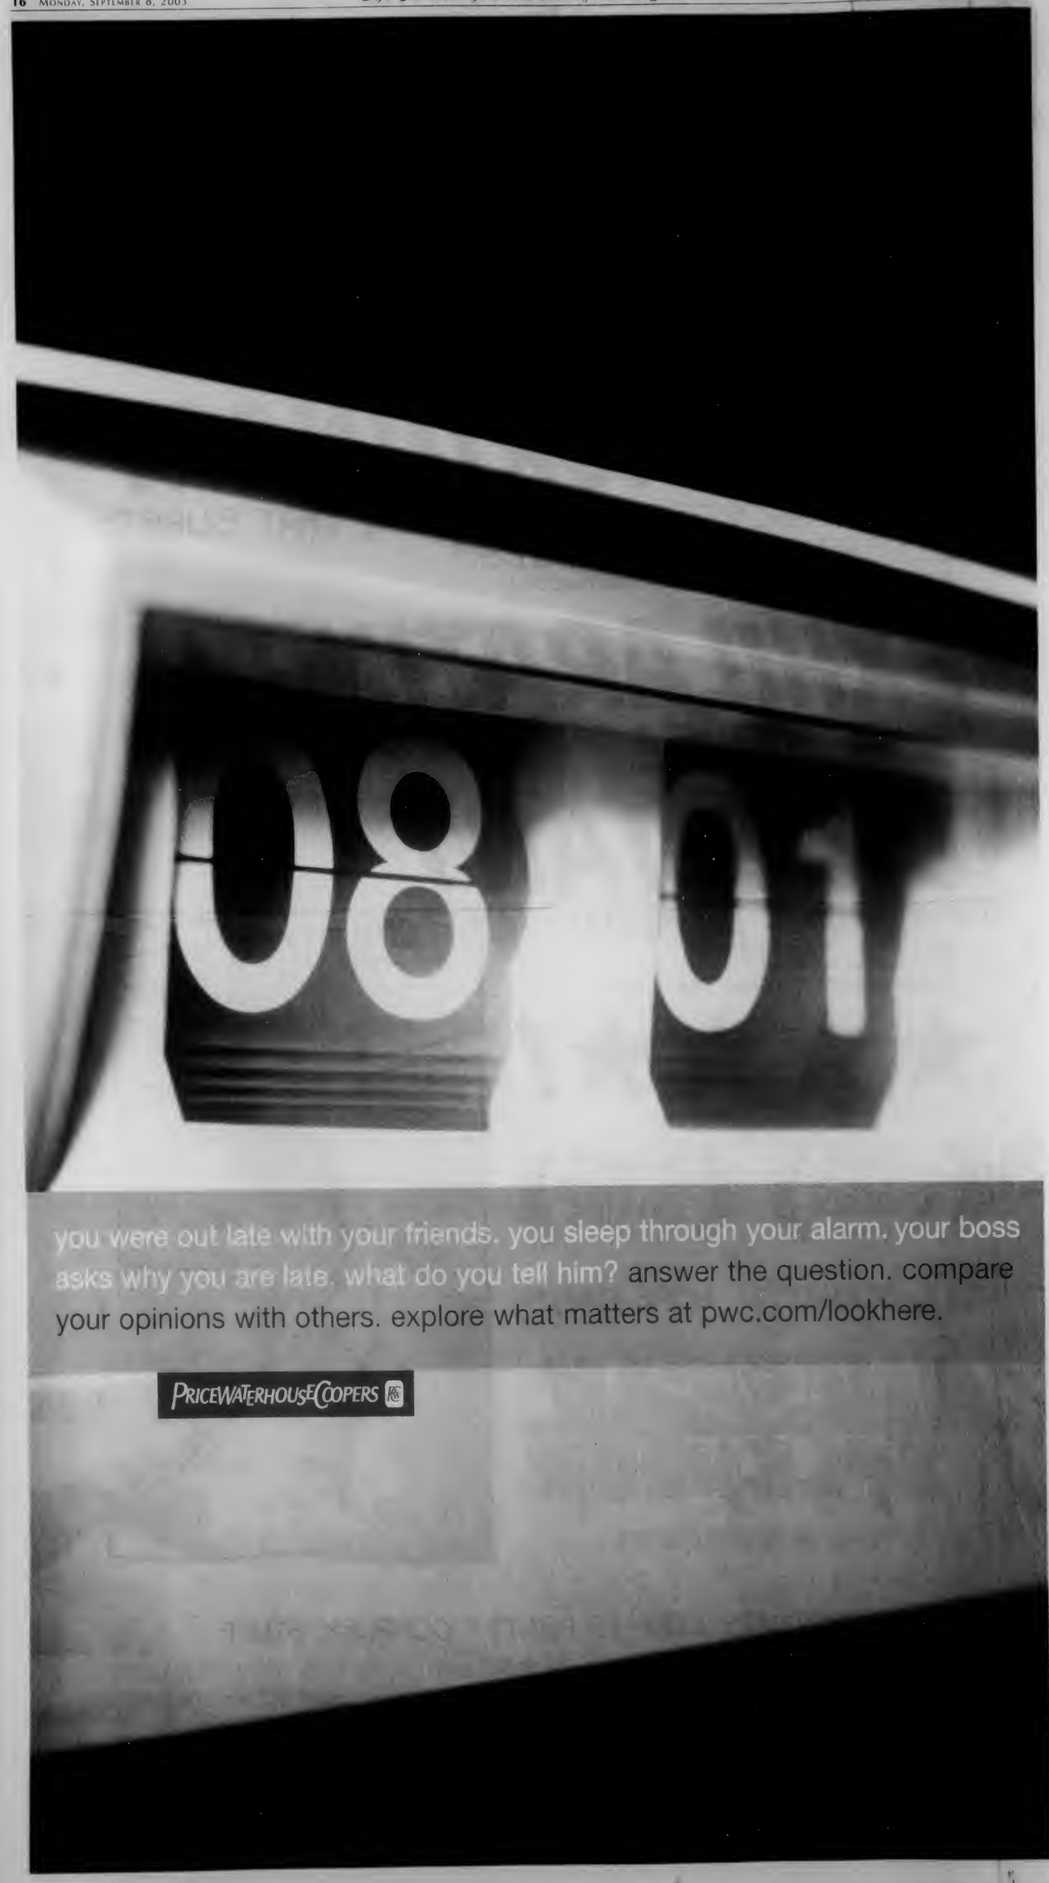
WINNER 2003 GRAND JURY PRIZE SUNDANCE FILM FESTIVAL
WINNER 2003 FIPRESCI AWARD (INTERNATIONAL FILM CRITICS ASSOC.) CANNES FILM FESTIVAL

PAUL GIAMATTI HOPE DAVIS

AMERICAN SPLENDOR

A FILM BY SHARI SPRINGER BERMAN & ROBERT PULCINI

ORDINARY LIFE IS PRETTY COMPLEX STUFF



HBO FILMS IN ASSOCIATION WITH FINE LINE FEATURES PRESENTS A GOOD MACHINE PRODUCTION A FILM BY SHARI SPRINGER BERMAN & ROBERT PULCINI PAUL GIAMATTI HOPE DAVIS "AMERICAN SPLENDOR" CASTING BY ANN GOULDER MUSIC SUPERVISOR LINDA COHEN MUSIC BY MARK SUOZZO EDITOR ROBERT PULCINI PRODUCTION DESIGNER THÉRÈSE DEPREZ DIRECTOR OF PHOTOGRAPHY TERRY STACEY LINE PRODUCER CHRISTINE KUNEWA WALKER ASSOCIATE PRODUCER JULIA KING PRODUCER TED HOPE BASED ON THE COMIC BOOK SERIES "AMERICAN SPLENDOR" BY HARVEY PEKAR AND "OUR CANCER YEAR" BY HARVEY PEKAR AND JOYCE BRABNER

R RESTRICTED UNDER 17 REQUIRES ACCOMPANYING PARENT OR ADULT GUARDIAN LANGUAGE

WWW.AMERICANSPLENDORMOVIE.COM
AMERICA ONLINE KEYWORD: AMERICAN SPLENDOR

WRITTEN AND DIRECTED BY ROBERT PULCINI & SHARI SPRINGER BERMAN

OPENS SEPTEMBER 12

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 5

McCaw exits abruptly

By ANDREW MERRITT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University of Massachusetts Athletic Director Ian McCaw was hired away to the same position at Baylor University yesterday, in an abrupt decision.

"We are very pleased that Ian McCaw is Baylor's new director of athletics," Baylor President Robert B. Sloan Jr. said. "This is the culmination of a very thorough national search that yielded outstanding candidates. Ian is a proven leader with experience in athletics administration."

With McCaw's departure, UMass will begin a search for its third athletic director in two years. McCaw replaced former UMass Athletic Director Bob Marcum, who took an early retirement in June 2002.

"The University of Massachusetts Amherst congratulates Baylor University for its selection of Ian McCaw as its new athletic director," UMass Chancellor John Lombardi said in a press release.

"Ian McCaw has served this campus exceedingly well for the past year. He clearly demonstrated the high integrity and professional excellence that would attract the attention of any major athletic program in the country. While we are very sorry to lose Ian's talents from this campus, we can only celebrate his move and wish him and his family all the success and happiness in the world."

The move comes one month after the former Baylor athletic director, Tom Stanton, resigned in the wake of scandal following basketball player Patrick Dennehy's apparent murder.

"My family and I are incredibly excited about the opportunity to serve Baylor University," McCaw said in a Baylor press release. "Baylor represents a pinnacle personal and professional position for me."

The Burlington, Ontario native is Baylor's ninth athletic director.

McCaw's new job will not come without challenges. The Baylor athletic program is still suffering from the effects of Dennehy's death, as well as the subsequent investigation that turned up corruption throughout the basketball program. Former basketball coach Dave Bliss also resigned in the wake of the investigation, and it was found that he attempted to arrange for another Baylor player to paint Dennehy as a drug dealer and abuser.

Former basketball player Carlton Dotson was also arrested and charged with Dennehy's murder. The scandal turned national media focus on

Continued on page 8

Ian McCaw introduces UMass' new logo at Fenway Park in July. McCaw resigned as UMass athletic director yesterday and accepted the athletic director's position at Baylor University.

Music group files lawsuits against Internet users

By TED BRIDIS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The music industry's largest trade group filed 261 copyright lawsuits across the country Monday against Internet users who trade songs online, an aggressive campaign to discourage piracy through fears of expensive civil penalties or settlements.

The Recording Industry Association of America warned it ultimately may file thousands of cases. Its first round was aimed at what it described as "major offenders" illegally distributing on average more than 1,000 copyrighted music files each.

"Some of my grandkids got in there," said Durwood Pickle, 71, of Richardson, Texas, who said his son had explained the situation in an e-mail to the recording industry association.

"I didn't do it, and I don't feel like I'm responsible. It's been stopped now, I guarantee you that," Pickle said his teen-aged grandchildren used his computer during visits to his home.

"I'm not a computer-type person," Pickle said. "They come in and get on the computer. How do I get out of this? Dadgum it, got to get a lawyer on this."

Another defendant, Lisa Schamis of New York, said her Internet provider warned her two months ago that record industry lawyers had asked for her name and address, but she said she had no idea she might be sued. She acknowledged downloading "lots" of music over file-sharing networks.

"This is ridiculous," said Schamis, 26. "People like me who did this, I didn't understand it was illegal."

"I can understand why the music industry is upset about this, but the fact that we had access to this as the public, I don't think gives them the right to sue us. It's wrong on their part," said Schamis, who added she is unemployed and would be unable to pay any large fine or settlement.

An estimated 60 million Americans participate in file-sharing networks, using software that makes it simple for computer users to locate and retrieve for free virtually any song by any artists within moments. Internet users broadly acknowledge music-trading is illegal, but the practice has flourished in recent years since copyright statutes are among the most popularly flouted laws online.

"Nobody likes playing the heavy," said RIAA President Cary Sherman, who compared illegal music downloads to shoplifting. "There comes a time when you have to stand up and take appropriate action."

Kerry condemns Bush's policies

By Ron Fournier
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Democratic presidential candidate John Kerry said yesterday he would not support President Bush's $87 billion request for Iraq and Afghanistan without a dramatic shift in White House policies.

"I'm not going to vote for an open-ended ticket," Kerry told The Associated Press. He said Bush should get more foreign troops into Iraq and use oil revenues to help pay for reconstruction before Americans are forced to foot the bill. Kerry said the United States cannot abandon the Persian Gulf nation.

In a wide-ranging interview, the Massachusetts senator said Democratic rival Howard Dean, a former governor of Vermont, lacks foreign policy experience in a post-Sept. 11 period that demands it.

"We've seen governors come to Washington who don't have the experience with Washington and they get in trouble real fast. And they don't have the experience in foreign policy, and they get in trouble pretty fast," Kerry said. "Look at Ronald Reagan. Look at Jimmy Carter and now, obviously, George Bush."

On foreign and domestic policy, Kerry said, "We've got to have somebody who knows how to pull the levers of this city and get something done."

Kerry, fielding questions from AP reporters and editors for more than an hour, condemned Bush's policies on North Korea, the Middle East, homeland security, the environment and taxes. While shrugging off his own political problems, Kerry criticized Dean and fellow Democratic candidate Dick Gephardt for seeking to repeal Bush-backed tax cuts for the middle class.

Kerry waded into the California recall fight — he'll campaign for embattled Gov. Gray Davis later this month — and gingerly addressed his own state's liberal political lineage.

While he would "absolutely and with pleasure" welcome Sen. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., on the campaign trail, Kerry noted that he didn't always agree with former Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, the 1988 Democratic nominee who lost to Bush's father. Kerry once served as Dukakis' lieutenant governor.

Fighting a reputation for being aloof, Kerry rose from his chair and theatrically flexed his biceps when asked about his recovery from prostate cancer. "I'm cured. I'm cancer free. I'm very lucky," Kerry said with a smile.

But he said the February surgery to remove his prostate slowed his campaign.

The interview came less than a week after Kerry formally entered the race — and amid questions about his viability. After casting himself as the early front-runner, Kerry watched his advantage slip away throughout the summer as Dean raised more money, recruited thousands of activists and skyrocketed in key state polls.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
9/11 TWO YEARS LATER
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
COMEDY IN SPADES FORMER CHILD STARS SHINE
SPORTS PAGE 10
SOUTHERN SWING MEN'S SOCCER SPLITS AT UMB NIKE CLASSIC
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 9

Layoffs weaken homeland security in Mass.

By JENNIFER PETER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Budget cuts have left Massachusetts' cities and towns with fewer tools to combat terrorism than they had when the Sept. 11 attacks occurred nearly two years ago, according to city leaders testifying at a legislative hearing on Monday.

"Rather than being more prepared for terrorist acts, the city of Revere is less prepared," said Mayor Thomas Ambrosino, who has laid off 20 police officers and 13 firefighters over the past two years. "This causes me to be very concerned about our state of preparedness."

At the opening of a three-day hearing on the state of anti-terrorism preparedness in Massachusetts, Senate leaders heard from U.S. Rep. Barney Frank and municipal leaders, as well as leaders of the Massachusetts Port Authority and the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority.

"Two years later, it's a fair question to ask?" said Sen. Jarrett Barrios, D-Cambridge. "Are we safer today than we were two years ago? It's hard to have homeland security without any hometown security."

In a homeland security "report card" issued over the weekend, Republican Gov. Mitt Romney said that budget cuts haven't hurt cities' and towns' ability to respond to terrorist threats. Despite layoffs, he said the number of firefighters, police officers and emergency medical personnel is within "one or two percent" of what it was two years ago.

Frank, D-Mass., opened the hearing yesterday with criticism of the federal government for not sinking enough resources into first responders.

"If we can incur a deficit to help Iraq, why can't we incur a deficit here in America for our firefighters," Frank said. "I don't think much of the idea of fighting two wars with three tax cuts."

While municipal leaders argued they were being stripped of necessary resources to protect the front lines, the state's anti-terrorism coordinator said that major improvements had been made in the communication channels between federal, state and local officials.

"We're not finished, but we've made a very strong beginning," said Michael Ricciuti, chief of the anti-terrorism unit in the U.S. Attorney's office. "The goal is to bring all law enforcement professionals onto the same page."

In the two years since the attacks, Massachusetts — like most states across the country — has seen a dramatic dip in its tax base, leading to deep budget cuts. Over the past nine months, state payments to cities and towns have been cut several times, leading to the layoff of local law enforcement personnel. Sen. JoAnn Sprague, R-Walpole, suggested yesterday that it was the local governments' choice to make these cuts.

"These are decisions that are being made at the local level," Sprague said. "Maybe instead of laying off firefighters and police they should lay off administrators and assistant administrators."

COURTESY OF RACHEL HEALING

Bundles of books

Students leave the Textbook Annex with their course-required textbooks and school supplies.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COMICS EDITOR Robert Krzykowski
EDITORIAL EDITOR Erika Lorley
NEWS EDITOR Courtney Charles
PHOTO EDITOR Gerald H. Ling
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Julie Beauchamp
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE SERVICES Sandra Marquez
ASSISTANT BUSINESS MANAGER Ben Ratner
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING MANAGER David Bor
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Mark Lagetic
ASSISTANT FINANCE MANAGER Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION ASSISTANT Liza Lynch
LAYOUT MANAGER Lindsay Clark
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS MANAGER Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Jessica Pelletier
ASSISTANT ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR Paige Cram
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITOR Kelly Farrell
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITOR Ferron Saltaiker
ASSISTANT PHOTO EDITOR Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS EDITOR Mike Marzelli

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ACADEMIC LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1998. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

Welcome meeting tomorrow at 6 p.m. in the Collegian newsroom. Interested writers are encouraged to attend.

police log

Compiled by Courtney Charles

Heated dog in distress

Parking office receives explosive threat

Thursday, Aug. 28

11:56 p.m. An arrest was made during a traffic stop on Kennedy Road. Donald P. Walker, 20, of 242 Central St., second floor, Springfield, Mass. was arrested on a warrant.

Friday, Aug. 29

1:20 a.m. An officer reported a vehicle parked at the top of the Southwest Horseshoe with its interior lights on and the door wide open. The officer stated he secured the vehicle and that nothing seemed disturbed.

2:20 a.m. A party reported noise coming from the front of Kennedy Tower, possibly a loud stereo from a vehicle. The officer reported a few people scattering and there was no vehicle in the area. Everything was quiet.

9:03 a.m. A caller reported that she would like to speak with an officer regarding someone who was researching her personal history. The party spoke with Family Housing regarding these matters and advised UMPD of an order against her ex-husband.

10:06 a.m. An officer reported that a sign was run over by a Housing Service vehicle and broken. The officer spoke with the driver and supervisor.

11:45 a.m. An officer walking around on foot in the vicinity of Governor's Drive was checking the area where last year someone was living in a co-op type building. The officer found a lock on the door and the building appeared to be occupied again. The officer was unable to gain access into building. There was no one inside the building at the time.

1:14 p.m. The parents of a student living in Southwest came in to report an injury caused by broken concrete in front of John Quincy Adams Tower.

3:40 p.m. The Dean of Students called to inform UMPD that he was sending a student down to get a restraining order against another student who attended the school last year. The party was informed to call UMPD if he had further problems or gathered any more information.

Saturday, Aug. 30

12:01 a.m. An officer spoke with party in North Village Apartments who called to report a group of people in the C-section being loud and playing music. The officer instructed the party to call again if the noise started back up.

1:05 a.m. An officer reported that she will check out a male subject lying on the ground near Kennedy Tower. She reported that the area was clear and that the person had been moved along.

1:49 a.m. The second call was made from North Village Apartments for noise complaints. The parties agreed to keep it down.

2:37 a.m. A third call was made for a noise complaint in North Village Apartments. An officer investigated the noise level and stated there should be no further problems.

10 a.m. A residential director in Southwest called after seeing a dog in a truck the previous night at midnight and again the next day. The dog appeared to be in distress and panting. Officers brought the dog back to the station. The owner of the dog spoke with an officer. The dog was released to his custody with a verbal warning given.

9:49 p.m. An arrest was made during a traffic stop on Hicks Way. Nicholas J. Haines, 19, of 198 Alpine St., Bridgeport, Conn. was arrested for unlicensed operation of a motor vehicle.

1:31 a.m. A residential director in John Adams Tower called to report that there was a lot of noise coming from a room and that she would like an officer present when she got the key and opened the room. The officer reported that the stereo was left on in the room and that no one was in the room.

3:30 a.m. A fire alarm was set off in Van Meter Hall. Responding officers reported that the fire was in a trash can and that it had been put out.

12:12 p.m. Amherst Police Department received direct 911 call for medical emergency in Baker Hall. One person was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

12:55 p.m. An ambulance was requested for a medical emergency in the Southwest Mall. One person was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

4:48 p.m. The father of a student in Kennedy Tower called wishing to speak to an officer regarding his daughter, who currently has a restraining order against an ex-boyfriend.

Monday, Sept. 1

12:50 p.m. An officer on traffic detail observed an individual with an active trespass order. He warned him that the street was part of campus property and that he should stay away from all parts of the campus.

2:57 p.m. An officer reported that a maintainer in John Adams Tower found three .22 rounds in a discarded box on the 15th floor. The rounds were secured.

5:49 p.m. A caller in Brown Hall reported $250 taken from the room. The caller had left the room with the door open.

8:17 p.m. A suspicious vehicle was reported in Lot 11 on Stadium Drive. The responding officer advised the subject occupying the vehicle that the lot was not a correct area to conduct driving lessons.

Tuesday, Sept. 2

12:22 a.m. A vehicle was stopped on Massachusetts Ave. The officer advised that the rear passenger on the driver's side was taken out of the vehicle and checked due to furtive movements. The party checked out OK.

1:12 a.m. An on-call residential director was notified of a parent's call regarding behavior in a dorm room.

1:36 a.m. An officer stated that a verbal argument between two parties resulted in officers speaking with the parties and victim's rights being read.

1:50 a.m. A medical emergency was reported in Grayson Hall. Amherst Fire Department dispatched an ambulance and one person was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

2:01 a.m. Amherst Fire Department received a report of a male vomiting in the 20th floor women's bathroom in John Quincy Adams Tower. An ambulance was sent. The responding officer stated that the male was the residential assistant on the floor. He stated that he was at a party and believed his drink was spiked.

2:46 a.m. A person reported a laptop stolen from a room in Coolidge Hall. The door was reportedly locked at the time.

3:05 a.m. A caller reported an assault on a woman in Brett Hall. An arrest was made. Jonathan Adam Golas, 18, of 689 Linden St., Boylston, Mass., was charged with assault and battery.

12:58 p.m. A caller reported that an individual was walking around the Lederle Research Tower attempting to sell some photos out of a box. The individual had walked into several restricted labs bothering researchers. An area check was negative.

1:21 p.m. The parking office reported that an employee threatened to blow up the parking office if he received a ticket or got towed.

9:47 p.m. A caller reported a medical emergency in Grayson Hall. Amherst Fire Department transported the individual to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

9:50 p.m. An odor of marijuana was reported in John Adams Tower. The responding officer reported a strong odor coming from a room. There was no response from occupants.

Wednesday, Sept. 3

2:41 a.m. An officer stated she will be checking the Fine Arts Center due to an open door discovered on the north side of the building. She reported a male party sleeping in room 193. The officer dropped the party off in downtown Amherst.

Juniors Seniors Grads Commuters

This is the year to leave behind the expense and hassle behind!

Why waste your time and money shopping, cooking, and washing dishes when you can have access to fresh, exciting, continuous dining from 7:00 am until 2:00 am*?

YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN

Sushi • Vegetarian and Vegan Entrees • Asian Noodle Bowl • International Station • Grab-n-go • Stir-Fry •Italian Pasta Bar • Guest Chefs • And so much more

Visit our Meal Plan Office at the Franklin Dining Commons or our table on the Campus Center Concourse to purchase YCMP or find out more about the benefits!
www.aux.umass.edu/diningservices

Being a student,
you can live without a lot of things.

Cable shouldn't be one of them.

Get your first month of select Comcast Digital Cable packages featuring HBO for just $1!
Add Comcast High-Speed Internet for just $1 more! Plus get FREE basic installation!

1-877-407-7806 ▪ comcast-ne.com

comcast

HBO MTV Discovery Channel MTV2

*Comcast may not service your address. All services are not available in all areas. Offer available in Comcast serviceable areas only. Restrictions may apply. For restrictions, minimum requirements and complete details about service and prices, call 1-877-407-7806. Comcast Digital Plus, Digital Silver, Digital Gold and Comcast High-Speed Internet® for each product. Offer does not apply to services to which customer currently subscribes. Offer does not include Standard Cable, Federal, State, and Local taxes, Franchise fees, other related fees or equipment charges. After first month, published rate card rate for Comcast Digital Plus, Digital Silver, Digital Gold, and Comcast High-Speed Internet applies. Installation offer is valid for new customers only and does not apply to non-residential or non-standard installations, including installations over 150 ft. from outside cable system. Offer available to residential customers located in Comcast Cable wired and serviceable areas only and is not available to current or former Comcast customers with unpaid balances. Additional charges for non-standard installation, wiring time, and materials may apply for homes not yet wired for cable. Certain services are available separately or as part of other levels of service, and all programming and services are not available in all areas. You must rent a converter and remote control for an additional charge to receive certain services. Installation, additional outlet, change of service, programming access and other charges may apply. Franchise fees, taxes and other fees may apply. Pricing, programming, channel location and packaging may change. Offer applies to one TV. Not valid with any other discount or coupon for Comcast services. Basic Service subscription is required to receive other levels of service. Comcast Digital Cable service is subject to terms and conditions of Comcast Cable Policies & Practices. Ethernet device is required for Comcast High-Speed Internet service and may be purchased from Comcast or through a local retail location for an additional fee. Actual speeds vary. Minimum computer system requirements apply. Offer expires 10/05/03. ©2003 Comcast. All rights reserved. ©2003 Home Box Office, Inc. All rights reserved. HBO® is a service mark of Home Box Office, Inc.
A15-090103-ARC

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 2003 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The legal definition of gay marriage

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts is responsible for legally defining "marriage." In July, the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court began discussions concerning the case Goodridge, et al. v. Department of Public Health, a lawsuit filed by seven same-sex couples who were denied marriage licenses in the Commonwealth.

The SJC predicted a decision on the case by Aug. 12. Over a month later, the SJC continues to debate the issue, while the Boston press core circulates rumors that the SJC will turn the issue over to the legislature, demanding legislative decision on which to base their decision.

Meanwhile, in the Senate, President Traveligni has prepared a bill supporting civil unions — similar to those now legal in Vermont — in Massachusetts. Traveligni claims that as a Roman Catholic, his church does not allow him to support gay marriage. However, as a civil rights supporter, he is allowed to support civil unions. But, Traveligni says that he will not move forward with his civil union legislation before the SJC makes its decision, leaving the people of Massachusetts lingering in stalemate until one of our government braches agrees to take responsibility for the decision.

The problem with civil unions is that the precedent is Vermont, where problems remain over the actual rights granted through a civil union. The rights of a couple within a civil union do not match the rights of a heterosexual married couple.

The problem with saying OK to homosexual marriage in Massachusetts is that we would be the first state in the country to actually allow gay marriage rather than just civil unions. Thus, Massachusetts' citizens are allowed the right to gay marriage; homosexuals in Georgia (a state that does not have civil union or marriage rights for gays) could sue their state for the right, since other American citizens have been afforded these rights.

The federal government worries that once a state allows homosexual marriage, it will barrel roll and other states will follow quickly behind. The problem in this lies in the Federal Defense of Marriage Act, a federal law explicitly defining marriage as the union between a man and a woman, which is currently (obviously) under attack.

Thirty-seven states have passed the Defense of Marriage Act. Earlier this year, Massachusetts chose not to as well, and therefore has no such defining law on their books. Marriage in Massachusetts is not defined as being between a man and a woman. The pending lawsuit argues exactly this: that the state constitution (the oldest in the world) protects one's right to marry the person of one's choice — not necessarily of the opposite sex.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian supports the abolition of the Federal Defense of Marriage Act. Before conservatives in Washington push it through to be an amendment, advocates should sign on with the Feminist Majority and contact Massachusetts senators John Kerry and Ted Kennedy in D.C., and local state reps as well.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Reflections of September 11

Russ Jaskalian

Two years ago, something that had been brewing for no less than many decades came to tragic fruition. The whole world watched in awe as people jumped from burning windows. Fearless men and women risked their lives — losing them in many cases — to save those who needed to be saved.

I woke up that morning and decided to finish the last 20 pages of "Brave New World" before going to class. It had been a great summer; classes seemed palatable.

Reading utopias had an eye-opening effect. They taught me how to sense when the wool had been and continues to be pulled over our eyes.

I woke up, energized because it was a nice day and the novel I had almost finished was brilliant. It was as if in this novel, I had just stumbled upon an old warning that no one heeded. I felt ready to talk about it and use it in my discussions.

While the book was ominous, I didn't have very long to consider my thoughts. My housemate opened my bedroom door and solemnly told me that I had to come downstairs.

When the truly horrible happens, you expect it to be more real. It would hurt more, the pain would be more acute and the emotions would be overwhelming to the point where you would not be able to function. When the truly horrible does happen though, it's different from what we expect. Our minds get switched into a different mode, in order to prevent hysteria.

For a while I sat, not sure what I was watching and not knowing what it meant. It was not until later that the reality of the events set in. But it was in those first few moments that I knew the reality of the ominous possibilities and warnings of the book I had just read and of the books I would read in the coming weeks.

It has been two years since then. I don't think that September 12 was the first day of a new world. Maybe the September 11 was the catalyst.

Maybe it became a great reason, and maybe it was an eye-opener — though not the one I thought it would be. But somehow, between then and today, things have spiraled.

As we all run off to classes, John Ashcroft, our Attorney General, (Paladin for the weak and powerless) is touring the country, giving talks on the importance of the Patriot Act. The act, which trades our civil liberties and freedoms, (the very thing we are fighting for in the name of "security"), allows a greater level of surveillance, tracking, personal information gathering and a general intrusion on our privacy.

I won't get into the debate about having nothing to hide. This is about where the law can go, the process of separating government from ordinary citizens (remember, "We the people ...").

When the truly horrible does happen though, it's different from what we expect.

Ashcroft is giving these talks to a closed audience, mostly comprised of law enforcement personnel. A certain level of backlash has already started, one in preparation for "Patriot Act II" (a draft was leaked in February), and one in defense of the original act. If Ashcroft needs to rally support, why won't he address the public?

In Israel, the peace process seems ground to a complete halt with the resignation of the Palestinian prime minister, Mahmoud Abbas, and an air-strike attack on Hamas' spiritual leader and founder.

Liberia might be seeing a brief eye of the storm, but a few weeks ago children under the age of 10 were running around with automatic weapons. Many of us saw that riveting photograph in The New York Times not long ago.

There was a weapons of mass destruction specialist in the United Kingdom who apparently killed himself over the pressure and suspicion surrounding the sexing up of government reports and what he knew about it.

Kim Jong Il is terrorizing his people and threatening them with bombs and military action. Seoul sits only 30 miles from the demilitarized zone, one of the most heavily armed borders in the world. Missiles sit ready to destroy most of South Korea.

Iraq hasn't been a cakewalk either. No one doubted that Iraq would be overrun by the United States military, but it doesn't seem like anyone really thought about what to do afterwards. It looks like another U.S. occupied territory for now — new colonialism. What about Afghanistan? Why doesn't the Bush administration ever bring that little paradise up anymore?

As far as I am concerned, September 12 was a safer day to be in the world than it is today. The truly horrible had happened, but we hadn't traded away our civil liberties in fear. There was conflict in the rest of the world, but we hadn't taken the overtly imperialistic stand we have today.

I'm worried because if we have transgressed this far in three years of Bush, what might 2008 look like? I'm worried because one of the greatest Americans of all time said something very grave, so many years ago.

"They who can give up essential liberty to obtain a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety."

I am worried because I doubt that it's a matter of deservedness — it's a matter of causality.

Russ Jaskalian is a Collegian columnist.

A collegiate embarrassment

Zach Oelschlegel

Man, did we ever tear down the goalposts after we thoroughly beat Central Connecticut State senseless on Saturday. Everybody was into the game, people were screaming their heads off, and I swear, I couldn't go more than two minutes without hearing a "Let's go U-Mass!" chant. I don't think I've ever been more proud to be a Minuteman than after that game.

Truth be told, I'm a filthy liar. Pinocchio's nose would have made its own disaster zone by now if he had tried to tell that one.

What really happened, of course, was a huge win for the football team, to the tune of a 44-point margin. More importantly, and unfortunately more depressing, was that I'm not sure anyone on campus actually cares or not, as I doubt I would have needed both hands to count the number of people who stood and cheered during the entire game.

I doubt I would have needed both hands to count the number of people who stood and cheered during the entire game.

Although, when I think about it, the football team shouldn't take it personally. It's not as if it is the only squad on campus that gets the cold shoulder from the student body.

The hockey team felt this pain last year before it was kosher to attend hockey games. The basketball team has been feeling it since the days of Calapari ended. And no other teams get any love anyway, so I'm sure they're used to it.

I've asked people why they don't attend games or why they don't care, and I've gotten everything from, "I had a lot of homework to do." to "I'm not a (insert sport) fan."

But there is one that just gnaws at me, like a rat chewing its way through my stomach: "They haven't given me anything to cheer for."

That's the worst of it right there. It shows that UMass students are a bunch of fair weather numbskulls who will show up or make an attempt to care only if a team is in the race for a conference championship. It shows the true heart of the student body — that no one really minds the school being on the downslope. What is even more surprising is that the entire student body bleeds for an 84-year-old loser the whole year, yet it can't make through a two-hour long game.

Of course, everyone expects the problem to fix itself, which eradicates just about any chance of having any decent sports team in the future. What does an empty Mullins Center say to a high school athlete torn between UMass and one of our rivals like Maine or Temple? What incentive have we, the students, given an athlete to play for UMass as opposed to a school that roots for its teams consistently, whether it's another banner year or another rebuilding year?

Lastly, everyone here on campus gripes about the budget cuts, including myself. Of course, we always pass the buck and put the blame squarely on the state, but what reason have we given the state to fund the school more than it has? Or, more importantly, what reason have we given to rich alumni to donate money back to the school? People never want to see their money go down the crapper, which is a colossal reason as to why the school is getting less funding.

We the students have been lazy, party-hardy slackers, and we scream at taxpayers that we don't care by showing them the empty crowds at sporting events, the lack of general school pride and utter apathy toward UMass. Think there's a reason why the majority of Massachusetts thinks Boston College is the state-run university and not UMass?

We get ticked off at the state for screwing us over when we really need a swift kick in the butt for digging our grave, closing the coffin and practically begging the B.C.'s of this world to shovel the dirt back on top. Shame on us. Funding is a two-way street, and we whimper and cry over how ruthless the state has been, as if to say we were angels ourselves.

It's a pity, really. It's complete sheer embarrassment to have a hockey team on the verge of Hockey East domination, a basketball team that just recruited one of the best players in the nation, lacrosse, soccer and football teams coming off of great seasons, and no one will know or care to know. I guess I had better get used to games like the one on Saturday, or find one incredible shrink.

Zach Oelschlegel is a Collegian columnist.

Ode to summer

Johnny Donaldson

Another summer has come and gone. We are either returning to the halls of UMass, or we are wandering through them for the first time, but the fact of the matter is this: our blissful, ignorant freedom is gone, the chilly air is swooping in and it's time to get our learn on. But before I bid adieu to the dog days of 2003, I'd like to review some of the more noteworthy events of the last few months.

First, the infamous Northeast blackout.In August, a rolling blackout struck most of the northeastern corridor of the United States. Everywhere you looked, lights went out as the power shut down. The media, naturally, jumped on the event, promoting spiffy new cartoon graphics and headlines designed to further spook wary citizens.

All I have to say is, come on people, it was just a blackout, not the end of the world. Yeah, it was newsworthy, but not front page worthy. It's not like no one has ever been in a similar situation. New York's lights went out, but that wasn't reason to freak out and wander the streets like the apocalypse was coming.

Michael Savage got canned from MSNBC for telling a gay caller to die of AIDS.

Then, of course, there is California's Gubernatorial Recall. Arnold Schwarzenegger is running. So is Gary Coleman, "Hustler" pervin-charge Larry Flint,watermelon-smashing "comedian" Gallagher, porn star Mary Carey and about 3,000 other freaks, geeks and weirdos who think they have a shot at actually running a state (well, it is California after all).

The fact that none of them qualify is just a sad metaphor for the current state of American politics. I mean, we don't really have a qualified president, do we?

But seriously folks, how can we consider a political race legitimate when: A) one candidate is a Terminator preaching on how to keep children from the sway of violence, and B) another candidate wore a red, white and blue bikini on her website? All I have to say is God Bless the U.S. of A.

Next up, the democrats for president. Hey, anything that gets Bush out of office is fine by me, but do we really need nine different candidates? Especially since most people can only name, oh say, three? Since Al Sharpton doesn't count and Joe Leiberman is pretty much a Jewish democrat version of Dubya, that brings the number of real candidates to seven. Really, I think Howard Dean should get the vote. because he's an actual politician who really cares about politics.

And then there was "Gigli." Why were critics so harsh on the first movie to star that ungainly creature known as Bennifer? It wasn't as intolerable as it was made out to be. Owen Gleiberman, movie critic for Entertainment Weekly, called it "a watch-able bad movie," and I agree. But the vultures in the American news media made it out to be the Second Coming of the Antichrist. Well, it wasn't and the hoopla was just pathetic. It was nothing more than jealous haters attacking a happy, (even if over publicized) couple for making a flawed, imperfect movie. Neither Ben Affleck nor Jennifer Lopez deserved the kind of venomous scorn that has been heaped upon them in recent months. Shame.

I'd also like to address world violence. Bush has declared the end of the hostilities in Iraq, yet people continue to die on daily basis. Bombings are happening all around the Middle East (like the horrific destruction of the U.N. building). North Korea has threatened the U.S. and Bush still remains in Iraq, all while civil unrest tears apart Liberia. It's nothing funny, just a cautionary note that the world is going to hell in a hand basket and we have to step it up and start being nicer — to each other for starters.

Lastly, Michael Savage, the television news personality who makes Bill O'Reilly sound intelligent, got canned from MSNBC for telling a gay caller to die of AIDS. I could make a joke here, but that would be redundant.

There's probably a lot more that needs to be said about any and all of these subjects, or even about subjects not mentioned. But right now, I'm exhausted, and I don't have the room. However, now that we get free newspapers across campus, perhaps our hard-partying populace can catch up on the current events.

Right now, I'm going to just give myself a break. I'm still not convinced summer is over yet.

Johnny Donaldson is a Collegian columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

editorial@dailycollegian.com | 413-545-3699 | Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center Way, Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 2003 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Chili Peppers to burn up at Mullins

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

One of the most charismatic, creative and cross-cultured bands in the music business today, the Red Hot Chili Peppers, will play tonight right here on the University of Massachusetts campus at the Mullins Center.

The Chili Peppers — made up of Anthony Kiedis on lead vocals, Chad Smith on drums, John Fusciante on lead guitar and Flea on bass guitar — are performing in Amherst en route of their yearlong tour around the world to promote their most recent album, "By the Way."

The funk-punk based rock band from Los Angeles, Calif. is currently touring the northeastern part of the United States on the third leg of the worldwide tour. The tour began at the start of the year in Europe and will end by late October in Alberta, Canada.

The Red Hot Chili Peppers
'By the Way'
Mullins Center
Sept. 9

Tonight will mark the second time the Peppers have played in the Mullins Center. They last played the Mullins on April 2, 2000, following the release of their Grammy award winning record, "Californication."

Riding the immense success of "Californication," the Chili Peppers released "By the Way" in the summer of 2002. Lacking the same firepower and tightness of "Californication," "By the Way" did not receive similar praise by fans and critics, as did their previous album. However, the record is still one of the better LP's released in the past two years by any popular artist.

"By the Way" shows signs that Kiedis and Co. are beginning to grow old and those hard-driven rock days may be past the crew. Believe it or not, the Chili Peppers released their first record in 1984 — almost 20 years ago.

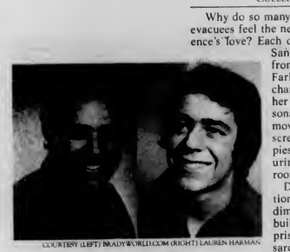
Opening for the Chili Peppers at the Mullins are Queens of the Stone Age and French Toast.

The show begins at 7 p.m. and, as of press time, seats are still available.

All tickets are $41 and can be purchased through Ticketmaster.com or by calling Ticketmaster at (413) 733-2500. They are also available at the Mullins Center box office.

COURTESY MUSICAL RU

Feast your peepers on these Peppers. Red Hot Chili Peppers plays the Mullins Center tonight.



SECOND CHANCES

'Dickie Roberts: Former child star' passes for acceptable film work

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

Why do so many "Saturday Night Live" evacuees feel the need to beg for the audience's love? Each of them — from Adam Sandler to Eddie Murphy, from Chevy Chase to Chris Farley — is given the chance to develop his or her own unique comic persona, only to defang it, one movie at a time on the big screen. They're like puppies begging for love after urinating on the living room carpet.

David Spade is no exception to this rule. The diminutive comedian has built a career on playing prissy, snide, venomously sarcastic wiseacres. Yet in his latest, "Dickie Roberts: Former Child Star," that persona clashes with the actor's desire to be loved.

COURTESY (LEFT) BRADYWORLD.COM (RIGHT) LAUREN HARMAN

Barry Williams, or Greg Brady, sports cameo.

Just as in the actor's other roles in "Lost and Found" and "Joe Dirt," his best moments come when he lets his hostile sharp shooting burst forth; his abrasiveness clashes with his watery eagerness to please. The surprising thing about "Dickie Roberts," however, is that the uneasy mix of sentiment and sarcasm occasionally works. Unlike Spade's previous efforts, this flyweight comedy is often better than expected.

"Dickie Roberts: Former Child Star"
Directed by Sam Weisman
Starring David Spade, Mary McCormack
Paramount
Rated PG-13
99 mins.
Grade C+

COURTESY PARAMOUNT

"SNL" alumnus, John Lovitz, and David Spade share the screen in "Dickie Roberts."

This hardly means that "Dickie Roberts: Former Child Star" is a good movie, but it is a sporadically amusing one. It opens with a parody of "E! True Hollywood Story," as it tells the rise and fall story of Dickie Roberts, a child actor whose career — and life — bottomed out after he turned six, and his nauseatingly cute television series, "The Glimmer Gang," was canceled. (His widely adored catchphrase was, "That's nucking futs!") Now Dickie is a self-absorbed basket case who wears gloves to prevent touching anything and works as a valet at a posh L.A. eatery.

COURTESY (LEFT) NBC (RIGHT) E! ENTERTAINMENT

Danny Bonaduce, or Danny Partridge, pairs with Spade as well.

In the so-called reality of "Dickie Roberts," Rob Reiner is the king of Hollywood. (Apparently in this universe, neither "Alex and Emma" nor "The Story of Us" have ever existed.) Dickie believes that making a comeback is contingent on getting the lead in Reiner's latest, a bit of high-concept treacle called "Mr. Blake's Backyard." (The movie sounds like the kind of warm and fuzzy stinker that gives feel-good movies a bad name, but forget about that.) When Reiner informs Dickie that the actor has no idea on how to be a normal human being, Dickie hits on the idea to hire a family to help him relive a normal childhood.

COURTESY (LEFT) JOVEN.COM (RIGHT) RON ALBANESE

Leif Garrett also pops onto the scene.

The family in question is the Finneys, which resembles an actual family about as much as Michael Jackson resembles his old self. The Finneys — which consists of absentee father George (Craig Bierko), lovely stay-at-home mom Grace (Mary McCormack) and cute kids Sam and Sally (Scott Terra, Jenna Boyd) — are the synthetic creations of a sitcom, and "Dickie Roberts: Former Child Star" seems built from the scraps of bland sitcoms past.

The movie very quickly goes from Hollywood satire to an episodic progression of prepackaged, made-for-TV events: Sam learns to get the girl; Sam's bullies get what they deserve; Dickie helps Sally land a spot on the pep squad.

It's all rather predictable. What isn't predictable, however, is the fact the movie isn't the dog that it could have — and, really, should have — been. There are strong performances from the sweet and soulful McCormack (she gives her role more, ahem, grace then it might deserve), Jon Lovitz (as Dickie's uber-loyal agent) and even Spade himself. Spade, in particular, clicks with the young actors Terra and Boyd; there's an authentic sweetness to his scenes with the kids, which transcends the pat familiarity of the material.

COURTESY PARAMOUNT

David Spade squares off with a garden hose in this role.

Even when the movie isn't terribly funny, there is a fascinating sociological undercurrent to it. Leif Garrett, Corey Feldman, Danny Bonaduce and a host of other former child stars play Dickie's poker buddies and themselves, waxing envy on George Clooney, Brad Pitt and Vin Diesel. Over the credits, a host of child celebrities sing a profane, "We Are The World"-style ballad on the joys of being a child actor. It's at times funny, sad and just a little mesmerizing to watch these formerly famous faces stoop so low for even just the briefest bits of notoriety.

COURTESY (LEFT) GROUP-B-MATCH (RIGHT) TOUCHSTONE

Emmanuel Lewis, or Little Webster, joins the cast.

New football game snaps into action

Press Start to Play
Reid Davenport

This summer was not the greatest summer for video game fans. Many of us sat and were forced to replay our old games, as the new ones this summer were nothing short of disappointing. Even the most anticipated game of the summer, "Madden 2004," was a letdown to fans of the football franchise.

"Madden" was easily the game everyone waited for this summer. The only downside of it all was that the game was not released until the very end of the summer. Sure enough though, people were flocking to their local electronic gaming store to shell out the $49.99 to get the latest version of "Madden." You can enter just about any gaming store that accepts used games and see the shelves lined with old copies of "Madden 2003," as people rushed to trade up for a new version.

What gamers don't know about the new game is that it is almost not worth the trade up. No matter what the current gaming sites and magazines have been raving, this game is nothing that was worth waiting for.

The new "Madden 2004" has the usual updated stats on players and teams from around the NFL along with historic teams like NFL Europe teams. However, it's not much more advanced than its past version. The game still has those little annoying tendencies with the AI that will get you steamed after every play. Plus, the new owner mode in "Madden" is not all it's cracked up to be.

"Madden 2004"
PS2, X-Box, Game Cube
Publisher: EA Sports
Developer: EA Games Sport

The new owner mode is nothing short of boring. Maybe if you are one of those people who is a huge sports and simulator fan, "Madden 2004" packs something a little more interesting for your taste. Other than that, forget about it. You can amuse yourself by placing Rocky Mountain Oysters on the snack bar menu for your stadium, yet that's about as entertaining as it gets.

Well, if you ever wanted to know what it's like to tell Brett Favre he's fired, then there's a little something extra for you. Basically, the owner mode is there to please the simulator gamers. Why they are aiming at this group of gamers is unknown.

While the owner mode was a complete waste of space, there are a few positives to the updated version. One is having control over the music played during the game. You can turn off the songs that play constantly and annoy the living crap out of you. If you own the X-Box version, you can even copy songs from CDs onto the hard drive and choose to have them play during the game.

Another decent update is the franchise mode. This is the section most players are as familiar with as the must play mode. The franchise mode has normally offered the option to coach an existing team, create a team or start fresh with the fantasy draft. The franchise mode now enables you to boost a few player stats before entering the season. Being an all-star with the point drills from the previous version can pay off big time, as you can add up to eight points to a player's stats. This is a big deal if you get stuck with a left tackle that has all the awareness in the world, but

Continued on page 7

Lennox bares all in her latest pop album

By Nikolas P. Markantonatos
Collegian Staff

Covered in a pale clay dust, false lashes and what looks like a dog collar, a straight-faced Annie Lennox appears solemn on the CD sleeve of "Bare." The picture and the album title are indicative of the subject matter in the CD, her first studio release since 1995's "Medusa."

The 11 songs on "Bare" are Lennox's most personal songs she's ever recorded. As the star of Eurythmics, Lennox rarely, if ever, revealed herself. She gave us the old razzle-dazzle — flamboyant, heavily costumed, drawing attention to her made-up persona.

On "Bare," she takes off her guise, showing us she is a soul singer at heart. Soul singers must believe in a higher power and must convey that belief. They must convey to listeners an overwhelming sense of strength, even in the toughest of times. Strong, deeply felt emotions and powerful lyrics do just that.

Approaching 50, Lennox has mellowed. She is more self-reflective and uses a slower tempo and a simpler style of music. The lyrics on these songs are hers, and they matter — this is all serious stuff. For most of the '90s, Lennox struggled through personal hardships. Twice married and twice divorced, she is now the single mother of two schoolage daughters. She also continues a lifelong battle with depression.

Annie Lennox — 'Bare' — ♩

Lennox possesses one of the most distinct voices in pop. A chalky voice that sometimes sounds girly and at others fulsome and hunky. Keyboard melodies, guitar licks and drumming are used to match her somber voice. In the seven-and-a-half minute "The Hurting Time," Lennox twists and flexes her vocals around the electronic instruments. It is as sophisticated as pop music gets.

Since her days in Eurythmics, Lennox has always challenged us — and that's one thing that hasn't changed. Her short hair and forceful, yet sexual voice set her apart from other pop artists — especially female singers. She wants us to confront our perceptions about gender, beauty and power, as she did with the hit "Sweet Dreams (Are Made Of This)." As she explains on the back of the "Bare" cover, the picture on the front is "timeless, gender-free and racially ambiguous."

After opening the album with an affirmation of all there is to live on "A Thousand Beautiful Things," and delving into the hope and bitterness of love, she closes the album with "Oh God (Prayer)," a confession of personal devastation and a cry for deliverance. Sung in a soft, childlike voice, Lennox asks, "Where are you now? And what you gonna do/ About the mess I've made?"

The hauntingly beautiful music on "Bare" may be a bit hard to face, but it's undeniably coming from her heart. Even the album's striking cover, and all other related imagery, has been created by Lennox herself, working with the graphic artist Allan Martin. With "Bare," Lennox rises to the upper echelons of a soul singer.

The lead single, "Pavement Cracks," speaks of her journey as an artist and as a woman — and it's the closest she gets to making a tune that takes the approach of a current hit-making production. In "Honestly," Lennox confronts the battles she fought in relationships. "Don't you know I tried and tried again to make you listen to me/ But everything I said it always seemed to go right through you," she confesses.

In "Wonderful," she scolds herself for falling in love with someone that doesn't love her. "Idiot me/ Stupid fool/ How could you be so uncool?/ To fall in love with someone who doesn't really care for you ... But I feel, wonderful/ Yes I feel, wonderful," she admits later in the song, thankful for "the heat of my desire/ smokin' like some crazy fire."

"The Saddest Song I've Got" continues Lennox's contradiction. "And I want you, not/ I need you, not," she sings as if she's standing beneath dark clouds on a cliff. These lyrics indicate a self-awareness (she knows she's wrong, but she can't help herself) that gives the song interest.

Double headliner rocks

Counting Crows and John Mayer dazzle Tweeter

By Lizzy Nielsen
Collegian Correspondent

Pop music ain't what it used to be.

With singer-songwriters dominating today's Top 40 airwaves, it's not a surprise to anyone that pop's "it" singer-songwriter teamed up with a band that paved the way for the Vanessa Carlton and Michelle Branch and packed Mansfield's Tweeter center.

Counting Crows were up first, much to the chagrin of many hardcore Counting Crows fans in attendance. There was some question as to whether or not the Crows should be opening for John Mayer, however with Mayer's more recent success and his album being released on Sept. 9, it was the correct decision made by tour promoters.

John Mayer & Counting Crows — Tweeter Center — Aug. 22

Fans of Counting Crows couldn't be too disappointed though. During the Crow's 65-minute set, front man Adam Duritz infringed all of the angst in every song the band performed on everyone in the crowd. They opened with a rousing version of "Rain King" off their first album, "August and Everything After."

Fans of the Crow's two middle albums, "Recovering the Satellites" and "This Desert Life," were disappointed, as they only touched upon those albums. Most of the set came from the band's first and fourth albums, "August" and "Hard Candy."

Highlights of the set included "Black and Blue," a ballad off of "Hard Candy," which Duritz informed the audience is about "making the people closest to you miserable."

The major highlight of the Crow's set was the closer "Hangin' Around." Opening band Stew joined the group on stage, as did a wild bulldog, which was chasing around a beach ball thrown on stage by someone in the audience.

COURTESY CHILLRESINBLUX.COM

You can count on these Crows for a stellar performance.

After the end of the set, the audience wanted more, but Duritz told the crowd, "we went too long and they're kicking us off."

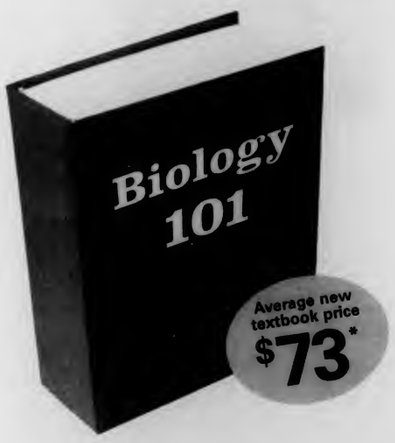
During the intermission, the teenage girls who had never heard of the Counting Crows (other than when they sang "that song with Vanessa Carlton") whipped out their signs and started crying out Mayer's name in anticipation of his set.

Mayer and his band came out to an audio recording of the version of "Total Eclipse of the Heart" as heard in the Will Ferrell comedy, "Old School," and quickly launched into his musical middle finger to high school, "No Such Thing," off of his first album, "Room for Squares."

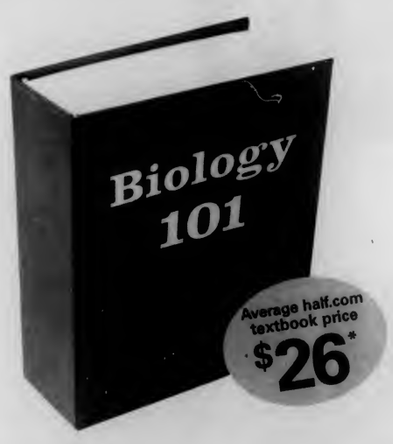
Mayer did not play much off of his debut album other than the three obvious radio hits: "No Such Thing," "Your Body is A Wonderland" and "Why Georgia."

Mayer did provide the audience with a preview of his new album, aptly titled "Heavier Things," which drops in stores today. The first single, "Bigger Than My Body," is a bit heavier than anything a listener has heard off of "Squares," as it is considerably less acoustic than anything ever heard before from Mayer.

The highlight of Mayer's set was his performance of the fittingly titled sequel to "Your Body is A Wonderland." "Come Back to Bed" is a bluesy shuffle that provoked some serious and poignant guitar playing out of Mayer. Unfortunately, the lady he speaks of in the song responds with, "you can't always get what you want."



Mayer spoke earnestly about Boston, because during his stint as a student at the Berkley College of Music, he told the audience that he "found the fire inside, and to come here and play means the world to me."



Judging by the passionate and zealous performance that Mayer gave the audience on that sticky August evening, he absolutely meant it.

Mayer's new album is rumored to boast a hip-hop track as well as a slightly more rough side of him. "Heavier Things" hits record stores today and is guaranteed to show listeners a rougher, perhaps "heavier" side of Mayer.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

John Mayer (above at Mullins) performed for a packed house at the Tweeter Center Aug. 22.

Natural selection.

How smart is this: All the textbooks you need for up to 60% off retail prices. And all you have to do is go to half.com and type in the book titles, or ISBN numbers. Then let nature take its course.

For a limited time, first-time buyers
Save an additional $5
on purchases of $50 or more.†
Simply use this code:
Amherst2003

half.com by ebay

Same textbooks. Smarter prices.

*Average retail price of a new college textbook $73 based on 2002 data from Follett Corp., Associated Press, 1/27/03. Average Half.com college textbook price $26 based on site statistics, January 2003. †First time buyers only. Limited time offer, excludes shipping and handling; offer subject to change or termination without prior notice. Copyright 2003 Half.com, Inc. All rights reserved. Half.com and the Half.com logo are trademarks of Half.com, Inc. eBay and the eBay logo are registered trademarks of eBay, Inc.

Football gaming scores a touchdown

Continued from page 5

whose strength is as weak as the Patriots' defense.

The annoying factors from the previous game have sadly leaked into this version as well. The constant babble of John Madden is very repetitive and may cause a brain hemorrhage as he spits out lines like, "To win the game, you need to make good plays and that scores touchdowns."

While the creators of the game, EA Sports, claim the catch-up, AI has been eliminated from the game, it still appears the AI suddenly knows every move you're about to make. The so-called "catch-up AI" is the idea that the computer player can suddenly cut a 28-point lead in four minutes. This nuisance has been removed to an extent, but the computer still seems to know where to shift its defense on every play and its throws are almost always on target. It is an obstacle that can be avoided by simply playing the game and getting used to performing dozens of plays.

One of the best modes of the game is still the fantasy draft in franchise mode. This gives the experienced players a test of how well they know the players and how well they can manage an inexperienced team. For those who are not familiar with the mode, the fantasy draft gives you a chance to pick and choose NFL players to put on your team. It's a great way to even out the playing field, as all the teams basically start from scratch and are fairly even.

Overall, this game is only worth getting if you can afford to update what you already have. If you're considering trading in "Madden 2003" for the new version, think again. The current exchange for the 2003 version is down to $1. So until Christmas, or until your birthday arrives, you might want to just settle for a few more rounds of 2003 before jumping to 2004. "Madden 2004" gets a 7.5 out of a 10 for effort.

COURTESY IGN.COM

"Madden Football 2004" packs plenty of gridiron action.

Monica storms onto shelves

By Nikolas Markantonatos
Collegian Staff

After experiencing multiplatinum success and a massive hit with Brandy on "The Boy Is Mine," Monica watched personal turmoil eclipse her promising career. She witnessed her first love commit suicide, saw an ex-boyfriend incarcerated on a murder charge and became the parental figure in the upbringing of her deceased boyfriend's child.

Monica — 'After the Storm' — ♩

Despite the endless drama, Monica emerges triumphant on her oft-delayed third album, "After the Storm." (An earlier, much different version of the record is available as the import "All Eyez on Me.")

Since her first hit, "Don't Take it Personal (Just One of Dem Days)," Monica has been known for her brimming sass and attitude. Her serene demeanor, positive vibe and that trademark attitude are intact during much of the album, in spite of past drama.

Serving as executive producer, Missy Elliott serves three party anthems that glow. The lead single, "So Gone," shows a sexier side of the singer and even a feisty rap. "Knock, Knock," and especially "Get It Off," with Missy's signature wacky shouts and heavy beats, are irresistible cuts.

"Ain't Gonna Cry No More," produced by Rodney Jerkins, displays her strength in the face of the intensity and chaos that surrounded her. Looking past the unimaginative title, "I Wrote This Song," about Monica's relationship with her deceased boyfriend, his lifestyle and his passing, is a soul-stirring classic.

But if only all the songs would match her undeterred attitude. The rest of the cuts are banal ballads and midtempo tunes that fail to take advantage of Monica's sultry and sumptuous vocals.

Arts & Living Meeting: NEW AND OLD WRITERS, PLEASE ATTEND Meet in The Collegian newsroom at 5 p.m. today. Look for Cameron.

Fabulous Gift!
CLINIQUE Bonus is here!
With your Clinique purchase of $19.50 get this 7-piece gift, Free.
Quantities are limited. Now thru Sunday, September 14th.

Fall Gift
7-piece Gift

Clarifying Lotion 2 • Moisture Surge Extra
High Impact Eye Shadow in Sugar Sugar • Colour Surge Lipstick in Wow Violet
Glosswear For Lips in Air Kiss • Clinique Happy Heart Perfume Spray
Cosmetic Bag

Cedar Chest
ARTFUL FURNISHINGS · QUALITY LINENS · IMAGINATIVE GIFTS
Thornes Marketplace · 150 Main St., Northampton, MA · 413-584-3860

SAVE $$$ ON TEXTBOOKS AT JEFFERY AMHERST!

We have these and many other UMASS courses at discounted prices:

ACCT-222	COMM-118	GEO-354	PLSOIL-102
ACCT-311	COMM-121	HRTA-230	PLSOIL-105
ACCT-312	COMM-226	HUMDEV-270	PLSOIL-200
ACCT-331	COMM-250	ITALIAN-230	POLSCI-360
ANI SCI-220	COMM-397-P	LING-201	PSYCH-100-1
ANI SCI-332	ECE-221	MATH-101	PSYCH-100-2
ANTH-100	ECE-313	MATH-102	PSYCH-100-3
ANTH-103	ECON-103-A	MATH-103	PSYCH-100-6
ARABIC-126	ECON-103-C	MATH-104	PSYCH-100-7
ARTHIS-100	ECON-104-A	MATH-127	PSYCH-100-8
ARTHIS-537	ECON-104-B	MATH-235	PSYCH-240-A
ASTRO-100-1	ECON-203	MATH-331	PSYCH-240-B
ASTRO-100-2	ECON-204-1	MNGT-361	PSYCH-240-C
ASTRO-100-3	ECON-204-4	MICBIO-106	PSYCH-305
BIO-103	ED-210	MICBIO-160	PSYCH-307
BIO-104	ED-276	MICBIO-310	PSYCH-308
BIOCHEM-285	ENG-112	MIE-201	PSYCH-315
BIOL-285	ENGLWP-112	MIE-210	RESECON-212
CEE-240	ENGLWP-113	MKTG-301	SOC-210
CEE-241	EXCSCI-130	MKTG-410	SOC-211
CHEM-102	EXCSCI-210	MNGT-314	SOC-241
CHEM-111	EXCSCI-301	MUSIC-100-2	SOM-680
CHEM-112	EXCSCI-304	MUSIC-100-3	SPAN-126
CHEM-261	EXCSCI-370	NUTR-130	STAT-140
CHINESE-155	FOMGT-250	NUTR-352	W&FCON-260
CLASSICS-224	FOMGT-320	PHIL-100-E	MNGT-361
CMPSCI-121	FRENCH-110	PHYS-100
CMPSCI-201	FRENCH-120	PHYS-125
CMPSCI-250	GEO-103	PHYS-151
COMDIS-211	GEO-131	PHYS-152

Remember to sell us your old textbooks and get instant cash!

Jeffery Amherst College Store -
Located between A.J. Hastings and La Veracruzana

Sat 8/30	8:30-6:00
Sun 8/31	12:00-5:00
Mon-Thurs 9/1-9/4	8:30-8:00
Fri & Sat 9/5-9/6	8:30-6:00
Sun 9/7	12:00-5:00
Mon 9/8	8:30-8:00
Mon-Sat 9/9-9/13	8:30-6:00

Minutemen split in Alabama

Continued from page 10

Billittier collected a loose ball and shot a laser beam past Anthony. When Gabe Barnard took a pass, crossed over the middle through traffic and beat Anthony to his right, the game was pretty much locked up. UMass played suffocating defense, keeping BSC from generating any considerable momentum on offense.

"We did very well defensively," Koch said. "They never put us under any real pressure."

Junior Ptah Myers and Bullen finished off the scoring in the second half for the Minutemen, who outshot BSC 15-13 and led 8-1 in corner kicks.

"I thought everybody played well," Koch said. "We did a good job closing down their midfield. We knew that their three midfielders were pretty much the engine that made them run and we did a very good job not letting them get into any type of rhythm. I felt like we were really able to prevent them from doing much."

The next day, the Minutemen gave No. 13 University of Alabama-Birmingham a gritty fight, but in the end some defensive mistakes and an inability to convert scoring opportunities cost UMass the game.

In the second half especially, the Minutemen had a constant presence in the UAB zone, creating scoring chances, and knocking on the door constantly. But they were never able to follow through. A number of shots went wide of the net and Blazer keeper Alberto Robles made some terrific saves. Defensively, the Maroon and White made some mistakes that led to goals and had trouble contending with UAB's overall quickness, which was spread out all over the field.

"Their team speed is unbelievable, said Koch. "They were very good at combining and at having people come in from behind the ball. They were a handful to defend against. I thought we had a good game plan. Unfortunately we made some mistakes and they are the kind of team who if you make a mistake against, they are going to kill you. And that's exactly what they did."

Overall, however, the simple fact that the Minutemen were able to hold their own against an elite team was an encouraging sign for Koch.

Roddick is toast of the town

Continued from page 10

Slam champions, that it's almost expected. It definitely is a monkey off my back," Roddick said. "I got sick of hearing it. I'm not going to lie. It was there before I deserved it. ... I've always had — fair or not fair — attention paid to me. A lot of it was undeserved."

Roddick is now a career-best No. 2 in the rankings and said yesterday his objective is to finish the year at No. 1.

"I'm not at the top yet," he said. "This is awesome for me. I'm so happy. But it doesn't make me any less hungry. I definitely want to get out there and keep working hard and keep trying to improve."

If anyone is set up to handle what's ahead, it's Roddick.

He's a natural entertainer who, a la Jimmy Connors, slapped high-fives with spectators after one spectacular point at last year's Open.

He's comfortable speaking his mind, something Sampras never quite mastered, but Agassi, Connors and John McEnroe all did.

And, most importantly, he has a strong support system in place, one that's carried him this far and will help him in the future.

His parents and brothers keep him grounded. His sister-in-law Ginger handles PR. And coach Brad Gilbert, who used to work with Agassi, has guided Roddick to a 37-2 record since June.

"Every person has done something in a totally different way," Roddick said yesterday during an interview with a small group of reporters. "My mom has been driving me to tennis practices since I was I don't know how old. The mind things Brad has done with me. My trainer — how many countless times we've stretched out together. It was a culmination of all those little things put into one."

Roddick turned 21 halfway through the U.S. Open, and the signs of his maturity are plenty.

He didn't take the bait when told second-round foe Ivan Ljubicic ripped his on-court demeanor and said other players don't like Roddick. Instead, Roddick said all the right things to the media and called the Croat to hash things out.

And he didn't panic when he lost the first two sets and faced a match point during his semifinal. "His abilities and his knowledge for playing big points now — it seems to me to be a lot different. He's not as overanxious at times. He's able to stay in there, to work the point a little bit more," Connors said.

"He's big, he's strong, he's powerful, he moves around the court well."

After losing in the first round of the French Open, Roddick decided to part with longtime coach Tarik Benhabiles. Roddick took a train from London, where he was getting ready for Wimbledon, to Paris to break the news.

"That was the toughest day," Roddick said, "as far as stepping up and having to be an adult."

Now that he's stepped up on court, too, anything seems possible.

Young Men's Club
136 East Street Hadley, MA
413-584-9726
Monday Night Football
• Pool Table
• Darts
• Horseshoes
• Keno
• Smoking
• Public Invited
• Women Welcome
Transportation Available
Free Munchies with this ad!

$$ NEED EXTRA CASH? $$
Sign up to participate in upcoming decision-making experiments by the Department of Resource Economics!
For more info & to sign up, please go to:
http://www.umass.edu/expecon
Only a little time required for significant earnings!

SALE! BUY DIRECT!
Futons
Frames
Covers
And more!
"Your online treasure of bedding bargains"
(860) 584-0259
www.piratescovebedding.com

BEACH CLUB TANNING STUDIOS
It's Our Grand Opening!
Student Specials • Open 7 Days • No Appointment Necessary
All New High-Pressure Tanning Beds and Booths
FREE Week of Tanning in September
Register to WIN a Spring Break Trip to Cancun! See store for details.
65 University Drive • ph 549-HOT1

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
Why not be a bartender
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
Call TODAY! (413)747-9888

Exit comes too early

Andrew Merrit

Less than a week ago, a columnist wrote the following of former Patriot Lawyer Milloy's dismissal: "This wasn't how it was supposed to end."

That same feeling permeates throughout the UMass athletic community as a result of former Athletic Director Ian McCaw's sudden departure to take over the Athletic Director position at embattled Baylor University.

Early yesterday morning, an Associated Press report circulated about the decision, and that was the way many people found out about it, including some who work in the department here.

By 2:30, a press conference had begun. Not a press conference in Amherst, mind you, but one in Waco, Texas. McCaw was there. Rather than sticking around one more day to say goodbye, to have his own press conference here, he flew to Baylor, and quickly became the face of the athletic program there. The transition was remarkable in its ruthlessness.

Just like that, a hole opened up in the UMass sports universe, hardly more than a year after the same hole was filled by McCaw, who came in looking like the champion of reform, the face of a new direction for UMass Athletics. No more unnecessary focus on a football team that, despite its recent National Championship, was still playing in the minor leagues, with no improvement in sight.

The day that McCaw arrived on the campus, he struck many as a fair individual, someone who could capably handle making UMass sports something that everyone could truly be proud of. And so he did.

The 40-year-old native of Burlington, Ontario, used clear judgment and an open mind to give UMass Athletics a fresh look on life. Rather than just heaping attention on the football team, he strove to give it a chance to move to the ranks of Division I-A — a move that alone would grant him lifetime status in UMass folklore.

For the small but swelling population of puck fanatics, he also provided the most excitement since the hockey team was reinstated in 1993. Under his watch, the team ran to its finest season since its rebirth 10 years ago, winning an improbable playoff series against Maine, and making its first-ever trip to the FleetCenter for the Hockey East Championship.

McCaw was a natural for a program whose hockey team was on the rise, having worked at Northeastern, another Hockey East school. His ideas and his general presence brought both professionalism and optimism to a program that saw the decline of not only the football team, but the formerly-strong basketball team as well.

In a photo that the Collegian ran in its Back to School issue, he is seen standing with UMass athletes, hockey coach Don Cahoon and Red Sox manager Grady Little, and really, he was the only part of the picture that most would argue seemed like a permanent fixture. From day one, his work brought improvement and excitement.

But on day 420, he was suddenly gone. The work that had begun under his tenure is unfinished and he leaves behind not an athletic department that is up and running with the best of them, but rather one that had all the potential to become top-notch, and was just a few months away from doing so.

A return to prominence for the men's basketball team, another championship run for football, even a chance at the Lamoriello trophy for the hockey team, all were within sight, within reach, within expectations. And now all of those things seem like they have more obstacles than open paths. Sure, the teams didn't get to where they are solely on McCaw's work, but it sure helped, and all of the good feelings that may have come from July's logo extravaganza at Fenway Park just feels shallow now.

The bottom line is that it's not fair for a lot of people for McCaw to up and leave. It is not fair to the staff that has helped him build UMass up to a respectable level, to the athletes for whom he helped create a promising future and for the fans of UMass sports, who deserved more of what McCaw brought to the table.

He will do just fine in Waco. The challenges that lay ahead for Baylor could be in no better hands than those of Ian McCaw. The program down there is in desperate need of a leader, of a moral guide who can make sense of the last few months and move forward in such a way that it never happens again.

McCaw should be treated as a gift from above by those at Baylor, but he has taken his gift from UMass. With one overnight trip to central Texas, he has sent a shock to everyone who follows sports here at the ol' State U., and while there are plenty of people still on his former staff that are capable of keeping up the good work, UMass is absolutely worse off without him.

Hopefully the Baylor Bears won't find themselves that way again anytime soon.

Andrew Merrit is a Collegian columnist. Email him at merritt_collegian@yahoo.com.

McCaw departs for Baylor

Continued from page 1

Baylor as allegations of mishandled drug tests and other wrongdoing surfaced.

McCaw, 40, leaves the UMass program in the middle of an investigation of the feasibility of bringing the football team to the I-A level. The department also recently completed an overhaul of its identity system, with new word marks and logos.

In a press conference at Baylor's football stadium in Waco, Texas yesterday, McCaw alluded to the university's Christian affiliation as part of his reasons for taking the job.

"The Christian, academic and athletic combination here is something that was very attractive to me," he said.

McCaw also mentioned Baylor's football program, an I-A team that hasn't had much success in the Big 12 Conference as of late.

"Football revenue can drive the athletic program. A successful I-A program will put resources into the athletic department."

While he didn't go in depth about his plan for the beleaguered men's basketball team, he did note the need for improvement.

"We need to change the perception of our men's basketball program."

He also talked about the need for improving the athletic program's compliance, which was a part of the problem unearthed by this summer's investigation.

Though McCaw did recognize the difficulty in the task ahead, he was confident in the quality of both the school and athletic program he will be joining.

"I had a chance to meet with the coaches and administration this morning," he said. "I'm convinced there's great commitment here at Baylor in terms of our administration, our regents, our alumni and supporters.

While the hiring came without any warning — some members of the athletic department staff found out by reading the Associated Press report online — Lombardi was quick to compliment McCaw, and recognize the gravity of his departure.

"When universities recruit superb people, they also know that others will soon recognize that quality," Lombardi said. "Ian McCaw goes to his new position with the full support and appreciation of all of us who know how much he has done for this campus."

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
(32 years of service—and counting!)
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Fall Semester 2003 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Room 163C of the Campus Center for all meetings •Sept. 8 (Mon) •Sept. 9 (Tues) •Sept. 10 (Wed)
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Sep 11th @ Boltwood table CC Concourse.
No telephone inquiries: YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

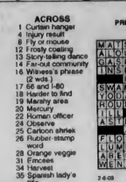
College Ruled • by J.M. Fowler

Lil's 40 Bellies • by M. Ryan

Fish Hooper • by Rebecca Kay

That's What She Said • by Debbie Gieseke

Mr. Gnu • by Travis Dandro

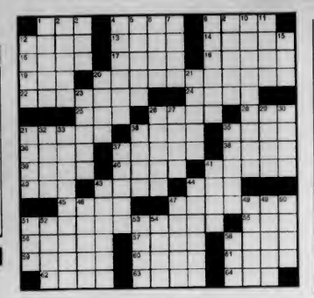


Quote for the Day

"The nice thing about being a celebrity is that if you bore people they think it's their fault."

- Henry Kissinger

ACROSS
1 Curtain hanger
4 Injury result
8 Fly or mouse
12 Frosty coating
13 Story-telling dance
14 Far-out community
16 Witness's phrase (2 wds.)
17 66 and 1-80
18 Harder to find
19 Marshy area
20 Mercury
22 Homer officer
24 Observe
25 Cartoon shriek
26 Rubber-stamp word
28 Orange veggie
31 Emcees
34 Harvest
35 Spanish lady's title
36 Important decades
37 Glimpses
38 Peeves
39 Feel sure of
40 Serpents
41 Land formations
42 Annex
43 Formic acid producers
44 Sticky fruit
45 Paddle cousins
47 Vodka or gin
51 Western (2 wds.)
55 Flamenco dancer's shout
56 Nautical position
57 Actor — Sandler
58 Glen
59 Scenery
60 Growth on rocks
61 Levin and Gershwin
62 Fr. holy woman
63 Bohemian
64 Workers with RNs



PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

2-6-03 © 2003 Universal Feature Syndicate, Inc.

DOWN
1 Stair part
2 Saudi neighbor
3 Condensation
4 Drew up
5 Charmer
6 Baldwin or Cubeness
7 Sunbathe
8 Sentence ender
9 Reese high
10 Transit users
11 Squirrel abode
12 Fissure
15 Weary cry
20 Opposite of an ans.
21 Prunes
23 Actress — Palmer
26 Running mates
27 Acorn producers
29 "Lonely Boy" singer
30 Bulk
31 With us now
32 Baseball's — Hershiser
33 Most pale
34 I ate a break
35 San — Padres
37 Bright flower
41 Lab animals
43 Scents
44 Poorly made
46 Dimerish
47 Stop to Popeye
48 Miser's cache
49 Clay pots
50 Drags
51 Cleveland NBAer
52 Genghis — ashes
53 Nursery word
54 Bloodhound's clue
58 Pep

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Nuggets
- Macaroni & Cheese
- Sesame Noodles with
- Pea Pods (vegan)

DINNER
- Honey Garlic Roast Pork
- Baked Stuffed Fish
- Red Thai Tofu Steak (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

TUESDAY
- High: 74
- Low: 45

WEDNESDAY
- High: 76
- Low: 51

THURSDAY
- High: 78
- Low: 52

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Barbara Lotto
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Gerald H. Ling
COPY EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Nikolas P. Markantonatos / David Pessah

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You will end a phone conversation with your roommate today with an "I love you."

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Your mom will stop paying your tution after seeing your grades this semester.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You are about to get those great shoes you have wanted for so long.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Hey, hurry up with finding a job already! You're moving too slow.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
If you ever reach total enlightenment while drinking beer, it'll shoot out your nose.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You'll receive some last-minute information today, which may upset you.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You'll receive a surprise gift today from someone who has been checking you out.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Tell your partner your that fun idea you had, and it will come true.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You have to reduce the incidence of surprise today if you are to enjoy it.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You'll very likely hear about something today that is fast approaching.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You can afford to be a little different today – but make sure not to smell bad.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You have to slay a few dragons to get to the princess.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Activities

Montreal Weekends $99. Includes R/T Luxury Motor Coach from Springfield. 3 Days-2 Nights- 4 Star Hotel Downtown-Meals-Night Club passes. www.montrealexpress.net 1-781-979-9001 Special Group Rates

Auto for Sale

1988 Mazda $950 413-586-5728

Jeep Cherokee Sport-1995. Perfect student car, A/C, Great CD system, original owner, excellent condition, 90K, automatic. 413-296-0060 $3,600 or O.B.O.

Child Care

Seeking responsible babysitter for 2 year old. Afternoons and evening availability. Transportation negotiable. 413-256-2134

Computers

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

Employment

Mother's helper/TCA Cooking, driving & housekeeping. References & Drivers License required. Own transportation to S. Deerfield. 2 to 3 afternoons per week 8-10hrs $8/hr 665-3914

Experienced Linecook to work in high volume upbeat professional kitchen $13/hr to start plus great benefits. Apply in person after 10a.m. Eastside Grill 19 Strong Ave. Northampton.

Dishwasher Great Part-time Evening/Weekend position 9.25/hr to start Must be 18yrs old. Apply in person after 12p.m. East Side Grill 19 Strong Ave. Northampton.

Employment

Personal Assistant Wanted Days, Evenings & overnights avail. $10.36 hr. Call Martina 323-9248 Martina@student.umass.edu

Drivers and Kitchen help wanted Apply at D.P. Dough. Downtown Amherst

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals for part time positions. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are must. Call (413) 584-4746

Earthfoods is hiring Co-Managers for 100% Student Run Café. Salary starts at $6.75 hr. Applications available in Student Union Rm 406. Also across from Commonwealth Room

Employment

ARHS Varsity Girls Gymnastics Coach needed ASAP. Call Amber 413-262-2272

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

Experienced part-time linecooks and dishwashers. Apply in person during day before 5:00pm Amherst Brewing Co.

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

For Sale

Two desks for sale. Good cond. Call: 508-272-2810.

Lowest Long Distance Rates! Why let the "Big Three" rip you off? College students save here. www.Ldsavings.cjb.net

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

Furniture

Futon Complete set $80, scanner or CD Burner (brand new) $40 Antique 2-Tier mahogany scalloped end table $30; amherst-stuff@comcast.net or 427-7109 Walt/Franci

Instruction

Learn to SCUBA Dive Curry Hicks Pool Monday, Tuesday, or Wednesday 7pm to 10pm classes start Sept 8 Call Project Deep 800-282-0977

Instruction

Jazz Piano Lessons Explore your creativity Beginner to Advanced Learn a wide range of styles Reasonable Rates Contact Stephen Page at 413-297-7910

Miscellaneous

Want to buy/sell TEXTBOOKS & other stuff LOCALLY? ... NO shipping hassles, NO payment middlemen! All 4 FREE! Visit www.collegeshack.com today!

Room for Rent

House on Route 9. Convenient location less than 1/2 mile from campus. On Bus Route. 2 Bathrooms. Contact: elanbabchuck@hotmail.com or call 413-348-5192

Roommate Wanted

Female geek seeks roommate to share spacious 1 BR Puffton apt. Call Lisa at 549-4248 or email ladlerg@student.umass.edu

Travel

Montreal Weekends $99 includes RT luxury motor coach from Springfield 3 days 2 nights 4 Star Hotel Downtown Meals Night Club Passes www.montrealexpress.net 1-781-979-9001

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now... Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1-800-426-7710

Spring Break '04 with StudentCity.com and Maxim Magazine! Get hooked up with Free Trips, Cash, and VIP Status as a Campus Rep! Choose from 15 of the hottest destinations. Book early for FREE MEALS, FREE DRINKS and 150% Lowest Price Guarantee! To reserve online or view our Photo Gallery, visit www.studentcity.com or Call 1-888-SPRINGBREAK!

Travel

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED! 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

Spring Break 2004. 1-800-648-4849

Wanted

We are looking for women who are breast-feeding an infant less than 6 months of age to participate in a study investigating breast milk and environmental pollutants Gift certificates will be provided One feeding worth of milk is required in a one time visit Contact Dr. Kathleen Arcaro at 413-577-1823 or karcaro@nre.umass.edu

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Rocket's ovation is well-earned

Bases Loaded

Mike Marzelli

For 13 years he championed their cause. He poured his heart and soul out onto the baseball field in hopes of bringing them what they so desperately desired, and in return they supported him like they have few others in the past century.

He was their warrior, and during the time he pitched in the Hardball Hub of the east coast, a whole nation of fans would have stepped in front of the T at Kenmore Square rather than see him pitch anywhere else. He was theirs.

But Roger Clemens had defected. He had let an entire city and an entire region down, and they hated him for it. Their team leader, their most successful pitcher, their favorite player and their idol was gone — just like that, as if 13 years of blood, sweat and tears meant nothing at all to him.

So for the rest of his career, the Boston fans let him have it. They booed, cursed and chanted his name. They came to see him pitch because they came to see him fail, and they came to see him fail because it hurt to see him succeed. He wasn't theirs any more.

He was on to bigger and better things now. He won a World Series, three more Cy Youngs and his 300th game. He is going to the Hall of Fame, and he is going as a Yankee like so many other greats have before him. He is now officially a legend.

When he returned to his old stomping grounds on the corner of Yawkey Way and Brookline Ave one last time, the Fenway Faithful didn't owe him anything.

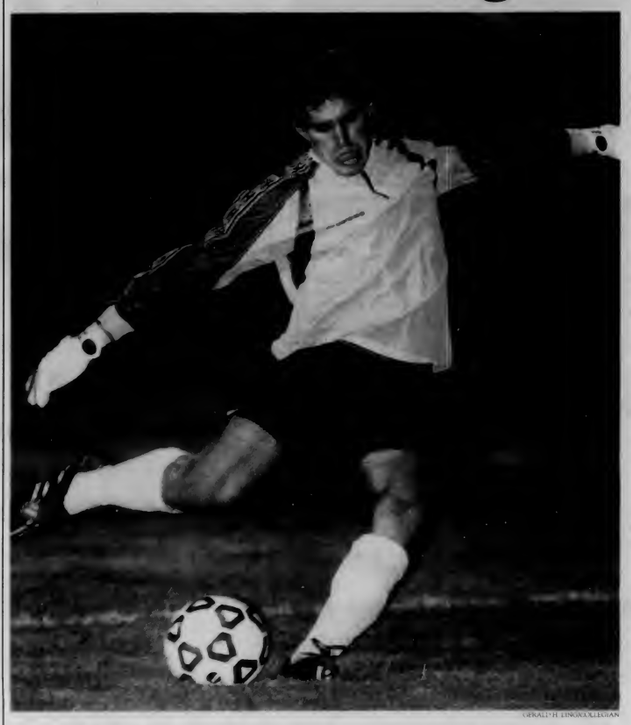
They didn't have to cheer him, they didn't have to support him, they didn't have to even acknowledge him. His rough exterior made Boston and its fans seem like a faint flicker of the past to the burly right-hander, and maybe so. He was the toast of the Big Apple now.

But then it happened. He stepped off the mound, and you heard it. First some clapping, and then some more. A few fans standing and applauding, and then some more. A whole stadium full of fans who had been cheering against him for so many years were now on their feet, applauding him. All of them.

The most passionate fans in baseball — the ones who haven't cheered for a winner since 1918, the ones who have adopted baseball and the Red Sox as their holy rights of passage, the ones who live and die with the fate of 25 men with the little red "B" on their hats — were cheering for the enemy. The Evil Empire. Him.

Roger himself couldn't believe what he was hearing. It took another former Red Sox team member, Don Zimmer, to send him back up to the dugout steps and back into this epic moment.

He tipped his cap first to left field, the Citgo sign and the Monster; to the bleachers and Ted Williams' red seat in section 42; to right field, Pesky's Pole and the cheap seats down the line, where fans pay to sit behind poles; all the way down to the dugout seats and the field box, the .406 Club that didn't even exist when he began his career, and to the home dugout he lumbered toward, through the din of a standing ovation so many times over 13 years.



Thirteen years, three division titles, three 20-win seasons, three Cy Youngs, countless charities and causes and the hearts of boys and girls who were born to idolize him, and parents and grandparents who watched him rise to greatness.

It was all coming back in the form of a standing ovation, 21 years in the making.

For one moment at Fenway Park in late August, the cosmos aligned correctly and the baseball gods spoke. The best fans in baseball had spoken and proved their worth, and the result was an epic moment for the ages for a traitor they will never cease to love.

Mike Marzelli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at Marzelli_collegian@ yahoo.com.

Southern swing for soccer

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Junior Colin Burns and the Massachusetts men's soccer team got their kicks in a 5-0 win over Birmingham Southern at the UAB Nike Classic this weekend. The host squad, Alabama-Birmingham, later shut the Minutemen out, 4-0

Minutemen grab Ala. split

By Sean Holmes
Collegian Correspondent

As the Massachusetts men's soccer team descended into the depths of Alabama for two games in the University of Alabama-Birmingham Nike Classic Tournament over the weekend, coach Sam Koch had reasonable expectations for what lie ahead. He figured that with the intense heat and humidity of the South, in addition to the travel weariness, a split of the two games would be good for his team. And split is exactly what the Minutemen did.

UMass	5
B'ham South.	0
UMass	0
UAB	4

Oral Bullen's two goals led an offensive explosion for UMass in a 5-0 rout of Birmingham Southern College on Friday, but a lightning-quick UAB squad stifled the Minutemen 4-0 on Saturday. The Minutemen emerged from the sticky heat of the deep South with a 1-2-0 record, eager to return to the comfortable confines of Rudd Field.

Having to contend with the heat was definitely a concern for Koch's squad.

"The heat was certainly an issue," he said. "Alabama heat and humidity is not something we are used to."

But in the Minutemen's battle against BSC on Friday, the only heat to be found was being produced on the field, as UMass was clicking on all cylinders both offensively and defensively. Harking back to the type of play that made them so successful a year ago, they put the pressure on early and never let up. Bullen scored the first goal just 7:19 into the game when he took Dan Colwell's well-placed throw-in, and snaked it under BSC keeper Joseph Anthony from six yards out. The early goal set the tone for the rest of the game.

"That first goal was very important for our mental focus," Koch said. "We had given up goals early in the games before. One of our team goals was to make sure we kept them off the board in the first 15 minutes and for us to try to grab one ourselves, which we did."

The Maroon and White would grab another one at 20:56 in the first half when Ernie

Continued on page 8

A better start for UMass

By Becky Horowitz
Collegian Correspondent

It took the Massachusetts field hockey team 15 games to earn its first win last season. This season, the Minutewomen started off with a 2-1 win in double overtime at home against Fairfield, and it's clear that the past is behind them.

UMass	3
St. Louis	1
UMass	0
Louisville	5

UMass split its weekend action in Louisville, Ky. with a 3-1 win over St. Louis and a 5-0 loss to the hosts.

On Sunday, the Minutewomen fell to Louisville despite excellent goalkeeping by UMass junior Christine Tocco, who tallied 10 saves. With the win, the Cardinals get back to .500 at 2-2, while the Maroon and White falls to 2-3.

Louisville wasted no time as Lisa Wasser scored just two minutes into the game off an assist by Kim Hughes. Jen Payne followed up with less than five minutes remaining in the first half, when she took a pass from Jessica Javelet and gave Louisville a 2-0 lead.

The Cardinals continued their run in the second half, adding three more goals. Desire' Miller and Olivia Netzler each notched unassisted tallies and Shelby Summers used a pass from Miller to give Louisville its fifth goal of the game.

The Minutewomen were held to just three shots, from juniors Caitlin Beresin and Adrianne Monaco. Louisville's Christy Hershey stopped all three attempts by the Minutewomen, while Tocco made 10 saves in the losing effort.

On Saturday, the Minutewomen overtook St. Louis 3-1 in non-conference play. Freshman Marije Tigchelaar posted one goal and one assist to lead the Minutewomen to their second win of the season.

Tigchelaar's goal came off an assist from senior co-captain Kristin Hopwood just six minutes into the game for a quick 1-0 lead. The score gave Tigchelaar the first points of her career.

St. Louis' Carin Boone tied the game at one just over 10 minutes into the second half. But the Minutewomen responded quickly, scoring twice in a five-minute stretch. Sophomore Patricia Borneo scored off a pass from Tigchelaar at 51:37, and junior Caitlin Beresin's first goal of the season put the Maroon and White up 3-1.

Junior goalkeeper Christine Tocco had five saves in the win, while St. Louis goaltender Julie Moeckel denied two UMass shots. The Minutewomen outshot St. Louis 8-7 and held the margin in penalty corners 10-9.

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Jamie Bawden

RICHARD DREW/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Andy Roddick, of the United States, celebrates his 6-7 (4), 3-6, 7-6 (7), 6-1, 6-3 win over David Nalbandian, of Argentina, at the US Open tennis tournament Saturday, Sept. 6, 2003 in New York.

Roddick is toast of NY

By Howard Fendrich
Associated Press

NEW YORK — His hair spiked and jeans ripped, Andy Roddick strode through Times Square with pop star girlfriend Mandy Moore on Monday.

Passers-by slapped Roddick on the shoulder (he smiled). Or asked him to stop and pose for a photo (he obliged). Or offered congratulations (MTV's Carson Daly rode by, lowered his car's tinted window and shouted: "Way to go, Andy!").

Morning interviews with "Today" and "Regis & Kelly" were behind him. Appearances on ESPN, CNN and David Letterman's "Late Show" awaited.

It was a whirlwind start to Roddick's new life as a Grand Slam champion, a day after he beat new No. 1 Juan Carlos Ferrero 6-3, 7-6 (2), 6-3 in the U.S. Open final.

"It's craziness. I would have never imagined what it was like to win a Slam, and I never imagined the aftermath of it, either," Roddick said.

"Reality's coming back tomorrow."

That might not quite be the case. After all, there already were plenty of expectations and eyes on him. Now that will be ratcheted up, which is how it has to be if tennis is going to increase its popularity in the United States.

Pete Sampras is gone, Andre Agassi is 33, and so far none of the young non-American stars (French Open champion Ferrero, Wimbledon champion Roger Federer, 2001 U.S. Open champion Lleyton Hewitt) has shown the combination of charm and charisma that helped Bjorn Borg or Boris Becker draw fans.

This U.S. Open final produced the event's lowest TV rating in five years. Is that because people don't know who Roddick is? There are more likely explanations: A week of rain made for a disjointed event, plus the previous four finals involved Sampras or Agassi or both.

By winning, Roddick quickly began to fulfill what's been predicted for him. His first major title came in his 12th Grand Slam tournament; Agassi, for example, needed 18.

"In America, we have such a long line and tradition of Grand

Continued on page 8

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 6

ALANA caucus eliminated

By Dan Lamothe
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association Senate Speaker Jared Nokes released a statement last night indicating that he will not recognize appointed seats for the 2003-2004 school year – a move that eliminates the ALANA caucus from the Senate completely.

Nokes said that he is acting on the will of the Senate, the recommendation of Attorney General Mark Morrison, and the direction of the SGA Coordinating Council in not recognizing the appointed seats. He cited the Wellman Doctrine, which gives the SGA its powers at the state level as a student government, as a reason for eliminating appointed seats from the Senate.

"The wording in the constitution is pretty clear that we're not supposed to have appointed seats," Nokes said.

He said that it took about 20 years for the SGA to get a constitution ratified at the state level, and that the first constitution the state recognized was the first one that did not include appointed seats. Because the SGA is not acting in accordance with their constitution on the issue, Nokes said, at any time the state could ignore the SGA on all issues.

> "When it came down to it, it wasn't a matter of public opinion. The important thing was whether the by-laws were in line with the constitution."
>
> -Speaker Jared Nokes

"We'd lose all of our authority, including control over our $1.7 million budget," Nokes said.

Morrison, the general legal counsel for the SGA and liaison between them and Student Legal Services, said that he advised Nokes and the coordinating council that appointed seats conflict with the SGA constitution. He noted that his opinion on the subject was not important, and that his job is to advise on the constitutionality of issues presented to him by the SGA.

His advice to the SGA was that according to Article V, Section 2 of the constitution, appointed seats are unconstitutional. That section of the constitution states "the Senate membership shall be composed of representatives apportioned by the Senate to electoral districts, as defined by the general by-laws of the SGA."

The constitution, however, conflicts with those same by-laws, which supports caucuses such as ALANA's. Both Nokes and Morrison say the constitution overrules the by-laws.

"The constitution is Mass. state law, whereas the by-laws are University law approved by the vice chancellor for student affairs," Morrison said. "It's University policy versus state policy."

Nokes said that while he will not recognize appointed seats, he is proposing to the SGA Coordinating Council a series of referendum questions that he would like to see on the ballot for student government elections that take place on Sept. 25. If the coordinating council accepts Nokes's motions, undergraduate students will decide if appointed seats, including ALANA's, should be put back in place in the Senate. That would require the pas-

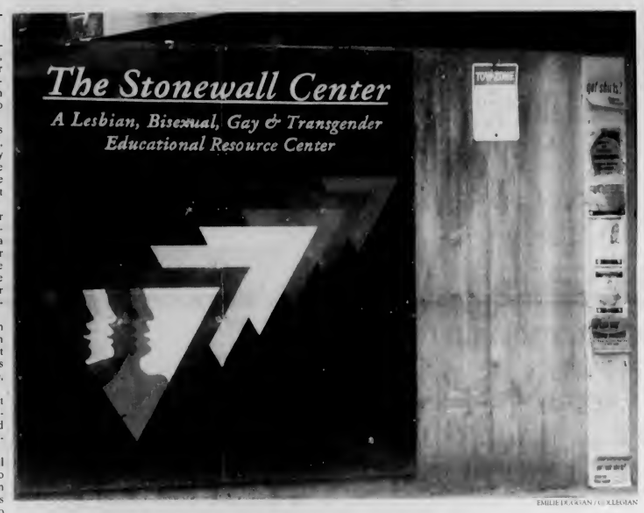
Continued on page 3

Stonewall Center hosts open house

By Sara-Megan Walsh
Collegian Correspondent

The Stonewall Center: A Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay and Transgender Educational Resource Center welcomes all students to come to its open house today that will be held from 4 to 5:30 p.m.

During the open house, students who are members of the Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual and Trangender community and their allies are invited to come down to the Stonewall Center for the opportunity to meet with their peers at the University of Massachusetts.



The event is an opportunity for freshmen to make valuable connections with each other, according to a press release from the center. Older students are encouraged to come down as well to catch up with one another at the start of the fall semester and meet those who are new on campus.

The Stonewall Center is located on campus, on Sunset Avenue, within Crampton Hall in the Southwest Residential Area. The Center has its own entrance, denoted by a large, rainbow triangle.

Besides the opportunity to meet peers, information will be made available about upcoming events planned by the Center and in the GLBT community here in Pioneer Valley.

Staff at the Stonewall Center will also be on hand at the open house to provide students with information about the many services and resources available through the center and to

Continued on page 2

EMILIE DUGGAN / COLLEGIAN

The Stonewall Center, located in Crampton Hall, will open its doors to students today in an open house. The open house is from 4 to 5:30 p.m.

EMS helps clean up UMass

By Ferron Salniker
Collegian Staff

This summer Fleet Services, a department of the Physical Plant at the University of Massachusetts, announced the latest actions it has taken to maintain organized efforts to make the campus more environmentally friendly.

Fleet Services, a department that uses over 500 vehicles, several maintenance garages and a fuel depot, has recently implemented a pilot program involving an Environmental Management System. The EMS is a business tool that uses a systematic approach to manage issues that both effect and benefit the environment.

Fleet Services' "Striving For Environmental Excellence" program is the second of its kind to be enacted at the University of Massachusetts. In March 2002, the campus began the process of implementing a pilot EMS for the chemistry, biochemistry, and molecular biology departments within the Lederle Graduate Research Center.

The decision to implement an EMS within Fleet Services was prompted in part by the results of an Environmental Protection Agency compliance inspection in 2000. The Agency turned up violations of the federal Clean Air Act resulting from the use of chemical degreasing solvents. The Physical Plant was also cited for incomplete records regarding fuel storage and solvent use. A fine of $262,000 was waived after the University agreed to take part in the pilot program.

Since 1998, Fleet Services has acquired 45 battery-powered vehicles, including compact cars, golf carts, pickup trucks and a van.

Fleet Services is now in the process of taking more measures. Among these is dispensing gasoline from a central tank rather than individual barrels in hopes of reducing spills as well as the installation of 23 solar-powered floodlights in the Mullins Center parking lot.

Another improvement scheduled to take place this year is the use of Biodegradable detergent and hot water, rather than chemical solvents

Continued on page 2

Church settles suits

By Denise Lavoie
Associated Press

BOSTON – The Boston Archdiocese agreed Tuesday to pay $85 million to more than 500 people who claim Roman Catholic priests sexually abused them, giving victims a long-awaited formal recognition of their pain and the church a chance to move forward from one of the worst scandals in its history.

The settlement agreement is the largest known payout by a U.S. diocese to settle molestation charges.

Finalized after months of negotiations, the deal marks a major step toward quieting the crisis that has torn at the fabric of America's fourth-largest archdiocese for nearly two years and spread throughout the country and beyond.

"No amount of money can restore the lost innocence, the shattered self-esteem or other effects of the abuse," said David Clohessy, the national director of the Survivors Network of those Abused by Priests. "But for many victims, some kind of official, public acknowledgment that 'We were harmed' can be a real step toward healing."

Under the terms of the agreement, victims would receive awards ranging from $80,000 to $300,000. The amount of awards given to victims will be decided by a mediator, based on the type of sexual abuse, the duration of the abuse, and the injury they suffered. Parents who filed lawsuits claiming loss of consortium with their children would receive a flat $20,000.

The $85 million deal came about a month after the archdiocese put a $55 million offer on the table. Many of the final details of the deal were hashed Sunday during a secret meeting attended by Archbishop Sean O'Malley – considered a steady but forceful voice in the negotiations.

O'Malley was in Washington on Tuesday attending a meeting of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops.

"It's a good day for the archdiocese," said his spokesman, the Rev. Christopher Coyne. "We haven't had too many over the last couple of years, but this is one."

Coyne said the church is still looking for ways to finance the settlement. Possible revenue sources include selling off surplus property and suing the archdiocese's insurance carriers.

"We have 37 days to come up with a plan on how to do this," he said. "We will get this done."

Roderick MacLeish Jr., a lawyer with the firm that represents nearly half of the alleged victims, said $85 million offer was accepted after considering the archdiocese's struggling financial condition and the additional stress a trial would put on victims.

"There comes a point where they (the archdiocese) just financially can't do anything anymore," MacLeish said. "We could continue in litigation with the archdiocese for years and years and years, but would there be positive results?"

A resolution had been elusive since the scandal exploded in January 2002 with the release of court documents in the case of the Rev. John Geoghan, who was moved from parish to parish despite evidence he had molested children.

Allegations against dozens of other priests soon came to light, and hundreds of lawsuits were filed against the archdiocese.

Thousands of pages of priest personnel files, made public because of the Boston lawsuits, held sordid and shocking allegations: that a priest pulled boys out of religious classes and raped them in a confessional; that another fathered two children and left the children's mother alone as she overdosed; that another seduced girls studying to become nuns by telling them he was "the second coming of Christ."

The crisis put every U.S. diocese under new scrutiny.

EDITORIAL/OPINION
PAGE 5
MORNING AFTER PILL
LEGALIZATION NEEDED TO MAKE IT MORE AVAILABLE

ARTS & LIVING
PAGE 6
BLOODY ROMANCE
INDIE THRILLER WARMS AND REMOVES THE HEART

SPORTS
PAGE 10
ON THE ROAD
MINUTEWOMEN TAKE ON UNH.

COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS
PAGE 9

Ashcroft speaks on Patriot Act in Boston

By Jennifer Peter
Associated Press

BOSTON – Attorney General John Ashcroft came to the old haunt of America's Revolutionary War heroes Tuesday to defend the USA Patriot Act against criticism that it violates fundamental Constitutional rights.

Surrounded by the likenesses of John Adams and Daniel Webster at Faneuil Hall, Ashcroft told a hand-picked gathering of law enforcement officials that the act, which provided the government with new police powers after the Sept. 11 attacks, honors the lives that were lost that day by preventing it from happening again.

"Our greatest memorial to those who have passed is to defend the lives and liberties of those yet to come," said Ashcroft, who is touring the country to defend the act.

Outside the hall, hundreds of protesters argued that Ashcroft's act defied the civil liberties that the early patriots sought to protect during debates at Faneuil Hall two centuries ago.

"Shame, shame, shame," they chanted as Ashcroft was whisked away through the barricades in a car with tinted windows.

"This is eroding our liberties," said Christine Downing, 58, of the Charlestown section of Boston. "It's an end run around the Bill of Rights."

The crowd, which gathered at 8 a.m. and chanted throughout Ashcroft's speech, carried signs saying: "Ashcroft's Patriot Act: The work of a traitor," "Be a real patriot – oppose the Patriot Act" and "Ashcroft

Continued on page 3

JUSTIN MALAKIE/ASSOCIATED PRESS

U.S. Attorney General John Ashcroft, center, joins in applause with Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney, left, and Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority chief Joseph Carter, right, yesterday in Boston.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COMICS EDITOR Robert Krzykowski
EDITORIAL EDITOR Erika Lovley
NIGHT EDITOR Courtney Charles
PHOTO EDITOR Gerald H. Ling
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Julie Beauchamp
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE Sandra Marquet
SPECIAL ISSUES Betsy Feldman
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Ben Ratner
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Mark Lugtig
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Liza Lynch
LAYOUT MANAGER Lindsay Clark
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST ARTS & LIVING Jessica Pelletier
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Cram
ASSISTANT NEWS Kelly Farrell
ASSISTANT NEWS Ferron Sabiiker
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marzelli

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN INDEPENDENT SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 413.545.3500 OR STOP BY 113 C.C.A. AND 5:30 P.M.

All Staff Meeting today in the News Room at 6 p.m.

Stonewall welcomes students

Continued from page 1

answer any questions about the GLBT community.

The Stonewall Center was founded at the University of Massachusetts in the fall of 1985. It originally began as an administrative office in the Student Affairs Division and was called The Program for Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Concerns until the spring semester of 1995.

The conceptualization of the current Stonewall Center was inspired by the findings of a research report called "The Consequences of Being Gay: A Report on the Quality of Life for Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Students at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst." The research was conducted as a response to a series of anti-homosexual acts that occurred in the spring of 1984.

When researching the quality of life for those of the GBLT community here in Amherst in 1984, the report made apparent the need for a program at the University as one of its key recommendations. Immediately, a plan was put into action, and shortly thereafter the Stonewall Center materialized. When the Center was formed, it was one of only three such programs of its kind in the United States.

Cleaning up UMass

Continued from page 1

in the tool-cleaning sink. EMS coordinator Craig Ruberti added that on top of all the measures taken, an important issue is that "the program insures Fleet to meet State and Federal regulatory requirements."

Ruberti also mentioned the Oil Life Extension Program, another venture emerging as a result of the EMS pilot. The Extension Program intends to incorporate pollution prevention in addition to other environmental concerns.

"Right now, most vehicles are on a cycle to have their oil changed every 3,000 miles," Ruberti said. "For Fleet Service vehicles, because they only drive around campus, that change comes about every two to three years."

With the Oil Life Extension Program, oil from Fleet Service vehicles will be sent to a lab, where an assessment will be made and a report will be submitted on how each vehicle and engine is performing. Scientists will then create a baseline to help in minimizing the frequency of changing oil, and therefore minimizing purchasing and depositing of the expensive resource.

In addition, Ruberti said that Fleet Service vehicles switched to using bio-diesel fuel this summer, which helps to diminish overall emissions. The EMS pilot program within the Lederle Graduate Research Center is also being piloted at the University of New England and Wentworth Institute of Technology. The program aims to accomplish several goals; better understanding of the root causes of noncompliance, increased employee awareness of environmental issues, lower costs through reduced energy use, and better employee morale.

One of the program's main achievements thus far is the new online chemical inventory. Over the summer, a team of faculty, staff and students worked to create an organized chemical inventory in an effort to eliminate waste.

"In the past we had chemicals that had been sitting around for 20 to 30 years," said Ruberti. "Researchers wouldn't know what they had." The new inventory will prevent researchers from encountering unknown chemicals, in turn eliminating the high costs that accompany the disposal of such materials. An added benefit of the inventory is that it allows for a system of exchange. If a chemical is no longer needed, it can be exchanged for another, saving the University money in the process.

"The pilot chemical inventory program will be more effective," said Donald Robinson, director of Environmental Health and Safety at the University. "A lot of the effort we are putting in also goes to extending what we learn there to the campus at large."

Suicide bomber strikes in Israel

KEVIN FRAYER/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Israeli religious volunteers clean up at the site of a suicide bombing explosion near the central Israeli town of Rishon Letzion yesterday. A suicide bomber blew himself up at a bus stop near an army base and a hospital in central Israel, killing himself and at least six other people and injuring dozens, police and rescue officials said.

By Jason Keyser
Associated Press

RISHON LETZION, Israel (AP) – Twin Palestinian suicide bombings – one at a bus stop crowded with soldiers near Tel Aviv, the second five hours later at a popular Jerusalem nightspot – killed at least 14 Israelis and wounded and maimed dozens as the region grappled with a new wave of savage bloodletting.

There were no claims of responsibility, but the Islamic militant group Hamas, which has carried out most of the roughly 100 suicide bombings against Israelis over the last three years, had been expected to avenge Israel's attempt on the life of its spiritual leader on Saturday.

Israel's militias relentlessly targeted Hamas militants since the group claimed a suicide bombing last month that killed 22 people on a Jerusalem bus. Earlier Tuesday, Israeli troops in Hebron killed two Hamas members – including the group's leader in the West Bank town – and a 12-year-old bystander, and blew up a seven-story apartment building where the militants were hiding out.

The day's violence underscored the collapse of U.S.-backed peace efforts and came amid political uncertainty after the resignation of Palestinian Prime Minister Mahmoud Abbas.

An increasing number of Israeli officials were calling for the expulsion of Yasser Arafat, and expectations were mounting that Israel will step up military strikes and possibly invade the Gaza Strip – which Israel has not yet reoccupied – to root out the Hamas leadership.

Security was extremely tight throughout the country, especially in Jerusalem, in anticipation of a Hamas attack.

The first bombing came about 6 p.m., as soldiers were waiting for rides home outside the Tsrifin army base near the Tel Aviv suburb of Rishon Letzion.

Cpl. Eyal Schneider, 20, was walking toward the bus stop when he heard the explosion and saw a fireball. "People were running from the bus stop shouting 'bomb! bomb!'" he said.

Ambulances from nearby Assaf Harofeh hospital quickly lined up at the scene, rescue workers rushing to aid screaming victims.

"I saw the bodies, the body parts strewn around, heard the screams, and tried to help," said one witness, who gave his name only as Roy.

Police and hospital officials said eight were killed in addition to the bomber. Fifteen people were being treated at the hospital, all but one of them soldiers, spokeswoman Nurit Nehemia said. Others were treated for minor injuries and released. Hours later, the aluminum walls of the bus shelter remained splattered with blood.

Leaders of Hamas praised the attacks but stopped short of claiming responsibility. "This operation, whoever is behind it, is a natural reaction for the bloody aggression against our people," said Hamas spokesman Abdel Aziz Rantisi, who survived an Israeli attempt on his life in June.

Israeli government spokesman Avi Pazner said "the responsibility is shared between the organization that carried out the atrocity and the Palestinian Authority that did nothing to prevent it, and Israel will react accordingly."

More than five hours later, about 11:20 p.m., another suicide bomber entered the Hillel Cafe, a popular bistro in the posh German colony neighborhood of Jerusalem.

Police said the bomber managed to get into the cafe even though two security guards were posted at the entrance – one inside the door and one outside. Jerusalem police commander Mickey Levy told Israel Radio that one of the guards saw the bomber and tried to stop him, and that he then set off the bomb.

At least six other people were killed and more than 30 were wounded, rescue workers said.

"I have a store next to the cafe. I arrived just a few moments after the blast. I saw things that just can't be described, there are no words," said a witness who identified himself only as Shavi.

The blast set off the siren alarms of dozens of parked cars nearby. Police were breaking windows of cars to check if they contain bombs as rescue workers led the wounded away on stretchers. A dazed, wounded man sat on the street, holding a bloody T-shirt to his head.

In one Gaza neighborhood, Palestinians fired assault rifles in the air and scores took to the streets in celebration after the attack on the cafe. In the Bureij refugee camp in the central Gaza Strip, some Hamas supporters celebrated by distributing candies to the families of those killed in previous violence.

The attacks came as Prime Minister Ariel Sharon was away on a visit to India aimed at cementing the two countries' strategically important relations. Militants have frequently carried out terror attacks during Sharon's visits abroad – occasionally causing him to cut trips short.

White House spokesman Scott McClellan, speaking outside a fund raiser for President Bush in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., called the bombings "vicious attacks" and condemned them in the "strongest possible terms."

McClellan said Bush remained committed to the "road map" peace plan, but he said the bombings "underscore the need to fight terrorism and the need to dismantle terrorist organizations and groups like Hamas."

State Department spokesman Richard Boucher emphasized "the urgency with which the Palestinian Authority needs to take immediate and effective steps to dismantle and disarm the terrorist capabilities."

SAVE $$$ ON TEXTBOOKS AT JEFFERY AMHERST!

We have these and many other UMASS courses at discounted prices:

ACCT-222	COMM-116	GEO-354	PLSOIL-102
ACCT-311	COMM-121	HRTA-230	PLSOIL-105
ACCT-312	COMM-226	HUMDEV-270	PLSOIL-200
ACCT-331	COMM-250	ITALIAN-230	POLSCI-360
ANI SCI-220	COMM-397-P	LING-201	PSYCH-100-1
ANI SCI-332	ECE-221	MATH-101	PSYCH-100-2
ANTH-100	ECE-313	MATH-102	PSYCH-100-3
ANTH-103	ECON-103-A	MATH-103	PSYCH-100-6
ARABIC-126	ECON-103-C	MATH-104	PSYCH-100-7
ARTHIS-100	ECON-104-A	MATH-127	PSYCH-100-8
ARTHIS-537	ECON-104-B	MATH-235	PSYCH-240-A
ASTRO-100-1	ECON-203	MATH-331	PSYCH-240-B
ASTRO-100-2	ECON-204-1	MNGT-361	PSYCH-240-C
ASTRO-100-3	ECON-204-4	MICBIO-106	PSYCH-305
BIO-103	ED-210	MICBIO-160	PSYCH-307
BIO-104	ED-276	MICBIO-310	PSYCH-308
BIOCHEM-285	ENG-112	MIE-201	PSYCH-315
BIOL-285	ENGLWP-112	MIE-210	RESECON-212
CEE-240	ENGLWP-113	MKTG-301	SOC-210
CEE-241	EXCSCI-130	MKTG-410	SOC-211
CHEM-102	EXCSCI-210	MNGT-314	SOC-241
CHEM-111	EXCSCI-301	MUSIC-100-2	SOM-680
CHEM-112	EXCSCI-304	MUSIC-100-3	SPAN-126
CHEM-261	EXCSCI-370	NUTR-130	STAT-140
CHINESE-155	FOMGT-250	NUTR-352	W&FCON-260
CLASSICS-224	FOMGT-320	PHIL-100-E	MNGT-361
CMPSCI-121	FRENCH-110	PHYS-100
CMPSCI-201	FRENCH-120	PHYS-125
CMPSCI-250	GEO-103	PHYS-151
COMDIS-211	GEO-131	PHYS-152

Remember to sell us your old textbooks and get instant cash!

Jeffery Amherst College Store -
Located between A.J. Hastings and La Veracruzana

Sat 8/30	8:30-6:00
Sun 8/31	12:00-5:00
Mon-Thurs 9/1-9/4	8:30-8:00
Fri & Sat 9/5-9/6	8:30-6:00
Sun 9/7	12:00-5:00
Mon 9/8	8:30-8:00
Mon-Sat 9/9-9/13	8:30-6:00

THE
BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
(32 years of service—and counting!)

A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)

REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!

••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN

Fall Semester 2003 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!

6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)

Room 163C of the Campus Center for all meetings •Sept. 8 (Mon) •Sept. 9 (Tues) •Sept. 10 (Wed)

•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Sep 11th @ Boltwood table CC Concourse.
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!

Volunteer, while earning credit!

Ashcroft defends Patriot Act

Continued from page 1

more evil than Steinbrenner," a reference to the owner of the New York Yankees.

Speaking two days before the second anniversary of the attacks, Ashcroft said that the Patriot Act had closed "gaping holes" in the nation's defenses against terrorism, allowing law enforcement to combat terrorism with many of the same tools that have been used for years against drug-dealers and organized crime.

Ashcroft said the act was "rooted in the Constitution and the liberties protected in that great document."

Opponents argue that it infringes upon basic liberties and gives the state the right to invade citizens' privacy, at bookstores, libraries and banks.

Boston City Police estimate there were 1,200 protesters on hand outside Faneuil Hall during Ashcroft's speech.

The hall, which was completed in 1763, was used so often as a meeting place during the revolutionary period that it became known as the "Cradle of American Liberty." While now part of a popular marketplace, it still is the site of meetings and gatherings.

Ashcroft gave his speech in front of a mammoth painting by George P. A. Healy, measuring almost 27 feet across, that depicts a famous 19th century exchange between Daniel Webster and South Carolina Senator Robert Hayne about the federal Constitution's jurisdiction over the states.

Inscribed on the frame are Webster's famous words: "Liberty and Union, Now and Forever."

Noting that he had spoken before on the floor of the U.S. Senate, the House of Representatives, and the National Cathedral, Ashcroft said "it is a high honor to talk about freedom in a setting like this."

Ashcroft listed a series of terrorist arrests that would not have been possible without the enhanced powers of the Patriot Act. He singled out the arrest of Hemant Lakhani last month on charges that he allegedly tried to sell shoulder-fired missiles to an undercover agent posing as a Muslim terrorist who wanted to shoot down an airliner.

EMILIE DUGGAN/ COLLEGIAN

Field Trip!

A class in Environmental Design takes a walking tour of trees on campus.

Speaker Nokes not to recognize ALANA caucus in Senate

Continued from page 1

sage of a constitutional amendment.

Nokes said he will also propose a motion to create a committee whose purpose will be the creation of an action plan for increasing diversity within the SGA without a caucus at the first Senate meeting of the year, which is slated for Oct. 1.

While Nokes expressed regret in his statement that he could not make the decision appear "clearer or less rushed," he said he believes the oath he took when he became speaker requires him to make this decision.

He also understands that it could look like a slight against the ALANA community on campus, and that popular public opinion is not likely to be with the decision. He admitted that an idea for holding a public forum this week was nixed over fears that overwhelming opinion would be against a decision that he says needs to be made on a technical basis, regardless of how the University feels.

"It was a possibility," he said. "When it came down to it, it wasn't a matter of public opinion. The important thing was whether the by-laws were in line with the constitution."

Several calls, both to the Office of ALANA Affairs and to the home of Gladys Franco, its chair, were not returned last night.

SGA President David Carr admitted that the elimination of appointed seats as it has played out might not be the best way of doing things. He said the process needs to be taken one step a time from here on out to improve the SGA's services as a whole for students. "My concern is not doing what's best for students of color, but for all students," Carr said.

Carr also said the Senate currently does have a diversity problem, estimating that 90 percent of the Senate is white men.

"It's been a problem for four years," he said. "I think we've trailed away from [it]. Our outreach capabilities have kind of dwindled."

This is not the first time that the removal of the ALANA Caucus has been proposed or even passed in the SGA Senate. According to Collegian archives, on April 26, 2000, the Senate voted 40-6 in favor of eliminating all appointed seats from the Senate, including the ALANA Caucus. The main concern raised then over appointed seats was also their constitutionality.

Another motion passed that night tied to the caucus decision in a compromise created the secretary of diversity cabinet position, currently filled by Russell Plato, and a diversity committee. Their duties include investigating diversity within the Senate body.

The elimination of the appointed seats then went to an SGA judiciary hearing in late spring of 2000, where a committee led by Chief Justice Gabriel Tavarez overruled the Senate's decision to eliminate appointed seats, calling them constitutional. Collegian archives say the decision was then turned over to a student vote in late March 2001, with students deciding with a 1678-797 vote to keep ALANA Caucus seats in existence.

Liberian peace appears close

By Edward Harris
Associated Press

CAREYSBURG, Liberia – West African peacekeepers took a crucial step toward securing Liberia's peace Tuesday, making their first major move into the volatile countryside and brokering a cease-fire to end the latest battle between rebels and government troops.

Fighting erupted early Tuesday when rebels attacked and overran Kakata, 40 miles northeast of Monrovia, said Col. Theophilus Tawiah of Ghana, the peace force's chief of staff.

About 650 soldiers from Guinea-Bissau arrived just outside Kakata as the two sides traded fire. The contingent's Nigerian operations chief and a senior commander from Guinea-Bissau then met with leaders in the clash, negotiating an end to the battle.

"Our chief of operations intervened. The fighting has ceased and the people are deployed," Tawiah told The Associated Press, referring to peacekeepers.

After the fighting eased, the peacekeepers moved into the town in armored cars and trucks. Peacekeepers rounded up the rebels, who had briefly taken control of Kakata, loaded them onto trucks and transported them to their base at Tubmanburg – passing over miles of government-held roads without any reported incident.

At least three rebel soldiers were wounded in the skirmish, along with two civilians including a woman in her 30s. The woman, whose house had been hit by a mortar round, was wounded in one foot.

Two trucks loaded with peacekeepers – an advance team preparing for the arrival of the larger force – had slept in Kakata overnight. The rest of the force arrived later Tuesday. None of the peacekeepers fired weapons during the fighting, Tawiah said.

Unrest and large-scale refugee flows have plagued Liberia's countryside despite an Aug. 18 peace deal between the government and rebels.

The deployment to Kakata, delayed for several days, marked the peace force's first major push outside the capital since they arrived more than a month ago.

"We don't see any sign of peace. People signed the peace document, but they're not abiding by it," said Johnson Williams, a 41-year-old carpenter listening for news on the radio about 10 miles south of Kakata.

At least 200 civilians fled Kakata on Tuesday, said Coralie Lechelle, of the French aid group Medecins sans Frontieres.

Liberian Defense Minister Daniel Chea insisted the peace force "must be firm against any cease-fire violations."

Speaking at Careysburg, a crossroads 20 miles south of the fighting, Chea said "the attack today is a test-case for their resolve."

Both sides in Liberia have been accused of staging attacks or spreading rumors of fighting to scare residents from towns so fighters could loot and steal food without interference.

West African soldiers landed in Monrovia in early August, bringing calm to the capital after 2 1/2 months of fighting that killed over 1,000 civilians.

Until now, peacekeepers have largely kept to bases in and around Monrovia, sending only small teams on brief missions to the countryside.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Richard Boucher said he did not think U.S. Marines would return to Monrovia despite renewed fighting between government forces and rebels.

"I don't think that's really an issue at this point," he said. "The West African (peacekeeping) troops have been restoring security in Monrovia. Nongovernmental organizations and U.N. agencies are operating there again."

Airlines may be sued for negligence over 9-11

By Larry Neumeister
Associated Press

NEW YORK – Opening the door to scores of Sept. 11 lawsuits against the aviation industry, a judge concluded Tuesday that the hijacking and crashing of a jetliner was a "foreseeable risk."

U.S. District Judge Alvin Hellerstein said negligent security screening might have contributed to the deaths of 3,000 people in the attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon and the crash of a hijacked plane in Pennsylvania.

"The aviation defendants controlled who came onto the planes and what was carried aboard. They had the obligation to take reasonable care in screening," he wrote.

The decision involved the cases of about 70 people injured or killed in the attacks.

The defendants – American and United Airlines, the Boeing Co. and the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey – had sought dismissal of the lawsuits, saying they had no duty to anticipate and guard against deliberate, suicidal aircraft crashes and that any alleged negligence on their part did not cause deaths and injuries.

In his ruling, Hellerstein said that while it may be true that terrorists had never deliberately flown airplanes into buildings, "airlines reasonably could foresee that crashes causing death and destruction on the ground were a hazard that would arise should hijackers take control of a plane."

"The intrusion by terrorists into the cockpit, coupled with the volatility of a hijacking situation, creates a foreseeable risk that hijacked airplanes might crash, jeopardizing innocent lives on the ground as well as in the airplane," he added.

As for the Port Authority, which owns the World Trade Center property, the judge said it "has not shown that it will prove its defense of governmental immunity." He said the plaintiffs have a right to argue the Port Authority did not provide a "safe environment."

The Port Authority also operates Newark International Airport in New Jersey, the departure point for United Flight 93, the San Francisco-bound jetliner that crashed in Shanksville, Pa., on Sept. 11, 2001.

As a result of the ruling, court officials were preparing for a possible rush of lawsuits as early as this week, as some people choose litigation over the federal victims compensation fund. To receive a payout from the fund, families must agree not to sue airlines or other entities.

American Airlines spokesman Todd Burke said the airline would appeal. "We continue to believe that we are not liable for the events that occurred that day," he said.

Port Authority spokesman Steve Coleman said the agency strongly believes "the responsibility rests with the murderers who led the attacks."

Boeing spokesman Ken Mercer said the jet manufacturer would also appeal. "Terrorism, not negligence, is the issue at hand here, and Boeing has always been committed to working with airlines, airports and other officials to make the global air transportation system as safe and secure as possible," he said.

A United representative did not immediately return calls.

"They are important findings, but they are preliminary," said Marc Moller, a lawyer for several hundred victims and their relatives. The judge "has not said that the airlines are liable. He said that if the plaintiffs can prove their case, the airlines could be liable. The litigation risks lie ahead and they are great."

Keith S. Franz, a Baltimore lawyer representing seven family members of those killed at the Pentagon and two who were severely injured, said the ruling would probably lead some people to decide to sue.

"From a historical perspective, the amounts individuals receive in airline crash litigation will make the amounts being received by the fund pale by comparison," he said.

Many of the victims and family members of those who died "have never made money an issue," he said. "They want to know what happened and why – and it's only through litigation that you get to ask those questions," Franz said.

Dec. 22 is the last day families may apply to the federal victims compensation fund, created by Congress to provide aid to the families of those killed or injured in the attacks, and to protect the aviation industry from crippling litigation.

About 2,275 compensation fund claims have been filed. Roughly 1,700 eligible families have yet to decide whether to enroll with the fund or file a lawsuit.

The average fund payout thus far has been about $1.5 million, with the highest award $6.8 million. The minimum payout is $250,000.

Futons
Frames
Covers
And more!

"Your online treasure of bedding bargains"

(860) 584-0259

www.piratescovebedding.com

CVS pharmacy
1 Hour Photo

Student Discount

$1.00 off 1 hour processing (prints only)

$2.00 off 1 hour digital processing (prints & cd)

Valid Student ID required.
Available at both Amherst locations only.
Original roll developing only.
Offer ends:
Sept. 30, 2003

Fabulous Gift!
CLINIQUE Bonus is here!
With your Clinique purchase of $19.50 get this 7-piece gift, Free
Quantities are limited. Now thru Sunday, September 14th

Fall Gift
7-piece Gift

Clarifying Lotion 2 • Moisture Surge Extra
High Impact Eye Shadow in Sugar, Sugar • Colour Surge Lipstick in Wow Violet
Glasswear For Lips in Air Kiss • Clinique Happy Heart Perfume Spray
Cosmetic Bag

Cedar Chest
ARTFUL FURNISHINGS · QUALITY LINENS · IMAGINATIVE GIFTS
Thornes Marketplace · 150 Main St., Northampton, MA · 413-584-3860

Your pills are where????

Try the Birth control you think about just 4 x a year.

Depo-Provera* is 99.7% effective.

Not only is it 99.7% effective, but you need just 1 shot every 11 to 13 weeks to protect you from pregnancy. So, unlike the Pill, Depo-Provera is not your every day birth control.

Depo-Provera does not protect you from HIV/AIDS or other sexually transmitted diseases.

You shouldn't use Depo-Provera if you could be pregnant or if you have had any unexplained periods. You should not use it if you have a history of breast cancer, blood clots, stroke, or liver disease. When using Depo-Provera, there may be a loss of some of the bone mineral stored in your bones. This could increase your risk of developing bone fractures. Some women using Depo-Provera have side effects. The most common are irregular periods or spotting. Many women stop having periods altogether after a few months. You may gain weight when using Depo-Provera. About two thirds of the women in clinical trials reported a weight gain of about 5 lb during the first year of use.

Talk to your health care provider to see if prescription Depo-Provera is right for you.

Birth control you think about just 4 times a year.

Depo-Provera® Contraceptive Injection
medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension

See what Depo-Provera is all about.
Call toll free 1-866-519-DEPO or visit www.depo-provera.com.

Birth control you think about just 4 x a year.

Please see important product information on the adjacent page.

DE148562B © 2003 Pfizer Inc. All rights reserved. Printed in USA/September 2003 10% TOTAL RECOVERED FIBER Pfizer

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

Wednesday, September 10, 2003 editorial@dailycollegian.com

The Crusade of Roy Moore

As Roy Moore is quickly becoming a household name across America, a battle between the law of the American government and the law of God has been waged in the Supreme Court of Alabama.

The commotion began with Justice Roy Moore and his 5,280 lb. statue of the Ten Commandments. Until recently, the controversial statue stood in the Alabama Supreme Courthouse. After gaining national attention, two very different sides to this situation have surfaced. In one corner are the super-religious, back-to-the-Bible members of the Roy Moore fan club. In the other, those who, Christian or not, understand the beliefs and boundaries that our country's legal system is based on: The separation of church and state.

Roy Moore is a born and bred Methodist Alabama native who, after serving in the Army, became an Alabama State Justice. Known as the "Ten Commandment" judge, Moore kept a hand carved plaque of the Ten Commandments hung behind him in his courtroom. His rulings often referred to the teachings of the Bible. These actions stirred only minor controversy within the Alabama Supreme Court system, until Moore took it a step too far. He hauled the statue of the Ten Commandments into the courthouse and set it on display for the world to see. Freedom of speech? Yes. Appropriate in a government building? No.

In America, there is a system we follow, that was put in place by our founding fathers. It's called the Separation Clause. It's found in the Bill of Rights. It explains clearly that church and state must always be kept separate. Why? The church does not want the state to butt into its business, nor does the church have any right to impose religious ideals on the rulings of the government.

This may seem a bit hypocritical to the Roy Moore fans in the house. Granted, we do live in a nation that begins every legislative meeting with prayer. Our greenbacks boast "In God we trust", and our national chant to the flag contains the phrase "under God."

According to Moore, the government stands simply to support the laws that God previously laid down. However, Sunday has not been declared a day of rest, adultery is not illegal, and no one gets locked away for dishonoring his mother or father.

America is a democracy because we have no stated religion. Anyone, at anytime, can practice whatever religion he wants. But the government must never show favor toward any single religion. Yes, the Ten Commandments can be displayed by Judge Moore; however, not in a courtroom, a place where people of all colors, creeds, and religions gather to receive justice. The government cannot expect people to accept a ruling based on the laws of a Christian God, or a Muslim one for that matter. Basically, when all is said and done, acknowledgment of God by the government is unconstitutional.

There are good reasons why church and state are separated. For instance, in Nigeria, where church and government continue to clash, religious and political leaders argue whether or not a woman who has committed adultery should be stoned to death. America is a democracy for a reason. Let's not a let a hunk of marble create a slippery-slope out of our morals.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian Editorial Board.

Emergency Contraception: Making it available

Emergency contraception, commonly known as the "morning after pill," is currently only available in Massachusetts through a physician's prescription.

Women and couples concerned about the consequences of last night's unprotected sex must make an appointment with their doctor in order to receive the prescription drug. The pill is most effective when taken within the first 24 hours after unprotected sex; however, it can be used, with less success, within five days of the incident. Many women have difficulty finding a doctor or obtaining an appointment within this time frame, especially on weekends, when many one-night stands, rapes and slip-ups occur. The longer it takes to get the prescription the more likely a pregnancy occurs, and the more likely an abortion will follow.

S.J. Port

In January, Senator Linda Melconian presented the Act to Provide Timely Access to Emergency Contraception (EC) to the Massachusetts legislature.

The bill will require hospital emergency rooms to make EC available to rape survivors. The MassNaral Foundation 2002 survey found that "half of all hospital emergency rooms in Massachusetts failed to make EC available to women seeking the pills," including to victims of rape.

Additionally, the bill will also allow pharmacists to dispense emergency contraception, through a collaborative agreement with a physician. Victims of rape and women concerned with pregnancy would be able to talk to their local pharmacist and purchase EC. (Only a pharmacist who has received training approved by the Commissioner of Public Health and has entered a collaborative agreement with a physician will be permitted to dispense EC.)

Both the Senate and House referred the bill immediately to the Committee on Health Care for research and discussion. The Committee on Health Care held a public hearing for the bill on June 11. At the hearing legislators on the Committee discussed the pros and supposed cons of the act with fellow legislators, members of the medical community and Catholics.

The pill is a high dosage of birth control that will not abort a pregnancy but will prevent a pregnancy from occurring following unprotected sex. If the woman taking the pill is already pregnant, no harm will be done to the fetus and the pregnancy will carry on without interference.

The pill works the same way that birth control does; chemicals released by the pill fool the body into believing the female is pregnant. When the body believes it is pregnant It does not ovulate, thus no egg is available to be fertilized by the sperm.

Today, according to the FDA, almost half of all pregnancies in the U.S. are unintended, and half of unintended pregnancies end in abortion.

Unlike birth control, the pill has no side effects or dangers. It is, according to the Massachusetts Medical Society, completely safe to use because it is only a one-time dosage of birth control and therefore does not carry with it the risks of long-term use.

The definition of pregnancy is important to the issue because of the opposition by some that this can be considered abortion. Some believe pregnancy occurs when sperm and egg collide and the egg is fertilized. However, this happens more often than a successful pregnancy. The body easily and quickly dispels fertilized eggs if it determines something is wrong, most often because the uterus lining does not accept and attach to the egg due to timing issues within the woman's cycle. Because of this, many in the medical field consider pregnancy to occur when the fertilized egg attaches to the lining of the uterus and nestles in for nine months of nutrients. According to doctors who endorsed the bill at the hearing, EC will prevent a fertilized egg from attaching to the line of the uterus. However, they do not consider this a form of abortion because their definition of pregnancy is a fertilized egg attached to the lining of the uterus, not simply a fertilized egg.

California and Alaska have already passed similar legislation, allowing citizens of these states reasonable access to EC.

Today, according to the FDA, almost half of all pregnancies in the U.S. are unintended, and half of unintended pregnancies end in abortion. EC has enormous potential to reduce unintended pregnancies and abortions. Passing the Act to Provide Timely Access to Emergency Contraception would mean less embarrassment and shame for women, less time spent waiting in emergency rooms or for doctor's visits, and fewer unwanted pregnancies.

The Committee, because we are half way through a two-year legislative session, has until December of 2004 to give its full report to the legislature. However, according to staff in the Committee on Health Care Office, movement will likely be made on the bill sometime in October of this year, turning the bill back to the legislature for a final decision. Legislators need to hear now, and through coming months, from citizens who support this bill. Call your representative and senator: let them know this is an important act to women across the state and across ages.

S.J. Port is a Collegian columnist.

My Friend Deya

Yousef Munnayyer

Deya Ali is probably one of the strongest people I will ever meet. He, a 16 year-old boy from Nablus in the West Bank, is now in the United States receiving treatment for injuries he received. In late January 2002, Deya and two of his friends were walking home from school when an approaching Israeli settler began taunting them and then opened fire. Deya was hit in the stomach and does not remember much of what happened after that. The bullet exploded inside of him and was so damaging that Deya was unable to walk. After treatment in the Middle East, which did not prove to be sufficient, Deya was in bad shape. He had lost a lot of weight, partly due to the damage to his digestive system and parts of the bullet still lodged in his pancreas. It was soon after this that the Palestine Children's Relief Fund helped bring him to the United States to receive further treatment.

I met Deya for the first time in March at an annual meeting of the New Jersey Chapter of the Arab American Anti-Discrimination Committee. During this meeting Deya wanted to address those gathered and after slowly using his walker to reach the stage he read a very eloquent and emotional letter of thanks in Arabic to all of those who helped bring him here to the United States and all of those who are continuing to support him. Shortly after the meeting was finished, Arabic music began to play, and, of course, where there are Arabs gathered and music playing, there is usually dancing. Since I am not one to miss an opportunity to dance, or dabke (traditional Arabic line dancing), I made sure to get to the dance floor.

During this merriment, I happened to see Deya standing off to the side of the dance floor supporting himself only by his walker. The look that was on his face inspired in me an anger unparalleled by anything that I had ever experienced. It was a look that longed to be on the dance floor but could only watch from a walker on the side. I did not return to the dance floor again that evening.

Shortly after that I went with my family to visit Deya in the children's hospital where he was receiving care. My mother asked Deya what he wanted for his birthday and he responded "Biddi Amshi" (Arabic for "I want to walk"). After reassuring Deya that hope and faith in God will carry him through, we discussed his injuries and he showed us graphic pictures of his surgery and the pieces of the bullet that exploded inside him. The most amazing part about Deya is his undying spirit. He finds a way to laugh and joke all the time. He is probably the wittiest person I know and quite a poet as well.

Deya's condition has continued to improve, thank God. He makes progress, gaining a little more strength from time to time. In June I saw Deya again, and this time he made his way to the dance floor, shaking his arms and shoulders while supporting himself on walking sticks. In fact his dance moves to "Funky Town" were quite exceptional. (You should have seen the linguistic disaster that ensued when I attempted to explain the pronunciation of "Funky town" to Deya, as exceptional as he is, boys will be boys.)

Why is it important that I share with you this story about Deya Ali? Because Deya's heart-wrenching story is one of thousands that could occupy pages and pages. In October 2002, Amnesty International reported that "since September 2000, approximately 7,000 Palestinian children were injured in attacks by the [Israel Defense Forces] or Israeli." Surely in almost a year that has passed since then, that toll has climbed.

An article from The Guardian (England) this summer also noted that "The numbers are staggering; one in five Palestinian dead is a child. The Palestinian Center for Human Rights (PCHR) says at least 408 Palestinian children have been killed since the beginning of the intifada in September 2000."

Deya was in his teens when he was shot, but that doesn't reflect a good portion of the children injured or killed. In fact, the statistics show that nearly a quarter of the children killed (not to mention the staggering number of young children injured) in the intifada are under the age of 12, some even under the age of 5. There is no excuse for this. The disproportionate use of force in this conflict is so blatant and horrific, yet not enough is done to curb it. Keep in mind that these children are not carrying rifles or weaponry. This is not an African rebel army of youth that you would expect in Liberia or elsewhere. These children are on their way to school, at the playground, or crouching in the corner of a room in their house praying to survive the most recent incursion. The numbers do not lie and they are absolutely inhuman. I hope people will see the indiscriminant, horrific nature of this occupation.

The statistics show that nearly a quarter of the children killed in the Intifada are under the age of 12, some even under the age of 5.

Deya embodies everything a Palestinian is: Hurt, away from his true home, yet always struggling, recovering and believing that there will be a better day. I hope one day Deya will be able to dance or do the dabke. Perhaps even one day, Deya and I, along with others will be able to dabke in Palestine, free from bullets and free from occupation.

Yousef Munnayyer is a Collegian columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

editorial@dailycollegian.com | 413-545-3699 | Letters to the Editor 113 Campus Center Way Amherst, MA 01003

I, Eating Disorder

It was like a dream: I open my eyes and see my father and sister crying as I am moving away from my front door as though I'm floating. I'm not moving myself; I'm being moved. This is not a dream, this is happening to me.

I am being wheeled away on a stretcher away from my house into an ambulance. An oxygen nosepiece is shoved into my nostrils and makes them itchy. I call out for my mother, who answers me from the passenger seat. I have fainted from malnutrition. My mother sobs as we speed to the hospital I was born in.

My mother told me later, "You were talking to us on the couch. You just slumped over. You turned blue, and I just kept thinking if I just keep holding your hand that I wouldn't lose you."

Thomas Naughton

I became anorexic at the age of 13. I was hospitalized twice, re-fed once, and I fainted three times. My heart basically stopped in the middle of the first night I spent in Children's Hospital, while my mother lay on the makeshift bed next to me. I am the picture of a male anorexic: I was heavy as a younger kid, which then progressed into a virulent eating disorder that I fight to this day.

My mother considers my family situation as the "textbook example of a family of a male anorexic;" distant father, overbearing mother and sexuality conflicts. I consider this to be crap, because my eating disorder had nothing to do with my family. I am not in any stage of denial; I have been anorexic for almost eight years now. It's not about getting attention from my parents; the psychos still won't leave me alone, which I am grateful for.

I became anorexic at the age of 13. I was hospitalized twice, re-fed once, and I fainted three times.

I grew up in Foxboro, Mass. I went to Foxboro High School, a place that I am convinced is built on a Native American burial ground because of the concentrated negativity that churns within its walls. I, like many other kids, was tormented to the point of insanity for one reason or another. I am not looking for pity. Everyone got harassed in high school on some level. I know I'm not special; I am just relaying the facts.

I was harassed constantly about my weight. Kids in Foxboro have crafted a fine skill of ruthlessness; they are amazing at making others feel awful. I was at the bottom of the totem pole, the very bottom; even the computer people called me fat.

I started to eat more healthily at the age of 12 and quickly lost weight. Although thinner and healthier, the torment from classmates continued. I would walk into a class and some kids would be mean to me for fun.

So, rather than fight for my right to be a human being, I concentrated on my weight, thinking, "they'll be sorry when I'm thinner than all of them. They'll be sorry when I'm dead." My weight quickly fell into the 120-pound range. I was 6 feet tall at the time.

I thought I was hot stuff in my size 26-waist jeans and my extra small shirt that bowed out like a weird sail. I loved it. I thought it was the best feeling in the world. Every day was a music video and I was the star. "I'll be the thinnest boy IN THE WORLD," I thought.

You readers are all thinking, "You're a psycho."

I'm in agreement. I ate two cantaloupes a day and lost more and more weight, even after being hospitalized. If you are hospitalized for an eating disorder, it's not fun or dramatic. It's just really boring. You sit in your bed all day and wait for breakfast, lunch and dinner. It's like a hotel. You sit there eating your four grains, four fruits and three proteins and think about what kind of magic tricks you are going to pull when you get out of the hospital.

I was waiting. I was waiting for my classmates to turn around one day and say, "We're so sorry, how could we be such inhuman beasts to you? We are truly sorry from the bottom of our hearts."

Now that is the mark of insanity. I actually thought that this event would occur. Then, when it didn't happen, I went completely insane. It took me many years to let go of high school; I am still in the process of letting go.

I have been anorexic for eight years, and many doctors have noted that when a disorder such as anorexia is so long entrenched, it is never shed from the person afflicted. I know that I will fight this for the rest of my life. Somewhere in my head is a small boy who is still waiting for an apology. There are some things one cannot let go of. Today, I am much healthier than I once was, but there are two voices inside of me. One is my rational self, the self that wants to live. The other voice is my anorexic self, a part of me that is sometimes very hard to ignore.

Why do I want to air this dirty laundry to twenty-five thousand students? Because college students are an "at risk" group for developing eating disorders. I don't have any enlightening mantras to tell, any statistics or medical facts to ramble off. I can only say this: It will take you over. It will take you away. It will become you.

Thomas Naughton is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 2003 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Foxy Fall

Networks fall lineup

By Frazier Moore
Associated Press

Fox's seven new prime-time television series:

"Arrested Development"

What: A young single father is sucked back into the family-run corporation (and back into the comic clutches of his family) when the family patriarch is busted for cooking the books.

Where: Fox, 9:30-10 p.m. Sunday

When: Nov. 2

Who: Jason Bateman ("The Hogan Family") stars as Michael Bluth, while the colorful supporting cast includes Jeffrey Tambor ("Larry Sanders Show") as his father; Portia De Rossi ("Ally McBeal") as his shrewish sister, Lindsay; and David Cross ("Mr. Show") as her husband, a doctor who has lost his license.

Why: Something deftly nutty and fun is needed to follow "Malcolm in the Middle."

How: The pilot episode suggests this could be the season's comedy bombshell. It's a complete surprise, a madcap half-hour staged with the finesse of ballet, a single-camera production with bent performances and razor-sharp writing. "The government is trying to make him out to be some kind of mastermind, which believe me he isn't," protests Michael's mom as Dad is hauled off to jail. "The man can barely work our shredder." Later, Michael scoffs at his twin sister's blink-blink effort at exhibiting emotion: "Are you trying to cry? You're going to pull a muscle!" Replies Lindsay, giving up: "I used to be able to do this." Meanwhile, Dad is in prison and loves the camaraderie. Hooray for "Arrested Development," a zany hybrid of "Malcolm" and Enron.

***

"Luis"

What: Sitcom about a bossy but goodhearted Puerto Rican family man who runs a doughnut shop (and tries to run everybody's life) in his multicultural Spanish Harlem neighborhood.

Where: Fox, 8:30-9 p.m. Friday

When: Sept. 26

Who: Luis Guzman ("Traffic," "Boogie Nights") stars.

Why: An outspoken man of the people in a sitcom, to follow a sitcom about an outspoken woman of the people ("Wanda at Large").

How: "Luis" comes complete with a mean, old-lady tenant, a homeboy con artist, a Dominican wife, failed business efforts like marketing salmon doughnuts to the local Jewish community ("a miscalculation," concedes Luis when reminded of it), and a shiftless would-be artist who's dating his daughter. "You can kiss my daughter in front of me," Luis tells him, "you just can't kiss my daughter in front of me without a job." In short, "Luis" is a by-the-numbers working-class sitcom. Except it's fresh, high-energy and funny.

***

"A Minute with Stan Hooper"

What: Ol' Macdonald is farming laughs after he's transplanted from the city to the sticks.

Where: Fox, 8:30-9 p.m.

Continued on page 7

COURTESY FOX.COM

The cast of The OC will heat things up this season on Fox.

Movie with no heart

New thriller romance a gut wrencher

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

"We are the people you don't see. We drive your cabs, clean your rooms and suck your c—s." – Chiwetel Ejiofor, "Dirty Pretty Things."

Stephen Frear's newest work, thriller "Dirty Pretty Things," is ostensibly about a conspiracy of organ harvesting, yet it is in fact the tale of much more. It's a drama about the ruthless underbelly of a big city that few ever see. That's the world of immigrants both illegal and barely legal, the shadows of people that we barely notice, but whose hard-luck lives may just be what keep the city running and the society moving smoothly.

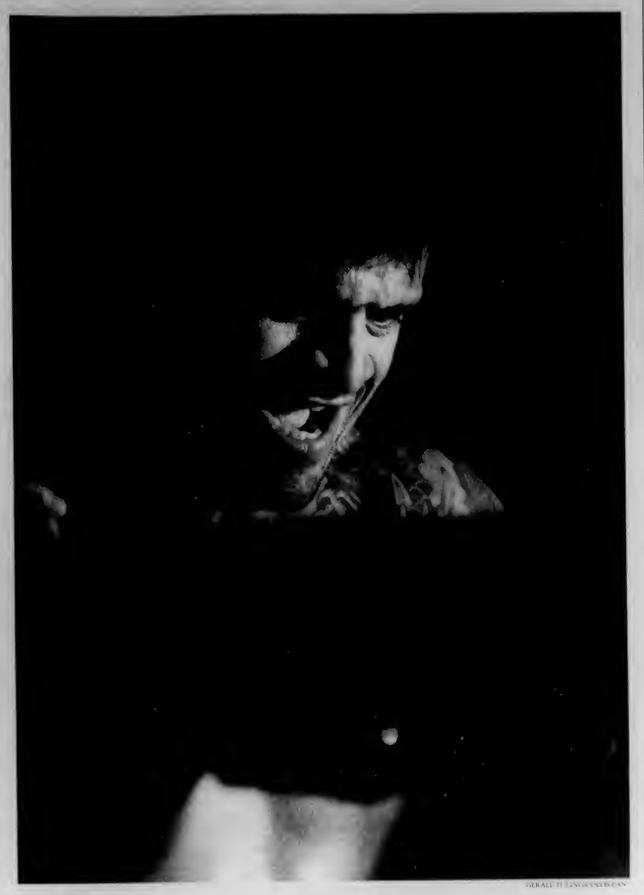
"Dirty Pretty Things" is set in the gritty, dead-end alleys of London, far from the view of Big Ben and Buckingham Palace. It's the tale of harsh, dead-end lives, and the desperate folks who are, and must be, willing to do anything to survive.

The action centers around the tiny Baltic Motel, and African night clerk Okwe (British stage actor Chiwetel Ejiofor) an illegal alien, a doctor in his former country who now barely makes a living working two jobs: His after hours gig at the Baltic and his day job driving taxis through London. He chews an herb to keep him awake, and has a crush on Senay ("Amelie" gamine Audrey Tautou, speaking English with a middle eastern accent) the Turkish maid whose couch he rents.

Senay is in London on a visa, but she's not allowed to work; Okwe isn't even supposed to be in the country. When he finds a human heart clogging the toilets in the room a mysterious, flirtatious hooker has just left, Okwe is left in the precarious position of either going to police, but risking jail and deportation, or letting a possible murder slip through the cracks.

"Dirty Pretty Things" is slow-simmering thriller, the kind of old-fashioned mystery that relies more on the interactions of the characters rather than big plot twists that do nothing more than contort the movie into a knot. Its main concern is not, in fact, thrills; it is the explorations of the lives of these characters, and the struggles they endure.

"Dirty Pretty Things" is at its best when it focuses on the relationship between Senay and Okwe; it's obvious that both of them like each other, yet Okwe's loyalty to his wife keeps him from making a move on the wide-eyed beauty. Okwe becomes protective of Senay, especially after she leaves the hotel to work at a sweatshop, where she is used by the shop's oily owner. Senay, in turn, grows steadily more attracted to the handsome and dignified Okwe.



'Dirty Pretty Things'
Directed by Stephen Frears
Starring Chiwetel Ejiofor Audrey Tautou Miramax
Rated R
97 mins.
Grade B+

The thriller element is a contrivance, but Frears makes it a compelling one. The twists – or what pass for twists – aren't all that surprising, but Frears and writer Stephen Knight (creator of "Who Wants To Be A Millionaire?") still make the mystery riveting to watch, balancing the darkness of the material with sharp moments of humor and sweetness. Though Tautou is capable as the tremulous and damaged Senay, "Dirty Pretty Things" is grounded by the central performance of Ejiofor. It is he who makes the movie entrancing to watch. His sturdy and regal performance constitutes what leading men are made of. He's graceful and decorous, and acts with a kind of intelligence, an emotional force rarely seen in Hollywood thrillers.

COURTESY IFC FILMS

Audrey Tautou provides the powerful acting required to carry the complicated plot in 'Dirty Pretty Things.'

GERALD HERNANDEZ/COLLEGIAN

Not so spicy

The Red Hot Chilli Peppers stunned a not-so-packed Mullins Center last night. The veteran rockers may finally be losing their heat. Front man Anthony Kiedis's late arrival baffled audience. Read about in tomorrow's collegian.

Autumn shows not a snooze

Changing leaves, changing shows

Continued from page 6

Wednesday

When: Oct. 29

Who: Norm Macdonald plays the title role, with Penelope Ann Miller ("Kindergarten Cop") as his wife and Fred Willard co-starring.

Why: Lots of people think Macdonald is funny. The only trick: Finding him a sitcom that's funny.

COURTESY BRASSHARP.COM

Luis Guzman will star in his own show, 'Luis', this fall on Fox.

How: For this followup to the short-lived "Norm," the former "Saturday Night Live" wisenheimer has done a very smart thing. He has recast himself from the weirdo surrounded by a straight world, into an ordinary, unassuming guy amidst oddballs. Look out! He's a latter-day version of Bob Newhart, who in his 1982-90 "Newhart," moved to Vermont to run a bed and breakfast. For "Minute," Macdonald is a TV essayist who moves with his wife from New York to Wisconsin to be closer to the regular folks he reports on. But just as on "Newhart," the locals can be loco, and here Macdonald is adept at Newhart-like reactions to the looniness around him, including that from the always-funny Willard, "Minute's" version of Tom Poston.

***

"The O.C."

What: A serialized drama where outsiders, including two very different teenage boys, cling to one another in the wealthy, stuck-up town of Newport Beach, Calif.

Where: Fox, 9-10 p.m. Thursday

When: Oct. 30 (returning after its summer preview)

Who: Playing Ryan, a lad from the wrong side of the tracks, Benjamin McKenzie has been forecast as the TV season's breakout star, and you know why when you hear him sell a line like, "Where I come from, having a dream doesn't make you smart. Knowing it won't come true – THAT does." Adam Brody is also solid as Seth, the privileged but geeky son in the family that takes Ryan in. Peter Gallagher ("Sex, Lies and Videotape") plays Seth's dad, a lawyer and idealistic boy-man who relates to Ryan's troubled past.

Why: It's been described as "Beverly Hills 90210" meets "Everwood," which is exactly the sort of youth-appeal new hit Fox could use.

How: A shrewdly conceived show with adult as well as youth appeal, "The O.C." (stands for Orange County) has its share of teen angst, romance and hardbodies, as well as grown-ups facing grown-up issues. But at heart it's about brotherly love, in the form of two young men who adopt each other. What's more appealing than that?

***

"The Ortegas"

What: A talk show wrapped in a sitcom wrapped in an unfunny enigma.

Where: Fox, 8:30-9 p.m. Sunday

When: Nov. 2

Who: Stars Al Madrigal ("2002 Montreal Comedy Festival") as Luis Ortega, a brash young talk-show host, with Cheech Marin featured.

Why: You tell us.

How: A Mexican-American fabrication of the real-life "Michael Essany Show" that recently aired on cable's E! Entertainment network, "The Ortegas" blends comedy, reality and improv as the make-believe family stages a real talk show from their make-believe living room, but with real-life guests. On the pilot these guests include Howie Mandel and Denise Richards, whose marriage to actor Charlie Sheen, son of "West Wing" star Martin, prompts the oft-confused Luis to ask, "What's it like being married to the President of the United States?" This show excels as the lamest version of every genre it rips off.

***

"Skin"

What: A modern-day Romeo and Juliet whose fathers, respectively, are a district attorney and a kingpin in California's porn film business.

Where: Fox, 9-10 p.m. Monday

When: Oct. 20

Who: Kevin Anderson ("Nothing Sacred") and Ron Silver ("The West Wing") star as the clashing dads. Producer: Jerry Bruckheimer ("CSI" and CBS' new "Cold Case," among other series).

Why: Promises a behind-the-scenes view of a taboo enterprise – and of the enforcers who want to shut it down.

How: Tender romance (both our young lovers are still virgins!) is set against a nonromantic world, with a few counterintuitive twists. For one: Porn king Silver is the loving husband and father; Anderson's character is a self-righteous jerk. So where should our sympathies lie? Of course, far more powerful than any rule of law is the rule of Nielsen, which, with rival shows including football and "Everybody Loves Raymond," could shut down this porn trade in short order. And before anyone gets too excited about such a thing being depicted on broadcast TV, just recall "Dallas," where the action was spurred by the oil business. How much of THAT kind of crude did you ever see?

***

"Tru Calling"

What: A young woman discovers she can stop tragedies before they begin.

Where: Fox, 8-9 p.m. Thursday

When: Oct. 30

Who: Eliza Dushku ("Buffy, the Vampire Slayer" and "Angel") stars.

Why: A drama about weekly near death experiences should be right at home scheduled against NBC's "Friends" and CBS' "Survivor."

How: After graduating from college, en route to medical school, Tru Davies accepts a job working the midnight shift at a city morgue. Then she discovers she can alter the course of events that brought these corpses to her. But Tru learns that people don't necessarily want your help when you start telling them they're going to die, which complicates her mission. Another complicating factor: Apparently to step up the suspense, the pilot always has her running through the streets frantically trying to reach her destination in time. Maybe "Tru Calling" should get a product tie-in with Nike or Vespa. And, whatever happens, it better happen quick. "Friends" will be breathing down Tru's neck.

SoCal band bites

By Brendan Lee
Collegian Staff

From the Gold Rush of 1849, to Depression-era farm culture, to the modern day disenfranchisement of the middle class – California has a history of disappointment. The streets of Los Angeles, in particular, are paved with broken dreams and empty promises. With the dawn of the 1980s, the California punk rock and hardcore scenes in L.A. and San Francisco served to document the decline of western civilization before eventually "selling themselves out" by the time the '90s rolled around, hitting the road on the Warped Tour in the 21st century. So, it's a little odd that in the year 2003, an L.A. band named after a borough in New York City has produced an album that straddles the raw brutality of Black Flag and the Circle Jerks and the poet-laureate politics of Bad Religion and X.

The Bronx
'The Bronx'
White Drugs/ Ferret Music

The Bronx play punk rock with all the subtlety of a pair of brass knuckles. On their first full-length LP, the band communicates a sense of sincere urgency that is rare in a punk scene, now dominated by image and posturing. In case the listening audience was unaware of what lies beneath the horror movie album cover artwork, singer Matt Caughthran wastes not a minute (17 seconds, actually) before unleashing a blood-curdling scream on the album's opening track, "Heart Attack American." After declaring that "there is no revolution/ and I'm done doing things I don't wanna do," the Bronx front man shows that anthems will not be in short supply.

COURTESY THEBRONX.COM

The Bronx's self entitled debut album is a fast-paced gory punk ride.

Keeping a keen eye on the historic qualities of punk rock (hard, fast and loud), The Bronx borrow musically from like-minded current California bands like Rocket from the Crypt and Hot Snakes, going as far as to thank Rocket/Snakes patriarch John Reis in the liner notes. Combining razor-sharp lyrics with blistering tempos, the band upholds the great tradition of Californian dissent with songs like "They Will Kill Us All (Without Mercy)." The Los Angeles inhabited by The Bronx is full of real-life vampires, dirty needles and no future. When Caughthran screams lines like "days, you always want to tell me lies/ you try to sell me to the stars at night," it's hard to imagine that sunlight ever breaks through the smog in the City of Angels.

Though "The Bronx" is a record that even the most jaded punk veteran will love, the album is not a Golden State-sized success story. Clocking in just shy of thirty minutes, the relentless ten-song manifesto never really lets up, maintaining a breakneck pace that may not be well- received by the public at large.

Strength of songwriting is also a question, as the album's strongest tracks ("Heart Attack American" and "White Tar") are recycled from their 2002 demo. Cut from the same demo, the album's closer, the re-recorded "Strobe Life," suffers needlessly overwrought repetition and length.

With their debut record, as well as their career, The Bronx seem to be making the right moves. Unfortunately, those moves can sometimes turn into simply going through the motions. The band spent its summer vacation touring with the twice-reunited Circle Jerks lineup and recently signed with the Virgin-based imprint Tarantula Records. Even if they turn out to be just another chapter in the California punk rock legacy, The Bronx can always rest easy in the knowledge that they got it right on their first try.

Toymakers causing friction

Slip 'N Slide producers sue over its use in movie

By Gary Gentile
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) – The makers of the Slip 'N Slide filed a lawsuit Monday over a scene in the hit movie "Dickie Roberts: Former Child Star" that shows actor David Spade skidding to a painful halt on the summertime water toy.

Wham-O is asking a judge to order the film out of theaters as long as it contains the Slip 'N Slide scene, or for a disclaimer to be added urging viewers not to try the maneuver made by Spade.

In the movie, Spade jumps belly first on the yellow plastic sheet without first inflating it with air and water. He then coats the slide with oil and crashes into a fence.

The scene has been used heavily in television and theater ads to promote the film, which was No. 1 at the weekend box office.

The lawsuit, filed against Paramount Pictures and Happy Madison Productions, charges the filmmakers violated its trademark by using the product without permission.

Wham-O also claims the scene violates the product's safety guidelines, which limit the use of Slip 'N Slide to children between the ages of 5 and 12 weighing less than 110 pounds and under 5 feet tall.

Guidelines also state the slide must first be inflated and wet and that users should also be wet before diving on the plastic. The company is concerned that the scene might prompt adults to imitate Spade's action, which could lead to injury and lawsuits.

"Paramount believes the claims are entirely without legal merit," said studio spokesman Rob Friedman.

Representatives of Happy Madison did not immediately return calls Monday seeking comment.

The product was taken off store shelves in the 1990s after a series of adult accidents. Wham-O became a privately owned company in 1997 after being put on the market by its former owner, Mattel.

When the product was reintroduced in 1997, the new owners added an inflatable bumper and other safety features, Wham-O said.

Monday's lawsuit mentions one legal action brought by a Wisconsin adult who became paralyzed after diving onto the slide while intoxicated. The plaintiff in that case was awarded $12.3 million in damages, according to Monday's lawsuit.

Wham-O, based in Emeryville, Calif., also makes the Frisbee, Hula Hoop and Super Ball.

COURTESY EMPIRE PICTURES (UK) LTD.

David Spade skids to a stop as Wham-O vs. Dickie Roberts lawsuit picks up speed. Toymakers feel that the movie misrepresents their product.

All staff meeting today at 6 p.m. in the Campus Center Basement.

Depo-Provera®
Contraceptive Injection
Birth control you think about just 4 x a year.
medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension

DEPO-PROVERA

This product is intended to prevent pregnancy. It does not protect against HIV infection (AIDS) and other sexually transmitted diseases.

What is DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

How effective is DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

Who should not use DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

What other things should I consider before using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

What if I want to become pregnant after using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

What are the risks of using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

What symptoms may signal problems while using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

What are the possible side effects of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

Should any precautions be followed during use of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

How often do I get my shot of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

Pharmacia &Upjohn

write for arts
write for arts
write for arts
write for arts
write for arts
write for arts

GERALD H. LINGA/COLLEGIAN

Under pressure
Backup quarterback Steve Howell slings a pass just as a Central Connecticut State defender gets within striking distance during the Minutemen's 51-7 win over the Blue Devils last Saturday. UMass travels to No. 5 (I-A) Kansas State this weekend

Colvin, Harrison react to Week 1

Continued from page 10

"It was disappointing because I felt for the talent we have in this locker room, the score really didn't indicate what we should have done."

Colvin said the game was no more disappointing because it was his debut with the Patriots.

"First game, last game, you always want to win," he said. "Regardless if it was the Super Bowl or the preseason, when you step on the field, you want to go out there and represent not only yourself but the team well."

Their next chance comes Sunday on the road against another team that didn't make it into the end zone in its opener. Philadelphia lost to Tampa Bay 17-0 Monday night.

The Patriots won't be facing an emotionally charged Milloy and hope any hangover from the shock of his departure is gone.

"You've just got to be a professional about it," Colvin said. "It's somebody else's opportunity to step in and make a name for themselves, somebody else's turn to step up and be a leader."

The Eagles were outclassed Monday with just 13 first downs and 245 yards. Donovan McNabb threw for 124 yards and an interception. The Bucs had three sacks.

But the Eagles did go to the last two NFC title games, losing both.

"Thinking about Buffalo for the next 16 weeks and saying 'we can't wait until we see them again at the end of the season,' it's not going to do us any good lining up in Philadelphia," Colvin said.

The Patriots end their regular season at home against Buffalo, which also improved its defense by adding linebackers Takeo Spikes and Jeff Posey and defensive tackle Sam Adams.

"Similar to the Patriots of 2003, they felt like they needed to improve on defense and they went out and got some guys that they felt could do that," Colvin said.

But they didn't give up a Pro Bowl player.

"The great ones, Bruce Smith, Rod Woodson and all those guys, Jerry Rice, had to go to different teams to finish their careers," Harrison said. "It happens to you if you play long enough. If you make enough money it's going to happen to you. So we understand that it's a business."

Milloy paid immediate dividends, playing most of the game despite just two days of practice.

"He's a four-time Pro Bowl guy," Harrison said. "Regardless if he puts on a skirt he's going to go out there and play well.

"But we have to forget about him and move on because, if not, it will continue to haunt us the whole season. We have to play with the guys that we have."

UM soccer on a roll

Continued from page 10

saves and holding off the relentless attack from the Ram offense.

The Wildcats (1-3) are mired in a three game losing streak. In its three previous losses, UNH has scored just one goal, which came against another Atlantic 10 team, the Richmond Spiders.

"[UNH hasn't] put things together yet," Rudy said, "which is scary. They have a lot of experienced returning players who haven't played as good as they should be playing."

UNH forward Jackie Wishoski is the Wildcats' biggest threat. She leads her team in points (four) and goals (two).

"She's a speed merchant," Rudy said. "We tried to recruit her to come to [UMass] but she decided on going there instead."

Injuries have plagued the Minutewomen this season. In their first two games, they were without last season's leading scorer, senior Erin Lilly (six goals and 18 points last season). Tonight will mark her first appearance this year, yet Rudy said she will not be back to her normal self.

"She's not a 90 minute player at all," said Rudy. "We're hoping to get her some playing time so she can come back to the way she was before."

The spark created by Lilly's return is diminished, though, by a knee injury to junior Lindsey Fairweather (two goals), who will not see any action tonight.

"We were up practicing on turf similar to UNH's," Rudy said, "when she was hurt on a fluky little bumped knee. It's been tough going through this season with these key injuries."

After tonight's game against New Hampshire, UMass will return home against Big East Conference superpower Syracuse, Sunday at 3 p.m. at Rudd Field.

Sox trump Orioles

By David Ginsburg
Associated Press

BALTIMORE (AP) – Derek Lowe pitched six innings of six-hit ball, and David Ortiz homered and drove in four runs to lead the Boston Red Sox past the Baltimore Orioles 9-2 Tuesday night.

With his towering home run in the third inning, Ortiz enabled the Red Sox to set a club single-season record for homers (214) and extra-base hits (591).

The shot also gave Boston a 4-0 lead and propelled the Red Sox to their sixth win in eight games.

Red Sox	9
Orioles	2

The victory enabled Boston to widen its wild-card lead over Seattle to 1 1/2 games, pending the Mariners' late home game with Texas.

Bill Mueller and Jason Varitek also homered for the Red Sox, who improved to 6-8 against the pesky Orioles.

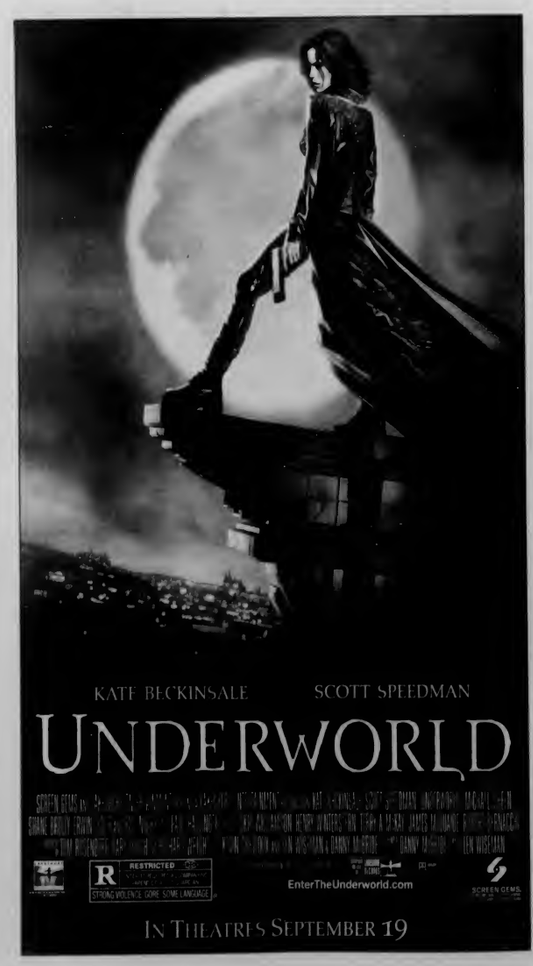
Lowe (15-6) struck out five and walked two, throwing 109 pitches, winning his fourth straight decision since losing two in a row to Baltimore in early August.

Larry Bigbie and Jack Cust each had an RBI for the Orioles, whose three-game winning streak ended.

The Red Sox went up 2-0 in the second inning against Damian Moss (1-4). Damian Jackson drove in a run with the third of four straight Boston singles, and Mueller added a sacrifice fly.

Manny Ramirez opened the third with a single and Ortiz followed with his 26th homer, a titanic shot to right that became the 33rd drive in the 12-year history of Camden Yards to land on Eutaw Street.

Moss, obtained in the trade the sent Sidney Ponson to San Francisco, allowed four runs and seven hits in three innings. The left-hander has yielded 14 runs in his last three starts.



A run-scoring grounder by Ortiz made it 5-0 in the fourth against Sean Douglass, making his 2003 debut for the Orioles.

Bigbie singled in a run with two outs in the fifth, but Boston went ahead 7-1 in the sixth on Mueller's 19th homer and an RBI single by Ortiz.

The Red Sox scored an unearned run in the eighth, and Varitek hit his 24th homer in the ninth.

Cust drove in Baltimore's last run with an RBI double in the eighth.

Notes: Boston eclipsed its HR mark set in 1977, and the extra-base record of 1997. Red Sox Right Fielder Trot Nixon left in the second inning with a strained left calf. Baltimore Second Baseman Brian Roberts was a late scratch with a sprained ankle. Mueller needs one more homer to enable Boston to become the third team to have seven players hit 20 homeruns in the same season. Boston is also one sacrifice fly shot of tying the club record of 59.

Vandy nixes athletic dept.; Clarett charged

Continued from page 10

At Missouri, school officials have appointed an engineering professor to oversee a probe into allegations a basketball player received improper academic and financial help. At Baylor, former coach Dave Bliss is accused of attempting to cover up the finances of a slain basketball player, Patrick Dennehy, by portraying him as a drug dealer.

Another high-profile basketball coach, Larry Eustachy, resigned from Iowa State earlier this year after the Des Moines Register published photos of him drinking and partying with students from another school.

The National Association of Basketball Coaches has told all Division I basketball coaches to attend a summit next month in Chicago to discuss all the problems and ways to avoid them.

Vanderbilt's sports programs have been cited for just one major NCAA violation since 1953, an unethical conduct charge involving the women's basketball coach in 1991, and the school self-imposed penalties of fewer recruiting visits and the loss of one grant.

This month's NCAA report on graduation rates had the university leading the Southeastern Conference with 84 percent of all 1996 freshmen graduating, 75 percent for athletes and 91 percent for football.

Gee, who has been crusading for higher academic standards since he came to Vanderbilt in 2000, said college athletics "is in a defining moment in its life. Either we get control of it through university presidents, or it becomes simply a segregational, embarrassing part of institutions, and we'll just have to close it down."

He said leaders from other SEC schools have told him, "'Gordon, you go ahead and do it, and if you succeed we'll follow.' There's not a great deal of courage out there."

But Gee, a former university president at football powerhouse Ohio State, acknowledges that he faces far less pressure than his peers at schools with big-time football and basketball programs.

"If I did this at Ohio State I'd be pumping gas," he said. Charles Bloom, spokesman for the Southeastern Conference, based in Birmingham, Ala., said it's too early to tell whether the changes at Vanderbilt are a trend or an anomaly.

Clarett charged; Ohio State ready to cut ties

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) – Maurice Clarett was charged Tuesday with lying about items stolen from his car, and Ohio State coach Jim Tressel said the school is ready to cut ties with the star running back.

Clarett was charged with misdemeanor falsification, city attorney spokesman Scott Varner said. If convicted, Clarett would face up to six months in jail and a $1,000 fine. But probation is likely the harshest sentence a judge would impose, city prosecutor Stephen McIntosh said.

Tressel said he does not expect Clarett to return this season to the defending national champion Buckeyes. He would recommend that Clarett be released from his scholarship if the request was made by Clarett, the coach said.

Clarett has already been suspended indefinitely from the team, and probably will not play for the Buckeyes this season. He is also being investigated by the NCAA.

Tressel was asked if it was time for Clarett to move on.

"I think that he needs to make, along with his family, whatever decision he thinks is best for him," Tressel said.

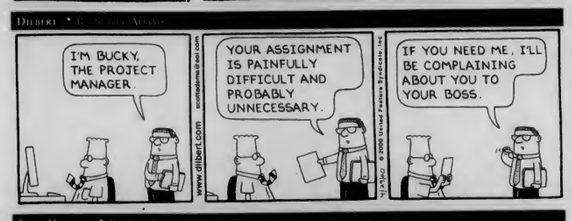
If Clarett's career at Ohio State is over, the running back's last carry would rank among the most memorable in school history. He scored on a 5-yard run in the second overtime in a 31-24 victory over Miami in the Fiesta Bowl, giving the Buckeyes their first national championship in 34 years.

Alan C. Milstein, the Clarett family attorney, said he wasn't surprised by Tressel's comments or the misdemeanor charge.

"Nothing Ohio State does surprises me," he said. "I don't think the family recognizes what Ohio State's actions and motivations are, either."

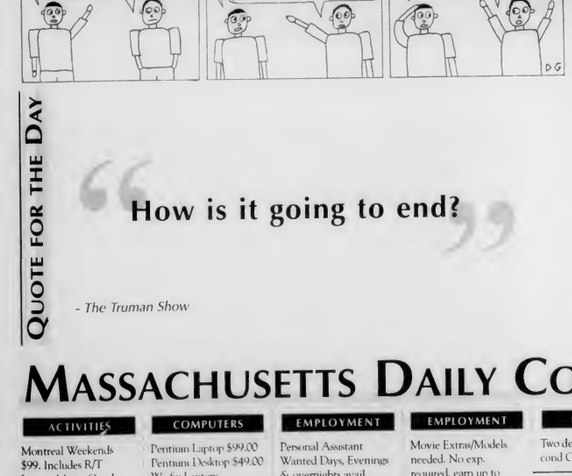
Milstein declined to comment on whether Clarett would consider transferring.

If Clarett transferred to another Division I-A school, he would have to sit out a year in addition to any suspension or ineligibility handed down by the NCAA. He could transfer to a Division I-AA, II or III and be immediately eligible to play, but any possible penalties would also pertain.



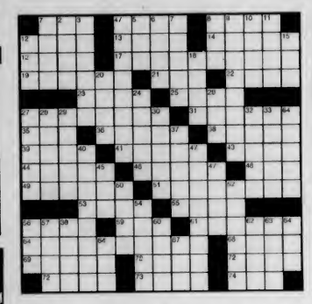
NCAA spokeswoman Kay Hawes would not speak about the Clarett case, but did say that if a suspended or ineligible player transferred, the athlete's new school would first have to declare him ineligible, and would then seek his reinstatement through the organization.

Ohio State has been working for more than two weeks on a response to "several pages" of allegations sent by the NCAA to the university.



- Rusty Miller, Associated Press

STUDENT TRAVEL
elevate
as seen on MTV's the Real World Paris
europe
This is THE trip of the season! Follow the casts' footsteps From Paris to » Nice » Florence » Rome » Zermatt
Experience beach fun, city nights and mountain dreams in 2 weeks or less! starting at $607* *airfare not included
STA TRAVEL www.statravel.com we've been there.
ENTER TO WIN THE trip For 2 at your local branch or www.sbatravel.com!
Lufthansa airline special! Take a Friend For $99!* *see your branch For details
44 Main St. (413) 256.1261
STA TRAVEL WE'VE BEEN THERE



Quote for the Day

"How is it going to end?"

- The Truman Show

ACROSS
1 Family nickname
4 High: digs
8 Marry NYC mistletoe
12 TV's Hawkeye
13 Not do
14 Check for it (2 wds.)
16 — A This Rising
17 Syrup source (2 wds.)
19 Finally (2 wds.)
21 Major tracks
22 Ore deposit
23 PC alternatives
25 Yours is us
27 Airport events
31 Pouting act
35 Spike or Bruce
36 Upright
38 Actress Davis
39 Breathing spell
41 Sesame-pan
43 Bridge section
44 Inside Hong Kong
46 Aristotle's teacher
48 Fighter pilot
49 Too tasty
51 Hardware items
53 Ski lift (hyph.)
56 Stepped on it
58 Hindu princess
59 Howery month
61 Recordering
DOWN
1 Coin receiver
2 Teen fave
3 Odd word
4 Brief note (2 wds.)
5 Dismantled bird
6 Almost, in poems
7 Priggish
8 Cash giver
9 Pecan confections
10 Hash-and-pack ance
11 Auction shout
12 Alles
15 Born as
18 Coral ridge
20 Keep
24 Go dormant
26 Large cup
27 Islamic deity
28 He frugal
29 Old keepsake
30 Snake covering
32 Mountain
33 Lamplighter's aid
34 Bowling alley parts
37 Food caterers
40 Trollops
42 Reason (2 wds.)
45 Bird beak
47 Follow orders
50 Hunter's wear
52 Ukrainian port
54 Mountain chain
56 Joplin genre
57 From a distance
59 Chesterfield's — rings
60 Unit of length
62 Sioux City attic
63 Wife of Yiannick
64 Stair bar
Greenspan
66 Ergo ending
67 Wallace of "Cats"
PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED
THE HARP
413-549-6900
www.theharp.net
Sarah Pub
116 Sunderland
Just off Campus North of the apartments
Wednesday - Reggae Night
Thursday - Fear Nuttin' Band
Dancehall, Reggae, Hip Hop
Saturday - Born Backward
Rock & Roll

Dining Commons Menu
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
- Baked Ziti
- Kickin' Chicken
- Beans & Rice (vegan)

DINNER
- Turkey Cutlet
- Roast Beef
- Madras Tofu Curry (vegan)

Daily Weather Forcast
For Amherst, Mass.

WEDNESDAY
- High: 76
- Low:54

THURSDAY
- High: 75
- Low: 53

SUNDAY
- High: 75
- Low: 52

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Brady
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan
COPY EDITOR
Meghan Healy
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Gerry Auger
PRODUCTION STAFF
Shannon Farrington / Sarah Lloyd

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Put your best foot forward, just make sure you're wearing the right shoes.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Stop asking the same questions of yourself, start answering them.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Wisdom is in the eye of the beholder and sometimes we're all blind.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Say something in class today, it'll bring something special into your evening.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Start something constructive. Writing a journal might be a good place to begin.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
The last time you saw this person, you had a fight. Look out for them today.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Listen to some music you normally wouldn't. It'll be excellent for you.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Bring something weird to class today. Show it to people. Watch what happens.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Dance with someone you're just getting to know. They'll never forget you.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Don't forget to smile. Think of a monkey spinning in circles until he barfs.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Your day is going to be terrible. Just stay inside and try to keep quiet.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You're going to see something you've never seen before any minute now.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ACTIVITIES

Montreal Weekends $99. Includes R/T Luxury Motor Coach from Springfield. 3 Days-2 Nights- 4 Star Hotel Downtown-Meals-Night Club passes. www.montrealexpress.net 1-781-979-9001 Special Group Rates

AUTO FOR SALE

1988 Mazda $950 413-586-5728

Jeep Cherokee Sport-1995. Perfect student car, A/C, Great CD system, original owner, excellent condition, 90K, automatic. 413-296-0060 $3,600 or O.B.O.

CHILDCARE

Seeking responsible babysitter for 2 year old. Afternoons and evening availability. Transportation negotiable. 413-256-2134

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Mother's helper/PCA Cooking, driving & housekeeping. References & Drivers License required. Own transportation to S. Deerfield. 2 to 3 afternoons per week 8-10hrs $8/hr 665-3914

Experienced Linecook to work in high volume upbeat professional kitchen $13/hr to start plus great benefits. Apply in person after 10a.m. Eastsale Grill 19 Strong Ave. Northampton.

Dishwasher Great Part-time Evening/Weekend position 9.25/hr to start. Must be 18yrs old. Apply in person after 12p.m. East Side Grill 19 Strong Ave. Northampton.

EMPLOYMENT

Personal Assistant Wanted Days, Evenings & overnights avail. $10.36 hr. Call Martina 323-9248 Martina@student.umass.edu

Drivers and Kitchen help wanted Apply at D.P. Dough, Downtown Amherst

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals for part time positions. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are must. Call (413) 584-4746

ARHS Varsity Girls Gymnastics Coach needed ASAP. Call Amber 413-262-2272

Earthfoods is hiring Co-Managers for 100% Student Run Café. Salary starts at $6.75 hr. Applications available in Student Union Rm 406. Also across from Commonwealth Room

EMPLOYMENT

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

Experienced part-time linecooks and dishwashers. Apply in person during day before 5:00pm Amherst Brewing Co.

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

FOR SALE

Two desks for sale. Good cond Call: 508-272-2810

Lowest Long Distance Rates! Why let the "Big Three" rip you off? College students save here. www.Labswings-cub.net

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jaghy.com or (413)253-0051.

FURNITURE

Futon Complete set $80, scanner or CD Burner (brand new) $40 Antique 2-tier mahogany scalloped end table $30; ambersstuff@comcast.net or 427-7109 Walt/Franci

INSTRUCTION

Learn to SCUBA Dive Curry Hicks Pool Monday, Tuesday, or Wednesday 7pm to 10pm classes start Sept 8 Call Project Deep 800-282-0977

INSTRUCTION

Jazz Piano Lessons Explore your creativity Beginner to Advanced Learn a wide range of styles Reasonable Rates Contact Stephen Page at 413-297-7910

MISCELLANEOUS

Want to buy/sell TEXTBOOKS & other stuff LOCALLY? ... NO shipping hassles, NO payment middlemen! All 4 FREE! Visit www.collegeback.com today!

ROOM FOR RENT

House on Route 9. Convenient location less than 1/2 mile from campus. On Bus Route. 2 Bathrooms. Contact: elanbalchuck@hotmail.com or call 413-348-5192

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. 1-800-648-4849

TRAVEL

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1-800-426-7710

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

Spring Break '04 with StudentCity.com and Maxim Magazine! Get hooked up with Free Trips, Cash, and VIP Status as a Campus Rep! Choose from 15 of the hottest destinations. Book early for FREE MEALS, FREE DRINKS and 150% Lowest Price Guarantee! To reserve online or view our Photo Gallery, visit www.studentcity.com or Call 1-888-SPRING-BREAK!

WANTED

We are looking for women who are breast-feeding an infant less than 6 months of age to participate in a study investigating breast milk and environmental pollutants Gift certificates will be provided One feeding worth of milk is required in a one time visit Contact Dr. Kathleen Arcaro at 413-577-1823 or karcaro@nrc.umass.edu

Reach thousands of readers! Advertise in the Collegian Classifieds! Come down to the Campus Center Basement or call 545-3500

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Week one: NFL's mixed bag on display

Upon Further Review

Andrew Merritt

Thursday night saw the Washington Exjets beat the New York Jets on a 33-yard John Hall field goal in the first game of the 2003 NFL season. After the game, Hall told reporters that he'd been dreaming of nailing such a kick against his former team.

Not that there is any bad blood… Laveranues Coles also enjoyed his chance to beat up on the Green and White, grabbing five catches for 106 yards in the first half alone. Chad Morton availed himself nicely as well, gaining 89 yards on four kickoff returns, with his 27-yarder in the fourth quarter his longest of the day.

At least the Jets don't have to do that again.

Scary spin from the Jets camp, though. Said Lamont Jordan to ESPN after the game, "Vinny [Testaverde] did a good job. It was the first game of the season, and you can't expect to be perfect. Somebody probably is going to say we lost because we didn't have Chad."

Well, that, and because you didn't have Coles, or Hall, or … well, you get the point.

Good thing they have the cap space…

Sunday's Patriots game just hurt. All the talk from the Patriots about Lawyer Milloy having lost a step, and the need to gain more room under the salary cap went out the window. Ironically enough, one of the major concerns about Milloy's departure to the Pats' week one opponent was the insider knowledge about the New England schemes, and what he would do when given the chance to cover his old team's receivers.

But this issue didn't even come into play early on. Rather, the biggest effect of Milloy's dismissal was on defense, where – surprise, surprise – the Bills were able to exploit a half-strength Patriots secondary all the way to two quick scores.

Of course, it did become quite evident that the Bills knew most of what the Patriots were trying to do. Put it this way, it got so ridiculous at times that if this game were being played on Madden NFL, you'd start punching your opponent because he was obviously looking at your play selections.

The Pats air attack was so beleaguered by Milloy's presence that it actually went into negative numbers for yardage in the first half. While this might not be Montana and Rice in the late '80s, Brady and the New England receiving corps certainly should have had more bite than this.

Salt on the wound was the interception and touchdown by Sam Adams, whose father, Sam Adams Sr. played for the Patriots long ago.

The picture of the game, though, came with three minutes to go in the first half, when Milloy himself got around a blocker and sacked Brady inside the Patriot 10-yard line. It wasn't unexpected that Milloy would make the big play, but Patriot Nation suffered a good hard shudder at that moment.

Next week's game at Philadelphia – a team the Pats handled easily in preseason – will prove if the hoopla about Milloy was the only reason the Patriots came out, and stayed, so flat.

The Lions' share

In the all-ugly game of the week, Detroit and Arizona slugged it out in an improbable offensive fireworks display. While the Lions defense gave up 344 yards passing to the golden arm of Jeff Blake, the Cards did them one better, allowing four touchdowns in the second half alone. Despite most expectations, one team did have to win, so congratulations to the Arizona Cardinals who, despite featuring one of the greatest rushers in the history of the game and a record-breaking effort from Anquan Boldin, found a way to hand the Lions a 42-24 victory.

Mind you, the Lions did receive a two-touchdown performance from first round draft pick Charles Rogers, but that was on just four catches. Meaning either the Lions snuck an extra wideout onto the field every so often, or Arizona's defense is even weaker than Emmitt Smith's case for being there. Don't forget that the Lions were also without top running back James Stewart, out for the season with a shoulder injury. Chalk this game up as the second reason Emmitt should just hang up the cleats rather than play in Tempe. Reason number one, obviously, is that it's the Arizona Cardinals he's playing for.

The 0-fers

This all brings us to the first installment of this year's 0-fer watch, and while some nitpickers will say that 16 teams could be on this list, we can eliminate quite a few of last weekend's losers as candidates for the big goose egg.

The Cincinnati Bengals jumped out and grabbed the number one spot in the 0-fer watch with their loss to the new-look Denver Broncos. In other news, the world is round.

Let's add the Cowboys, who allowed 27 points to the Atlanta Falcons on Sunday. It's certainly acceptable that the 'Boys allowed so many to the vaunted Falcon offense, led by none other than superstar Michael Vick, that's right, Vick is still out. Doug Johnson filled in admirably, giving the Falcons bandwagon reason to start going to work on those busted wheels. Johnson still has no business looking solid against an NFL defense, so don't expect Bill Parcells to be too patient with the Cowboys' defenders this week. That is, once he reminds Quincy Carter that there's no dribbling in football.

Also on the early list is the Chicago Bears, who were demoralized by the 49ers in the first game of the Dennis Erickson era in San Francisco. But don't expect the Bears to stay without a win for long. Dick Jauron's got to be fired sometime soon, doesn't he?

And finally, those poor Cardinals. Other than the running back position, where Smith, the NFL's all-time rushing leader is backed up by the capable UMass alum Marcel Shipp, there's no reason to expect much from this squad, which hosts Seattle and Green Bay the next two weeks. Luckily enough, they'll play in Lose-Lose Bowl II on Oct. 5 when they travel to Dallas. The obvious X-factor of Emmitt's first return to Texas Stadium could go either way, but it's a good bet he'll show up big time.

Andrew Merritt is a Collegian columnist. E-mail him at Merritt_collegian@yahoo.com.

Rolling to Durham

Junior transfer Lindsey Fairweather and the Minutewomen travel to New Hampshire tonight.

UM women head to N.H.

By Matt Stewart
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts women's soccer team is on a roll.

After claiming a 2-1 victory in their season opener against Quinnipiac, the Minutewomen traveled down to Kingston, R.I. for their first Atlantic 10 showdown of the season. There, they downed the Rams with an impressive 4-1 win.

Tonight, UMass travels to Durham, N.H. to square off in a marquee matchup against New Hampshire at 7 p.m.

"We've had to fight to come back from behind in both of our games so far," women's soccer coach Jim Rudy said. "It would be nice for us to start out the game with an early lead."

Freshman Adair Blyler continually proves to be a dominant factor for the Minutewoman offense, as she leads the team with six points.

"She's maturing quickly," Rudy said. "She's playing well and enjoying it. Our style of play suits her well."

Sophomore Lindsey Bellini is also turning heads, with an eye-opening performance against URI, where she netted her first goal of the season to break a 1-1 stalemate, later adding an assist to put the game away, giving her three points on the day.

"Creative player," Rudy said of the Webster, N.Y. native. "Quite skillful. She's got a very deceptive style of play. She'll look one way and then go in the other direction. She plays with guile."

Senior Kelly Nigh has been solid in net thus far for the Maroon and White. Nigh is allowing an average of one goal per game, and has tallied 10 saves in her first two contests. In the game against URI, UMass was outshot 14-9, but Nigh stood strong, racking up seven

Continued on page 8

Vanderbilt cuts athletic department

By Amber McDowell
Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) – Vanderbilt College will eliminate its athletic department in a major shakeup designed to curb the ills of big-time college athletics.

Vanderbilt will continue playing intercollegiate sports, but the reorganization merges the departments that control varsity and intramural athletics, putting sports under the central university administration, the school said Tuesday.

"There is a wrong culture in athletics, and I'm declaring war on it," Vanderbilt Chancellor Gordon Gee said at a news conference.

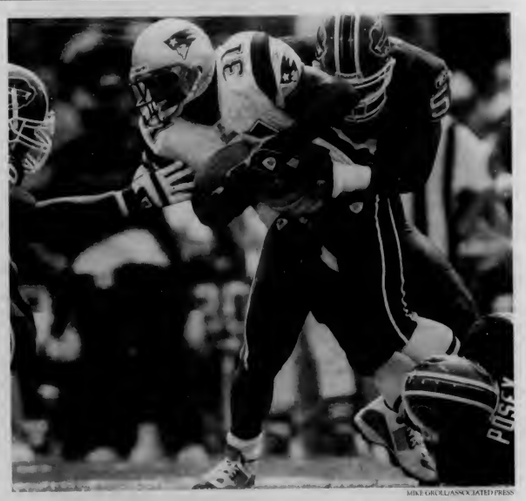
No NCAA sports programs or jobs will be eliminated, but just about everything else will change at a school that has run one of the country's cleanest programs in the last half-century. That includes the elimination of the athletic director position, which Todd Turner has held for seven years.

Turner has been offered a job as special assistant to the chancellor for athletic and academic reform, a position in which he would advance "a national agenda for the reform of intercollegiate athletics."

"Let there be no misunderstanding of our intention: Vanderbilt is committed to competing at the highest levels in the Southeastern Conference and the NCAA, but we intend on competing consistent with the values of a world-class university," Gee said.

Vanderbilt's sports programs have had mixed success in recent years.

The football program has lost 18 straight Southeastern Conference games and 27 of its last 28 SEC games. The women's basketball team went to the NCAA regional tournament last year and lost in the second round while the men's basketball team finished 11-18. The men's tennis team was second in the nation.



Vanderbilt's move comes at a time of much debate in college sports about how schools run their programs, and follows numerous scandals across the country.

Gee said the traditional structure for collegiate athletics was "broken."

"At least (Vanderbilt) has a chance for success because it has athletes and academics in the same enterprise," he said.

Last season, Georgia and Fresno State withdrew their men's basketball teams from postseason play because of academic fraud, while St. Bonaventure forfeited two games when players boycotted after a player was declared ineligible.

Continued on page 8

MIKE GROLL/ASSOCIATED PRESS

New England Patriots fullback Larry Centers (31) is wrapped up by the Buffalo Bills' Takeo Spikes with assistance from Ron Edwards, left, and Jeff Posey, bottom right, during the first quarter in Orchard Park, N.Y., Sunday.

Colvin, Harrison debut in loss

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) – Roosevelt Colvin got a sack and Rodney Harrison led the New England Patriots with 11 tackles, just what the team expected when it signed them in the off-season.

Neither player expected the embarrassing outcome of their debut.

"We really just laid an egg," Harrison said of the 31-0 loss Sunday to the Buffalo Bills.

The Patriots did an outstanding offseason job of filling defensive holes.

They signed Harrison, who played in two Pro Bowls before being cut by San Diego. They added Colvin as a free agent from Chicago after he led the Bears with 10 1/2 sacks each of the last two seasons.

But just five days before the opener, the team suffered a self-inflicted wound by releasing four-time Pro Bowl safety Lawyer Milloy in a salary cap move. He signed with Buffalo and had a sack on Sunday.

His loss deprived the Patriots of their emotional leader. So Harrison, who had been eager to team with Milloy in a hard-hitting safety combination, must play a bigger role.

"Sometimes you're thrust into that from your past experiences that you've gone through. People look up to you," he said. "As an older player, you're naturally a leader."

Harrison felt he played a solid game at Buffalo. He might have to keep doing that to satisfy fans, who may expect more from him now that Milloy is gone.

"Everyone's focusing on the new guys and you can't focus on one or two or three guys. It's a total team effort," Harrison said.

Continued on page 8

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 7

ALANA debate continues

By Dan Lamothe
Collegian Staff

The ALANA community responded strongly yesterday to Student Government Association Speaker Jared Nokes' announcement that he will not recognize any appointed seats in the Senate this year. The move would dramatically affect the ALANA caucus, which is currently guaranteed 13 percent of all seats in the SGA Senate through appointments.

The Office of African, Latino/a, Asian, and Native American Affairs buzzed with life yesterday afternoon in preparation of a demonstration planned for today at noon on the Student Union steps. ALANA members accused Nokes of ignoring the student body's opinion on the issue.

"He's not a dictator," ALANA member Rene Gonzalez said. "He became the judge and jury, and then he handed down his sentence."

Nokes said late Tuesday night that he will not recognize appointed seats due to a conflict between the SGA's Constitution and Bylaws. While the Bylaws specifically provide for an ALANA caucus that includes 13 percent of the entire Senate body in appointments, Nokes said the appointments are unconstitutional because they are not specifically provided for in the Constitution.

GERALD H. LINGUCCI/COLLEGIAN

ALANA member Rene Gonzalez and Gladys Franco, internal chair for the Office of ALANA Affairs, speak out over the pending fate of the Student Government Association ALANA caucus seats.

He also said he cannot recognize appointed seats partly for fear that it puts the SGA at risk of losing its governing power. The UMass Board of Trustees, Nokes claims, could remove the SGA's power because of the conflict between the Bylaws and the Constitution. The SGA's power is granted by the Board of Trustees through the board's ratification of the SGA Constitution. With ratification, the Wellman Doctrine of 1973 gives the SGA governing power, including control of its $1.7 million budget.

Nokes said the Constitution overrides the Bylaws when the two conflict, because the Constitution is voted on at the state level, whereas the Bylaws are approved at the university level.

Yesterday, though, Nokes admitted that the Senate has been operating with appointed seats for 10 years without any interference from the board of trustees. Hannah Fatemi, student trustee for the Amherst campus, had no comment on the chances of the Board of Trustees taking the SGA's powers away. She said the issue was a Senate matter.

Grace Fey, chairperson of the board of trustees, is out of her office until Sept. 15 and was unavailable for comment yesterday, according to her voicemail.

Gonzalez and Gladys Franco, internal chair for the Office of ALANA Affairs, said Nokes is not only acting against the bylaws, but against the constitution and previous SGA rulings that have been made on the issue. Gonzalez said Nokes is violating the Constitution based on Article I, Section One of the Constitution.

That article states "all elected and appointed members of the SGA shall be members of the SGA as defined by the General Bylaws of the SGA, and no

Continued on page 3

KHALIL HAMRA/ASSOCIATED PRESS

A Palestinian militant holds a rocket-propelled grenade during clashes with Israeli troops near to the border of Egypt Wednesday in Rafah. At least five Palestinians were wounded in the clashes.

Israel bombs home of Hamas leader

By Ibrahim Barzak
Associated Press

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip – Israel bombed the home of a Hamas leader Wednesday, killing his eldest son and a bodyguard in retaliation for two suicide bombings.

The Palestinian prime minister-designate said he will quickly form a government to forestall even harsher Israeli reprisals. Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon cut short a visit to India, and an official said he would consider far-reaching options, such as forcing Yasser Arafat into exile or ordering a large-scale invasion of the Gaza Strip.

The spiral of violence drew calls for retaliation from Israelis and Palestinians alike. The Islamic militant group Hamas claimed responsibility for Tuesday's twin suicide attacks and said it would now begin targeting Israeli homes and high-rises in response to Wednesday's air strike on the home of senior Hamas leader Mahmoud Zahar.

A half-ton bomb flattened the house, wounding Zahar and killing his eldest son and a bodyguard. It marked the first time a Hamas leader has been attacked in his home, an escalation of Israel's campaign against the group. Twenty-five people were wounded, including Zahar's wife and a daughter.

In the West Bank, Palestinian parliament speaker Ahmed Qureia accepted the job of prime minister after several days of wavering, his decision to accept Arafat's offer apparently rushed by fears that a power vacuum would tempt Israel to intensify military strikes.

Qureia said he would form a crisis Cabinet of no more than eight ministers and seek parliament's approval Thursday.

President Bush urged Qureia to crack down on militants and said the United States has not abandoned its "road map" peace plan despite Tuesday's suicide bombings, which killed 15 people and wounded dozens.

"The road map is still there. The fundamental question is whether or not people, peaceful people, will be on the road," Bush said.

In the northern West Bank late Wednesday, Israeli soldiers shot and killed a Palestinian who was trying to damage a security fence between the West Bank and Israel, the military said.

Hamas' military wing claimed responsibility for the Tuesday suicide bombings, saying they were "the beginning of our retaliation for the enemy's crimes against our people."

A spokesman for the Al Aqsa Martyrs' Brigade, loosely linked to Arafat's Fatah movement, said his group also was behind one of the bombings outside an

Continued on page 3

EDITORIAL/OPINION Page 4
Remembrence On the anniversary of Sept. 11, 2001
ARTS & LIVING Page 5
Hot sauce The Hatch kicks it up a notch
SPORTS Page 8
Tough test UMass set for KSU
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS Page 7

Stonewall Center hosts open house, welcomes community

By Sara-Megan Walsh
Collegian Correspondent

The Stonewall Center — a gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender educational resource center at the University of Massachusetts — held its Open House yesterday to welcome new members into its networked community.

The Stonewall Center offers a safe social gathering area to the members of the GLBT community. Mike McKinstry, a junior who's been working at the Stonewall Center for the past three years, spoke with gratitude about what the Center offers the GLBT community.

When recalling his discovery of the Stonewall center, he says he was "really nervous and scared about being out on campus, [but] apparently the University is really open-minded and has things for its people, and that put me at ease."

The center's walls are lined with bookcases full of literature on various subjects, such as GLBT Youth books, gay fiction and legal issues. Along another wall are videotapes and a television.

One student, Rob, says he frequently visits Stonewall, "to meet new people … meeting other gay people is really difficult."

To aid in keeping the members of the GLBT community in contact, the Stonewall Center puts out a weekly online bulletin, QueerE, which serves to notify members of local events, available jobs, housing and internships by email. The center offers subscriptions through its Web page. The center itself is still seeking out students for work-study positions available in its office.

The center is also known as an educational resource center, which prides itself on being able to direct GLBT students to various resources they may need. It claims to strive to educate the public on matters of the GLBT culture and lifestyle.

Felice Yeskel, Director of the Stonewall Center, echoed Assistant Dean of Students Gladys Rodriguez's sentiments when she said that all homophobic incidents should be reported.

"There are some things that just shouldn't occur," she said. One of the ways the center educates the public is through the Stonewall Speakers Bureau. The Stonewall Speakers Bureau gathers members of the GLBT community as well their allies whom are open about their lifestyle to tell their story in classrooms and public gatherings across Western Massachusetts. By sharing their stories, they hope to dispel stereotypes and open the minds of homophobic people by reaching out to them as fellow human beings. The Stonewall Speakers Bureau is currently in search of new speakers to be trained this fall and help in educating others.

In seeking a way to educate and remind students and those around them of the gay community, The center deals in networking and sharing leaflets and brochures of various associations for the GLBT community in the Western Massachusetts area. GLBT awareness posters are available for purchase through the Stonewall Center.

The open house held yesterday was the first of many events The Stonewall Center has planned in a very busy fall semester. Its next event is a barbecue co-sponsored by ALANA on Thursday, Sept. 18 at 4:30 p.m. Other major events to take note of include a comedy night titled "Laughing Out Loud" on Oct. 18 and the Transcending Boundaries Conference, which will be held at UMass on Oct 24-26.

Although the center's living room was lined with couches and chairs, standing room only was available. Over 30 members of the GLBT community gathered for this meet-and-greet session. Those in attendance came from many diverse backgrounds, including undergraduates and graduate students of multiple ethnicities — from both Hampshire and Amherst Colleges. Out of the 30 in attendance, over half were visiting the center for the first time.

There are other organizations that work with the center in providing a community for the GLBT students. Two other groups include the Pride Alliance, which primarily provides social events for GLBT students and will hold its next meeting Tuesday at 7 p.m. Also, there is a new group at the Hillel House for Jewish GLBT students. Both of these groups can be contacted through the Stonewall Center.

GERALD H. LINGUCCI/COLLEGIAN

Cara Pina, Dan Pomeroy, Bianca Polovina and A.J. Stachelek sit and enjoy refreshments at the Stonewall Center open house.

UMass recalls

By Paul Connelly
Collegian Correspondent

There are no candles, no pictures … only a small American flag stuck in the ground outside Lederle Graduate Research Center.

It was put there by fellow workers of Christoffer Carstanjen after he was killed in the terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center. Those same workers will gather outside the building to remember Carstanjen with a memorial service today.

"The memorial service is not to wave the flag, it's not to support the troops, and it's not think about what's happened as a result of 9/11," said Michael Gilbert, a computer research analyst and Carstanjen's boss.

On the morning of Sept. 11, 2001, Carstanjen boarded a plane headed for California on a vacation that would send him on one of his favorite passions — motorcycling up and down the west coast. But before he could ever get there, he became a victim of one of the greatest tragedies in American history.

Carstanjen was not only missed in California; he was grieved for especially at the University of Massachusetts, in the Office of Technology. Carstanjen worked in the office and was remembered by his colleagues as great, warm, personal and an all-out sweetheart of a guy.

Carstanjen, who was known as "Mr. Wonderful" because of his sense of humor, came to UMass as an OIT liaison to the College of Humanities and Fine Arts from Northfield Mt. Hermon. Carstanjen worked under Gilbert, who says he will always remember the man not only as the best natural support person, but as someone who has made the professor's role with students more personable.

"It's always hard to start each semester," Gilbert said. "Chris was the OIT breeder. He was always out in the hall greeting people and was great at reaching out to the customer, very comfortable with people. He is sorely missed."

Aside from being an avid motorcyclist, Carstanjen was also a Morris dancer, an accomplished cook and a computer specialist.

Carstanjen is remembered with a favorite quote from philosopher Federico Fellini. "There is no end; there is no beginning; there is only the infinite passion of life." Carstanjen died at age 33.

Big Y® WORLD CLASS MARKET™
We've Got It All!
175 University Drive
Amherst · 413-253-0416
Monday-Saturday
7am-11pm
Sunday 7am-10pm
WE ACCEPT OCMP!

WELCOME BACK
UMASS®
STUDENTS!
Prices Effective September 11th to 17th
In Our Amherst Store Only.

From Our Kitchen
Sandwich Shop Hours:
7am to 9pm Every Day
Pizza Shop Hours:
9am to 9pm Every Day

Chicken Caesar Salad For Two
BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE
Save On Up To 5

Best Pizza In Town!
Made Fresh Every Day!

Large 18" Cheese Pizza
BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE
Save On Up To 5

Just Heat & Serve!

Beef or Chicken Burrito
BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE
Save On Up To 5

Just Heat & Serve!

Beef or Chicken Fajita
BUY 1 · GET 1 FREE
Save On Up To 5

Come In and Sign Up For Your
FREE
Big Y® Express Savings Club™ Card
To Save On Items Throughout The Store Week After Week... After Week!
UMass Athletics Express Savings Club
See Store For Details On More Ways To Save!

SGA seats bring controversy

Continued from page 1

SGA member shall hold elected or appointed office in more than one branch of the government, except as provided for by this Constitution or the General Bylaws of the SGA."

Gonzalez argued that the article never says executive seats are the only positions that can be appointed in the SGA Constitution.

"We're saying Article IV opens up the Constitution for other interpretations," Gonzalez said. "The judiciary is the only body in the SGA that can deal with issues like this. If he thinks there is a constitutional problem, he needs to take it up with a judiciary."

> "They need to be aware of the ALANA community on this campus."
> -Gladys Franco
> Office of ALANA Affairs

Nokes did not agree. He interpreted Article IV to mean that each member of the SGA is only supposed to get one vote, and that each member must pay their Student Activities fees to participate.

The Office of ALANA Affairs also pointed to Boniface, Rossetie and Spilman v. SGA, a judicial case filed April 13, 2000, as evidence that the existence of their appointed seats is constitutional. In that case, the student judiciary decided unanimously that the existence of ALANA's seats were constitutional.

"It is vital to allow the ALANA community voices apportioned representation in the SGA," Chief Justice Gabriel Tavarez wrote in the Majority Rulings of the case. "As they are members who 'shall be apportioned by the Senate (Article V, Section Two) and therefore are constitutional."

Nokes dismissed the ruling, saying the issue is "far more complicated than one judicial case," and that it is only a part of the complicated history involving the issue.

Gonzalez and Franco criticized the SGA Coordinating Council for making decisions this summer involving the issue without any ALANA representation. The Council makes decisions from June until October while the Senate is out of session.

"It was not a democratic process," Gonzalez said.

According to Nokes, at the last SGA meeting of the 2002-03 school year, the Senate made a motion to adjourn before a vote on a proposed motion to put appointed seats back on the Senate could be taken. He said that shows that the will of the Senate is to not recognize the seats.

Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of student affairs and student life, said he has talked to members of the SGA about removing appointed seats from the Senate. However, he said before any changes to Bylaws can be made, they have to make a request to his office, and he would have to make a ruling on it. Until a change in the Bylaws is made, the ALANA caucus cannot be eliminated because the Bylaws provide for the appointed seats.

"If you want to eliminate the ALANA caucus, then you're also saying that you want to change the Bylaws," Gargano said.

Nokes said he is not sure what Gargano's reaction will be when a request for a change in Bylaws is submitted. "He's in the position where he could handle this," Nokes said.

Gonzalez was disappointed that SGA President David Carr and Secretary of Diversity Russell Plato have not come out against the removal of the appointed seats for students. Plato said the topic was a Senate issue and referred comment to Carr. Carr said the topic is up to the judiciary to decide.

"At this point, that's the only thing that can be done," Carr said. "I can't change SGA apportionment. The Senate is the only person or body that can do that."

In the meantime, Franco said ALANA will do anything it can to make sure they have student representation in the decision-making process of the UMass community.

"They need to be aware of the ALANA community on this campus," she said.

Israel considers further retaliation army base near Tel Aviv. That raised fears that there might be a third suicide bomber roaming Israel.

Continued from page 1

The explosion at the bus stop near Tel Aviv killed eight soldiers, and the second blast five hours later killed a security guard and six patrons at a Jerusalem coffee house. Dozens of bystanders were wounded.

Among the dead at the Hillel Cafe were two U.S. citizens — a doctor who headed a Jerusalem hospital emergency room and his daughter, who was to have been married Wednesday. Instead of a wedding, a funeral was held for both.

The Israeli military said it will press ahead with its "all-out war" on Hamas. Israel has killed 13 Hamas members and six bystanders in targeted attacks in the past three weeks, and Hamas said the suicide bombings came in retaliation for strikes against its leaders. Some 12 hours after the attack in Jerusalem, Israeli warplanes bombed the home of Zahar, whom Israel says helped decide on suicide bombings that have killed hundreds.

"This crime only is going to escalate the process of resistance," Zahar told The Associated Press from his hospital bed, with three bodyguards standing watch.

Zahar, 58, had a bruise under his left eye and a bandaged hand. He said he was sitting in his house when the F-16s swooped over and dropped the bomb.

Zahar also lashed out at the United States and European countries, telling the Arab satellite TV station Al-Jazeera that "the Arab people should rise up and threaten America's interests everywhere."

Some 3,000 mourners carried his son's body through the street as Hamas supporters fired rifles into the air.

In Gaza Wednesday night, Israeli tanks fired five shells near a Palestinian police post, but no one was injured, Palestinian police and rescue workers said.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Correction:

In yesterday's Arts & Living feature photo, one member of Queens of the Stone Age was misidentified as Anthony Kiedis of the Red Hot Chili Peppers. In addition, The Collegian reported that Kiedis had arrived late to the concert; however, this was false. Kiedis arrived on stage on schedule.

Young Men's Club
138 East Street Hadley, MA
413-584-9726
Monday Night Football
• Pool Table
• Darts
• Horseshoes
• Keno
• Smoking
• Public Invited
• Women Welcome
Transportation Available
Free Munchies with this ad!

Beach Club Tanning Studios
It's Our Grand Opening!
Student Specials • Open 7 Days • No Appointment Necessary
All New High-Pressure Tanning Beds and Booths
FREE Week of tanning in September
Register to WIN a Spring Break Trip to Cancun! See store for details.
65 University Drive • ph 549-HOTT

Meet God
meet People
MERCYhouse @ UMASS
Sunday Sept. 14th
10:30AM Coffee & Convo
11:00AM Service
Campus Center Basement
Rm. 163C

Want to make friends that last a lifetime???
Sorority Recruitment
Call us at 413.545.2711
Sept.16-21
or check us out online at www.umass.edu/greek/panhel.htm

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club
90 Gatehouse Road, Off Rt. 9, Two miles East of Amherst Center
On the Bus Route • TEL: 256-6446
Shopping for a health club? • Do your homework first
JOIN NOW!
for our Semester Special
15 weeks - For Students: Only $179!
Inclusive membership / No additional fees / Includes free T-Shirt
Hampshire Fitness Club has it all for you
• FULL SIZED INDOOR POOL
• AQUA AEROBICS
• CYBEX/NAUTILUS CIRCUIT
• BOXING STUDIO
• CYBEX FREE WEIGHTS
• FULL COURT BASKETBALL
• VOLLEYBALL
• INDOOR TENNIS
• YOGA/PILATES
• AEROBICS/STEP/BOSU
• JACUZZI/SAUNAS
• CARDIO-VASCULAR EQUIPMENT
Open: 6am to 10pm Mon-Fri
8am to 9pm Sat-Sun

Athletes in Action Weekly Meeting
Tuesdays 8pm in James Dorm SW
Bible study + milk+ brownies = good times for athletes
Info: LA_Love_35@yahoo.com or Dave at 259-1083

Real Life
Thursdays 8pm
in the Campus Center
Teaching, worship, and a whole lot of fun
Info: umasscru.com or brent.vallee@uscm.org

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY SEPTEMBER 11, 2003 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Nixing of appointed ALANA seats needs a sturdy solution

In 1976, the Office of Third World Affairs, which later became what we now know as ALANA, was established. For those who are unaware of who or what ALANA is, it's a multicultural organization designed to provide support and assistance for mainly African, Latino/a, Asian/ Pacific Islander and Native American students.

On Tuesday night, Student Government Association Speaker Jared Nokes announced he will not recognize any appointed seats in the Senate this year. The move dramatically affects ALANA, which will lose caucus members that made up 13 percent of the Senate body.

The seats are being removed under the basis of Article V, Section Two of the SGA constitution: "The Senate membership shall be composed of representatives apportioned by the Senate to Electoral Districts, as defined by the General By-laws of the SGA."

Ironically enough, that is the same article that was used in 2000 to defend the existence of the appointed seats for the minority group in an SGA judicial.

The argument for purging the Senate of the appointed seats this time is that according to the aforementioned article, the continuation of such seats is unconstitutional because it is not expressly stated in the constitution.

The reasoning for such a rash and immediately effective decision is that at any given moment, the state may refuse to recognize the SGA because of its "unconstitutional" practices. Realistically, though, these practices have been underway for almost 10 years and the likelihood of the state deciding to interfere now is fairly low.

So why the sudden attempt to overthrow ALANA yet again? There are many theories and opinions on the topic. One is that due to the immense voting power of the caucus, the SGA often has difficultly passing things with which ALANA does not agree, and therefore wishes to seek their removal.

If that is the case, there is a valid point there, but is an outright elimination of all appointed seats really fair to the ALANA community on campus? Shouldn't we act like the adults we all pretend to be and find a compromise that will satisfy both groups involved? Perhaps the appointed seats could be kept, but in fewer number, which would at least allow for diversity but not necessarily disproportionate strength.

That is, of course, assuming that the reinstatement of the ALANA caucus is agreed upon to begin with.

Many people would say that the reserved seats for the minority group sound too much like quotas or affirmative action and therefore should be eliminated. The strong counterargument is that the SGA is overwhelmingly populated by white males and needs the ALANA members to keep a balanced representation of our University. Even SGA President David Carr estimated Tuesday night that 90 percent of the Senate is made up of white males.

Whatever you believe, one thing is clear. This is an issue that keeps coming back, and it clearly needs a long-standing solution. Too much time has been wasted, in at least three separate instances, over the past 10 years on this issue as it is revisited again and again. That's time that could have been spent on other issues affecting policies concerning the student body.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian awaits and hopes for an amicable agreement between the two main parties involved in this issue. There's plenty of other work to be done, and until this issue is solved, it will be difficult to get much accomplished in the Senate this year.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

LIGHTING THE WAY IN THE MIDST OF DARKNESS

Bulger's severance package is not about one man's greed

Peter Travato

The baby got his bottle. Romney won. Bulger is gone. Now, the Massachusetts taxpayers will have to foot the bill for Billy Bulger's severance package and pension.

The lengthy assault on Bulger was a tactical operation worthy of a five-star military general. Romney systematically tore apart the ex-president in an effort to keep his political machine moving forward. By removing Bulger, Romney has cleared a path for his direct influence on the University of Massachusetts, something that was hindered while Bulger was still in office.

Mitt played the game well. During his battle, Romney constantly preached higher principles; claiming that Bulger's office was ineffective, too costly, and unnecessary. Romney told us he was looking out for the taxpayers, not to mention he was looking out for our morals. After all, there is no way that Bulger could effectively head the University while his brother is running from the FBI.

This was all a smoke screen. This fight wasn't about saving money or rescuing the students from a criminal-supporting president. It was about Romney throwing his weight around and making a stand against a political icon: Billy Bulger. It was just a political game.

Bulger represents everything the Governor is not. He is a symbol of old-style Boston politics, a throwback Democrat who stood in the way of Romney, the Republican who continually agrees on budget decisions that find UMass getting the short end of the stick.

Bulger's resignation is going to cost the state more money than if he had continued as president. Bulger will get almost $1 million in severance. Romney knew this. He knew how much Bulger's package could be; moreover, he knew that Bulger had a long-term contract with the University, and he knew that Bulger would be eligible for a state pension.

Unfortunately, many of Bulger's accomplishments will be overshadowed...

But Romney didn't care. He wanted Bulger out and never ceased in his attacks. How much does Romney really care about Massachusetts, if he is willing to wage a political battle where the end result is costly to the state? How much does Mitt Romney care about UMass?

Not a great deal. Forcing Bulger out of office was an error. Bulger was a fundraising aid to the school; his long time connections to the Massachusetts business community often found more money for UMass. He showed an improved commitment to education when he started, and continually supported, the honors college. Furthermore, Bulger and the determined staff of the school helped UMass become recognized as a nationally competitive school. An even greater feat, he helped UMass become recognized within Massachusetts, a state known for its private collegiate institutions. Unfortunately, many of Bulger's accomplishments will be overshadowed by the ordeal with Romney and his connections to Whitey.

The taxpayers can thank Romney for having to pay Bulger, a deal that has some calling Bulger full of greed. But Bulger's arrangement doesn't seem too far out of whack. As a state worker for over 40 years, he is eligible for the top pension. He could have asked for 80 percent of his annual salary, instead he opted for 60 percent. A greedy man would ask for all.

Bulger is getting out when the time is right. Romney's constant nagging about Bulger's expenses and his ties with his brother would have severely affected his role as president. Having to explain to Romney why he 'super-sizes' his extra value meals at McDonald's should not be on the agenda of the University president.

So, now the governor can leave Bulger alone. He is out of the game and should not be remembered as someone with greedy intentions. The only greed seen in this mess was the political greed of Mitt Romney. It was Romney's politically-driven attack on Bulger that forced the old Democrat into a cushy pension plan. It was Romney's greed that took Bulger away from UMass at a time when the school needs a significant figurehead for support. Romney got what he wanted. Now Massachusetts will pay for his enjoyment of defeating Bulger.

Peter Travato is a Collegian columnist.

Gambling: the solution to all UMass financial problems

Gilad Skolnik

My good friend Romney is struggling to squeeze every nickel and dime he can out of the University of Massachusetts and other state universities, so a few millionaires can save some bucks on taxes.

Our government is searching left and right for a way to find more income and revenue for the state.

I am sitting here with a brilliant proposal, and no one will listen.

We need a casino in Western Massachusetts to reinvigorate the area. Romney has already loosely toyed with the idea, proposing slot machines in our state. This was quickly voted down by our pathetic state legislature, but the issue must be given more thought. I disagree with the governor on practically every issue, but on this one, he's got a point.

A casino could deliver valuable needed funds to the UMass university system, and all profits could be directly siphoned to the school.

A casino could deliver valuable needed funds to the UMass system, and all profits could be directly siphoned to the school.

This would allow me to take a gym class, our art department to get out of mobile homes, and maybe even Bulger's pension to be raised up a few hundred thousand dollars.

If that's not enough, a casino could bring more jobs to Western Massachusetts, hit hard by the recession in recent years. Our hotel management majors could get valuable internships, and marketing majors could have more opportunities to practice their trade.

Still, there are those who would oppose such an endeavor, claiming that gambling is bad, harmful, and can lead to addiction. I'd like to remind those of you that we already have state-sponsored gambling with lottery tickets and scratch tickets, not to mention such venues as greyhound racing.

One can easily go to the Foxwoods or Mohegan Sun casinos and gamble an entire fortune away, but Connecticut gets none of that money, as the casinos are technically on Indian Reservations that claim sovereignty and refuse to pay taxes.

Either all casinos in the region should be banned, or all should be legalized. Having them legal in some cases and not in others is hypocrisy. Foxwoods, the world's largest casino, rakes in over a billion dollars a year. And it's located on prime real estate, given out for free by the federal government. To belong to the Pequot Tribal Nation, one has to be accepted by the tribe but does not need to be proven to be a Native American. Furthermore, no one even lived on the tribal land until 1992, and in fact, the last person to live there was a 78 year-old woman in the 70's.

The Mashantucket Pequot Tribal Nation contributes millions of dollars to political parties and lobbyists just to be recognized as a tribe. And yet, this tribe no longer has a language and even refuses the entrance of people with Mashantucket Pequot Tribal ancestry who didn't join by a certain date. The tribes who control the Foxwoods and Mohegan Sun casinos simply have no legitimate claim.

Imagine a world where our professors get a decent wage that goes up with the cost of living increase, where they get paid what their contract states. Imagine a world where our library can buy books, our peers can go to gym class, our rape crisis center gets proper funding, and perhaps, (I know this is asking for a bit too much even though just about every other large university has them), we could even get fire sprinklers in the dormitories. I know that if John Quincy Adams was on fire, people wouldn't mind running down twenty-something smoke-filled flights of stairs, but sprinklers would be a nice luxury.

Casinos have a bad rap for crime and addiction, but gambling in a controlled environment is much better than gambling that would be going on in some shady building somewhere. Like any activity, there are always a few people who will become addicted to it, but nevertheless, the vast majority of people are able to control their enjoyment of gambling and have fun with it. Additionally, with increased state revenue, the state could afford to hire physiologists who could help people for free.

With a state that already supports gambling in other forms, schools that support gambling with such activities as casino night for freshmen, and a culture where gambling is alive and rampant with activities from March Madness to late night poker games, it is absolutely ridiculous that we don't pursue a path that will result in joy and happiness.

Info for this article was taken from www.tribalnation.com

Gilad Skolnik is a Collegian columnist.

An Aussie education makes for an abrupt culture shock

Katy Noone

This semester I am studying abroad in one of the only countries where Americans don't have to pretend they're from Canada by sewing red and white flags to their backpacks. In Australia, what Men at Work call "the land down under," the sun is hot, the accents are enticing, and the food is lacking.

Most of the businesses here are similar to those found in the United States, yet, many have different names. American Wal-Mart becomes Australian Big W, although both have the "we sell for less" logo. Burger King is Hungry Jack's here, with the company name squished between two hamburger buns as it is in the States.

The fashion sense of some Aussies reminds me of a time when hair spray was the only necessary accessory and A.C. Slater and Zach Morris were the cool kids on TV.

Television programs are either spin-offs of U.S. or British programs, though there are quite a few entertaining Aussie dramas and funny films. The movie channel here shows great classics; I've seen two early Bond movies in the past week. If I watch any more, I may start ordering my drinks at the on-campus bar by saying, "Martini–shaken, not stirred."

It is a once-in-a-lifetime experience to study abroad and become immersed in the sights and sounds of a new country. It is hard sometimes, though, to be thousands of miles away from home and everyone and everything that is special to you. After being in Australia for only a month or so, I realize I have taken the University of Massachusetts for granted for the past two years.

Being here has made me realize how complicated contentment is. It is so hard to decide whether absence makes the heart grow fonder or if things are out of sight, out of mind. I think of Amherst often, and trust me, all of you reading this should be thankful you attend a university that is relatively inexpensive, extremely convenient, and big enough to offer true diversity and expression of ideas. The school I am studying at is fairly small with a high school like atmosphere of cliques and groups.

One outward characteristic that distinguishes the Americans from the Australians is that the fashion sense of some of the Aussies reminds me of a time in the United States when George Michael had Faith, hair spray was the only necessary accessory and A.C. Slater and Zach Morris were the cool kids on TV. Oh, and that Australians eat with their fork and knife, never putting them down until the meal is complete, which makes them look much more polite than messy eaters such as myself.

Although Australians are more laid back than Americans, it seems the patience is simply out of necessity. Any impatient or rushed person would never survive here (I'm barely coping), as the bus is never on time, restaurant service sucks (there is no tipping) and printing in the library and computer labs costs 12 cents per page.

In the United States, everything seems included, or at least readily available. Hungry at 8 p.m. when you're studying at the library? No problem, grab a sandwich at the Blue Wall. Here, nothing on campus is open past 5 p.m. and nothing is open on Sundays. In what seems like a sweet recollection of old fashioned traditions, the Aussies spend Sunday not at the mall, and not at the grocery store. What do they do? I'm still trying to figure it out.

As a multi-tasking, stressed American, the slow pace and inefficient workings of my present environment have been challenges for me to cope with. In the long run, it will be good for me to learn how to slow down, but for now, I just miss driving my own car, eating good food (the UMass dining halls are five-star restaurants compared to what I eat here everyday), and having a great town right at my fingertips.

I don't mean to sound as if spending five months is Australia is torturous, because it is anything but. I am so grateful I have this opportunity, but I am a person who takes a lot of time to adjust to new situations; so, at the moment, I am feeling a bit homesick. Studying abroad looks like endless, effortless fun when browsing through glossy brochures, but at times, it is a challenge to be as I am ... an American in the land down under.

Katy Noone is a Collegian columnist on exchange in Australia.

Letter to the Editor

To the Editor:

Friday's editorial, "Supporting child molesters," shows how people can so easily confuse opinion and rumor for factual information. We hope that in the future, such editorials will be researched for substantiation and veracity.

The sex abuse crisis of the Catholic Church is indeed horrifying. The Catholic Newman Center is working with the diocese to proactively keep the University of Massachusetts Catholic community properly informed about the crisis. We are committed to a church that is safe for children, that gives a voice to the voiceless and that can learn from its mistakes, as we seek to live out the mission of Jesus Christ.

-The Newman Center

Submit a letter

editorial@dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 2003 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

On-campus foods explored

Step up UMass flavor

PHOTOS BY GERALD H. LING/COLLEGIAN

The Hatch

By Glen Straub and Julia Kristan
Collegian Staff

Over the summer, it wasn't just the Minuteman getting a fresh new facelift.

The University of Massachusetts has had a long tradition of sub-par food on its campus, but those days are slowly becoming history, as new distributors move in and a variety of on-campus food sources revamp their style this academic year.

The Hatch, for starters, has transformed. Located at the bottom of the Student Union stairs, The Hatch has wide a selection of food options added this semester. Amherst's favorite burrito restaurant, Bueno Y Sano, opened a small shop in The Hatch on campus Monday. This Bueno, though, has a smaller menu than the Amherst center joint (i.e.: sans tacos and quesadillas), but the familiar tastes of those delicious burritos is the same.

It features spinach, veggie chili and chicken — with the usual options of guacamole and hot sauce. The station is set up much like the others in The Hatch, so you get to witness your burrito in the making as you move down the line. You can grab a drink on the way out for just over a dollar to wash down your burrito. The prices remain the same as the in-town counterpart, which fit quite nicely onto one YCMP swipe, while they also accept cash and debit.

The opening of the on-campus Bueno this week has excited those who work in the UMass food service department. According to retail manager at Campus Center Food Services, Edwin Anderson Jr., the plan has been in the works for a while, and it's beginning to payoff.

"It's a name brand and something we felt the students really liked," he said. "We thought we'd give it a try and it seems to be doing well – it's very busy."

According to Anderson, a Greek cuisine station, an Indian cuisine station and an Italian sandwich station will soon be opening in the Hatch as well, to go along with the fried chicken, soup, noodle bowl, Bueno and Domino's pizza stations that already exist.

HOT SPOTS

The Bluewall

The Bluewall, located on the Campus Center Concourse, is an eatery of many functions. It is the best place to grab a quick cup of coffee, bagel or muffin for breakfast. For lunch and dinner, there is a wide array of different foods including soup, sandwiches, pizza, hotdogs, fries and always a new entrée for the day.

The Bluewall is also slowly becoming a hangout club of sorts. A new Internet jukebox, flashy furniture and, of course, the full-service bar has greatly improved the atmosphere of the most popular on-campus dining venue.

-Christine Papazidis

The Marketplace Café

Located across from the UStore in the Campus Center, The Marketplace Café offers an affordable breakfast and lunch menu. With its large open seating area, which boasts a great view of the Campus Center water fountain, the marketplace offers a spacious yet intimate dining atmosphere.

The cafe's menu includes breakfast sandwiches on your choice of bagel or English muffin, as well as ready-to-serve dishes from around the world in its World Market section. If you crave affordable yet greasy Chinese food, this is your perfect place. And for the scholar on the run with a penchant for something more than a bagel, The Marketplace Café marks the spot.

- Cameron J. Woods

Dining Commons

Long lines, fights for tables and food that makes Burger King look like fine dining. Who doesn't love to eat at the UMass dining commons? Worcester, Franklin, Hampshire, Berkshire are the names and with two sections devoted to the main meals, a pasta and sandwich bar and an area that alternates by day — sometimes serving novelty items likes pretzels and baked potato — the dining commons make for interesting places to eat.

Once in awhile, the University produces culinary masterpieces, like the chicken Caesar salad, chicken nuggets or sushi. For the most part, however, keep a careful eye on most of the food, especially dishes the majority are avoiding; they may be the ones to come back to haunt you the next day.

For those with meal plans, the system beats spending cash on food everyday, and with just a simple swipe of a UCard, you too can have all of the culinary delights UMass has to offer.

-Jennifer Hubbard

People's Market

Are you looking for the best bagels in the Pioneer Valley?

Look no further than People's Market. They can save your day ... and your morning hunger pains.

People's Market is one of the most popular places to snag breakfast. Bring cash (the debit machine is slower than cold, hard cash). They move quickly, and it's well worth the wait.

This completely student-run co-op has all sorts of goodies — whether thirst or hunger strikes you. From fancy Odwalla shakes to piping hot coffee, the famous bagels to trail mix, everyone can find something tasty. Vegans, vegetarians and carnivores all have numerous options, as People's Market has deli slices, faux deli slices, cheese and faux cheese.

With chips, dips, drinks and even vegan gummy bears, this is the perfect stop between classes. Located near Earthfoods in the Student Union, People's Market serves from 8:45 a.m. till 4 p.m. on Mondays and Fridays and 8:45 a.m. till 5 p.m. Tuesdays through Thursdays.

-Julia Kristan

UMass set to face No. 7 KSU

Continued from page 8

Leftwich and [N.C. State's Philip] Rivers, so I think it would have helped us develop as a team to have the challenge of playing against him.

Now that Roberson is out, the Minutemen will both benefit from having one less potentially fatal dimension to worry about, and be faced with defending a quarterback who is mostly an unknown factor.

Even without Roberson, though, Masella and his charges will have plenty of explosive offense to defend. Tailback Darren Sproles is fourth in the nation with 325 rushing yards, and wideout James Terry's 271 receiving yards is good for fifth.

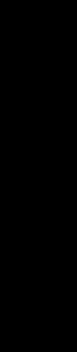
Terry could prove to be the game breaker, as Masella conceded that he might just be better than the cornerbacks and safeties assigned to cover him.

"If they throw it over the top and beat us, that means their athletes are just better than ours," Masella said.

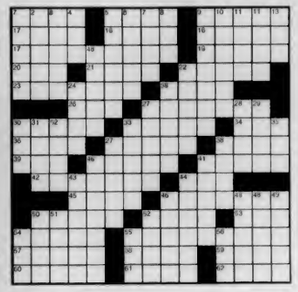
UMass will also be missing a few key components — both on offense and defense, with their two top running backs possibly out for Saturday. Raunny Rosario is a definite no-go after injuring his knee against Central Connecticut State. Also, sophomore R.J. Cobbs, touted as the best athlete on the team, missed the opener due to academic discipline. His status was unknown at press time. Wide receiver Greg Scott is also out with a shoulder injury, limiting quarterback Jeff Krohn's options when he goes to the air.

Offensively, though, all hope is not lost, thanks to the inspired performance by Steve Baylark last week. The sophomore wasn't originally supposed to work more than half of the snaps against Central Connecticut, but ended up taking on the full-time tailback role when Rosario went down in the first quarter. Baylark rushed for 146 yards on 22 carries, and found the endzone twice.

On defense, 2002 All-American Valdamar Brower is still on the road to recovery following double knee surgery, and though he is reported to be available for the game, his role will be limited to around 30 plays, Masella said.



Oasis Body Wraps and Tanning
243 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 587-9742
NOW FEATURING SUN SPRITZER UV FREE TANNING
• The first UV FREE tanning machine in the area
• Get $5.00 off your first visit
• A rich golden tan in just a few seconds
• You'll look and feel great
1/2 Price tanning every Tuesday
Conveniently Located
Unlimited Nights & Weekends. Fits all back-to-school schedules.
Unlimited
Night & Weekend
Airtime Minutes when on the America's Choice Network
Plus
1000 Anytime Mobile To Mobile
Minutes to call any of our 32.5 million customers on our nationwide mobile to mobile network.
Back to School Special!
Buy a Motorola V120E for only $49.99 and receive a FREE Hands-free Headset & Car Adapter
SAVE $100
New annual agreement required. Select accessory models. While supplies last. Limited time offer.
AMERICA'S CHOICE
400 anytime minutes FOR $39.99 monthly access With 1 or 2 year agreement.
Unlimited nationwide long distance. No roaming charges coast-to-coast.
All when calling on the America's Choice® network.
The America's Choice network covers more than 265 million people in the U.S. Network not available in all areas. Calls placed outside the calling plan area are 69¢/min. Mobile to Mobile not available throughout the America's Choice Network.
HADLEY
322 Russell St. • 413.587.3248
HOLYOKE
50 Holyoke Mall • 413.533.2500
@Wireless
www.shopatwireless.com
Camera phone NOW here! Bring in this ad and receive $10 OFF.
At participating @Wireless locations.
verizon wireless
Authorized Retailer
Important Consumer Information: Night & weekend hours: Mon-Fri. 6:01pm-5:59am Sat. 12am-Sun. 11:59pm. Subject to Customer Agreement and Calling Plan. $35 activation fee applies. $175 early termination fee applies. Requires credit approval. Cannot be combined with other service promotions. Usage rounded to next full minute. Unused allowances lost. Subject to taxes & other charges. Not available in all markets. Geographic and other restrictions apply. See brochure and sales representative for details. ©2003 Verizon Wireless.
LIQUORS 44
Welcome Back!
SMIRNOFF Twist All Flavors 1.0 liter $12.99
Crown Royal 1.75 liter $21.99
Jose Cuervo 1.75 liter $30.99
Crown Royal 750 ml $18.99
SMIRNOFF 80° Vodka 1.75 liter $18.99
BAILEYS Irish Cream 1.75 liter $34.99
Hennessy COGNAC 750 ml $24.99
Red Label 1.75 liter $31.99
Tanqueray Gin 1.75 liter $26.99
½ KEGS
Bud / Bud Light $49.99
Coors Light $49.99
Natural Light & Ice $44.99
Michelob & Michelob Light $52.99
Berkshire Brewing (All Flavors) $99.99
All Kegs Plus Deposit
AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344
FULL REDEMPTION AT ALL LOCATIONS
NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR TYPOGRAPHICAL ERRORS
DON'T DRINK & DRIVE
Student Jobs
Great Job opportunities for students in humanities and social sciences. Work to protect the environment and hold corporations accountable. Flexible Hours, fun progressive workplace, valuable job skills. We are seeking motivated, articulate, and creative people to organize in diverse communities around the valley. Call today, start tomarrow. $8-10 hr. plus bonus.
Clean Water Action:
584-9830
Fabulous Gift!
CLINIQUE Bonus is here!
With your Clinique purchase of $19.50 get this 7-piece gift, Free. Quantities are limited. Now thru Sunday, September 14th.
Fall Gift
7-piece Gift
Clarifying Lotion 2 • Moisture Surge Extra
High Impact Eye Shadow in Sugar Sugar • Colour Surge Lipstick in Wow Violet
Glosswear For Lips in Air Kiss • Clinique Happy Heart Perfume Spray
Cosmetic Bag
Cedar Chest
ARTFUL FURNISHINGS · QUALITY LINENS · IMAGINATIVE GIFTS
Thornes Marketplace · 150 Main St., Northampton, MA · 413-584-3860
GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 Savings on eyeglasses from the on-site Optical Services at UHS
2 A great place to get contact lenses
3 Convenient hours and location
4 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
5 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
SPECIAL OFFER:
10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.
For appointments or questions, call 577-5244
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES
Are you on a spiritual quest?
Seeking community?
Wonderig how to love Christ and creation?
Catholic Christianity may be the way for you.
Learn more during an informal inquiry session. Your hosts will relate journeys of faith, respond to queations, and describe how people come into full communion with the Church through RCIA (Rite of Christian Initiation for Adults) is a sacramental process in which the Church intiates new members.
The door is open: baptized and non-baptized adults are regularly called into communion through RCIA. Come and see if it is for you.
Inquiry Sessions:
September 14, 21, or 28, 2003
5:30-7:00 p.m.
Newman Center Quigley Room
Your hosts: Deacon Richard Talbot, Mrs. Joanne Talbot, Chris Clark
Info 413-549-0300
email: info@ncc-umass.org
Newman website: www.umass.edu/catholic
The Newmn Center
Is a Roman Catholic religious and cultural center located at the entrance of the University on the corner of North Pleasent St. and Massachusetts



ACROSS
1 — au lait
5 Perimeter
9 Cousin's dad
14 Type of seaman
15 Nurture
16 Gets stuck
17 Attendee's reward (2 wds.)
19 Ink
20 Tokyo, formerly
21 Political campaign
22 Risky
23 Home wrecker?
25 Lily-white
26 Jungle snake
27 Pizza toppers
30 Fragrant wood
33 Rancher's footwear
34 Cow's "second course"
36 Line of notation
37 Trattoria sauce
38 Field of study
39 "Who's Who" entry
40 "Nanotchka" star
41 Idahoe and reds
42 Streetcar
44 Monsieur's summer
45 Borscht ingredient
46 Credit cards, slangily
50 Tooth type
52 Hull part
53 Nurses org
54 Irritate
55 Good-lookers
57 River vessel
58 Let borrow
59 Three-sided sword
60 Knight's mount
61 Recruit's dinner
62 Feel sure of
DOWN
1 Military student
2 Residence
3 Elevator stop
4 Always, to Poe
5 Misprints
6 Fres of Insel
7 Steady look
8 Before now
9 Strike callers
10 Brother's girls
11 Hudson Bay tribe
12 Tax
13 WWII opposite
18 Abbot's underling
22 Because of (2 wds.)
24 CEO degrees
25 Scrapbook item
27 "I Spy" star
28 Light brown
29 Brought action
30 Urban transport
31 Freeway ramp
32 Designer label
33 Tarn
35 German article
37 More washed-out
38 Menace
40 Gathered slowly
41 Hunt down
43 Help out
44 Picks
46 Lowly laborers
47 Gray-brown
48 Pentium producer
49 Baseball's — Stengel
50 Steaks
51 Horrible boss
52 Elbow opposite
54 Toy gun ammo
55 Dutch airline
56 Above, to a bard

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

1-14-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Cheese Quesadilla (vegetarian)
- Philly Steak Sandwich
- Tofu Fricassee (vegan)

DINNER
- BBQ Chicken Quarters
- Baked Chicken Quarters
- Old Fashioned Beef Stew
- Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

THURSDAY
- High: 79
- Low: 53

FRIDAY
- High: 76
- Low: 52

SATURDAY
- High: 76
- Low: 56

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Gerald H. Ling
COPY EDITOR
Andrew Merritt
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Oliver Chong / Katie Dwan
Lindsay Clark

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Be careful when crowd surfing. People will steal your shoes.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Enjoy this moment. It's all downhill from here.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
We all know you are the best, but sometimes you need to just relax.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Don't worry about your financial problems. Buy a scratch ticket.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Stop wearing those old clothes. You're not as small as you used to be.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Don't download anything today; a virus is lurking in cyber space for you.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Don't cut through a building on your way to class. They just waxed the floors.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
The help you gave to someone will be returned tenfold when you need it.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You're not managing your time well. That will come to bite you in the ass.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Stop drinking, smoking and procrastinating. You need to get work done first.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
When bathing your turtle, be sure to have a container it can't crawl out of.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You're late; stop reading, and get on your way.

Quote for the Day

"No race can prosper till it learns that there is as much dignity in tilling a field as writing a poem."

-Booker T. Washington

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ACTIVITIES

Montreal Weekends $99. Includes R/T Luxury Motor Coach from Springfield. 3 Days-2 Nights- 4 Star Hotel Downtown-Meals-Night Club passes. www.montrealexpress.net 1-781-979-9001 Special Group Rates

AUTO FOR SALE

Honda 97 Prelude, VTEC, 98K Miles, Silver with Black leather interior, 5speed, CD/AC, sunroof, runs excellent. $10,500 549-1368

1992 Silver Subaru Stationwagon 140K, dependable, Call 546-0383 after 6p.m.

AUTO FOR SALE

1988 Mazda $950 413-586-5728

Jeep Cherokee Sport- 1995. Perfect student car, A/C, Great CD system, original owner, excellent condition, 90K, automatic. 413-296-0060 $3,600 or O.B.O.

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local ,positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

Experienced Linecook to work in high volume upbeat professional kitchen $13/hr to start plus great benefits. Apply in person after 10a.m. Eastside Grill 19 Strong Ave. Northampton.

Dishwasher Great Part-time Evening/Weekend position 9.25/hr to start. Must be 18yrs old. Apply in-person after 12p.m. East Side Grill 19 Strong Ave. Northampton.

Personal Assistant Wanted Days, Evenings & overnights avail. $10.36 hr. Call Martina 323-9248 Martina@student.umass.edu

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers and Kitchen help wanted Apply at D.P. Dough. Downtown Amherst

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Moving: Local moving company looking for self-motivated individuals for part time positions. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are must. Call (413) 584-4746

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

FOR SALE

Two desks for sale. Good cond. Call: 508-272-2810.

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jagtly.com or (413)253-0051.

INSTRUCTION

Learn to SCUBA Dive Curry Hicks Pool Monday, Tuesday, or Wednesday 7pm to 10pm. Classes start Sept 8 Call Project Deep 800-282-0977

Jazz Piano Lessons Explore your creativity Beginner to Advanced Learn a wide range of styles Reasonable Rates Contact Stephen Page at 413-297-7910

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons- w/retired pro Djata Bumpus. In'Northampton. 584-1966 or visit www.westernmassboxing.com

MISCELLANEOUS

Want to buy/sell TEXTBOOKS & other stuff LOCALLY? ... NO shipping hassles, NO payment middlemen! All 4 FREE! Visit www.collegeshack.com today!

ROOM FOR RENT

House on Route 9. Convenient location less than 1/2 mile from campus On Bus Route. 2 Bathrooms contact: elanbabchuck@hotmail.com or call 413-348-5192

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female geek seeks roommate to share spacious 1 BR Puffton apt. Call Lisa at 549-4248 or email ladlergo@student.umass.edu

SERVICES

Legal questions? The Student Legal Services Office offers free legal assistance to fee-paying students. Contact us at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

TRAVEL

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now ... Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1-800-426-7710

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. 1-800-648-4849

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

Reach thousands of readers! Advertise in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Classifieds! Come down to the Campus Center Basement or call 545-3500!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A daunting task

UMass set to face national power K-State

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

KSU stadium is a first-rate college football facility, with all sorts of amenities and a large scoreboard that holds all the pertinent information about the game being played.

But if you really want to know how Saturday's game between Massachusetts and Kansas State is going, just take a look at Mark Whipple, Tom Masella, and the rest of the UMass bench after the first quarter. Because if the score is close, then the activity on the Minuteman sideline is sure to be frenzied.

The No. 7 Wildcats are UMass' fourth I-A opponent in five years. In that time, the Minutemen lost to Toledo (24-3) in 1999, Marshall (49-20) in 2001 and North Carolina State (56-24) last season.

But this year, says the coaching staff, might just be different. Although K-State is among the elite college football programs in the nation, this UMass team is older and wiser, and the memories of the loss to N.C. State is still fresh in the mind of those who were there.

The Minutemen quickly found themselves down when the Wolfpack scored on their second play of the game. N.C. State then racked up 21 points in the first quarter, and that was plenty enough cushion. The Maroon and White managed to put together a solid game the rest of the way, though, and many regarded it as one of the best performances of the season.

"Hopefully we'll handle the first quarter," Masella said. "If we can get out of the first quarter in a close game, then let's go play.

"This game, we don't have to talk to the kids about being sky-high. They want to play this game, so you just go prepare them, and say, 'listen, it's going to be fast on Saturday, and it's going to be loud on Saturday.' We just need to get through the first quarter."

K-State is averaging 30.6 points in the first half, but just 15.3 points after halftime.

The Wildcats will be without quarterback Ell Roberson, who injured his non-throwing hand in KSU's 55-14 win over I-AA McNeese State on Sept. 6. But coach Bill Snyder isn't too concerned about backup Jeff Schwinn.

"He's an extremely hard worker," Snyder said of Schwinn in a press conference Tuesday. "He prepares himself. He is diligent. He's focused. He's one of those guys that does all the things you ask him to do snap after snap."

"Schwinn is a good quarterback as well," UMass coach Mark Whipple said in Monday's Atlantic 10 Teleconference. "so our biggest concern is how do we handle the speed and size of Kansas State in the first 15 minutes.

"They just knock everybody out in the first 15 minutes, and you are playing from behind, so we need to start the game strong. We have faced some good I-A quarterbacks the last few years in [Marshall's] Byron

Continued on page 6

GERALD H. LING/COLLEGIAN

Steve Baylark and the Minutemen will face the toughest opponent the team has ever scheduled this Saturday, when they travel to KSU Stadium in Manhattan, Kan. to face Division I-A No. 7 Kansas State.

COURTESY KANSAS STATE MEDIA RELATIONS

K-State tailback Darren Sproles has rushed for 332 yards and three touchdowns this season.

What the Minutemen must do

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

So you want to play with fire, scarecrow?

It's the question Massachusetts football coach Mark Whipple had to have been asking himself when he added powerhouse I-A National Championship contender Kansas State to his non-conference schedule, for it is without a doubt the toughest opponent to ever appear on the Minutemen's docket.

After all, these Wildcats have only lost one game outside of the ultra-competitive Big XII in the last 10 years, and that was to Pac-10 stalwart USC. They are legitimate threats to become the nation's top team at some point this season and will surely be out for blood in order to prove their dominant nature against a supposed I-AA weakling.

In addition, they also pasted I-AA top dog McNeese State 55-14 just last weekend, and will be ranked No. 7 in the Associated Press NCAA Division I poll when they take the field in front of 50,000 plus purple-clad fans this Saturday at KSU Stadium — expected to be the largest crowd ever to attend a UMass football game.

Whipple needs to come up with the game plan that will beat this monster, and he has to convince every single one of his players and staff — the ones who will put his plan into action and make it happen on the field — that it'll work, against the best talent they've ever shared a stadium with.

Here are a few main things the Minutemen must do to have a shot at success on Saturday.

Block out the crowd

The hostile crowd at KSU Stadium will be on UMass' case from the moment they exit the tunnel, and they will be as loud as this squad will hear all year. The Minutemen benefit from having played at North Carolina State last year, but Whipple will need to keep his players' heads in the game as much as possible.

Get through the first quarter

This is an explosive K-State squad who is playing for a conference and national title. It will look to establish its supremacy early, and the Minutemen need to be ready for it.

The Wildcats are also the fastest team UMass will see all season by far, and things will happen in a hurry. The Minutemen can't be caught standing around watching, and they can't be overwhelmed. If they can minimize the shell shock and the big plays they give up on defense and not turn the ball over in the opening frame, they'll be better suited to hang in down the stretch.

No turnovers, no penalties

While early turnovers will definitely spell doom for Whipple's squad, turnovers in general will ruin even the best-laid plans for victory.

UMass cannot give the 'Cats' high powered offense more than its allotted chances to score, and must hold onto the football to keep control of the clock and allow the defense to rest on the sideline. Nor can they give up extra yardage with unnecessary penalties.

Establish the run, stop the run

It's an old football adage that says the team who runs the ball and stops the run will win the game, and that's certainly the case here.

K-State tailback Darren Sproles may be one of the smallest backs Tom Masella's defense encounters this year, but he will be without a doubt the quickest and most talented.

Being without Heisman Trophy candidate Ell Roberson will work in the Minutemen's favor in that back-up Jeff Schwinn will be far less potent in running spot option plays, but UMass must keep Sproles from getting outside the tackles and showcasing his speed.

If Masella's is able to stop the run and force passing downs, the Minutemen will keep K-State from grinding the pace down on offense and wearing the defense down. And if they couple that with getting Steve Baylark and his backfield mates going up field, UMass will control the pace and keep the Wildcat offense on the sideline.

Play to their ability

This is the most important thing Whipple and his staff will preach to their players, as playing scared will most certainly spell imminent doom.

Despite the fact that they're playing on the biggest stage and best foe they've ever encountered, it's still a football game. Whipple knows he has some very talented football players to work with, but they will not fare well if they aren't able to avoid being intimidated and don't play football like they're capable of.

They need to get the jitters out early and perform to the best of their ability to have a shot.

COURTESY KANSAS STATE MEDIA RELATIONS

Jeff Schwinn will replace Heisman Trophy candidate Ell Roberson at quarterback for Kansas State this Saturday when the No. 7 Wildcats host UMass.

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 8

ALANA storms Senate Office

GERALD H. LING/COLLEGIAN

Jose Perez and Ratdavone Yotharath voice their opinions about the structure of SGA on the Student Union.

By Erika Lovley
Collegian Staff

ALANA supporters rallied outside the Student Union yesterday before storming the Senate speaker Jared Noke's office in protest of the elimination of ALANA representative seats from the Student Government Association.

"Today marks the beginning of the end," said Aiysha Cooper, a speaker at the rally. "Today the Student Government Association will be taken care of."

"We are going to do this as many times as necessary," announced Gladys Franco, an organizer of the protest and an ALANA member. Franco handed a list of demands to Jared Nokes, which included a reversal of his decision.

Voices in the crowd shouted "this is what democracy looks like," and chanted "we want justice. We want diversity. When do we want it? NOW."

Demands made by ALANA included a public apology from Speaker Nokes, a reversal of his position on the senate seats, and public declarations from Secretary Russell Plato and President David Carr. Finally, the proposal called for a renewed focus on admitting more students of color, especially those from lower class families.

"Nokes cannot overpass the judiciary rulings [of the past]. We will be there on the day of the first SGA meeting," said Franco. "This [struggle] is about power. It is about greed and about taking from those who have nothing," she explained, referring to the $1.7 million that the SGA currently controls. Franco also gave the crowd a moment to pause to remember the victims of Sept. 11.

The rally hosted many speakers including Gladys Franco, Rene Gonzalez, Aiysha Cooper, Tom Taft and Eduardo Bustamante. "From what I can see, the SGA is being misleading and dishonest, shiftless and deceitful," said ALANA member Bustamonte to the crowds gathered around the student union and surrounding lawns.

Speaker Rene Gonzalez cited a Booker T. Washington quote that ran in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian on Thursday. "If you haven't read Booker T. Washington and W.E.B. DuBois, you should. This is not just literature. This is the stuff we are made of," said Gonzalez, a six-year doctoral student studying political science.

Gonzalez explained to the crowd that Speaker Jared Nokes has no legal grounds by which to remove the ALANA seats from the SGA. Also, due to the dissolve of the judiciary branch, Gonzalez believes Nokes is taking full advantage of his power and the situation. The judiciary branch determines the seats on the caucus, and is currently not functioning, a situation he accuses Nokes of taking advantage of. Gonzalez also noted that the topic had already been voted upon in 2000 and it had been decided by student voters to keep the caucus seats.

"That was the voice," he claimed. "Dictator Nokes should be impeached! This arrogant little man comes to UMass as an undergraduate and declares the end of 30 years of progressive change. This decision was offensive and insulting."

President David Carr also caught heat from the ALANA speakers, due to his decision to remain neutral on the issue. "Where is President David Carr?" Gonzalez asked the crowd. "Why will he not pronounce himself in the favor of justice? ALANA is being exploited, abused and insulted."

Aiysha Cooper explained that the rally and the caucus were not only for students of color. Anyone who supports multi-cultural advancement for all races is urged to join ALANA and register for a position in the caucus.

"Students have power against the republican club. If we had voiced our voices about this earlier, this wouldn't have to be dealt with."

Cindy Gomes, a junior transfer student and rising ALANA member was present in the crowd at the rally.

"I'm looking to join the Cape Viridian association. It really helps minorities, and we minorities truly rely on [ALANA]. We don't want to see that go."

When asked what she would do to help ALANA's future, Gomes had these words of encouragement. "I would want to run for a position in the caucus," she said.

Ferris Clair, another ALANA member, had been anticipating the event. "I have been anxious to see what people have to say. ALANA is not just about minorities. It's about the disabled and it's about equality. It's about promoting multicultural diversity."

Tom Taft based his speech to the events of Sept. 11.

"When those planes hit the buildings, they crashed into my neighborhood," he said. "I had to protect my friend walking down the streets of Northampton because of the color of his skin. That day, people were looking for any dark-skinned person to beat up."

Taft, whose family worked in the Twin Towers, instructed the crowd on overthrowing the SGA ruling.

"The SGA will take advantage of your fear. Do not let them," he said.

Taft also sited general corruption on the UMass campus, such as the poor condition of the library and the loss of teachers.

"Thirteen years ago, there were 1,600 teachers," he said. "Today there are 700, and we are about to lose 50 more by the end of the term."

In support of the ALANA students, Taft closed with this advice to the crowd: "The measure of a person is his ability to stand up when no one else will."

Students interested in applying for a position on the ALANA caucus can do so by emailing caucus@stuaf.umass.edu.

Low turn out at Sept. 11 memorial

By Kelly Farrell
Collegian Staff

Thousands of people around the world held memorial services in commemoration of the people who lost their lives in the attacks on the World Trade Center and Pentagon on Sept. 11, 2001.

The vast majority of University of Massachusetts students and staff, however, did not attend the on-campus vigil yesterday. Three people stood in front of the Student Union steps at 8 p.m. last night. The service to commemorate the events of two years ago was organized last minute. By 8:30 p.m. attendance rose to its highest level of about 30 people.

"Not exactly a thousand points of light," said Brian Plankey, a senior political science and history major.

Plankey said he had friends and family in Manhattan during the attacks two years ago.

"It was a long couple of days ... just waiting to hear from them," he said.

Plankey said he was disappointed in the turnout and how it reflected the UMass community.

Maria Rillotta and Tera Bromberg, both seniors and psychology majors from Brooklyn, N.Y., organized the event upon learning that there were no ceremonies planned on campus.

"I looked at the school paper today [Sept. 11, 2003] and there was nothing," Bromberg said.

Then she said that she and Rillotta walked around campus to find an event that they could attend in order to memorialize Sept. 11.

"Not one moment of our time. Not one page in our paper," Bromberg said explaining how both her and Rillotta's shock led to less than 24-hours of time for organizing their own Sept. 11 commemorative event.

Although many were disappointed with the turnout, Bromberg and Rillotta both said they were pleased that everyone who came made it out.

"This was just planned today by the two of us," Rillotta explained. "Out of the 2,000 people we spoke to and handed flyers to ... Thank you for coming."

Continued on page 2

Michelle Choquette and Tony Perez watch as speaker Tera Bromberg tells her personal experience of 9/11. Choquette and Perez both said they were disappointed with the turnout but appreciative of the speakers.

Community service learning fair success

By Alyson Zillmann
Collegian Correspondent

The Campus Center Auditorium was humming with the voices of students and recruiters Wednesday from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the annual Community Service Learning Fair.

Students roamed freely between the dozens of tables set up in the auditorium for the wide variety of non-profit, volunteer-based organizations. The types of organizations present ranged anywhere from animal shelters to children's programs, from the Red Cross, to the Peace Corps. Although the students that came were from a mix of major backgrounds, all shared one thing in common — a desire to volunteer.

Many of the students that were there began their volunteer work as part of class requirements and liked it so much that they decided to continue volunteering on their own.

Nicholas Demas, a senior sociology major, was among the students at the fair. Demes had a table set up for the University's Alternative Spring Break program, which is part of the anthropology department. Last year, as part of the program, he helped set the foundation for a new building in a small southern town. He said he enjoyed the program so much that he chose to co-facilitate it this year.

Sean Laurent, a senior psychology major, started volunteering as part of a practicum for a psychology class.

"Now I want to volunteer regardless of whether it's attached to a class or not," said Laurent, who got information from many of the booths. "Working for these organizations is kind of addictive."

Some of the students came with only one interest in mind, or one organization in particular.

Sunitha Menon, a senior, said she wanted to join the Peace Corps after graduation, and an advisor told her she should have some volunteer experience first. Menon said she was mostly interested in volunteer work involving children.

Jen McNaught, a sophomore animal science major, said she came to sign up at the Everywoman's Center. She said she had done some work with issues of dating violence in high school and wanted to continue along this path.

Nancy Condon, who represented The Zoo in Forest Park, said that she has been coming to the fair, which used to be held in the Student Union Ballroom, for several years now. She said that this year the space was smaller and it seemed like there were fewer students than usual.

An attendant at the Tobacco-Free Network said that although fewer people were signing up, the participants were all enthusiastic.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 3
DRUG TESTING FOR CHALLENGE DUE TO DRUGS
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 4
SHEEP POETRY LOCAL POETS TAKE TO THE STAGE
SPORTS PAGE 8
START YOUR ENGINES UMASS ADIDAS CLASSIC KICKS OFF
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 7

Firefight in Iraq kills soldier

By Hrvoje Hranjaki
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Attackers fired rocket-propelled grenades at a U.S. military convoy west of Baghdad Thursday, touching off an intense firefight that left at least one American soldier wounded, the military said. Tanks and other vehicles from the 3rd Armored Cavalry Regiment came under attack in Fallujah, part of the dangerous "Sunni Triangle" region about 60 miles west of the capital, U.S. Army Capt. Jeff Fitzgibbons, coalition spokesman in Baghdad, told AP Radio.

Other "U.S. forces responding to the scene came under fire and returned fire at houses nearby," Fitzgibbons said.

One U.S. soldier was wounded, said Fitzgibbons and a Pentagon official who spoke on condition of anonymity. There was no information regarding casualties among attackers.

Two U.S. military trucks were also destroyed during the lighting along Highway 10, the officials said.

The Fallujah region has been one of the most dangerous for U.S. soldiers. Support for ousted dictator Saddam Hussein runs strongest in the region.

Associated Press Television News pictures from Khaldia, 20 miles west of Fallujah, showed a burning tank transport truck, a burning 5-ton truck and at least one burning Humvee.

Kanaan Ali Ibrahim, a witness, said the convoy was moving from Habaniya to Ramadi when Iraqi "mujahedeen" ambushed it with rocket-propelled grenades.

A small crowd gathered at the scene of the attack and began shouting jubilantly "Allahu Akbar," or God is great, and "Oh, Iraq, we sacrifice our lives and blood for you."

An Abrams tank could be seen on the APTN video and there was the sound of a prolonged gunbattle, with the shooting appearing to be coming mainly from the tank and other heavy guns. The Iraqi guerrillas that carry out such ambushes normally carry only Kalashnikov automatic rifles and rocket-propelled grenades.

Earlier, an American soldier died Thursday in a highly unusual accident, the military reported. The soldier was killed and two others were slightly injured when a tire they were changing on a "heavy expanded mobility tactical truck" exploded, the U.S. Central Command said. The incident occurred near Balad, 45 miles north of Baghdad.

Meanwhile, the top American military man in Iraq said Thursday the country was becoming the key battlefield for the U.S.-led war on terrorism — a war he said would not end quickly.

"It's clear to me that this is the next battleground in the global war on terrorism that we have been on now for two years," Lt. Gen. Ricardo Sanchez told reporters. "It's a war that will continue for some time. But there's absolutely no question in my mind that the American people are committed to winning this war."

He said the increasing threat of terrorist attacks in Iraq was "a natural follow-up battle in that war on terrorism" that began with the U.S.-led ouster of the Taliban regime and its al-Qaida allies from Afghanistan.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Streadt
Comics Editor Robert Kryskowski
Editorial Editor Erika Lovley
News Editor Courtney Charles
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resources Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lugaric
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Assistant Production Lita Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Jessica Pelletier
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Kelly Farrell
Assistant News Ferron Salniker
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marzelli

9/11 service held

Continued from page 1

Although Rillotta and Bromberg understood the low turnout, they and others in the crowd expressed their shock and disappointment.

"It is so sad that two years ago everything stopped ... But it still affects us all indirectly, but it seems nobody cares about that. It's shocking," said Cyd Igot, a freshman education major.

Igot, from Washington, D.C., strained to explain the two hours "of nerve racking waiting" to hear whether her father was okay.

Write for news

Campus Perspectives

"How do you feel about the eliminaion of the ALANA caucus from the SGA?"

By Gerald H. Ling

Senior
Art

"I don't think the seats should be eliminated. Why this is suddenly an issue after the seats have been there for so long is confusing to me."
- Angela Zammerilli

Junior
Geography & French

"I think that there should be a fair representation of students. Since the constitution doesn't allow them to have seats then they should be offered the opportunity to get them back democratically."
- Dan Gosselin

Senior
Economics

"I have no idea."
- Brendan Joyce

Junior
Psychology

"I support the ALANA caucus because we are all minorities and need to be represented."
- Jevon Rice

Senior
Art

"I don't know enough about the issue to comment."
-Phil McBride

Junior
STPEC

"I think that the elimination of the ALANA caucus from the SGA hurts the SGA's service to the UMass body because it narrows the opinions that they recieve."
- Robert Porter

CVS pharmacy
1 Hour Photo
Student Discount
$1.00 off 1 hour processing (prints only)
$2.00 off 1 hour digital processing (prints & cd)
Valid Student ID required.
Available at both Amherst locations only.
Original roll developing only.
Offer ends:
Sept. 30, 2003

Calling all college students:
Talk clear across the country with Sprint.

1000 Anytime Minutes for $40/month
Call to anywhere in the U.S. from anywhere on the New England and New York Metro PCS Network.
Nationwide Long Distance Included. Every Minute, every day.

FREE PCS Phone:
Get the LG 1200 & Nokia 3585i FREE after $100 savings (instant or mail-in) with activation of a new line of service.

Flexible credit options available - exclusively for students!

Visit the Sprint Store or authorized retailer near you:

Sprint Store The PCS Center
The Sprint Store At RadioShack.
BEST BUY

West Springfield
1102 Riverdale St.

Manchester
189 Deming St.

Save $36 - now only through September 14th!
Bring in this coupon to receive an activation fee refund at any Sprint Store or authorized retailer.

Area-wide Plan: Offer ends 11/27/2003. Plans only available to customers activating in the Area Markets of New York Metro, Boston, Hartford, Providence, RI, and Portland, ME. New York Metro includes the Boroughs of New York City Westchester & Rockland Counties of New York, Long Island, Fairfield County, CT, and North and Central New Jersey. New England includes CT, MA, NH, RI & ME. Subject to credit. Night & Weekend hours are Monday Thursday 9pm - 7am and Friday 9pm - Monday 7am. PCS & Nokia phones require $150 Early Termination Fee apply. A deposit may apply. Plan minutes may not be used for call outside the extended calling area or for calls made while roaming. All rates are subject to change. Roaming calls will incur a charge of $0.99 per minute. Voice usage rounded to the next whole minute. Phone Discounts: Offer ends 9/27/2003. While supplies last. Mail-in rebate requires purchase of phone(s) being promoted and activation by 9/27/2003 with an eligible Sprint PCS Advantage Agreement. Available with in-store purchase and activation by 9/27/2003 only at participating Sprint Stores, RadioShack, Best Buy and select Authorized Dealers. Instant Discounts require 2 year Advantage Agreement. Mail-in rebate requires purchase of phone(s) by 9/27/2003 with activation by 10/11/03. Allow 10-12 weeks for rebate check. Service Credit: Requires purchase of a new PCS Phone with activation on a new line of service from 8/19/2003-9/14/2003. Service Credit will appear within the first 3 invoices. Service Credit forms must be postmarked by 9/15/2003. Not available with Add-a-phone offers. Only available in the Area Markets of New York Metro, Boston, Hartford, Providence, RI and Portland, ME. Offers subject to change without notice. See PCS Service Plans Guide for service plan details and the PCS Service Area Guide for coverage details. May not be combinable with other offers.

EDITORIAL OPINION

ALANA issues addressed: a call for democracy.

After yesterday, the argument over the removal of appointed seats in the Student Government Association Senate has reached the point where ultimatums have been delivered. Rene Gonzalez of the Office of African, Latino/a, Asian and Native American Affairs did so as a part of yesterday's rally on the Student Union steps, saying that there will be no peace at the University of Massachusetts until the seats are restored. The ultimatum solves nothing and was a statement based on anger, not reason.

Nevertheless, ALANA has some legitimate complaints, and they need to be addressed. SGA Speaker Jared Nokes's claim that he cannot uphold appointed seats in the SGA Senate because of conflicts in the SGA by-laws and constitution does not hold water — not when that case was heard two years ago in the SGA judiciary and the seats were declared constitutional. Nokes says it is imperative that the appointed seats are stricken immediately from the Senate for fear that the University's board of trustees will find the SGA governing body illegitimate and take their power away.

But what are the odds of this? Almost zero. Even Nokes admitted to The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Wednesday that the SGA has been operating for 10 years without any trustee interference — a time period in which the by-laws and constitution were in conflict the entire time without any issues raised. As it was once said in a fable, the sky is not falling.

Nokes has created a public relations nightmare by choosing not to recognize the seats this time, and has further compounded that problem thanks to the timing late last spring and manner in which it was done. In 2001, a question regarding the status of caucus seats appeared on the general election ballot. In that incident, the seats were recognized the entire time their existence was under question.

That is the democratic process. Nokes is right in saying that if the appointed seats are going to be a part of the SGA Senate, they should be provided for in the SGA Constitution. This issue has come up too many times in the last 10 years for it to be any other way.

The Collegian proposes this: ALANA seats should be recognized for the 2003-04 school year. The reasoning for and the way in which the elimination was carried out are not sound, and therefore, should not be applied.

That will not solve this problem though — the by-laws and constitution can still be interpreted to be in conflict with one another, and this issue will never go away until that situation is remedied.

In addition, the Collegian believes that the amendment Nokes wants on the Sept. 25 ballot should come to be. Students need the opportunity to get out and vote on an issue that obviously matters to many people.

If students vote in favor of keeping appointed seats like ALANA's in the Senate, every effort should be made to develop and propose an amendment for the constitution that would go to the board of trustees for approval.

However, if the board of trustees follows previous suit and denies the amendment ratification, appointed seats should cease to exist. There are other alternatives that can be considered to make the Senate diverse, and they're options that deserve exploring if the amendment fails. This issue cannot go on in cycles like this forever. It's about time some reason is applied to the issue and the democratic process is used to find a satisfactory compromise for all parties involved.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Drug Testing: employee plague?

Morris Singer

Trying to find a job this past summer presented a greater challenge than I anticipated. There were some issues I did expect to encounter. For example, I had already figured I would not find employment that involved interesting work. I also knew that the job market was difficult and it would be hard to get an offer anywhere. What I didn't expect was to have to take a drug screening urinalysis test.

At first I attempted to avoid looking for work in places that demanded I surrender my urine for examination. However, after quick survey of the few places in my area that were even accepting applications, I discovered that the vast majority of minimum-wage jobs insisted I oblige to their bathroom fetish.

United Labs, a major drug testing corporation, offered this fact in their publication, "In Favor of a Drug-Free Workplace: Why Drug Testing?"A 1997 American Management Association study revealed that 81 percent of surveyed companies enforce a drug-free workplace through the use of mandatory drug testing of its employees and applicants. The number represents a 277 percent increase since 1987.

The startling numbers raise a question: Why? Why are employers interested in spending large amounts of money in order to uncover this private detail of the lives of their employees? Why do drug-screening companies like United Labs feel that drug screening is so important? Why are people arguing that it is necessary to expose this information to employers?

Advocates of the drug-free workplace argue three reasons that support their claims for the necessity of drug testing. They attempt to justify the concept through a need for safety, competence and reliability. However, none of the three holds strong to examination.

Drug screening labs make a strong case for safety in the workplace. In the introduction to the United Labs publication, it says: "If people use drugs at work, they won't be able to do their jobs well and they might end up killing millions of people."

It cites a study by the National Safety Council in which it was reported that 80 percent of those injured at work in "serious" drug-related accidents are the coworkers of those who use drugs at work. According to the council, this statistic proves that employees who use drugs on the job, or at any time that affect employee work hours, have a greater chance of hurting their co-workers.

But what about an employee who separates the recreational use of drugs from his time on the job? Is he really a danger to those whom he works with? Is is my assertion that an employee who is never under the influence of drugs at work will not endanger the lives of any work-related people due to his drug involvement.

Therefore, a suitable drug test

What about an employee who separates the recreational use of drugs from his time on the job? Is he really a danger to those whom he works with?

for job safety would show a positive result only if the employee is under the influence of drugs during the time of the test.

However, the current standard of drug screening does not distinguish between drugs which affect the user on the job and drug use unrelated to work. In fact, with the current test, some drugs are detectable for up to six weeks after use. The test fails to indicate safety hazards because it does not distinguish between arguably harmless drug use and drugs taken at a time when its effects could interfere with work.

Proponents of drug screening also stress the need for a competent workforce. In advocating their policies, they argue that employees who use drugs — on or off the job — work less efficiently or become increasingly incompetent. They also cite a Gallup survey in which 63 percent of surveyed employees feel that substance abuse interferes with productivity.

What they fail to realize is that inefficiency and incompetence are the only relevant drug-related results. The actual cause of an employee's poor performance should not be important to the employer. Instead, only the problem itself should be of concern, and only the effects that the lacking employee has on company functions should be used as a basis for disciplinary action.

Perhaps if the employee wishes to offer an acceptable reason for his lack of performance, the employer could consider information that is voluntarily submitted (and suitably verified). In such a case, a person with a medical excuse may have a valid defense, whereas a drug user would not. Here, the employee still has the opportunity to defend his job, and the employer still has the ability to rid his workforce of incompetence. The drug test would add nothing of value.

Drug-screening supporters also highlight the necessity of their tests by emphasizing the health risks of drug use. According to the United Labs publication, the results of a study show that 9 percent of drug users have missed 2 or more days of work in an average month due to health-related reasons. Therefore, drug users are more likely to need days off.

It is plausible for a company to weed out employees who are affected by health problems or have the need to take a medical leave. However, employers seem to have forgotten about other activities their workers may engage in which pose equal health risks. Everything from cigarette smoking to skydiving is potentially harmful, yet employers do not screen for these. Clearly the health risk associated with drug use is not the real cause for concern.

The main arguments supporting drug screening do not hold up to scrutiny. So why are more and more corporations instituting a drug-free workplace? One word: liability. America is a litigious society. The fear of potentially devastating lawsuits is causing corporate America to institute drug-free workplace policies en masse. Corporations are watching their backs, and working Americans are losing. Because of these policies, I found it challenging to find a job that did not violate my privacy. I'm sure I'm not the only one.

Morris Singer is a Collegian columnist.

Old School, New School

Dear Incoming Freshmen,

If you're reading this letter, you already know. Your My Body My Health class sucks — the professor, the kid with awful BO sitting next to you, and everything else. I'll be in the Ed/Op Section every other Friday to help you get through this.

I love you,
Matt

Matt Brochu

Chances are, a month ago you called up your roommate (who you thought was cool at orientation but has since become a huge tool), and got all excited about college life in unison. You then went out with the parents and had yourselves a nice little Saturday — hit up Home Depot, maybe even Bed Bath & Beyond to get your crummy shower tote.

While you were there, you probably discovered the "Beyond" Section and bought a whole bunch of ridiculous garbage that will never see the light of day, except for that one plastic beauty you'll manage to convert into a funnel two months into school, which is just priceless. But hey, Columbus wasn't looking for America, my man, and that seemed to work out for everybody, didn't it? You're here. Ya know what I mean?

So now you're all stocked up and all moved in. What's next? Books. Actually books aren't next at all. Don't buy them until two weeks after classes start. In fact, for the first two months of school, I recommend that you give nothing back to the academic community, as well as provide no public service of any kind (except to that guy who picks up cans in nothing but overalls in uptown Amherst). So what's really next? Parties.

Yeah, the University of Massachusetts is full of them, and 75 percent of them suck. But you're freshmen, so you won't really care, and that's what the frats are for. They're like that girl down the hall that you hooked up with your first night here because a certain Captain said it was OK. Like you did the morning after, you'll wake up a year from now and say to yourself, "What the hell was I thinking?" Then you'll remove your boxers from the fish tank and leave the room swearing to yourself, "Never again." Basically, this means not until next weekend. You'll soon come to find out that UMass isn't really a party school; it's a drinking school. And yes, there is a difference.

Without a doubt, parties ironically lead to courtship. I'm not going to sugarcoat it for you. You're going to get so much action here, it's gonna be sick. I'm talking like crazy boy band action. When that girl in the halter-top (yeah, the one who has no idea that it's 22 degrees in Amherst tonight) spots you (yeah, the disease-free gentlemen who has no idea how white and uncoordinated he actually is) stumbling around the dance floor, she can't help but find herself wondering what color your underpants are. I mean, chances are, they're your average white cotton underpants, but maybe they're silk. Maybe it's a thong. Maybe it's something really cool that she doesn't even know about. Soon, she'll walk on over and say, "Hey Mike," and before you know it, you'll be in your room with the Sisqo CD on, groping and rolling around on your bed.

So yes, all kinds of hook-ups are going to happen. It's really just a matter of preference (hmmm ... cheerleader or nurse?). But don't overdo it. Even though all we are is dust in the wind, no one likes a whore. Okay, well everyone likes a whore, but for God's sake, don't be the kid-who-makes-a-girlfriend-out-of-the-first-girl-he-hooks-up-with-in-college-who-just-so-happens-to-live-right-across-the-hall. Yeah, she's ok, but I want you to get out of it while you still can. Otherwise, let me be the first to congratulate you. You're stuck with one vagina for the rest of the semester. Really smart, buddy, way to work it through.

That next morning, you'll crawl to the dining hall to get some brunch just before 2 p.m. Yeah, we call it the DC. It's weird. You're friends from home will make comments, but ya know what? There's no escaping from it, so deal. As far as the DC goes, if you're really hungry, it's pretty decent. Once it hits your lips, it's so good. My recommendation would have to be anything with cheese.

It'll fill you up and keep you warm while you're walkin'-in-our-winter-wonder-wind-tunnel campus on those February days. So how do you fight the cold? One word, two syllables: earmuffs. But these may cause problems. They might render your hearing worse than my grandpa's while World Wrestling Entertainment is on. People can come up to you and utter a whole string of obscenities, whatever they want. You'll be the clueless idiot walking around with pom-poms on his ears.

So that's about it. I wish someone had laid it all out for me like this when I first came to school. Hopefully, you won't make the same mistakes I made. Now, I'm going streaking through the quad and into the gymnasium. If I don't see you, keep, uh, keep truckin'. Good stuff. "YOU'RE MY BOY BLUEWALL!"

Matt Brochu is a Collegian columnist.

Free at last?

It was reported in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian on Wednesday that Student Government Association speaker, Jared Nokes, stated that his decision not to recognize appointed seats – like the ones held by the African, Latin, Asian and Native American Caucus – for the 2003-04 school year "wasn't a matter of public opinion." Nokes went on to say that, "the important thing was whether the by-laws were in line with the constitution."

Emilie Duggan

Okay, so let me see if I have this straight. Jared Nokes doesn't care what the public, (the students that the SGA represents), thinks. Rather than take the time to write an amendment to the constitution that would allow for appointed seats, Nokes is choosing to eliminate what amounts to the entire minority faction of the student government.

With all due respect, Mr. Speaker — and you have yet to earn mine — are you out of your mind?

The truth of the matter is that through some twist of fate, the SGA wound up in control of $1.7 million of the budget. This is money that is supposed to benefit the entire campus, not just the elements of campus life that the SGA deems worthy. Yet, the entire campus is not white and male, and by eliminating the majority of the minority figures on the Association, Mr. Nokes, you are taking away the only voice for a very important, already under-represented, part of the UMass community. How much of that money that the SGA controls will be used to further minority causes and programs if there are few to no minorities to demand a fair share?

How long will it be until burning crosses appear on Metawampe Lawn as a warning to all people of color that we are not wanted here?

The SGA's own president, Dave Carr, has estimated that the senate is made up of 90 percent white men. While UMass might not be as diverse as it should be, as it wants to be, I can say with confidence that 90 percent of the student population is not made up of white men. The SGA should be representative of the student body, a task they were already failing miserably. So, exactly what message were you trying to get across to the student body with this decision? If you were trying to make it clear that we are governed by white, male — and probably republican — senators then your message was received loud and clear.

What you have actually done with this decision is tell the Amherst campus that anyone who falls under the ALANA umbrella doesn't have a voice worthy enough to be heard. It is a sad day, indeed, when the Student Government Association is more concerned with a potential loss of authority and control than with the fact that you are systematically telling members of the ALANA community that they don't deserve to be listened to.

Why did you make this decision when the Senate wasn't in session? Why not wait until the first meeting so that you could at least pretend to be democratic and a vote could be taken on the issue? Is it because you are a cowardly little man who wants complete control but knows he will not have it when there are other people who might not let his ideas come to fruition? It might just be.

Last time I checked — and I did check, just to make sure I hadn't missed something — we live in a democracy, not a dictatorship. You do not control this campus, nor are you entitled to that control. It is pitiful that you cannot even take full responsibility for your decision, choosing instead to hide behind what you have termed "the will of the senate." Just because the senate was adjourned at the last meeting of the 2002-03 school year before a vote could be taken on this issue, doesn't mean the senate agrees with you. In fact a member of the Senate leadership, who wishes to remain unnamed, thinks that you're a joke and that you are, quite possibly, the most embarrassing thing about the SGA at the present time.

I'm wondering, Mr. Nokes, if your next decision will be to segregate dorms and have separate water fountains for whites and people of color. Should I start riding at the back of the bus now, or wait until the SGA passes that motion? How long will it be until burning crosses appear on Metawampe Lawn as a warning to all people of color that we are not wanted here?

This is not a matter of white versus every other race; this is a matter of fair versus unfair, just versus unjust. The voice of the people is not just one race. Members of the ALANA community — and any community not represented properly in the SGA — deserve to have their voices heard as much as any member of the white, male population of this school. If this campus stands for this, and allows such blatant discrimination and racism to remain a part of the SGA, then how can we complain when they make decisions that negatively impact every single person.

I leave you now with a quote from Harold Washington, Chicago's first black mayor: "We don't have to slip around like peons or thieves in the middle of the night, asking someone for open sesame. Knock the damn door down!"

With that quote in mind, I challenge all of you, members of the ALANA community or not, to make your voices heard.

Emilie Duggan is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at emilieduggan@yahoo.com.

Actions speak.
Words are louder.
Write for Ed/Op.
Be heard.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 2003 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Black Sheep Café hosts open mic night

Wednesday night has a new vibe

By Eva Piccozzi
Collegian Correspondent

For many University of Massachusetts students who have passions for writing, playing musical instruments or acting, the Black Sheep Café located at 79 Main Street, is the ideal place to begin performing. Known foremost for its delicious deli sandwiches and fresh baked goods, the Black Sheep's stage seems to go unrecognized by the majority of students and residents in the Amherst area. Yet, a small cluster of community members with a passion for the lively arts, have found their niche there.

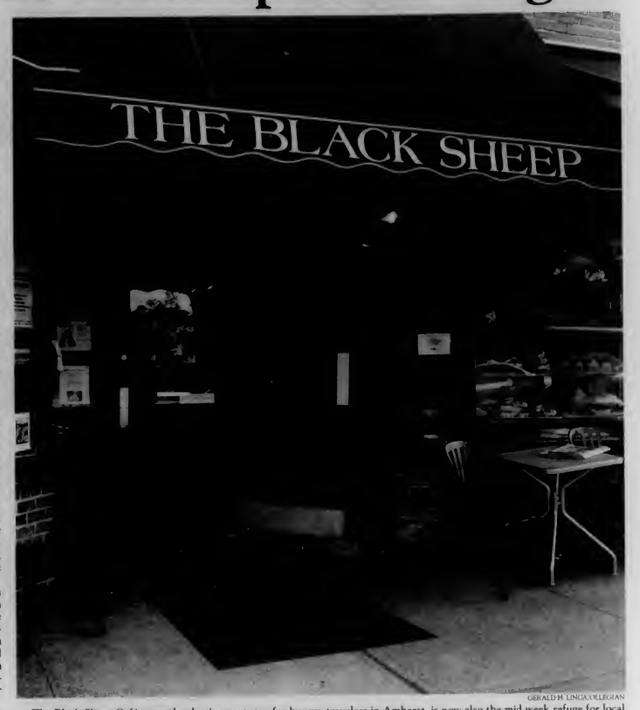
"Word on Wednesday"
Black Sheep Cafe
Sept. 10

"Word on Wednesday," is a spot for people to perform, listen, watch and become inspired. Founded by Star Drooker and Trish Overstr, the program originated in Northampton at The Fire and Water Cafe. Many of the poets and several hosts at the open-mic night got their start at Fire and Water. In 2002 when the Northampton Café closed, open-mic night found a new home in Amherst. Still in a transition phase, participants are hoping to build a larger community of poets than the one they left behind.

Sondra Morin, a senior English major at UMass, hosts "Word on Wednesday." She spoke of the Black Sheep with a marked closeness as she described working at the café, hosting venues and reading some of her original poems on Wednesday nights.

When asked about the diversity she sees in ages and performance pieces she smiled and quickly said, "Poetry, fiction, acoustic guitar mostly, but it is an open mic. The crowd we get in here every week is pretty consistent and presently we're trying to do more advertising, and get some fresh talent from the universities."

According to regular performer Adam Grabowski, a fifth-year student at UMass, a close-knit poet community had formed over the pass several years. When asked what made this reading environment different from others he said, "It's unique from the places I've read at mostly because of the people that attend. Everyone works off each other."



Practically writing since he was introduced to poetry, Adam said with sincerity that the Black Sheep is a prime spot to exercise his creative mind.

Rich "Gooselove" Montone, one of the original hosts of "Word on Wednesday" at The Fire and Water Café spoke briefly about passing his hosting position on to Sondra and how he now makes an appearance at the Black Sheep to do performance poetry. He too feels that the Wednesday night gathering has become sort of an "unofficial club." His talent, was colossal as he dramatically recited an untitled poem from the works of the lyrical genius Saul Williams. Gooselove, the pseudonym used by Rich, bears a gift of entertaining that would make any admirer of stage performance attend a Black Sheep open-mic night.

Amy Laprade, a published fiction writer closed the evening with a 20-minute excerpt from her upcoming novel "Rock Bottom Diaries." The reading was a treat for everyone.

Between the hours of 7 to 9 p.m. about 10 people performed acts including acoustic guitar medleys with original lyrics, readings from Yeats and Louise Eldrich, along with prose and recited poetry. Lori Desrosiers, a regular poet at the Wednesday night readings read a poem titled "Open-mic Blues," an ode to her favorite little nook in Amherst. "Poetry is addicting; this is a church to me."

The Black Sheep stage is small, but comfortable. It serves dual functions, to seat its mid-day lunch goers and support the talented artists once the sun goes down. Rehearsals aren't necessary at "Word on Wednesday" and admission is free. Sign-up begins at six and the lights go up at seven sharp.

GERALD H. LING/COLLEGIAN

The Black Sheep Café, a regular daytime rest stop for hungry travelers in Amherst, is now also the mid week refuge for local poets and aspiring vocal artists, serving up sandwiches and prose in the same place.

COURESY OF GERALD H. LING

Littered with tables and patrons during normal business days, the Black Sheep opens its floor every Wednesday night.

Chili Peppers heat things up at UMass

UMass scorched and stoned by the Red Hot Chili Peppers and the Queens of the Stone Age at the Mullins Center

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

"I feel like [bassist] Flea just won homecoming and we are playing the after party," Red Hot Chili Peppers frontman Anthony Kiedis told a dramatically less than capacity crowd at the Mullins Center on the University of Massachusetts campus, Tuesday night.

Kiedis, Flea, guitarist John Frusciante and drummer Chad Smith must have been a little confused when they looked out into the audience when the lights went up before their opening song, "By the Way," and only about 5,000 people were occupying the 10,000-seat arena.

Maybe there wasn't enough publicity. Or could it have been the $41 price tag on tickets? Or the fact it was the first week of school? For the Peppers, though, it didn't matter because the fans that were in attendance wanted the funk and the Peppers gave it to them. It was a challenge for the Peppers to play in such a cavernous venue with so few people in the stands but according to Kiedis this show was special. He said later on in the show, "Hey this is fun, its real intimate."

Red Hot Chili Peppers
Mullins Center
Amherst
Sept. 8

The Chili Peppers have been in the music business for 20 years with nine records in their catalogue but the last two LP's — 1999's "Californication" and 2002's "By the Way" — have earned the Peppers their biggest commercial success. "Californication" won a Grammy award in 2000 for best rock album. As a result, the band from Los Angeles paid homage to their most popular albums by filling their set with a majority of songs off the two records. Including the "By the Way" opener, the Chili Peppers' first six songs played were off either "Californication" or "By the Way." And it didn't stop after that.

Some of the band's most recent songs played throughout the show were, "Universally Speaking," "Throw Away Your Television," and "Can't Stop" off "By the Way." As for the "Californication" LP, the melodramatic "Other Side," "Scar Tissue" and the record's title track, "Californication" were performed.

Backed by three 15-foot high screens playing distorted video of the band members and psychedelic images plus seven retractable strobe lights that flashed during powerful Chili Pepper anthems like "Around the World," the band put on an hour-and-half set with a set of songs that fell way short of spanning their entire career.

However, the Chili Peppers did play some of the fan favorites off their 1991 breakthrough album, "Blood Sugar Sex Magik." Kiedis and Frusciante took full advantage of the intimate atmosphere that existed in the Mullins by playing the emotionally charged "I Could Have Lied."

The band ended their set before the encore break with an emphatic version of "Give it Away" in which Flea jumped on top of Smith's bass drum and the two band mates stared into each other's eyes not even looking at their instruments, collaborating on a funky drum and bass outro to the song.

A highlight of the night came when Frusiante gave the fans a pleasant surprise mid-way through the show in which he belted out his own rendition of Elton John's "Tiny Dancer." What seemed to be a humorous attempt of a cover at first turned out to be an enhanced version of the song that featured Frusiante's rock guitar rather than a piano.

The best part of the evening had to be the encore. It began with Flea on trumpet with Smith on drums helping him mimic jazz greats Miles Davis and Charlie Parker that turned into an intro for the Chili Peppers' ultimate ballad, "Under the Bridge." Following the heartfelt crowd pleaser, Kiedis, Flea, Smith, Fusiante did what they do best: combine the elements of funk, punk and rock with their song off "Blood Sugar Sex Magik," "Sir Psycho Sexy" to close the show.

If the concert didn't prove it, the last minute capper on the night, "They're Red Hot" let everyone in the arena know that the Red Hot Chili Peppers, even after 20 years, still can fire up a venue, no matter how many people are there.

■■■

Queens of the Stone Age and French Toast opened for the Red Hot Chili Peppers. While both put on decent sets, the two bands seemed to be rushed in their songs. Fortunately for them, not too many people were there to see it.

Basist Flea leaps into yet another stunning solo.

Guitarist John Frusciante cuts loose a crazy guitar riff.

PHOTOS COURTESY OF/GINGER STRAUB

Front man Anthony Kiedis owns the stage, as usual.

Motorcycle Club rides again and in need of a tune-up

By Brendan Lee
Collegian Staff

With the release of their new record "Take Them On, On Your Own," the Black Rebel Motorcycle finally embrace their adopted heritage, becoming the best Brit rock band to ever come out of San Francisco.

Black Rebel Motorcycle Club
"Take Them On, On Your Own"
Virgin

The band's 2001 debut "B.R.M.C." bore more than a passing resemblance to the shoegazing sound of the Jesus and Mary Chain at the height of their game in 1989. Despite the best intentions, "Take Them On, On Your Own" fails to replicate that acid-washed JAMC sound that the members of Black Rebel Motorcycle were raised on.

The genius of the Jesus and Mary Chain was the streamlined simplicity of the songwriting: Phil Spector-style production, produced huge, distorted bass lines that rolled like ecstasy, wave upon wave of guitar feedback and lyrics that combined biker gang mythos with heroin chic. The songs on their 1986 debut "Psycho Candy" even evoked some Beach Boys comparisons. Earlier this year, the Black Rebel Motorcycle took the JAMC formula and tried to change it, in search of better living through chemistry. The results are not encouraging.

Black Rebel Motorcycle even try to replicate their past success on the lead single "Stop." In 2001, the band scored a minor radio and MTV2 hit with "Whatever Happened to my Rock and Roll (Punk Song)?" That song was a scathing critique of the state of rock music in the 21st century. In "Stop," lead singer and songwriter Peter Hayes targets fair-weather fans. Lines like, "I won't fail you, but you won't bleed for me," and "we don't like you/ we just want to try you" (coupled with a lengthy anti-piracy diatribe in the liner notes) make the band seem less rebellious than their cinematic, Brando-inspired name would suggest.

Black Rebel Motorcycle bring even more of a political agenda to the table on "Take Them On, On Your Own." The tiresome stomp of "U.S. Government" takes advantage of an easy target, U.S. foreign policy. They also manage to contradict themselves, with an altered title for the song to coincide with a stateside album release (the track is introduced live and appears online as "Bomb the U.S. Government"). Still, the ending lyrical coda doesn't lack any conviction. with Hayes cautioning that the powers that be will "show ... what's being done/ you're gonna know they were never yours to kill."

The album's best songs are when the band stops doing their JAMC hero worship. "Shine of Blue" still reverently gazes at its shoes, but channels other influences (i.e. Ride), complete with a droning chorus and broken-hearted lyrics. "And I'm Aching" is a rare acoustic diversion and sounds eerily like a lost My Bloody Valentine demo. The songs sound out of place on a record that is otherwise a reverb-drenched acid trip back to the late 1980s.

"I don't feel at home in this generation," croons Hayes on the cleverly titled "Generation." Perhaps he's pining for the days when Scottish and British bands like JAMC and Ride and My Bloody Valentine ruled college airwaves and good drugs weren't nearly so expensive. Given the cynical tone of "Take Them On, On Your Own" he could also be decrying an entire generation whose most engaging political concern is legal music downloading. Like JAMC (and Brian Wilson before them), BRMC just weren't made for these times. They just can't find the proper way to express the sentiment

New Coal Chamber B-Sides not left by the wayside

A rekindling of the same old fires

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

For those who favor rock of the heavy metal persuasion, the name Coal Chamber may bring back some memories. The band that at one time was a frontrunner in the effort of intergrading heavy metal into the popular music scene has released a new disc, though technically all the music is more than half a decade old. The album is a collection of B-sides, remixes and demos most of which has never been heard before. Even with all the polish and perhaps a little too much fanfare the album still falls a little short of the mark.

Coal Chamber
'Giving the Devil His Due'
Roadrunner Records

The sheer length of this album is a bit much for one to listen to all at once. Nearly two hours and 20 tracks of pounding rock is in the best of situations an awesome experience, but here it is a drawn out cry for attention. It is unlikely that any listener could resist skipping forward a few songs here and there on this album, just in the interest of getting something else done with the day.

It is not uncommon for a band that has been on hiatus from the recording world to release a CD of what are politely labeled B-sides and remixes. The remixes on this album are, for the most part, still Coal Chamber at heart, that is with the exception of the "Hypno-Submissive Mix" of "Sway," which due to his dominant vocals sounds more like a track from producer/back up vocalist Jay Gordon's band "Orgy."

The opening track of the album is a cast-off from the bands self-titled disk called, "Headstones and the Walking Dead." This may not be the loudest or strongest track on the album, but it does let the listener know what to expect from the B-sides that make up six of the album's 20 tracks. They are the kind of songs one would listen to as background noise while perusing the Internet, never really listening to the songs as they blast out of the speakers.

Though they are all are fairly good songs, upon listening to them one can tell why they were not on any of the bands' first three compact disks. This is with the exception of the outstanding track "Anxiety" clipped from the "Dark Days" album which is an amazing track unless you have the volume all the way up — then it is just plain painful.

The album's latter five tracks are composed of demos from the earliest days of Coal Chamber's career, one can hear the band at their most unaltered state. Unfortunately these tracks were also recorded when the band was first starting up so they in no way measure up to Coal Chambers Later accomplishments. As for the former 15 tracks they were produced for the most part by Jay Gordon and Jay Baumgardner, these five are completely Coal Chamber created and produced, be it for better or worse.

For fans who own the band's first three albums, "Giving the Devil his Due" may not be a must buy, and if one is a die hard Coal Chamber fan then this disk is to be avoided at all costs. For those who have not yet entered the coal chamber it's a good place to dig in, but by no means will it give them the right to consider themselves true fans.

It is hard to say exactly what it is about the album that leaves one with a not quite satisfied feeling. Perhaps it is the length of the album that weighs it down, or maybe the fact that unlike every Coal Chamber disk before it, this album has no story line to keep a flow from one track to the next. One thing is for sure and that is, as a band, Coal Chamber will not be soon forgotten. The same cannot be said for "Giving the Devil his Due."

COURTESY ROADRUNNER RECORDS

Glamorous and dark, Coal Chamber cranks out a post-mortem album. After nearly half a decade the hardcore rockers are still making their presence known.

Ashanti continues story in 'Chapter II'

By Nikolas P. Markantonatos
Collegian Staff

Doll-faced R&B singer Ashanti returned this summer with her sophomore album, "Chapter II." Her self-titled debut was a derivative effort that capitalized on her light-as-a-feather vocals that used samples to ensure mainstream success.

Ashanti
'Chapter II'
Murder Inc.

Aimed squarely at that same audience, the aptly titled "Chapter II" relies on a similar formula — beat-driven, slickly produced midtempo tracks and ballads. But with Ja Rule and Fat Joe gone (so last year!), "Chapter II" goes light on the rap, opting for only a handful of cameos by co-producer Chink Santana. And instead of relying on samples, the album has a decidedly old-school feel. "I Found Lovin' " has the signature squiggly sound of 80's pop and "The Story of 2" sounds like it's being performed by a girl doo-wop group. The singer also scores with the Chaka Khan classic "Sweet Thing."

To be sure, Ashanti is a summer artist. Her airy voice wafting out of a boombox on a sandy beach is the perfect complement to the ocean mist on a sunny, tranquil day. A smooth low key groove made "Rock Wit U (Awww Baby)" a perfect song this past summer.

Unfortunately, Ashanti doesn't deliver as a true artist. There are no substantial lyrics on the record only insights into love and heartbreak (what else, right?). Most of the songs are blasé fillers that go absolutely nowhere. Carrying you through these tunes are overused interludes — five in all! — that are essentially commercials for the Murder Inc. label and skits about "haters" that make the record excruciatingly hard to listen to.

COURTESY MURDER INC.

Ashanti

Student Jobs
Great Job opportunities for students in humanities and social sciences. Work to protect the environment ad hold corporations accountable. Flexible Hours; fun progressive workplace. Valuable job skills. We are seeking motivated, articulate, and creative people to organize in diverse communities around the valley. Call today, start tomorrow. $8-10 hr. plus bonus
Clean Water Action: 584-9830

Young Men's Club
138 East Street Hadley, MA
413-584-8726
Monday Night Football
• Pool Table
• Darts
• Horseshoes
• Kene
• Smoking
• Public Invited
• Women Welcome
Transportation Available
Free Munchies With this ad!

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
Beer:
Long Trail 2/12pk case..$19.99*
Coors light 30 pk cans..$18.49*
Schaefer 30 pk cans..$10.99*
Busch & Busch Light 24 pk btls..$10.99*
Harpoon 12 pk btls..9.99*
Molson 12 pk btl..$8.99*
Liquor:
Glenlivet 750 ml...$27.99
Jameson 1 liter...$22.99
Martell V.S. 750 ml...$21.99
Absolut All Flavors 750 ml...$15.99
Captain Morgan 750 ml...$10.99
Seagram's Gin All Flavors 750 mllt...$8.99
Wine:
Beringer Founders' Reserve Char., Cab., Merlot, Pinot Noir 750 ml...$7.99
Vendange Chard., Cab., Merlot, P. Grigio 1.5 lt...$6.99
Jacob's Creek Chard., Cab., Shiraz, Merlot 750 ml...$6.99
Meridian Chard., Cab., Merlot, P. Grigorio 750 ml...$6.99
Beringer's Stone Cellars Chard., Cab., Merlot, P. Grigorio 750 ml...2 for $10.00
Marcus James Chard., Cab., Merlot, White Zin 750 ml...$2.99
Arbor Mist All Flavors 750 ml...$2.99
*all beer prices plus deposit
Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon.- Sat. 9am- 11pm
SALE 9/4 THROUGH 9/10

Want to make friends that last a lifetime???
Sorority Recruitment
Call us at 413.545.2711
Sept.16-21
or check us out online at www.umass.edu/greek/panhel.htm

Interested in an Internship for Spring Semester?
Come to a Field Experience Welcome Session!
Monday, Sept 15
3:00 pm
•
Tuesday, Sept 16
10:30 am
•
Thursday, Sept 18
3:00 pm
All Welcome Sessions take place in 104 Career Services Bldg. (across from the Newman Center)
For more information about Internships and Co-ops, go to www-ccn.acad.umass.edu or call us at 545-6265
CareerServices

Cross Country set to begin

Continued from page 8

more transfer Ryan Corbett, will be pivotal to the teams success.

The team is coming off a rebuilding year, and last year's freshmen and sophomores will be saddled with replacing the hole that still remains from 2001, when no less than seven seniors graduated.

"It was basically 100 percent of our team, from a scoring perspective," O'Brien said of those seven. But he seems to think the youngsters are up to the task.

"I like the supporting cast behind (Hantman and McCarron) and I like the teams depth and balance," O'Brien said.

"This early in the season, we've been concentrating on our team, we're in the mix with a few other teams but it takes a few weeks before I can make any real predictions," O'Brien said.

▪▪▪

The women's team will also against Maine, Vermont and Central Connecticut in the only home meet of the season.

Coach Julie LaFreniere has been preparing the women's squad to utilize every bit of its home course advantage.

"I've had them on the course for all their hard workouts," LaFreniere said.

But the coach and her team, will be up against a wall throughout the season.

"We've had strong teams in the past, but it's difficult, because we get kids committed, and then there's no out-of-state financial aid," LaFreniere said.

With a small but dedicated team on her hands, the coach has ample ammunition for the uphill battle the Maroon and White faces this season.

The one thing LaFreniere is sure of is that her top runners, juniors Alexis Anzelone and Amanda Dahlberg, will shine this season. Two-year veteran seniors Tricia Silva and Kate Markopoulos are also on the hook, both for individual accomplishment and leadership.

The returning runners are looking to build on the accomplishments of last season. At the NCAA Northeast Regional meet in New York's Van Courtland Park last year, Anzelone finished 165th overall, Markopoulos raced to a 143rd finish, and Silva also impressed, earning 155th place.

Start your engines

Continued from page 8

keep teams on their toes with their constant attacking and stellar conditioning.

"They are a very disciplined, organized and fit group that like to use their overall fitness to their advantage," Koch said.

The Minutemen are going to have to keep an eye on their assignments. Navy brings a very young team to the field with only four returning starters. With this lack of experience the Midshipmen bring a lot of different personnel on the field to mix up the game play.

The best part of Navy's game is their defense, which has maintained a .990 goals-against average through persistent one-on-one defense. Koch wants the Minutemen to distribute the ball more in order to break Navy's pressure.

The Minutemen have been going to senior Ptah Myers to pick up a bulk of their offensive load, but have seen stellar improvement from Devlin Barnes, Oral Bullen and Andrew Eicher. The unlikely trio came home with all-tournament honors from the UAB Nike Classic last weekend.

"They are playing the way I expect them to play, we just need to start finishing," Koch said.

Adding that scoring touch has been a big problem for the Maroon and White, which has been shut out twice thus far.

"We need to make sure we're more consistent, we are going to finish it's just the law of averages," Koch said.

UMass has home field advantage for the first time this season with high hopes of sweeping the series. Even though it is nice to be home, Koch doesn't see Rudd Field as an advantage."[Rudd] is one of the nicest fields in New England and other teams would want to play here," he said. "Real home field advantage is when your field isn't too nice."

The one uncertainty remaining is what lineup will be seen on the field this weekend. The Minutemen have been making several alterations to their lineup over the season, including the constant battle for starting goalie.

"I think we have it down pretty well, some start the game off better, some come off the bench pretty well," he said.

UMASS Weekend Schedule

Friday, Sept. 12

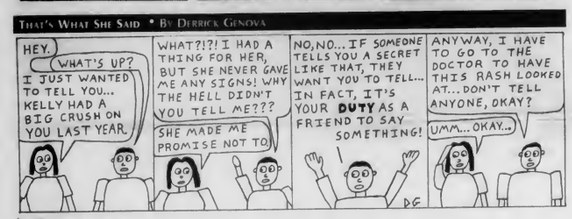
Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Soccer	vs. Mercer	4 p.m.

Saturday, Sept. 13

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Football	at Kansas State	2 p.m.
Men's XC	vs. CCSU, Maine, UVM	12 p.m.
Women's XC	vs. CCSU, Maine, UVM	12 p.m.
Field Hockey	at Boston Univ.	1 p.m.

Sunday, Sept. 14

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Soccer	vs. Navy	1:30 p.m.
Women's Soccer	vs. Syracuse	3 p.m.
Field Hockey	at Harvard	2 p.m.



VALLEY OF THE SQUIRRELS • BY COMRAD X

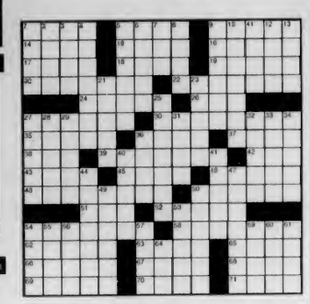
MR. GNU • BY TRAVIS DANDRO

THAT'S WHAT SHE SAID • BY DERRICK GENOVA

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"The chief obstacle to the progress of the human race is the human race."

-Don Marquis



ACROSS
1 Kuwaiti leader
5 "There oughta be ___!"
9 Fast
14 Not taped, maybe
15 Hollow
16 Loosen
17 Tree product
18 Off shore
19 Impressing
20 Summer flowers
22 Gorges
24 Sailing vessel
26 Swamp
27 Ankle injury
30 Pack rats
36 Carole
36 Rainbow goddess
37 Graceful swimmer
38 Bonfire remains
39 Occupants
42 Vanity
43 Amazing act
45 Floppy — (hyph.)
46 Kitchen tool
48 City dweller
50 Chocolate dessert
51 Four-footed pal
52 Loses some weight
54 Mollify
58 Stronghold
62 Valentine
63 Years and years
65 Whirlpool
66 "The Little Mermaid"
67 Tender meat
68 Sunset colors
69 Hackett or Holly
70 TV statuette
71 Maneuver slowly

DOWN
1 Jazzy — Fitzgerald
2 Air
3 Lendl of tennis
4 Turndown
5 "Venus" singer
6 Cowboy gear
7 Yeasty brew
8 Have on
9 Diva's brit
10 Relaxes
11 "Don't rub it —!"
12 Movie
13 Barrels
21 Top choices (hyph.)
23 Make — — buck
25 Put into words
27 More than a boo-boo
28 Tough question
29 Fix up an old house
31 Barnyard noise
32 Washstand items
33 Storms about
34 Night racket
36 J. in JFK, e.g.
40 Amends
41 Tough situations
44 Narrowed down
47 Stinct
49 In an orderly manner
50 Paltry
53 Steel girder (hyph.)
54 Melville sea
55 Pizarro's conquest
56 Forked out
57 Chalet feature
59 Sudden thought
60 Lotto info
61 Wall St. landmark
64 Sparkler

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

C	A	F	E		E	D	G	E		U	N	C	L	E
A	B	L	E		B	E	A	R		W	I	R	E	S
D	O	O	R		P	R	I	Z	E		E	V	E	R
E	D	O		R	A	C	E		D	I	C	E	Y
T	E	R	M	I	T	E		P	U	R	E
			R	O	O	K		C	O	F	F	E	E
G	E	L	A	R		H	O	C	U	S		G	U	P
A	X	I	S		P	E	S	T	O		A	H	E	A
B	I	T	E		C	A	R	D		S	P	U	D	S
	T	R	O	L	L	E	Y		E	L	I	E
	B	E	G	I	N		K	N	O	C	K	O	U	T	S
S	A	I	L	O	R	S		E	N	T	I	P	E	D
S	T	E	E	R		W	E	I	S		R	E	I	N

1-15-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Roast Turkey
- Stuffed Shells
- Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

DINNER
- Dill Salmon
- Veal Madeline
- Brazilian Black Beans (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
For Amherst, Mass.

FRIDAY
- High: 78
- Low:51

SATURDAY
- High: 73
- Low: 64

SUNDAY
- High: 79
- Low: 51

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nikolas P. Markantonatos
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Amelia P. Lincoln
COPY EDITOR
Ferran Salniker
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Adam Shane
PRODUCTION STAFF
Emile Duggan/ Irene Ros

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Don't be ashamed of your "geeky" habits, embrace them and be proud.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Do not overfeed your beta fish, no one likes overweight fish.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Do something to spice up your life, try dying your hair a shade of blue.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Try your hand at baking, and remember, you get to eat what you make.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Move away, far, far away, no one likes you or your twin.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
No matter how much paperwork you finish there will always be more.

leo • JUL.. 23-AUG. 22
Get in touch with your animalistic side, just don't bite.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Love life? Yeah, good luck with that.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
That person you thought you knew, yeah he is so not who you thought.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Just go out and get those shoes. What's the worst that could happen?

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
If you put too many things on your belt your pants will fall.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Girls do like boys, girls just also like cars and money.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Montreal Weekends $99. Includes R/T Luxury Motor Coach from Springfield. 3 Days- 2 Nights- 4 Star Hotel Downtown- Meals-Night Club passes. www.montrealexpress.net 1-781-979-9001 Special Group Rates

AUTO FOR SALE

Jeep Cherokee Sport- 1995. Perfect student car, A/C, Great CD system, original owner, excellent condition, 90K, automatic. 413-296-0060 $3,600 or O.B.O.

1988 Mazda $950 413-586-5728

AUTO FOR SALE

1994 Toyota Paseo well maintained, great gas mileage. $2,900 413-584-2634

1992 Silver Subaru Stationwagon 140K, dependable, Call 546-0383 after 6p.m.

Honda 97 Prelude, VTEC, 98K Miles, Silver with Black leather interior, 5speed, CD/AC, sunroof, runs excellent. $10,500 549-1368

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Participants sought for listening experiments. Call 545-6837 leave message or write jkingston@linguist.umass.edu

Mother's helper/PCA Cooking, Driving, & Housekeeping. References Required. Own Transportation to S.Deerfield. 2 to 3 Afternoons. Per week 8-10 hrs. $8hr 665-3914

Experienced Linecook to work in high volume upbeat professional kitchen $13/hr to start plus great benefits. Apply in person after 10a.m. Eastside Grill 19 Strong Ave. Northampton.

EMPLOYMENT

Dishwasher Great Part-time Evening/Weekend position 9.25/hr to start. Must be 18yrs old. Apply in person after 12p.m. East Side Grill 19 Strong Ave. Northampton.

Drivers and Kitchen help wanted Apply at D.P. Dough. Downtown Amherst

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals for part time positions. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are must. Call (413) 584-4746

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

FOR SALE

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons- w/retired pro Djata Bumpus. In Northampton. 584-1966 or visit www.westernmass-boxing.com Accepts all Major Credit Cards

Learn to SCUBA Dive Curry Hicks Pool Monday, Tuesday, or Wednesday 7pm to 10pm classes start Sept 8 Call Project Deep 800-282-0977

Jazz Piano Lessons Explore your creativity Beginner to Advanced Learn a wide range of styles Reasonable Rates Contact Stephen Page at 413-297-7910

MISCELLANEOUS

Want to buy/sell TEXTBOOKS & other stuff LOCALLY? ... NO shipping hassles, NO payment middlemen! All 4 FREE! Visit www.collegeshack.com today!

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female geek seeks roommate to share spacious 1 BR Puffton apt. Call Lisa at 549-4248 or email ladlergo@student.umass.edu

SERVICES

Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment?

SERVICES

Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004 1-800-648-4849

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplash-tours.com or 1800-426-7710

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplash-tours.com 1800-426-7710

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Tough draw in Durham

By Matt Stewart
Collegian Correspondent

Before the Massachusetts women's soccer team even took the field to face New Hampshire, there were implications that Wednesday night was going to be a thriller from the start.

With a larger-than-usual crowd in attendance to witness the first-ever night game at UNH's Bremner Field, the play on the field was cranked up a few notches, bordering on hostility between the squads.

The overly physical play later turned into an all-out war, which landed three University of Massachusetts players on the injured list.

UMass	1
UNH	1

The game started out in a scoreless stalemate for most of the first half, until Lindsey Bellini a sophomore forward broke the silence at 40:40 on a serve from Morgan Czaja. The Minutewomen held the 1-0 edge, thanks to stellar work from goalkeeper Kelly Nigh, until the penultimate minute, when junior Chiara Best tied the game. After two uneventful overtimes the game finished in a 1-1 tie.

"It was a pretty rugged game," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "They had a good crowd there and everyone was pumped up. It's good to see to a crowd like that at a soccer game. There was a lot of fouling from behind and a lot of other things that you wouldn't see in an English Premier [match]."

Three Maroon and White starters were injured in the contest. Senior defender Maggie LaBrode, junior midfielder Carly Turman, and senior Michelle Luttati each went down, joining junior Lindsey Fairweather, who suffered a minor knee injury in Sunday evening's practice, on the injured list.

"We ended up with three starting players injured with no apologies," said Rudy. "It was inexcusable in that regard. Regardless, we kept our composure throughout the game."

With the score knotted at zero, Bellini gave UMass the 1-0 advantage on a heads up pass from sophomore Czaja. Midfielder Nadia Villarroel was credited with the secondary assist, her second helper of the season.

Bellini's goal was the latest chapter in a season that has her electrifying the Minutewoman attack. The Webster, N.Y. native has a penchant for clutch scoring, with Wednesday's goal complementing a three-point performance in UMass' 4-1 win over Rhode Island on Sept. 5.

"She took the goal very well," Rudy said of Bellini. "She received the pass in pressure and got the goal past the keeper."

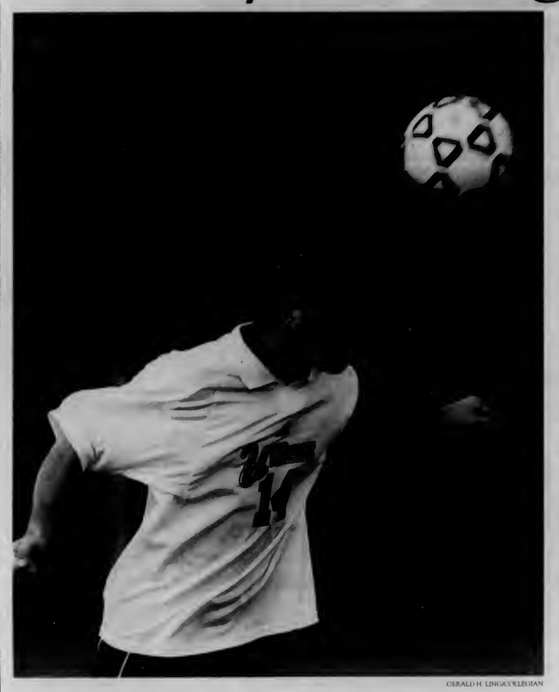
New Hampshire would tie it up and force overtime on a true last-minute goal. Best, who took nine shots in the contest, finally got the better of Nigh off a free kick, tying the game at one all. Back Shannon Oltman was credited with the assist.

"It would have been really super if we won," said Rudy, who questioned the merits of the foul call that led to the tying goal.

"We could have done it if it hadn't been for that free kick. It was surprising."

The Wildcats offense out-shot the Minutewomen 24-9, and put three more shots on goal.

Nigh (seven saves) was the story in net, holding the Wildcats scoreless until the 89-minute mark of regulation. She racked up five saves in the process. New Hampshire had two excellent chances to end the contest in the first and second overtimes, but Nigh was relentless, stoning both shots and ensuring the tie.



"She's a very calm goalkeeper and also collected," said Rudy. "If she's ever nervous, she doesn't let anyone know about it."

On the opposite side, Liz McKay was solid in goal for the Wildcats, holding UMass to one goal and tallying four saves. McKay didn't face any shots on net in the either of the overtimes.

"We got a lot of kids to step on the field who never got to play before," said Rudy. "That was one of the positives in this game."

Next up for the Minutewomen is Syracuse, which comes into town for a 3 p.m. showdown at Rudd Field on Sunday. The high-octane Orangewoman offense is averaging 3.50 goals per game, and should bring no shortage of thrills to Amherst.

Start your engines

GERALD H. LINGA/COLLEGIAN

Junior Chris Camerota and the Minutemen will look to make some headway this weekend when they host Mercer (1-3) and Navy (1-2) in the UMass adidas Classic at Rudd Field.

Men's soccer set for Classic

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's soccer team has been making tune-ups all summer since losing three vital cogs to graduation. This weekend's University of Massachusetts Adidas Classic is the perfect place to see how the engine is running.

The Maroon and White (1-2) are going up against two formidable foes, Mercer and Navy, both conference champions last year. The Minutemen are looking to make the best of this weekend and roll into A-10 conference play.

Mercer (1-3) won the Atlantic Sun's regular season title and is returning with a bulk of their lineup, including 15 seniors. The Bears possess a strong and balanced scoring attack led by Del Olaoye, who led the team in goals and was tied for the lead in points last year.

UMass coach Sam Koch is looking for his defense to contain Olaoye, who has shown the ability to break games open.

"[Olaoye] is a very dangerous front-runner, he is a very good player and organizes his offense well," said Koch.

Sophomore Craig Canavan will be back in the lineup after missing last weekend's tournament due to personal business. His presence should bring the vocal leadership that the UMass defensive unit has been lacking.

While Mercer is off to a slow start, Koch believes the Bears still have the firepower to turn heads. Navy (1-2) has had a respectable start to the season, with a record that belies the difficulty of its schedule. The Midshipmen dropped tough decisions to Birmingham Southern and perennial frontrunner Loyola-Maryland. Navy brings a very athletic squad that tends to

Continued on page 6

For Shea, Harvard means more

By Becky Horowitz
Collegian Correspondent

A trip to Harvard has meaning beyond wins and losses for Patty Shea.

On Sunday Shea, coach of the Massachusetts field hockey team, will be reunited with her former roommate and teammate at the University of Massachusetts, Harvard coach Sue Caples. Shea and the Minutewomen (2-3) take on the Crimson (1-0) at Jordan Field at 2 p.m.

"She is my dearest friend," Shea said of Caples. The two have worked together on the field both as teammates and colleagues. They had the opportunity to coach together at Harvard at the beginning of their careers.

"It's not about competition," Shea said of the upcoming match, "it's about the opportunity to see each other professionally. It's about the passion for the sport and the chance to have female athletes out there."

Two weeks into the season, and one win shy of .500, the Minutewomen are exactly where they want to be.

"We're preparing for the marathon, not the sprint," Shea said of her young team. "We want to focus our energy on the process."

The Maroon and White will face two tough opponents this weekend when it travels to Cambridge to take on Boston University (2-0) and Harvard.

The Crimson concluded their 2002 season at 12-6 with an NCAA Tournament loss to Michigan State. They'll also be returning a full complement of talented players.

Jennifer McDavitt was named Ivy League rookie of the year, while two women were placed on the STX/National Field Hockey Coaches Association All-America Team, and five were named to the STX/NFHCA Northeast Regional All-America Team.

BU is returning five seniors looking to end their careers the way they started them, with an America East title and a trip to the NCAA Tournament.

The Terriers finished the 2002 season at 11-9, and eight players earned America East all-conference honors.

Although both teams had winning records and post-season appearances last year, Shea's confidence isn't waning; her main focus is her squad.

"The game plan is about us," Shea said. "It's about what we need to do to be successful."

There is no doubt that the team possesses a lot of individual talent. But success as a unit requires trust and teamwork.

"Each player is an integral part of this team," Shea said. "Everyone brings something different."

Junior goalkeeper Christine Tocco is off to an excellent start, making key plays in the cage for the Minutewomen. The emergence of Tocco, who only began starting in the latter half of the 2002 season, comes as no surprise to Shea.

"Christine worked hard to get here," Shea said. "She got the opportunity to play and she's taking advantage of it."

Just two weeks into the season, Tocco has tallied 52 saves, although Shea feels that stats can be deceiving.

"The reality of the number of times a goalkeeper makes plays isn't in the stats."

Goalie stats show only the number of goals allowed and the number of saves made, and those statistics can overshadow even the best performers. Even good numbers belie the worth of a goaltender that can competently handle running both the offense and defense.

Of course, Tocco's numbers are nothing to shake a stick at, either.

Samsonov, Bruins finally agree

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

WILMINGTON (AP) — The Boston Bruins didn't want to lose Sergei Samsonov again, not after he missed 74 games last season with a wrist injury.

So when he agreed to a one-year contract Thursday — after sitting out the first day of training camp under new coach Mike Sullivan — the Bruins had their offensive sparkplug back.

"I golfed with him just the other day and he looks healthy. He's eager to go," team captain Joe Thornton said. "We've all watched Sergei play and he doesn't miss a beat. I think he's going to be just as good or better than the last couple of years."

Thornton was taken with the first pick of the 1997 draft, while Samsonov was chosen eighth overall and won the rookie of the year award with 22 goals and 25 assists. Both 24 years old, they form one of the best young scoring combinations in the NHL.

But the Bruins missed Samsonov's playmaking last season, when he had five goals and six assists in eight games. He had bone graft surgery on his right wrist Dec. 24.

He returned for the last regular-season game, scoring a goal and an assist in an 8-5 win over Buffalo, and the playoffs. Boston was eliminated by New Jersey in the first round.

General manager Mike O'Connell said Samsonov feels fine now.

"He has been working out all during the off-season in Michigan, he always keeps himself in great shape and he has had no problems with his wrist," O'Connell said, "so he should be right on schedule with the rest of his teammates."

Terms of Samsonov's deal were not released.

Two defensemen who took regular shifts for Boston last season, Nick Boynton and Bryan Berard, were not in camp Thursday, although O'Connell is optimistic that Boynton will return.

He said he proposed a two-year contract to Boynton's representative, Anton Thun, this week and hadn't heard back. But Boynton may not be able to practice for a week because of a hamstring injury, O'Connell said.

Berard is an unrestricted free agent after one season with the Bruins and wanted more than $2 million per year. O'Connell said the team was prepared to offer a two-year deal at less than $2 million a year.

"He's just waiting to see how the market plays out," O'Connell said.

The return of Boynton and Berard would give Sullivan more depth on defense and provide help for new goaltender Felix Potvin, who spent the last 2 1/2 seasons with Los Angeles.

Signing Potvin was "a great move," Brian Rolston said.

The Bruins let goalie Byron Dafoe leave as a free agent after the 2001-02 season. Last season, Steve Shields, John Grahame and Jeff Hackett shared the position but only Shields remains with the Bruins.

Sullivan joined the Bruins as an assistant March 19 when Robbie Ftorek was fired as coach and O'Connell succeeded him.

"The guys really liked him," defenseman Sean O'Donnell said. "He was very good at making mid-game adjustments and decisions. He was pretty exact and precise in what he wanted."

"He's a skilled guy," O'Donnell said of the team's top playmaker. "There aren't too many [like] him in the league, and it's not something that you can teach."

XC ready for opener

By Matt Barstow and Leah K. Wyner
Collegian Correspondents

This Saturday marks the beginning of the University of Massachusetts' cross-country season. Both teams will compete against Maine, Vermont and Central Connecticut on their home course, the only chance for the Maroon and White to race at home.

After much anticipation, the Massachusetts men's cross country team, which ranked No. 17 in the preseason New England Intercollegiate Amateur Athletic Association poll, will finally kick off the 2003 season tomorrow, at 12:30 p.m.

The Minutemen will host No. 10 Maine, Vermont and Central Connecticut at Totman Field in the only chance for the Maroon and White to race at home.

UMass coach Ken O'Brien is slightly more optimistic about his squad than the rest of the Atlantic 10 coaches, who predicted the Minutemen to finish sixth in the conference. O'Brien thinks his team has a shot at third.

The team will depend on solid performances from second-year senior Dave Hantman and junior Andrew McCarron, who are responsible for propelling a relatively young team.

"At the end of the [2002] season [Hantman and McCarron] were my number one and two runners," O'Brien said.

Hantman and McCarron achieved third and eighth place finishes, respectively, in the 10,000 meter event at the New England Championships last year.

But the duo won't have to do it alone.

The supporting cast of young runners, like sopho-

Continued on page 6

GERALD H. LINGA/COLLEGIAN

UMass cross country opens up the 2003 season this weekend as host in a four-team meet.

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 9

World trade talks collapse again

By Niko Price
Associated Press

CANCUN, Mexico – World trade talks collapsed Sunday amid sharp differences between rich and poor nations, a blow to the World Trade Organization that many poor countries called a victory against the West.

It was the second time WTO talks have collapsed in four years, and a major setback to efforts to regulate the world's trade. European Union Trade Commissioner Pascal Lamy said the round of talks wasn't dead, "but it certainly needs intensive care."

"We could have gained –all of us," he said. "We lost –all of us."

An increasingly powerful alliance of poor but popukous farming nations said that while they didn't achieve the trade reforms they wanted, they found a new voice to rival the developed world.

"The developing countries have come into their own," said Malaysia's minister for international trade and investment, Rafidah Aziz. "This has made it clear that developing countries cannot be dictated to by anybody."

In the end, it was the diverging agendas of 146 member countries that split delegates beyond the point of repair.

Poor nations, many of which had banded together to play a key role in negotiations, wanted to end rich countries' agricultural subsidies. European nations and Japan were intent on pushing four new issues that many poor countries saw as a complicated and costly distraction.

Many poor countries accused the United States and Europe of trying to bully poor nations into accepting trade rules they didn't want.

"Trade ministers have been pressured, blackmailed," said Irene Ovonji Odida, a delegate from Uganda.

The United States blamed some countries, which it didn't name, that it said were more interested in flowery speeches than negotiations.

"Some countries will now need to decide whether they want to make a point, or whether they want to make progress," U.S. Trade Representative Robert Zoellick said.

His comments appeared directed at a group of mostly poor nations - often known as the Group of 20-plus – that emerged as the major opposition to the U.S. and European positions. The group represents most of the world's population and includes China, India, Indonesia and Brazil.

Leaders of that group said they had brought concrete issues to the table that would be the basis for future trade talks.

"We emerge from this process stronger than we came into it," Brazilian Foreign Minister Celso Amorim said.

Ecuador's foreign trade minister, Ivonne Baki, added: "It's not the end. It's the beginning."

Before the talks collapsed, delegates spent Sunday debating not the changes to farming policy that they had spent much of the conference negotiating, but instead four proposals about foreign investment and competition.

Lamy said the meeting's chairman, Mexican Foreign Secretary Luis Ernesto Derbez, proposed accepting two of the proposals and rejecting the two others, but countries were unable to agree. Derbez confirmed his account.

"I simply came to the conclusion that the consensus was not there and there was no way to build it," he said. The announcement of the collapse took some delegates by surprise. One journalist ran into a briefing by U.S. trade officials, demanding reaction. Deputy U.S. Trade Representative Josette Shiner was visibly startled and said she would look into it.

The collapse was reminiscent of the downfall of talks in 1999, when street riots and divisions between WTO members sunk attempts to launch a new round of trade negotiations. In Cancun, there were protests as well, but they didn't gather the momentum that demonstrations did in Seattle.

The failure in Cancun was a blow to the WTO, and called into question the organization's ability to reach a global trade treaty by the end of next year - a goal WTO members set for themselves at a meeting two years ago in Doha, Qatar.

"It's hard for me to believe that in the position we're in now we'll be able to finish on time," Zoellick said.

Lamy was harsher: "The WTO remains a medieval organization. The procedures, the rules of this organization cannot support the weight of its task."

But Amorim said real progress had been made, and that the WTO would continue to negotiate the same points in the future on the basis of advances made in Cancun.

"It's a setback not to have a result now," he said. "But we are optimistic in the long run."

WTO Director-General Supachai Panitchpakdi called for ministers to report back to him by mid-December to decide how to proceed.

In the agriculture talks, poor nations had hoped to slash subsidies that rich countries pay their farmers, making it easier for their farmers to compete in a global economy. Some countries also wanted to lower the tariffs many countries charge for importing farm goods.

Doing so could have dramatically altered farming around the world. Some farmers could have found new markets for their crops. Others would have struggled to compete without the subsidies that keep them in business. Consumers could have gotten cheaper fruits, vegetables and meat from distant shores.

Monkey Bar revamped

The Monkey Bar in downtown Amherst gets about a $1 million face lift in an addition to the restaurant and night club that will inlcude an outdoor dining room and bar that will serve exotic food.

By Ikaika C. Arnado
Collegian Staff

The owner of the Monkey Bar, Mauro Aniello, is building an addition worth nearly $1 million onto the restaurant/night club.

He is planning on using the addition to host private parties and community events.

"I have a lot of events where people want to have a private party in the back, so I can't close the front to have a private party," Aniello said.

"So I'll continue to have my business in the front and a private party in the back. I can have weddings, retirement parties, you guys want to book a party with x amount of people we'll have a DJ in the back with music and we'll be able to accommodate you."

The addition will include an outdoor dinning room and a bar that will serve exotic food.

"We're adding a deck for outdoor dinning; we're going to have a tequila bar, and tapas food," Aniello said.

The addition will be easily accessible from the Boltwood Walk parking garage.

"The restaurant, which is on the same floor...allows us [to] have people come in from the garage; we'll have an entry from there," Aniello said.

The cost of the renovations is close to $1 million.

"It's in the ballpark between 750 and 1 million," Aniello said. It is scheduled for completion by Thanksgiving.

The Monkey Bar serves Cajun and American food during the day with a twist of Asian sophistication. At night, it becomes a small club.

"It is well known as a restaurant for lunch and dinner and after certain hours it's well known as a nice place to go dancing where people don't wear a backward baseball cap," Aniello said. "It's a more sophisticated scene where...[guys] want to have a good night with [their] girl."

Regulars that go to the Monkey Bar feel that the new addition will attract more people.

"It's a smart move, it's going to work for everyone," Tom Walsh, a former cook from the Monkey Bar, said.

"You see there's a line now and when that's open most likely there will be a bigger line to get in here. It's going to make money and it'll be a spot that everyone can go at once, as opposed to 75 here 100 there. From the sound of it it's going to be nice.

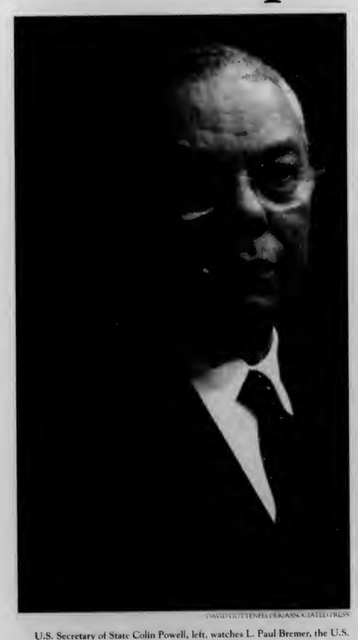
There's going to be a side-bar on the back, there's going to be a dinning room for 150."

Some feel that Aniello made a wise decision and everyone will benefit from the new addition.

"It's a no lose situation for everyone because they need something new in town, and he's [Aniello] been the newest thing beside Atlantis, and Atlantis is Atlantis they're never going to extend the basement," Walsh said.

Some say that the Monkey Bar is the most sophisticated bar in Amherst.

"It's the most sophisticated place anywhere, really," Marina Korniyenko, an alumnus of the university said. "It's like Boston or New York, but in a really really small town."



Regulars are attracted to The Monkey Bar's classy and cosmopolitan atmosphere.

"[I like the] international crowd, the fact that a lot of my friends go here, and the fact that we spend so much money, and the fact that there's so much good music and people dress up," Korniyenko said.

The downside in the meantime is the construction.

"I think once the smoking porch is back it will really enhance my Monkey Bar experience," Kathryn M. Hunt, an international relations major at Mount Holyoke, said.

Powell praises progress in Iraq

DAVID GUTTENFELDER/KANSAS CITY STAR-REUTERS

U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell, left, watches L. Paul Bremer, the U.S. civilian administrator for Iraq, during a press conference in Baghdad yesterday.

By George Gedda
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq – Secretary of State Colin Powell said yesterday he is convinced "the winds of freedom are blowing" across Iraq, but acknowledged the possibility that terrorists are trying to make their way into the country and sabotage the process toward self-rule.

Powell spent 12 hours in talks with the team of American officials guiding Iraq in the post-war period and with the U.S.-appointed Iraqi Governing Council.

On his first visit to the nation that has dominated his attention since the early days of the Bush administration, Powell attended a Baghdad City Council meeting, met with Foreign Minister Hoshyar Zebari and joined the U.S. administrator for Iraq, L. Paul Bremer, at a joint news conference.

He described impressive moves toward self-government and seemed invigorated by what he heard as he made his rounds.

"There is vibrancy to this effort, a vibrancy that I attribute to the winds of freedom that are now blowing through this land," he said after the city council meeting.

Powell's day began with a flight from Kuwait aboard a C-130 cargo plane and ended with a dinner with a leading Baghdad-based Shiite cleric.

He said the United States is committed to having Iraqis run their government, but wants to cede power after a "deliberative process" rather than the early transfer advocated by some fellow members of the U.N. Security Council. France has pressed for seating a provisional government within a month.

"We are not hanging on for the sake of hanging on. We are hanging on because it's necessary to stay with this task until a new government has been created, a responsible government," Powell said at the news conference with Bremer.

"The worst thing that could happen is for us to push this process too quickly, before the capacity for governance is there and the basis for legitimacy is there, and see it fail."

Powell called attention to the appointment of an interim Iraqi Cabinet with 25 ministers, steps toward creation of an independent judiciary and general Arab acceptance of Zebari as a legitimate Iraqi representative even though Iraq still lacks an authentic government.

"There is a sense of hope here even in this time of difficulty," Powell said. "Those who are so critical of the administration might want to hold their fire a bit."

Powell acknowledged that the security situation remains challenging, with a major new threat coming from "terrorists who are trying to infiltrate into the country for the purpose of disrupting this whole process."

The secretary gave a rough estimate of 100 such infiltrators and said he was confident that the U.S. military can handle the problem.

The attacks on American occupying forces, an almost daily occurrence in Iraq, continued when a roadside bomb hit a convoy in the city of Fallujah, killing a U.S. soldier and injuring three others, the military said.

Some 155 soldiers have died in Iraq since President Bush declared an end to major combat on May 1. During the heavy fighting before that date, 138 soldiers died.

"This security threat comes from those who do not want to see (deposed President) Saddam Hussein go and those who want to foment trouble here, terrorists who are coming in, as well as remnants of the old regime," Powell told "Fox News Sunday" in Washington.

He said military commanders told him they are confident they can handle both threats, though it will take time.

Almost nine in 10 Americans, in an ABC-Washington Post poll released yesterday, said they were concerned that the United States is going to get bogged down in a long and costly peacekeeping mission in Iraq.

In Washington, Vice President Dick Cheney hinted that the administration would seek more money next year than the additional $87 billion already requested to pay mainly for postwar costs in Iraq. He also said the administration does not know when the U.S. military presence in Iraq will end.

About 116,000 American troops are deployed in Iraq. While some U.S. lawmakers have urged the administration to increase that number and persuade other countries to commit troops, Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld took issue with critics who say the mission has become a quagmire.

"We've been there 4 1/2 months since the end of major military combat. Four-and-a-half months is not bogged down, in my view," he told CBS' "Face the Nation."

Last week, U.S. Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, made a comparison to Vietnam. That prompted a blunt response from Powell:

"We ought to stop with these rather bizarre historical allusions back to something that happened 25, 30 years ago," Powell said on CNN's "Late Edition."

He asserted that "there is political life returning here on a democratic basis. The Iraqi people are being presented a future so totally different from the horrible past from which they've just come out."

Bremer has said a new government could be in place as early as the end of 2004. But the Iraqi chairman of a committee studying the constitutional process said Sunday that it could take as long as two years to write a new Iraqi constitution.

Continued on page 2

EDITORIAL/OPINION Page 5
Gay Marriage
ARTS & LIVING Page 4
Headbangers Ball
SPORTS Page 8
Made in Manhattan
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS Page 7

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor-in-Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Fountas
Production Manager Scott Dibl
News Editor Nick Markantonatos
Associate Managing Editor Sean Costello
Executive Associate Editor Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Living Editor Robert Krzykowski
Living Editor Erika Lowley
Photo Editor Courtney Charles
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Sports Editor Marty Pappo
Operations Manager Julie Beauchamp
Sales Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resources Director Sandra Marquez
Accounts Payable Betsy Feldman
Accounts Receivable Ben Rainer
Advertising Associate David Poe
Assistant Production Manager Mark Lagnic
Assistant Photo Editor Richard Pacheco
Assistant Photo Editor Erin Lynch
Copy Manager Lindsay Clark
Assistant Arts & Living Editor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Entertainment Editor Linda Wallack
Assistant Arts & Living Editor Jessica Pelletier
Assistant Sports Editor Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Sports Editor Paige Crum
Assistant Sports Editor Kelly Farrell
Assistant News Editor Ferron Salniker
Assistant Photo Editor Emilie Duggan
Assistant Graphics Editor Mike Marcelli

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian (USPS 646 480) is published Monday through Friday during the academic year, except during vacations and examination periods, by the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, Inc., a non-profit corporation. Periodicals postage paid at Amherst, MA 01002. Subscriptions are $90 per year. Postmaster: Send address changes to the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, 113 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, MA 01003.

Powell speaks on Iraq

Continued from page 1

hold a national referendum on it and conduct national elections.

On an unseasonably cool day, Powell was received warmly at the Baghdad International Airport by dozens of U.S. soldiers.

He posed with some for photographs. The former general, whose last military job was chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, looked very much at home with the sergeants and corporals who surrounded him.

Powell then flew to Baghdad by helicopter, avoiding the drive along an airport road that has been the scene of occasional sniper attacks.

Zebari, who took office just a week ago, acknowledged that the security environment will influence the pace of progress toward Iraqi self-rule. He expressed hope that by mid-2004, Iraq will have "an elected legitimate government."

Details about the length of Powell's stay in Iraq and his remaining activities were closely held by U.S. officials.

GERALD H. LING/COLLEGIAN

Hanging on a thin red line

Cadet Richards of the University of Massachusetts Army ROTC crosses the campus pond last Thursday on a rope secured on both sides of the pond. The Department of Military Leadership operates the Army ROTC and it offers civilian courses to UMass students throughout the semester.

Hurricane Isabel could hit U.S. this week

By Erik Schelzig
Associated Press

MIAMI – Hurricane Isabel weakened slightly Sunday but was still a powerful Category 4 storm as it plowed across the Atlantic Ocean on a course that could slam it into the central East Coast late this week.

"It's looking more and more likely that this is going to be a big event for the eastern United States," National Hurricane Center meteorologist Eric Blake said Sunday.

Computer models predict that weather conditions over the East Coast should prevent Isabel from turning back out to sea and missing land, hurricane specialist Stacy Stewart said.

"Landfall along the U.S. mid-Atlantic coast somewhere between North Carolina and New Jersey between four or five days (Thursday or Friday) is appearing more and more likely," Stewart said. "Little or no significant weakening is expected to occur until after landfall occurs."

In Wilmington, N.C., John Byrnes had already stocked up with 25 sheets of plywood Sunday and enough two-by-fours and screws to barricade the windows at his house, his in-laws' house and their downtown law office.

His household generator was ready and he had an extra tank of propane gas to run appliances.

"We're all pretty much taken care of," Byrnes said. "We're in standby mode."

At 5 p.m. EDT, Isabel's maximum sustained wind speed was 155 mph – 1 mph below the minimum for Category 5 and down 5 mph from earlier measurements.

Experts had said it would be extremely unusual for Isabel to maintain Category 5 strength as it moved north over cooler water.

The storm was centered about 900 miles southeast of Cape Hatteras, N.C. Hurricane-force wind of at least 74 mph extended 100 miles out from the center.

It was moving toward the west-northwest at about 13 mph, and was expected to continue on that path into Monday, then turn toward the Carolinas, possibly making landfall Thursday or Friday. Forecasters note that hurricanes can be unpredictable, and long-range forecasts have large possibilities for error.

In Washington, D.C., emergency officials were working on acquiring additional sandbags, and planned to begin a public education campaign and meet with other department and critical services leaders Monday.

"Then we're going to pray," said Peter LaPorte, director of the Emergency Management Agency.

In Charleston, S.C., Joe Walker said he didn't evacuate in 1989 when Hurricane Hugo blasted ashore and he probably won't leave if Isabel veers into his area.

"If it's going to come, it's going to come," Walker said.

The last Category 5 Atlantic hurricane was Mitch in 1998, which killed about 11,000 people in Central America. The last two Category 5 hurricanes to strike the United States were Andrew in 1992 and Camille in 1969.

The Atlantic hurricane season began June 1 and ends Nov. 30.

Israeli official: 'Killing Arafat an option'

By Mohammed Daraghmeh
Associated Press

RAMALLAH, West Bank – The second-ranking official in the Israeli government said Sunday that killing Yasser Arafat is an option, as thousands of Palestinians took to the streets across the West Bank and Gaza Strip promising to protect their leader.

Israel blames Arafat for blocking peace efforts and preventing a crackdown against militants who have carried out two suicide bombings in the last week.

Vice Prime Minister Ehud Olmert said Sunday that killing Arafat is a possibility – along with expelling him or keeping him in a siege that would "isolate him from the world." Olmert's comments have not been part of any official government statement.

Olmert's comments appeared aimed at sending signals to other Palestinian leaders to abandon Arafat. Olmert, considered a likely future candidate for premier, is the closest official to Prime Minister Ariel Sharon to say outright that Arafat might be killed.

"Arafat can no longer be a factor in what happens here," Olmert told Israel Radio. "Expulsion is certainly one of the options, killing is also one of the options."

Secretary of State Colin Powell said Israel would incite rage among Arabs and Muslims everywhere by exiling or killing Arafat.

"The Israelis know our position quite well," Powell told "Fox News Sunday" during a visit to Iraq. "The United States does not support either the elimination of him or the exile of Mr. Arafat."

Olmert's comments underscored the collapse of the U.S.-backed "road map" peace plan and the depths to which Israeli-Palestinian relations have sunk a decade after Arafat and then-Premier Yitzhak Rabin agreed on the first Israel-PLO accords in September 1993.

In a sign that Israelis were bending on other U.S. demands, Israeli security officials said Sharon has decided not to build, for now, a section of security barrier that would have dipped deep into the West Bank to incorporate Jewish settlements in the center of territory that Palestinians want for a state.

The previously intended route of the barrier enraged Palestinians, who saw it as a land grab, and was strongly opposed by the United States.

The plan to erect a security barrier between Israel and the West Bank is popular in Israel as a way to block suicide bombers. No Palestinian bombers have come from the Gaza Strip, which is fenced.

Israel has completed about 90 miles of the West Bank barrier, whose fences, trenches, razor wire and concrete walls could eventually run more than 400 miles, depending on the ultimate route.

Palestinian legislator Saeb Erekat, meanwhile, condemned Olmert's statements as "the behavior and actions of a mafia and not a government."

www.dailycollegian.com

CVS pharmacy
1 Hour Photo
Student Discount
$1.00 off 1 hour processing (prints only)
$2.00 off 1 hour digital processing (prints & cd)
Valid Student ID required.
Available at both Amherst locations only.
Original roll developing only.
Offer ends:
Sept. 30, 2003

Keep our campus "Jackass"-free!

Don't download movies from college.movielink.com, Sept. 15th - Oct. 15th.
STUDENTS AGAINST MOVIELINK
COLLEGE FILM FESTIVAL

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

Monday, September 15, 2003 Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Johnny Cash will be missed

"His impact on country music and all music is up there in a very rarified atmosphere," Kyle Young, director of the Country Music Hall of Fame and Museum, told the Associated Press. "He was so accessible, and his voice was so instantly recognizable. And he used really simple arrangements. When you listened to him you almost thought you could go out and make music yourself."

A rumbling voice of social justice, Johnny Cash, died this past week.

Cash's 71 years seemed too short for the son of a poor farmer from Arkansas who threw caution to the wind, battled every demon, and climbed every mountain to come out not only standing, but victorious in the face of it all. We should all have that resolve. There is no better example of what a man can do to beat the odds and be a success.

Cash lived his life as he wanted too – growing to stardom was never the goal, and in many ways contradicted his own Christian ideals. He never abandoned the share-cropper, the prisoner or the embattled. He more readily stepped off whatever stoop he was on to raise them up. Some of his most noted performances – at San Quentin and Folsom Prison – are small marks of the social obligation he felt.

The Man in Black wore such garb because there was injustice, inequality and intolerance.

"Everybody was wearing rhinestones, all those sparkle clothes and cowboy boots," Cash told the Associated Press in 1986. "I decided to wear a black shirt and pants and see if I could get by with it. I did, and I've worn black clothes ever since."

Almost a minister, but better a gangster, Cash rebelled against the ideal setting everyone wanted him to push for. He lit up his songs before that was the thing to do. He lit up a national park as well. He sang about killing when he hadn't killed, and he set the stage for what has come not only from country music, but from folk, rock and rap.

Cash was more folk than the country pigeonhole he was placed in. He has performed with U2, Tom Petty, Bob Dylan, Paul McCartney and has repossessed the works of others: Trent Reznor, Neil Diamond, Sting. Humble enough to admit he liked your song when he heard it, Cash could give it new life when he sang it.

"He is the patron saint of every kid with a guitar," singer-songwriter Tom Waits, told the Associated Press. "Songwriters learn how to write songs from listening to each other. He's like a wise old tree full of songs. I spent many days under his branches."

Never before and likely never again will there be a an artist who, at 71, could light up the MTV community and show a diamond-hung culture what a man in simple black could do.

Johnny Cash – award-winning musician of 11 Grammy Awards, an artist spotlighted in the Country Music Hall of Fame since 1980 and in the Rock 'n' Roll Hall of Fame since 1992, a man who knew no boundaries – he will be sorely missed.

Information from the Associated Press was used in this article.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

Gay + marriage = economic boom

Thomas Naughton

This little equation above is the answer to all of our post 9/11/ crappy president/ recession (as though a republican president would produce anything else) woes. The time of enlightenment has arrived, friends. Finally, the sainted lawmakers have decided to consider the possibility that gay people are actually human beings and not just some weird figment of everyone's imagination. I actually think that the right wing was thinking that some day we gays and lesbians would throw back our Madonna CD collections, glitter pants, "Ellen" DVDs, and lady-mullet hair cuts and say, "Just kidding! Sike!"

That's not going to happen, EVER. We're here, we're queer, and now if the Supreme Court decides that our relationships are as valid as heterosexual relationships, we're going to save the economy by partaking in the "sacred" (ha ha ha) right of marriage.

I can't believe that the conservatives of the nation haven't seen the obvious benefits that gay marriage would absolutely ensure. If we look through the periscope of gay male stereotypes, we will find the seeds of an economic upswing that is unparalleled by any idiot-boy king tax cuts:

1. Gay men, having no family responsibilities, have LOTS of available money.
2. Gay men, being fabulous, LOVE to shop.
3. Gay men LOVE to drink.

These three items add up to the budding business of gay marriage. These weddings would be enormous gala events that would cost thousands, even millions of dollars apiece. If the conservatives end up being right about how fickle and non-committed gay relationships are, think of the turnover that could occur. The ceremonies would only be bigger and more expensive the second, third or tenth time around, which only mean more economic stimulation and more circles of high fashion guests doing the "chicken dance" to the tune of $500,000+.

I am shocked (not really) by the resistance that gay marriage is encountering from conservatives.

I want to wear a wedding band on each hand and be the lone man at the top of the wedding cake if I do so desire.

Where is their venture capitalist spirit? What happened to the adherence to the market economy that America stands for? Conservatives worry that if marriage is not defined as a union between a man and a woman, people will start marrying anything, like goats or other farm animals. I would think that these cold venture capitalists would say "let them marry anything, let them marry a goat as long as they pay for it, and pay big." I am disappointed.

Personally, I am probably going to end up alone, and I kind of want people to buy me toasters, VCRs, the Ronco Food Dehydrator, a Pilates machine (Mom, I know you're reading) and various other marriage gifts. I kind of want a five-tier cheesecake-wedding confection with my name strewn about in white flowery icing. If I'm going to be an old gay all by myself, I want to embrace it, so, if I want to get married even to myself, I want to be able to do it. I want to wear a wedding band on each hand and be the lone man at the top of the wedding cake if I so desire.

All joking aside, gay marriage needs to happen for one reason and only one: gay people are human beings.

Human beings need love, they need to give love, and there is no greater joy than to share love with someone and have that love be recognized by family, friends, and the law. To have an important partnership be devalued by a nation that is founded on the principal that human beings are equal in all lights is truly disappointing.

If you have ever asked yourself why gays feel the need to celebrate gay pride, if you have devalued gay pride because you feel it's foolish and that there is no "straight pride" day, consider this: every day is a straight pride day; every space is a heterosexual space; every billboard, magazine, and television show features straight relationships.

To say that gays feel dispossessed and disenchanted by the omission of our lives from mainstream culture (save a few guest spots on teen dramas or stereotypical reality/make-over shows) is an understatement. Michael Thelwell, professor of African American Studies here at UMass quoted Martin Luther King Jr. in his History of the Civil Rights course last fall, saying, 'The arc of the universe is bent toward justice, toward freedom.' I certainly hope so.

Thomas Naughton is a Collegian columnist.

Home of the straight

Mark Ostroff

Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist and President George W. Bush have a surprise up their sleeves. Since last July, the two Republicans have been leading the front to constitutionally bring the axe down on gay marriage. This would make it unconstitutional for any state to allow a legal union between two men or two women.

Imagine that it would be unconstitutional to allow certain rights to a legitimate minority. Quite a step for the so-called "land of the free," isn't it?

So, why is the gay community's most prominent issue on the hot seat?

Last April, Senator Rick Santorum claimed, "If the Supreme Court says that you have the right to consensual (gay) sex within your home, then you have the right to bigamy, you have the right to polygamy, you have the right to incest, and you have the right to adultery. You have the right to anything."

What's to be made of this White House-backed remark? It seems to imply that homosexual relations are a gateway into deeper acts of perversion. The only thing that could possibly come to mind is the right-wing neurosis of preserving Christian values. Perhaps by restricting the gays, they feel there will be no chance of compromise for adulterers, molesters, and the incestuous. When it comes down to it, this attitude reeks of Cold War cultural residue.

What business does the federal government have in defining our morals for us? Are conservatives implying that Americans don't know where to draw the line of decency? This is where another excuse comes into play: the lamest, most abstract mantra to come out of the fanatical right: to preserve the "Sanctity of Marriage."

Most gay couples are not even concerned with any religious aspect of marriage. All they simply look for is the rights of next of kin that heterosexuals enjoy. When a man gets sick, his partner can be allowed in to see him in intensive care. If he dies, his estate can go to his partner by default. They could share benefits, and raise a child – things that heterosexuals take for granted.

Besides, in a country with a 50-plus percent divorce rate, where you can get married at a drive-thru window, "sanctity" may not exactly be at the top of everyone's list nowadays.

Not even 150 million Communists, over a 74-year span resorted to a constitutional regulation of marriage. America may be the first to do so...

But just as long as one gown and one tux stands at the altar, the ultra-right don't even care if an Elvis impersonator marries them. Heterosexuality is sacred enough. The bride and groom don't even have to speak the same language, and sometimes, there's heavy postage involved!

The right-wing agenda to amend the constitution is as extreme as it gets. Even the Soviet Constitution of 1936 (a.k.a. "Stalin's Constitution") made no reference to the regulation of marriage. Not even 150 million communists over a 74-year span resorted to constitutional regulation of marriage. America may be the first to do so, solely on the vision of religious ideologies.

Ironically, Frist, Bush, and the Republican Party itself are working against their own ideology of "small government." They've been duped into believing that a federal government that regulates the institution of marriage is still "small government."

They don't seem to mind that if you sell a kidney to keep the lights on, but they want to make sure the bedrooms of America are regulated to the full extent of the federal law. Isn't individual jurisdiction of states on such laws as marriage one of the keys to America's free society? Apparently, not when God's work must be done.

Normally the ultra-right has no problem attacking the left-wing ideology of strong government, but this time they obviously answer to a higher calling. They just refuse to tell us what that calling is. Whatever it is, it finds gay people to be less human than the biblically ordained protocol that Bush and company think they emulate.

But don't expect them to come out of the closet on this anti-gay agenda. They will only go as far as making foolish abstractions to cover up a covert bible fetish.

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian columnist.

Bus bombing hits home

World Perspectives

Leah Vitale

Last week at approximately 9:10 p.m. (EST), a bus leaving the Hasbrouck bus stop on the Mullins Center via Southwest bus route was detonated by a still-unidentified homicide bomber. The man got on the bus and shortly after, discharged the explosive. The bomber, as well as 15 UMass students, were killed.

The bus, pulling into the stop after the #34, was hit by the blast, as well as a nearby automobile. The PVTA bus was severely damaged and bodies and body parts were strewn across the street. Only the metal skeleton of the bus remains. The UMass Medical Center and Health Services have admitted approximately 100 injured students. Students nearby the explosion were asked to help the emergency personnel in administering aid to the victims. The attack was claimed by a military terrorist group shortly after. The strike was condemned by the US government. University classes are to resume this afternoon.

Seeing an empty street in the place of a bombsite a few hours later is normal.

Now, you can take a deep breath. The above report in fact did not occur ... in Amherst. Change the place and the people however, and it did, only 2 minutes from my study abroad university dormitory.

The foretold scenarios seem unimaginable. Such a horror would never be tolerated in Amherst. These are the types of things you only hear of on the news that happen in a land far-away.

Today, that far away land is Israel, a place where this inconceivable occurrence is actually quite common. A place where seeing an empty street in the place of a bombsite a few hours later is normal. This is where a staggering percentage of society has been diagnosed with post-traumatic stress disorder from witnessing the trauma of a terrorist act. This is a country in which most of society has known or been related to a victim of terror; one in which children, parents and spouses are left alone, families broken forever. This is a place where being a victim to a bus bombing is as equally as likely as being hit by a car while crossing the street.

When faced with the thought of such catastrophe in our own lives, we suddenly grow angry, sad, defensive, and most of all intolerant. So why has such chaos been endured in Israel for the past three years? Why hasn't anyone taken any real steps to end this pandemonium? We all know from our country's behavior toward Iraq that if the US feels its citizens are in any real threat, it is not in the least bit tolerated. Why should it be any different in Israel?

Now, slightly more conscious of the graveness of her situation, we must be sympathetic to and proactive in aiding Israel from enduring such tragedies in the future. We must urge our government leaders to take steps to pressure the perpetrators of these crimes and to dismantle these terrorist organizations. We must support Israel's defensive military action against those responsible.

Most directly, we must remind one another of the inhumane tragedies occurring on the other side of the world, as if they were our own, right here in Amherst, by maintaining an understanding and sympathetic sentiment on our own campus. Haven't we learned by now that we are not invincible? Surely the actions of Sept. 11 must reawaken our feelings of susceptibility and vulnerability.

If we turn our heads away and simply ignore Israel's suffering, why do we deserve to live peacefully? We must be grateful it is not we at risk and as a token of our gratitude, become activists on Israel's behalf. Let us hope and pray that there will be a quick and immediate halt to this misfortune and Israel can once again live in peace, a privilege we so fervently value and resolutely consider to be uncompromisingly ours.

Leigh Vitale is an international columnist.

Letter to the Editor

Recently, there's been a lot of talk about the ALANA issue. It's important that the other side of the ALANA vs. SGA issue be brought up, because the other side has certainly not been addressed yet in The Daily Collegian. I hear a lot of talk about how 'democracy' is being threatened here, but it's completely the other way around.

Our representative democracy is based on the notion that you run a campaign and must get elected by getting the most votes. The seats ALANA had these past years were handed to them. Their appointed senators are not responsible for getting the 25 signatures necessary for nomination. They do not need a single vote to get on Senate, which is supposed to be a democratically elected body. With the appointed seats, it is not. As a Senator who was democratically elected last year, I can saw that it caused an enormous divide in the Senate to have part of Senate be elected, and the other part be ALANA caucus members.

The Congressional Black Caucus in Washington does not just get handed seats because of its race, its members have to win elections just like everyone else. Unlike Congress in Washington, the SGA is VERY easy to get into, probably too easy. I got on with two votes last year. There's no reason the Office of ALANA Affairs can't put their time and energy into running campaigns for Senate seats.

Instead they put their resources into protesting and whining about not being handed Senate seats merely because of their race. This is an awful example to set. Students cannot expect to go throughout life being handed things, because it's not going to happen. This issue is no different. In addition, the motion to eliminate the appointed seats occurred during a Senate meeting in which ALANA students were present. They didn't even debate the motion.

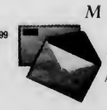
Jared Nokes is not the sole person in this issue; the Senate passed this motion. He should not be the scapegoat for this; he is carrying out a Senate vote on a motion. The Senate is also not 90 percent white males as President Dave Carr suggested, as at least 40 percent of Senate consists females, let alone the minority representation.

ALANA students, if you want to be on Senate, you have to get on like everyone else by getting votes. It's a little thing we call democracy.

Sincerely,
David Falvey
SGA Senator

Edlop meeting at 7 pm.

Submit a letter or opinion



In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's name, address, and telephone number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 200-400 words in length and addressed as 'Letters to the Editor.' Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed as 'Editorial/Opinion.' Submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor 113 Campus Center Way Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Andrew W.K.'s set at Pearl St. led to a full-out, good-natured riot in the crowd.

UMass grad's flic a 'splendor' but not perfect

By Nathan Rothstein
Collegian Staff

Daily actions are complicated and routine can quickly feel like chores. In the course of a day thousands of things occur that can cause displeasure, but most people hope they can let things go.

Paul Giamatti's character, comic strip legend Harvey Pekar, in "American Splendor" can't let anything go. It is too bad because he lives a life of loneliness, boredom and lack of motivation to do anything of importance. Despite Harvey's flaws, there is something special about watching this awkward human being find his way through the maze of life.

'American Splendor'
Directed by Robert Pulcini
Shari Springer Berman
Starring Paul Giamatti, Hope Davis
HBO/Fine Line
Rated R
101 mins.
Grade B+

Directors Robert Pulcini and Shari Springer Berman and producer Ted Hope– a University of Massachusetts graduate – put together a film that expands the imagination and excites the audience.

The film begins with a narration done by the real Harvey Pekar, who is continuously used to let the audience see the similarities between the real Harvey, and Giamitti's astonishing portrayal of him. During the opening credits the audience is able to get a sense of the style of the movie. The images transform from Henry walking down the street to shots of Henry's cartoon character expressing his discontent with life.

As the movie progresses and the story develops, we are quickly able to identify Harvey as a true loser. His voice doesn't even work, and all of his anger has to be kept inside where it builds into a huge pile of malcontent ness where nothing positive matures. Things begin to turn for the better when Henry decides to take action in his life. He starts to write the comic strip equivalent of "Seinfeld", commenting on the humor of every day life.

Despite his rising fame, he still holds all of his qualities of before. Over time he has only become lonelier. Just as the movie is turning into another depressing "Punch Drunk Love", a sense of hope is brought out by Hope Davis' character Joyce.

Davis does a tremendous job of playing a frustrated, but optimistic comic salesmen who

Continued on page 5

COURTESY HBO/FIRST LINE FILMS

Paul Giamatti portrays comic strip creator Harvey Pekar in "American Splendor."

the source

(the sorz) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of New England

MondaySeptember15

ART

"C'est Moi", a visual thesis/ community work project organized by University of Massachusetts senior year student Senofer Ewing Stead, is opening in the Student Union Art Gallery today. The exhibit, which is separated into two sections, has been described as "constructive, empowering, and a memorable event." The gallery is located next to the People's Market in the Student Union, and is open from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Roger Patrick's "Daisy Cutters and Texas Leaguers" opens today in the Central Gallery in the Wheeler House of the Central Residence Area on campus. The exhibit is a combination of baseball paintings that Patrick began painting in January 2002. The exhibit runs till Oct. 5. The gallery's hours are Monday through Thursday, from 3 to 6 p.m. and Sunday, 2 to 5 p.m.

TuesdaySeptember16

Books

At the Odyssey Bookshop in South Hadley, Vendela Vilda, author of "Girls on the Verge" and an editor of the journal "The Believer", reads from her first novel, "And Now You Can Go". The event starts at 7 p.m.

Music

Paul Brady, an Irish singer/songwriter and multi-instrumentalist, swings through Northampton to play one show at the Iron Horse Music Hall. Tickets are $20 in advance and $23 at the door. The show begins at 7 p.m.

WednesdaySeptember17

Music

Listen to the sweet sounds of Bathtub MARY, an acoustic guitar trio, when they play the Maplewood Bar on 138 Belchertown Rd. in Amherst Tuesday night. There is a $3 cover charge, and the music will begin around 9 p.m.

FridaySeptember19

MUSIC

The fifth annual Wormtown Music Fest kicks off in Greenfield today. The music and camping event is being held at Camp Kee-Wanee. Thirty-nine bands are booked to fill three full days and two nights of jamming music. Max Creek, Percy Hill, Slipknot, Reid Genauer & the Assembly of Dust and Jen Durkin are some of the predicted highlights of the festivities. Tickets are $48 in advance and $60 at the gate. Tickets can be purchased online at www.wormtown.com. The gates open on Friday at 10 a.m.

Lectures

At First Churches on 129 Main St. in Northamptonn, Ram Dass, one of America's most accailmed and beloved spiritual teachers, will be speaking and signing books. Tickets are $25 in advance, $22 for seniors and students with ID. They can be purchased at Beyond Words Bookshop at 189 Main St. in Northampton.

SaturdaySeptember20

Festivals

The Big E in West Springfield is in full swing in its second weekend. On the Big E Comcast Stage, "Spirit of the Dance" will be performed Saturday night. The fair has good eats, rides, and dance and music performances. Pop diva Ashanti will be performing next weekend. The Big E also continues its tradition of showcasing the agricultural industry throughout New England.

weeklypinup

ANIME DOUBLE-DIP

Anime 2, two days of Japanese anime on the big screen, will be presented at the Academy of Music Theater in Nothampton Saturday and Sunday. The event costs $20 for series tickets.

'American Splendor' is a hit

Continued from page 4

resides in Delaware. Upset that her hippie co-worker sold the last issue of Henry's comic "American Splendor", she writes to Henry in hope of receiving an extra copy. As they begin to correspond, they both realize that they are strange people, and of course have a lot in common. Their relationship begins with a small, no-tongue kiss, followed by Joyce needing to throw up because her stomach is sensitive to restaurant food.

The story of them meeting through mail seemed too much like a Tom Hanks and Meg Ryan movie, but it quickly is checked into reality by a PG love scene that ends with Joyce spewing over the toilet. This movie is not the Hollywood spin to life, and it clearly wants to show the dark humor of every day occurrences. Every moment where things seem to be too cheerful, the writers and director find a way to bring the movie off the Hollywood pedestal and back to the outrageousness of reality.

Many films have tried to dwell on nothing and the simplicity of life, but many fail to make the film interesting. No matter what type of emotions are brought out during a movie, if boredom is one of them, the picture will not work as a whole. "American Splendor" puts everything together nicely and basing it on a true story helps the cause as well. When the film ends and it seems like everything has worked out for the better, the real Harvey quickly adds that everything is not perfect. And he is right, everything is not perfect – but "American Splendor" as a whole has come pretty close.

Music legend Johnny Cash dies of complications from diabetes

Continued from page 4

Singer Dolly Parton said, "Johnny Cash has only passed into the greater light. He will never, ever die. He will only become more important in this industry as time goes by."

Singer Kenny Chesney said Cash was one of the first artists whose music was universal.

"Whether anybody knows it or not, they were directly or indirectly influenced by Johnny Cash," he said. "Rock 'n' roll, country, gospel, Johnny's music crossed any boundary that was put up in front of him."

Cash wrote much of his own material and was among the first to record the songs of Bob Dylan and Kris Kristofferson.

"One Piece at a Time" was about an assembly line worker who built a car out of parts stolen from his factory. "A Boy Named Sue," a Shel Silverstein song he took to No. 1 in 1969, was a comical story of a father who gives his son a girl's name to make him tough.

Cash said in his self-titled 1997 autobiography that he tried to speak for "voices that were ignored or even suppressed in the entertainment media, not to mention the political and educational establishments."

His career spanned generations, with each finding something of value in his simple records, many of which used his trademark rockabilly rhythm.

Cash was a peer of Elvis Presley when he began recording in Memphis in the 1950s, and he scored hits like "Cry! Cry! Cry!" during that era. He had a longtime friendship and recorded with Dylan, who has cited Cash as a major influence.

Cash won 11 Grammy Awards – most recently in 2003, when "Give My Love To Rose" earned him honors as best male country vocal performance – and numerous Country Music Association awards. He was elected to the Country Music Hall of Fame in 1980 and inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1992.

June Carter Cash, who partnered with him in hits such as "Jackson," and daughter Rosanne Cash also were successful singers.

The late 1960s and '70s were Cash's peak commercial years, and he was host of his own ABC variety show from 1969-71. In later years, he was part of the Highwayman supergroup with Waylon Jennings, Willie Nelson and Kristofferson.

In the 1990s, Cash found a new artistic life recording with rock-rap producer Rick Rubin on the label American Recordings. He was back on the charts in 2002 with the album "American IV: The Man Comes Around."

He also wrote books, including two autobiographies, and acted in films and television shows.

In his 1971 hit "Man in Black," Cash said his black clothing symbolized the world's downtrodden people. Cash had been "The Man in Black" since he joined the Grand Ole Opry at age 25.

"Everybody was wearing rhinestones, all those sparkle clothes and cowboy boots," he said in 1986. "I decided to wear a black shirt and pants and see if I could get by with it. I did and I've worn black clothes ever since.

A musical icon and a sitcom legend pass on

Johnny Cash defined country muic

By John Gerome
Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) - Johnny Cash, a towering musical figure whose rough, unsteady voice championed the downtrodden and reached across generations with songs like "Ring of Fire," "I Walk the Line" and "Folsom Prison Blues," died Friday. He was 71.

Cash, known as "The Man in Black," died at 2 a.m. in Baptist Hospital of complications from diabetes that resulted in respiratory failure, said his manager, Lou Robin. The funeral service will be private, but a public memorial is being planned and the date will be announced later.

In his songs, Cash crafted a persona as a dignified, resilient voice for the common man – but there was always a dark edge.

One of the most haunting couplets in popular music comes from "Folsom Prison Blues," which went to No. 4 on the country charts in 1956: "I shot a man in Reno, just to watch him die."

Forty-seven years later, Cash's arresting video for "Hurt" was nominated for six MTV Video Music Awards, winning one.

His deeply lined face fit well with his voice, which was limited in range but used to great effect to sing about prisoners, heartaches and tales of everyday life.

As news of his death spread, other musicians praised Cash for his independent, rebellious streak that made him a powerful influence in country, rock, folk and gospel music.

COURTESY DON HUSTEIN/ROLLINGSTONE.COM

Johnny Cash, 71, is being mourned by the entire music industry.

"His influence spread over many generations," said Mick Jagger of the Rolling Stones. "I loved him as singer and a writer. I remember years ago a big part of our repertoire was two of my favorite Johnny Cash songs, 'I Walk The Line' and 'Ballad Of A Teenage Queen.'"

Marty Stuart, who was once in Cash's band and married to his daughter Cindy, said Cash "answered to no one but himself, what he heard in his own heart and own mind and own soul. He was never dictated to by a trend or convention or by corporate powers that be. He did it his way."

Cash had been released from the hospital Tuesday after a two-week stay for treatment of an unspecified stomach ailment. The illness caused him to miss last month's MTV awards, where his "Hurt" – a cover of Trent Reznor's hard rock song with Nine Inch Nails – won for cinematography.

"To hear that Johnny was interested in doing my song was a defining moment in my life's work," Reznor said Friday. "To hear the result really reminded me how beautiful, touching and powerful music can be. The world has truly lost one of the greats."

He had battled a disease of the nervous system, autonomic neuropathy, and pneumonia in recent years. His second wife, singer June Carter Cash, who co-wrote Cash's hit "Ring of Fire," died in May.

Continued on page 5

John Ritter was TV's nice guy

By Lynn Elber
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) – John Ritter's ability to coax big laughs out of sitcom pratfalls and punchlines inspired his colleagues.

"I learned so much from him. ... He was the best physical comic I've ever watched," actress Suzanne Somers, who co-starred with Ritter in "Three's Company," said Friday.

"All my physical comedy in 'Freaky Friday' is due to him," said actress Jamie Lee Curtis.

Ritter, 54, became ill Thursday while working on his ABC series "8 Simple Rules ... For Dating My Teenage Daughter" and underwent surgery at Providence St. Joseph Medical Center in Burbank for a tear in his aorta. He died shortly after 10 p.m. Thursday, publicist Lisa Kastelec said.

COURTESY MPTV.NET

John Ritter suddenly died at the age of 54.

The son of Tex Ritter, a Western film star and country musician, Ritter was an effortless funnyman who – given the chance – could handle drama as well. Friends recalled him as loving and buoyant.

"It's like there is a big tear in the world's heart," actor Henry Winkler told "Entertainment Tonight" on Friday. "He was extraordinary in every aspect of his life, especially as a father. His children were there at every moment of his life."

Winkler co-starred with Ritter on Broadway in Neil Simon's "The Dinner Party" and was to make a guest appearance on the ABC sitcom. He was on the set Thursday for rehearsal when he was told Ritter had taken ill.

"He was more than a comic," Simon said in a statement. "He was a real actor with a genius for comedy. I loved his performance in 'The Dinner Party.'"

"I'm shocked and heartbroken and so sad for his family. I cannot find words to express my sorrow – such a great loss to the joy in the world," Joyce DeWitt, who co-starred in ABC's "Three's Company," told "Entertainment Tonight."

The sitcom, which aired from 1977-84 and brought a new level of risque humor to TV, was the No. 1 comedy in the 1979-80 season and regularly part of the top 10.

GERALD H. LING/COLLEGIAN

Despite strong performances from UMass, Maine took a one-point victory in the tri-meet in Amherst. In the women's meet, Vermont used a powerful performance from Michelle Palmer to grab first place.

Maine, Vermont edge UM

Continued from page 8

UMass is scheduled to race again Saturday, Sept. 20 at the Ted Owen Invitational, in New Britain, Conn.

•••

Vermont's Michelle Palmer won the women's meet, leading her team to a first place finish of 29 points. Maine followed, with a total of 38 points, and UMass came in third with 53 points.

Alexis Anzelone, the first finisher from UMass, tore through the course in 18 minutes, 22 seconds, for an impressive 6th place. But individual accomplishment was the last thing on Anzelone's mind.

"We were all running for each other today, and that's really hard to do because you have to be such an individual when you're out there by yourself in the woods for twenty minutes. It was a team thing today," Anzelone said after the race.

Tricia Silva was next for the Minutewomen, clocking a time of 18:54 for 10th place. Amanda Dahlberg was right behind her, running 19:02 for 11th place. Dahlberg also had the team on her mind.

"It's a small team, but there's lots of pride," she said.

Kate Markopoulos came in at 19:03, and freshman phenomenon Cuisle Kierans burst onto the college cross country scene, rounding out the top five with 19:10. Kierans has high hopes for the season, but notes that she has some definite adjusting to do.

"I think it was a good first experience, and that it will be much more challenging than running in high school. It's definitely going to take some getting used to," Kierans said.

Coach Julie LaFreniere was proud of her small, but skilled team.

"I'm very excited about the way they competed," LaFreniere said. "The scores however, are deceiving. Yes, we lost to the two teams, but for the most part, we had our entire pack in before the other teams' fifth person. I feel like we're competing well together." Next up for the Minutewomen is Saturday's Ted Owen Invitational in New Britain, Connecticut.

Host UMass wins classic

Continued from page 8

Midshipman offense.

"It's not just one guy, it's everybody from the midfielders and back, overall just a full team effort," said Koch.

Once again UMass' offense was shut down, even with several opportunities to put the ball in the back of the net. Navy's defense was just as smothering as the Maroon and White's, and the game was scoreless at the beginning of the second half.

The scoring drought was ended when the offensive tandem of Path Myers and tournament MVP Oral Bullen connected for the game's first goal. Myers created enough space for Bullen to make a charge at goal and chip one past goaltender Frank DeFilippo.

After the offense flexed their muscles it was the defense that began to look shaky. At 24:19, Navy made its first real attempt at breaking the ice.

A faulty header and poor positioning by UMass goalkeeper Colin Burns left a wide open net for the Midshipmen. The opportunity was lost after Navy's shot went wide right and slammed the post.

The momentum seemed to fuel Navy as its attack continued. The Maroon and White defense could only hold the attack for another three minutes until 21:28, when the Midshipmen put in their first goal.

A loose ball off another Navy header rolled in front of the goal uncontested by the Minuteman defense, and was knocked home by Carter Stapleton.

"[Navy] was very organized and fit, they play really solid as a unit," said Koch.

With 16 minutes left in the game it appeared that the Midshipmen were in control of the game's tempo. UMass back Chris Camerota came out of the game after having a tooth knocked out, opening up a hole for a quick Midshipman attack.

The momentum was cut short when Myers put a one-touch shot on goal, barely missing. The scoring chance gave the UMass offense signs of life.

UMass regained control of the game after Stapleton's illegal slide tackle earned him a yellow card. The booking brought a wave of support from the crowd.

SU roughs up Minutewomen

Continued from page 8

SU goalie Emily Kowalczyk bobbled the ball on the ground, as it rolled closer toward to the goal. As the ball approached the goal line, sophomore Lindsey Bellini made a sliding chance at a goal, only to knock the ball out of bounds.

The last opportunity came in the second half on a similar play. Off a cross from Blyler, the ball sailed only inches over freshman Stephaine Barrett's head and into the hands of the keeper. The Minutewomen were unable to get the ball into the box for the rest of the half.

Nigh, one of the top goalies in the nation, continued her steady play. Nigh came up with seven saves against a heavy opposing attack, including a rocket in the second half to keep the game in reach. After giving up one goal, Nigh continues to average one goal against on the season. Her counterpart, Kowalczyk, had an easy night with only one save.

"I don't like to lose, but it's important to take out positives out of the game. Now, I think we realize what we need to do to win. It's more about having a winning mentality and realizing our potential. We need to step it up and know that this isn't going to be a walk in the park."

I-A: Reality or fiction?

Continued from page 8

526) stands out like a vegetarian in a steak house.

During the game, the crowd stays involved, even if the score reaches beyond humorous. On every first down achieved by K-State, announcer announces, "good for another Wildcat..." and the rest is finished by the crowd, with every diehard making the referee's first down signal, creating a wave of arms.

This, in a perfect world, is what the future of UMass football might just look like. The athletic department, fronted by an ad-hoc task force, is using every opportunity, including an examination of K-State's program, to determine the feasibility of moving the football team to I-A.

While the settings and interest might be a little different, Assistant Athletic Director Bill Strickland calls KSU "the model" for how a I-A program can exist. The Wildcats were among the dregs of I-A in the 1980s, generally regarded as one of the worst programs in college football. Entering the 1989 season, K-State was on a laughable 27-game winless streak, dating back to October of 1986.

But thanks to president John Wefald and coach Bill Snyder, K-State has become a perennial contender for the Big XII championship, and is among the nation's best college football programs.

While there are some who doubt the feasibility of UMass making a leap, and even more who are under the impression that all it takes is a I-A conference to land in, there are plenty of obstacles in the way, but also reason for optimism.

"President Wefald came in here and Bill Snyder came in here and they successfully used football and athletics as a way to market their university and market their academic programs," Strickland said.

Another example Strickland said is perfect for UMass is Connecticut, which has successfully brought its football team into the I-A ranks. And UConn is no weak sister either, recently defeating the Big Ten's Indiana, drawing over 30,000 to its brand new offcampus stadium, and 40,000 packed Rentschler Field Saturday for the Huskies' 24-14 loss to Boston College.

"[I-A] can certainly be done," Strickland said. "You can't tell me that Amherst, Mass. is that different than an hour south of us."

UConn will also have the benefit of joining the Big East, a BCS conference, in 2004.

Wildcats roll to blowout

Continued from page 8

Whipple said. "They're probably the best team we've played...they are just bigger and faster. Their recruiting is better than our recruiting. We played hard. We'll take it and move on."

As stifling as the K-State defense was, the offense was nearly as effective. Playing without quarterback and Heisman Trophy candidate Ell Roberson, the 'Cats advanced the ball inside the 20 yard line eight times, scoring on six of those chances and punting only twice.

Backup quarterback Jeff Schwinn, starting his first game since he was a senior at McLouth (Kan.) High School, did look shaky at times, throwing a pair of interceptions. However he was able to complete 17 of 26 attempts for 228 yards and managed the offense effectively with the help of a potent ground game led by tailback Darren Sproles.

The lightning-quick Sproles was able to effectively pick up the slack in the ground game created by Roberson's injury with an all-around solid day. Running mainly between the tackles and occasionally outside on toss sweeps, the junior carried the ball 28 times and gained 162 yards with three touchdowns.

"Darren is Darren. He's an extremely fine player," KSU coach Bill Snyder said. "If he gets the ball enough, sooner or later, he is going to make things happen."

Trailing 7-3 early in the 2nd quarter, KSU embarked on an 11-play, 74-yard drive capped off by a seven-yard touchdown strike from Schwinn to tight end Brian Casey.

The Wildcats then extended their lead to 17-7 on a two-yard plunge by Sproles, who set up the score with a 42-yard scamper two plays prior.

After UMass forced one of only two K-State punts on the day, Sproles got on the board again with his second touchdown rush of the game, this time from 8 yards out to put the 'Cats up 24-7 with just over a minute remaining in the first half.

"I like [Sproles] as a football player." Whipple said. "He's tough. He's resilient. The guys block for him. He's just a tremendous football player."

Following Sproles' final touchdown, Krohn was able to put together his most effective drive of the half, picking up three first downs with completions to three different receivers.

However freshman placekicker Michael Torres' 45-yard field goal attempt was blocked as time expired in the half.

Following a fumble by receiver James Terry that marked the Wildcats' third turnover of the afternoon, and a three-and-out for the Minutemen, K-State again added to its lead when Sproles concluded his scoring day with a one-yard plunge midway through the third quarter.

The score was set up by a 35-yard connection from Schwinn to Terry that set up a first-and-goal for the 'Cats at the 8-yard line.

After UMass' only turnover of the game – a Krohn fumble on fourth and 19 –Synder substituted quarterback Dylan Meier into the game, and watched him pay immediate dividends.

The freshman signal caller drove K-State 57 yards in six plays, and capped the scoring with an 8-yard keeper that upped the score to 38-7.

Despite allowing 38 points, defense was a bright spot for Whipple and the Minutemen. Leading the way was linebacker Jeremy Cain, who led the team with eleven tackles, ten of which were unassisted.

"Kansas State is a really good football team." Whipple said. "We were going to have to be a little more lucky than we were. There weren't any holes. It's a great game to coach until kickoff and then it's a really hard game to coach.

"I like our lockroom. Everyone is really disappointed. We prepared to win a game and I thought if everything fell right we might have a chance. We just didn't hang in there long enough.

"The players played hard, but we've got to get better. We're better now than when we came in here, but we've got a long ways to go at UMass."

Snyder agrees that the Minutemen will be a force to be reckoned with in I-AA.

"Those guys who wear the red uniforms over there are a good young team and good young guys" he said. "They can play. They will be a great football team and will do great in their division."

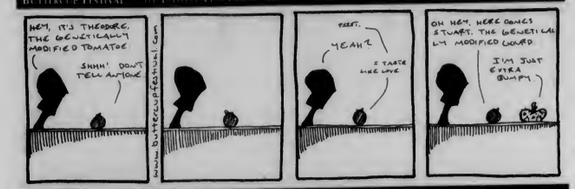
Student Jobs

Great Job opportunities for students in humanities and social sciences. Work to protect the environment ad hold corporations accountable. Flexible Hours; fun progressive workplace; valuable job skills. We are seeking motivated, articulate, and creative people to organize in diverse communities around the valley. Call today, start tomarrow. $8-10/hr, plus bonus.

Clean Water Action: 584-9830

Young Men's Club
138 East Street Hadley, MA
413-584-9729
Monday Night Football
• Pool Table
• Darts
• Horseshoes
• Keno
• Smoking
• Public Invited
• Women Welcome
Transportation Available
Free Munchies With this ad!

Oasis Body Wraps and Tanning
243 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 587-9742
• The first UV FREE tanning machine in the area
• Get $5.00 off your first visit
• A rich golden tan in just a few seconds
• You'll look and feel great
1/2 Price tanning every Tuesday
Conveniently Located
OASIS Hampshire Mall University Drive UMASS



HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club
90 Gatehouse Road, Off Rt. 9, Two miles East of Amherst Center
On the Bus Route • TEL: 256-6446
Shopping for a health club? • Do your homework first
JOIN NOW!
for our Semester Special
15 weeks – For Students: Only $179!
Inclusive membership / No additional fees / Includes free T-Shirt
Hampshire Fitness Club has it all for you
•FULL SIZED INDOOR POOL
•AQUA AEROBICS
•CYBEX/NAUTILUS CIRCUIT
• BOXING STUDIO
•CYBEX FREE WEIGHTS
•FULL COURT BASKETBALL
•VOLLEYBALL
•INDOOR TENNIS
•YOGA/PILATES
•AEROBICS/STEP/BOSU
•JACUZZI/SAUNAS
•CARDIO-VASCULAR EQUIPMENT
Open: 6am to 10pm Mon-Fri
8am to 9pm Sat-Sun

Want to make friends that last a lifetime???
Sorority Recruitment
Call us at 413.545.2711
Sept.16-21
or check us out online at www.umass.edu/greek/panhel.htm

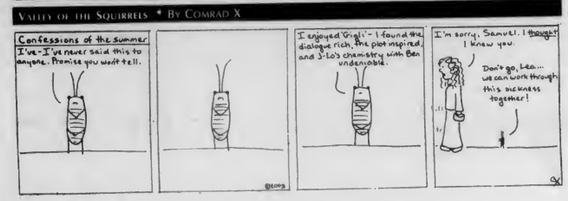
LIFE'S 40 BILLION • BY [illegible]

BUTTERCUP FESTIVAL • BY [illegible]



TESLE HOOPER • BY ROBERTO D. KRZYKOWSKI

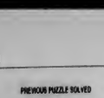
THE TORQUES • BY KEN FREDETTE

VALLEY OF THE SQUIRRELS • BY COMRAD X

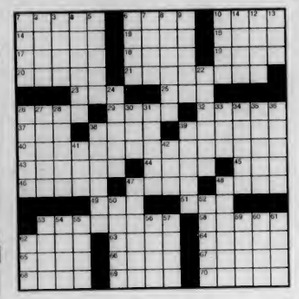
QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"Well there's things that never will be right I know
And things need changin' everywhere you go,
But 'til we start to make a move to make a few things right,
You'll never see me wear a suit of white.

Ah I'd love to wear a rainbow every day,
And tell the world that everything's OK,
But I'll try to carry off a little darkness on my back,
'Til things are brighter, I'm the Man in Black."



-Johnny Cash
1932-2003



ACROSS
1 Take it all of
5 Music notation
10 Spruce
14 First-rate
15 Slope
16 Mad scientist's aids
17 Henhouses
19 Soprano's problem
19 Poem or ode
20 Carrot
21 Catered
23 Isaac Newton's title
25 Woah
26 Owl's nursemaid
28 Border on
30 Spoor
37 Badge wearer
38 Tyrant
39 Comic — Pearl
40 Oaken hero (2 wds.)
43 Cavern pull-ten
44 Entry
45 Get the message
46 Whoa bundle
47 Peace Prize city
48 Uncool one
49 Watch pocket
51 Corporal, briefly
53 Hammerlock pro
58 Woe-lond of
62 Colorado ski resort
63 Aunt
64 Stage whisper
65 Rainbow shapes
66 Incoming plane: abbr.
67 Pinic tree product
68 Kid
69 Actress — Rasso
70 Height: to a cagin

DOWN
1 Humane org.
2 Slow run
3 Kind of squad
4 Mischievous
5 "My Cousin Vinny" star
6 Bucks
7 Mean money (formerly)
8 Duke out
9 Knock
10 Long spiel
11 Film script writer James —
12 Drove a nail obliquely
13 Ra off base
22 Charm
24 Shaving need
26 Joint problems
27 Sponge off of
28 Pie ingredient
30 Outlaw
31 Yens
33 Hoop workers
34 Oxen flavor
35 Type of vinegar
36 Entered data
38 Bluffs
39 Georgia city
41 Drivers' org.
42 Ripken of baseball
47 Lay brother
48 Packets
50 Different
52 Nurse — Rankin
53 Cautious
54 Hayseed
55 Failing that
56 Zest for life
57 Thorny blossom
59 Part of SHAK
60 Syringe — Adams
61 Bumper like
62 Tank

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

News meeting today at 4 p.m. in the Campus Center Basement.

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
• Meatball Sub
• Chili Nachos
• Vegetable Chili Nachos (vegan)

DINNER
• Veal Cutlet
• Savory Baked Chicken
• Southern 7 Bean Stew (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
For Amherst

MONDAY
• High: 75
• Low: 60

TUESDAY
• High: 72
• Low: 58

WEDNESDAY
• High: 74
• Low: 59

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Dan Lamothe
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Gerald H. Ling
COPY EDITOR
Leah K. Wynre
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington
PRODUCTION STAFF
Cory Rosenberg / Fedrich Torres

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Don't forget that meeting you have to go to.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Try something new and different, you're boring.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Sit out side today, you need a tan.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Don't lean back on your chair, the legs will snap and you will fall.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Stop being lazy with your job, and get your act together.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Look after you jump, you want to see where you land.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Just stop, no one cares what you have to say.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Just because your friends don't live near you doesn't mean they don't like you.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Don't tell your neighbors to turn off their weird music, you may like it later.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You're on a good path right now, just keep on it.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Try writing a Haiku, it's quite fulfilling.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Take better care of your CDs, you scratched your favorite one.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Montreal Weekends $99. Includes R/T Luxury Motor Coach from Springfield. 3 Days-2 Nights- 4 Star Hotel Downtown-Meals-Night Club passes. www.montrealexpress.net 1-781-979-9001 Special Group Rates

AUTO FOR SALE

1994 Toyota Paseo well maintained, great gas mileage. $2,900 413-584-2634

1988 Mazda $950 413-586-5728

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Silver Subaru Stationwagon 140K, dependable, Call 546-0383 after 6p.m.

Jeep Cherokee Sport- 1995. Perfect student car, A/C, Great CD system, original owner, excellent condition, 90K, automatic. 413-296-0060 $3,600 or O.B.O.

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Participants sought for listening experiments. Call 545-6837 leave message or write jkingston@linguist.umass.edu

Drivers and Kitchen help wanted Apply at D.P. Dough. Downtown Amherst

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

EMPLOYMENT

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals for part time positions. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips Good attitudes are must Call 413-584-4746

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

FOR SALE

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons- w/retired pro Djata Bumpus. In Northampton. 584-1966 or visit www.western-massboxing.com Accepts all Major Credit Cards

INSTRUCTION

Jazz Piano Lessons Explore your creativity Beginner to Advanced Learn a wide range of styles Reasonable Rates Contact Stephen Page at 413-297-7910

MISCELLANEOUS

Want to buy/sell TEXTBOOKS & other stuff LOCALLY? ... NO shipping hassles, NO payment middlemen! All 4 FREE! Visit www.college-shack.com today!

MISCELLANEOUS

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female geek seeks roommate to share spacious 1 BR Puffton apt. Call Lisa at 549-4248 or email ladlergo@student.umass.edu

TRAVEL

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplash-tours.com or 1800-426-7710

TRAVEL

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

Spring Break 2004. 1-800-648-4849

Reach thousands of readers! Advertise in the Collegian Classifieds! Come down to the Campus Center Basement or call 545-3500!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Manhattan project

I-A 'model' on display at K-State

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

KSU Stadium emerges slowly, and from a mile away, you'd never believe it houses Big XII football.

But once you get within the gates, it's clear that you've entered the big time. Two large grandstands, one with a second deck, a press box the size of most found in NFL stadiums, and enough stat boards to keep even the craziest junkie satisfied.

One end is capped with a grandstand the size of one side of UMass' McGuirk seating section, providing a raucus swell of noise.

And there is plenty. When KSU takes the field, when KSU makes a big play, even when videos of old KSU big plays are shown on the crystal-clear video board at one end, there's enough noise to make conversation a pipe dream.

But that's only the game.

Prior to kickoff, the crowd joins in with the K-State band as it plays "The Star Spangled Banner," and the school's Alma Mater. But this is not just a low, mumbling sing-along. Rather, the crowd sings loud and proud, as if it were an organized choral ensemble.

There are pre-game rituals abound, as well. Willy Wildcat, an unidentified student dressed in a football uniform and a giant wildcat head, leads the crowd in chants and general mayhem.

A man painted in the colors of the day's opponent takes off with the KSU flag, and sits on it at midfield. Willy soon sprints over, and puts a devastating open field tackle on the hapless opponent. Then, even more chanting, with the most popular being "K-S-U," accompanied by Willy's slow mime job on the letters.

Prior to the Wildcats' entrance, a video presentation appears on the scoreboard, with a purple and silver train chugging through the heartland, bearing down on KSU stadium, where the helmet of the opposition sits at midfield. Finally, the train barrels through the helmet, causing an explosion on the screen and in the stands.

The student and band section takes up nearly a quarter of the stadium, creating a massive sea of undulating purple. The rest of the stadium follows the purple theme too, but anyone wearing anything but purple (PMS

Continued on page 6

GERALD H. LINGA/COLLEGIAN

Jeff Krohn's 65-yard bomb to Jason Peebler gave the Minutemen enough steam to take an improbable 7-3 lead over Kansas State in the first quarter. However, the Wildcats took over after that, running to a 38-7 victory.

Despite an early shock, KSU wins

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

MANHATTAN, Kan. – On an overcast afternoon where wind gusts of up to 20 miles per hour blew across a nearly filled KSU Stadium, the vaunted Kansas State Wildcats had every intention of blowing away their I-AA adversaries from Western Massachusetts.

Yet UMass, which has serious aspirations of ascending to Division I-A in the near future, had other ideas. And with a 65-yard play-action touchdown pass from quarterback Jeff Krohn to wide receiver Jason Peebler on the third play of the game, and interceptions by cornerback Steve Costello and linebacker Mark Kimener on two of the three ensuing Wildcat possessions, the No.10 (I-AA) Minutemen (1-1) caught lightning in a bottle.

UMass	7
Kansas St.	38

So for that brief moment, the Minutemen experienced a faint flicker of success in the vast world of major college football. They were leading the No.7 team in the country 7-3 at the end of the first quarter.

David had punched Goliath directly in the mouth.

However, the experience was short lived, as the Wildcats (4-0) proceeded to score 35 unanswered points en route to a 38-7 thumping of Massachusetts. It marked K-State's 41st consecutive non-conference home win, and 10th in a row overall; the nation's fourth longest streak.

"We wanted to set a tone and let them know that we're here to play and weren't here to back down and I think we showed that," Krohn said. "We came out and we ran the ball really well and then hit the big pass, and it was awesome to start that way in the first quarter, but it takes four."

"[The lead] didn't last long," Massachusetts coach Mark Whipple added. "We hoped we'd get in that situation. We said that's what we were going to do the first time we got a third and short because they are so aggressive.

"It was good. At least we can send Chris Berman a highlight tape. At least we made one play on offense."

One play was all the Minutemen could muster, as the Wildcat defense asserted itself following UMass' lone scoring strike, forcing 10 punts and allowing only one trip into the red zone. The Maroon and White were held to only 27 net rushing yards and were out gained 490-191 in total yards.

"We couldn't do anything with [the ball], so we have to credit the Kansas State defense."

Continued on page 6

XC comes up short in opener

By Matt Barstow and Leah Wyner
Collegian Correspondents

The Massachusetts men's cross country team lost in dramatic fashion Saturday, falling to Maine 27-28 in its home opener.

The Minutemen finished second in the weekend's tri-meet, besting Vermont by 70 points.

Sophomore transfer Ryan Corbett won his first race for the Maroon and White, completing the six-mile race in 23:02.

Corbett, who ran neck-and-neck with Maine's Jeffery Caron through the first 2.5 miles, pulled away from all runners around the four-mile mark.

"I knew the course, knew where to make my move," Corbett said. "I heard Caron breathing hard and made my move on a downhill. Usually guys try and stay at a steady rhythm to save energy, but once I got a 15-yard lead I kept pushing it."

Despite a first place finish by Corbett, the combined scores of Maine's runners edged the Minutemen by one point.

Before Saturday's race, the pre-season New England Intercollegiate Amateur Athletic Association poll, ranked UMass No. 17, and Maine No. 10.

Continued on page 6

Minutemen play poor hosts

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's soccer team had something to prove in last weekend's UMass Adidas Classic. After two disheartening losses, it had to show that it could play as a team.

Coming into the invitational tourney, the Minutemen (3-2) had pressing issues on both sides of the ball that needed serious consideration. Their offense was struggling to find timely scoring and the defense was looking for cohesion.

Mercer	0
UMass	1
Navy	2
UMass	1

Mercer (2-4) was the first test for the Minutemen, and it was one that the Maroon and White's defense had all the answers to.

The Bears were held to only nine shots in the game, as the UMass defense led by sophomore Craig Canavan and freshman goalie Nick Billman, stonewalled any dangerous attempts on goal.

The Maroon and White defense was matched by Mercer's back line as well and the game battled into overtime, which UMass scored to take the victory.

Billman's most impressive save came with just 1:30 left in regulation, the score tied at zero. The game on the line, Mercer's top offensive MVP Ed Ohaco found the ball right on target but was met by the outstretched hand of Billman, sending it to safety.

The Maroon and White added an array of scoring chances throughout the game, outshooting the Bears 26-9. It was the matter of finishing on these opportunities that kept the game knotted and

Continued on page 6

Syracuse puts the hurt on

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

While not as physical as that other fall "foot" sport, soccer is a rough game. After losing junior Lindsey Fairweather, and with a handful of starters at half speed, the Massachusetts women's soccer team lost more than just a 1-0 decision to Syracuse yesterday.

With less than a minute to go in the game, sophomore standout Adair Blyler was rolling in agony on the sideline. UMass coach Jim Rudy said the injury was around the knee area and she was in a lot of pain. Blyler was on her way to the orthopedic surgeon after the game.

Syracuse	1
UMass	0

The Maroon and White's last game, on Sept. 10, was a bloodbath as well, as three UMass starters went down. The total number of starters who have suffered injuries is now up to seven.

"We have key starters out and key starters at half speed, but we put them out on the field because we had to," Rudy said. "Against a good team like Syracuse, but we tried to splice it together and we lost on sort of a weird goal. They didn't score a good [goal].

"We had people out there who weren't ready to play today," Rudy said. "Maybe, we let Syracuse's reputation get to us, because we got many, many balls open at midfield, which is the start of the attack and just misconnected. Our players just threw away ball after ball after ball." The only goal on the day was scored in the 34th minute by Syracuse senior Nina Scalzo, who found the back of an empty net after goaltender Kelly Nigh collided with a defender on her way to take away the cross. Senior Molly McManus tallied an assist on the goal.

The Orangewomen (4-1-0) took over the possession game throughout the contest. By controlling the ball, SU was on the constant attack as they outshot the Minutewomen (2-1-1, 1-0 Atlantic 10), 25-2. Syracuse also received 12 corners, and UMass did not have a corner kick all game.

"We are a possession team and if you give away your first ball every time you pass midfield, you aren't going to get to the goal. I don't think we got a corner or any free kicks. We had one shot and it hit the [crossbar], though it was a good one.

"They also had a system that was also real different than what we are used to seeing with three central midfielders. We tried to take care of it, but we just didn't do a good enough job with the package we had on the field."

UMass had three promising opportunities to score in the game, but only managed one shot on goal. At the 36:40 mark, senior forward Erin Lilly sent a cross to the front of the net. Blyler fought her way through a pile and was able to flick the ball off the volley, but only hit the crossbar. The Maroon and White were not able to get another shot on net for the rest of the game.

The next closest opportunity came eight minutes later, when Lilly crossed another ball into the box, then sophomore midfielder Morgan Czaja flicked the ball towards the left side post.

Continued on page 6

GERALD H. LINGA/COLLEGIAN

Senior Michele Luttati was lucky to escape injury during this collision against Syracuse.

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 10

Hurricane Isabel to strike East Coast

ASSOCIATED PRESS/AIR GRAIL

B.J. Whittacker of Dover, Del., walks a load of plywood to his truck at the Lowes store in Dover in preparation for Hurricane Isabel yesterday. Whittacker, a long time resident of the area has never seen a hurricane in Delaware before, but did see hurricane Floyd while vacationing near Myrtle Beach a few years ago. Military officials began evacuating giant C-5 cargo aircraft from Dover Air Force Base yesterday as Hurricane Isabel headed for the Atlantic Coast.

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

From North Carolina to Canada, people along the East Coast are bracing for the effects of Hurricane Isabel, which is now labeled a Category 4 storm.

The National Weather Service expects the powerful storm to strike somewhere between North Carolina and the Delmarva Peninsula on Thursday. Squalls and gale force wind gusts can be expected in Massachusetts by Friday.

"If I were a mariner and I had to be doing my work, I'd be getting it complete by Wednesday night," said Walter Drag of the National Weather Service. "I wouldn't want to be dealing with the swells out there."

As of yesterday evening, Isabel was packing winds of 140 mph. The five-day track of the storm by the National Hurricane Center forecasts Isabel moving onshore Thursday morning with 130 mph winds near Cape Hatteras, N.C., and then moving north along the Chesapeake Bay, near Washington, D.C., through Virginia, Md. and Pennsylvania. People have already begun evacuating coastal communities around North Carolina and Virginia as precautionary measures.

"Right now, the forecast is very uncertain. It looks like it's going to hit somewhere in the Outter Banks area," said Ken Haydu, a meteorologist for the hurricane center.

Haydu says that several factors could change the direction of the storm, including high-pressure ridges north and east of the storm, which could push it west or east.

"Forecasters expect the storm to make landfall, however the exact pinpoint is difficult to tell at this time," Haydu said.

The Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency (MEMA) is now on alert, and is offering personal preparedness tips for residents of the Commonwealth before the storm is expected to sideswipe New England.

"Every family should have a basic supply kit that could be used for any emergency," said MEMA Director Stephen J. McGrail. "We should keep certain items around the house in the event of a hurricane or other severe weather. A portable radio, flashlight, extra batteries and extra food and water are all essential to help [people] weather the storm."

MEMA advises that every household should have a supply of canned goods and other non-perishable foods that do not require cooking, along with bottled water, extra prescription medication and extra food and water. The complete MEMA hurricane supply list is available on their website at www.mass.gov/mema.

"You should also call your local authorities to find out where emergency shelters are located in your community," McGrail said. "It is important to know where your local shelter or evacuation routes are before any emergency situation occurs."

MEMA is remaining on alert, however public officials are not telling residents to take special precautions. Isabel is expected to hit the area of the Carolinas, but coastal residents of Massachusetts are preparing because even a glancing blow from a hurricane as forceful as Isabel can cause some destruction for marinas that are a distance from the storm.

Nonetheless, harbormasters up and down the coast are encouraging people to get their boats out of the water or to double-check their moorings and remove anything that is not securely fastened to their boats.

SGA elections to begin

Commission accepting nominations

By Michelle Dozois
Collegian Correspondent

The Student Government Association Elections Commission is currently accepting nominations for students interested in running for the Undergraduate Senate.

Candidates can pick up nomination forms from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on weekdays at the SGA office, located in room 420 of the Student Union. Candidates must collect signatures from 25 or more residents from their residential area and submit the forms to the SGA office by noon on Friday, Sept. 19. Campaigning will begin on Sept. 19 as well.

During the nomination period, students who wish to place a referendum question on the ballot are invited to pick up forms at the SGA office. Students must obtain 900 signatures from their fellow students – five percent of the undergraduate population – and return the forms to the SGA office by the Friday deadline.

Elections will be held on Sept. 25.

There are 66 seats open for election, according to SGA Speaker Jared Nokes. The nomination period began last Friday at noon. Before the day's end, 29 students had picked up nomination forms. Nokes said that this is a larger turnout than usual.

Last year, the Commission eliminated appointed seats from the Senate, resulting in all seats at-large being within the five on-campus living areas and the commuter area. In a recent press release, Chancellor of Elections Steven Hoeschele said that students who formerly would have expected to be appointed a seat from their respective area government or from the ALANA caucus should fill out nomination forms and plan to run for election.

Nokes said that he is working with SGA President David Carr on a recruitment drive. Looking to generate a high turnout of candidates, SGA representatives spoke to students in Orchard Hill and Central dorms last night, and will be in Southwest and Northeast tonight. In addition to the SGA's efforts to recruit potential senators, Nokes said he expects that other student groups, such as ALANA, will be actively seeking out candidates.

"Hopefully, that will lead to more contested elections and more qualified senators," Nokes said.

Last year, Nokes said, there were only eight senators who won their seats by more than 25 votes, which is the number of signatures needed to get on the ballot in the first place. Therefore, interested students should not shy away from taking out nomination papers, even if they are intimidated by the thought of running in a campus-wide election at a university of this size.

A candidates meeting will be held in the SGA office tomorrow at 6:30 p.m. Chancellor of Elections Steven Hoeschele can be reached at the SGA office weekdays from 1 p.m. to 2 p.m., and by phone at 545-0342.

Three female ministers join Newman Center

By Alyson Zillmann
Collegian Correspondent

On Aug. 17, the Newman Center hired three female ministers. The three women, Mary Ellen Foley, Lynn Campbell and Chris Clark, who work only on Sundays, were selected based on their credentials from among eight other interviewees. It was coincidental that the three best-qualified candidates happened to be women.

Father Sean McDonagh, who was involved in the hiring process, said it is good to have a balance of women and men in the church community. He also said it was important that the team have a variety of talents and personalities.

"I'm glad that we have these women to offset the primarily male staff," said Marissa McKinney, president of the Newman Student Association (NSA).

McKinney asked to be a part of the interview process and the request was granted.

"I wanted to see who would fit well with the officers. The women were young and fresh out of college," she said. She added that Campbell specifically stood out as a good person for the NSA.

"It's important to show to young women that they can be a part of the church, and that it can be a successful career," McKinney said.

All too often, she said, women think that their only option is to become a sister or a nun. Women are unaware that it is possible for them to be involved in the church and have a family as well.

Mary Ellen Foley said she feels the campus ministry offers "freedom and leeway" for women, which is why many women now migrate toward this career.

Foley and Campbell agreed that the staff members complement each other well.

"It's a great mix. They did a good job of hiring people with different talents and interests," said Campbell, who is also an undergraduate advisor at the Newman Center. "For example, Mary Ellen loves to preach. I don't, but I'll do it if I have to. I'd rather preside over the service."

Melinda Tufel, vice president of the NSA, said she feels the hiring committee made the right choices.

"[Foley, Campbell and Clark] were hired for the right reasons," said Tufel. "Sex doesn't really matter at all."

Both Foley and Campbell studied at the Weston Jesuit School of Theology, alongside other laymen and laywomen, as well as ordained priests.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 3
CHURCH SCANDAL
SEX ABUSE UPSETS BELIEVERS
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 4
LIGHT THE MATCH
'MATCHSTICK MEN' A HIT
SPORTS PAGE 8
WEEKEND SWEEP
UM DROPS PAIR TO STATE RIVALS
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 7

California recall postponed

By Beth Fouhy
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES, Calif. – A federal appeals court postponed the Oct. 7 recall election yesterday in a decision that threw an already chaotic campaign into utter turmoil.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the election cannot proceed as scheduled because some votes would be cast using outmoded punch-card ballot machines. The decision applies to all the recall questions on the ballot, as well as to two propositions.

The court, the nation's largest and most liberal federal appeals court, withheld ordering the immediate implementation of its decision by a week to allow time for an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court. It is the same appellate court that last summer ruled reciting the Pledge of Allegiance in public schools is unconstitutional because of the words "under God."

Ted Costa, head of the Sacramento-based Peoples' Advocate, one of the groups that put the recall on the ballot, said an appeal of yesterday's ruling was certain.

"Give us 24 hours," he said. Gov. Gray Davis said he expected the case to reach the high court.

"This recall has been like a roller coaster. There are more surprises than you can possibly image," Davis said after appearing with former President Clinton at a school dedication. "I'll continue to make my case to the people that a recall is not good for them."

Arnold Schwarzenegger, the leading Republican among the 135 replacement candidates, called on the secretary of state to appeal on behalf of Californians. Both he and Davis said they would continue their campaigns in the meantime.

"Historically, the courts have upheld the rights of voters, and I expect that the court will do so again in this case," Schwarzenegger said in a statement. "The people have spoken, and their word should, and will, prevail."

California Secretary of State Kevin Shelley, a Democrat, wouldn't say when he would decide on a possible appeal.

An appeal could force the U.S. Supreme Court to rule on another highly partisan political issue one – Democrats say echoes the 2,000 election in which the high court declared Republican George Bush the winner.

In the ruling yesterday, the judges of the 9th Circuit agreed with the American Civil Liberties Union that the punch-card voting machines still used in six California counties are prone to error.

The counties – Los Angeles, in addition to Mendocino, Sacramento, San Diego, Santa Clara and Solano – were already under a separate court order to replace them by the March primary, but the machines wouldn't be replaced in time for an Oct. 7 special election.

"In sum, in assessing the public interest, the balance falls heavily in favor of postponing the election for a few months," the court said.

The decision is likely to benefit Davis if the election is delayed to the next regularly scheduled primary, Mar. 2.

The March presidential primary is expected to draw large numbers of Democratic voters, and the months until then would give Davis more time to address the state's problems and force Schwarzenegger into a longer campaign.

The decision came as the race's top names were enlisting big national stars in their campaigns.

Davis was in Southern California with Clinton to dedicate the William Iefferson Clinton elementary school in the impoverished suburb of Compton, and the two had planned to later attend a fund-raiser.

Schwarzenegger and his wife, television journalist Maria Shriver, were in Chicago yesterday morning taping the season premiere of "The Oprah Winfrey Show." Polls had showed the actor struggling to win over women in the recall race, and women are the show's primary audience.

GERALD H. LINGA/COLLEGIAN

Helping Save Lives

Nancy Croteau, a Microbiology graduate student, donates blood yesterday afternoon in the Campus Center. The event, sponsored by the American Red Cross, helped to supply blood to more than 170 hospitals in central and northern New England.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pibl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Robert Krzykowski
Editorial Editor Erika Lovley
News Editor Courtney Charles
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linds Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Jessica Pelletier
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Kelly Farrell
Assistant News Ferron Sabniker
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marzelli

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is entirely student-funded, operating on advertising revenues. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been independent since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

police log

compiled by Courtney Charles

Car rolls down stairs outside dormitory

Vehicle leaking fluid; AAA reports to Patterson Hall

Tuesday, Sept. 9

12:06 a.m. A caller reported an intoxicated male in the lobby of Cance Hall. She stated that he was not responsive. Amherst Fire Department transported the male to Cooley-Dickinson Hospital.

2:43 a.m. A caller reported three individuals throwing objects at a parked vehicle in Lot 50, west of Patterson Hall. The three were also throwing objects at Patterson Hall. The responding officer stated that there was a smashed computer monitor in the parking lot.

11:36 a.m. A caller reported vandalism in Lot 33. A rear windshield wiper was damaged while the car was parked in the lot.

12:03 p.m. A caller stated that a suspicious male was walking through Tobin Hall selling framed artwork. Officers advised the person that he will be trespassing if he is seen again on campus without a permit.

2:32 p.m. A person reported someone soliciting funds for homeless veterans in Herter Hall.

5:15 p.m. A small gas leak in Chenoweth Lab, which had been sealed off, was reported.

9:03 p.m. A resident assistant reported a swastika drawn on the door of a dorm room in Kennedy Tower. An officer requested that Housing Services repaint the door.

11:32 p.m. Amherst Police Department called to report that they were sending an ambulance to the front of Health Services to assist a subject who was injured in a mosh pit. The officer stated that the person signed a refusal and was conscious and alert.

Wednesday, Sept. 10

1:11 a.m. A party reported there were about five people outside Cashin Hall talking loudly and making noise. The responding officer reported that the area checked out OK.

3:56 a.m. A caller in Webster Hall reported that she heard a woman's voice calling for help outside the building. The responding officer reported that the area around Webster Hall checked out OK.

1:04 p.m. A person reported her dog missing from the area around the Student Union. The dog was described as a friendly, 5-year-old female shepherd mix with short, light-colored hair and one ear missing. The dog's name was Cactus.

1:56 p.m. An officer escorted an injured person who sprained her ankle and did not want an ambulance to take her to her vehicle in the parking garage.

7:49 p.m. A caller reported that there were individuals riding bikes on and off benches on the south side of the library. The responding officer spoke with the subjects and advised them to move along.

Thursday, Sept. 11

1:12 p.m. A caller reported a person soliciting credit card applications without proper paperwork. An officer told the person to leave the area and not to return.

1:55 p.m. A caller reported an individual soliciting donations for Vietnam vets. An officer observed this individual walking around with a wicker basket asking for money by the Campus Pond. The individual was issued a trespass and was transported off campus.

8:09 p.m. A caller reported smelling smoke in North Village Apartments. The Amherst Police Department was notified. The responding officer reported that the smell of smoke was due to a barbecue.

9:46 p.m. A person stated that she had received a call from a male stating that he worked for the ADT alarm company and advised her that her alarm system needed to be checked. The person contacted ADT directly and was advised that they had not dispatched a technician to inspect her alarm. She was advised to contact the University of Massachusetts Police Department if the problem persisted with the male.

10:42 p.m. A resident assistant reported more than 300 people having a round robin on the second floor of Baker Hall. An officer stated several people were advised and the others were dispersed.

Friday, Sept. 12

12:42 a.m. A caller reported loud and disruptive bongo players on the north side of Van Meter Hall.

12:51 a.m. Student Security called to report that a supervisor was being attacked in Kennedy Tower. The officer pursued the alleged perpetrator on foot. Two victims were complaining of sore wrists. Richard Pachecho, 20, of 45 Surrey Way, White Plains, N.Y., was charged with assault and battery.

2:39 a.m. A caller stated that about 15 males were throwing bicycles in the area of the Southwest Mall. The responding officer stated that there were no signs of bicycles being tossed.

Saturday, Sept. 13

12:14 a.m. An arrest was made during a traffic stop on Massachusetts Ave. Victor L. Santiago, 31, of 2105 Northampton St., Holyoke, Mass., was charged with permitting the operation of a motor vehicle with a suspended registration.

12:38 a.m. A resident assistant in Coolidge Tower reported an intoxicated male on the 15th floor lounge with magic marker written on him. The responding officer stated he checked out OK and had friends to take care of him.

1:09 a.m. Student Security reported a fight on the north side of Kennedy Tower involving five people. A resident assistant called back to report the fight had been broken up.

2:08 a.m. Student Security called to report that a vehicle went down the stairs on the north side of Patterson Hall rapidly leaking fluid. AAA was requested.

11:05 a.m. An officer was flagged down by a pedestrian who said he was on his way to Health Services to be checked out. He was struck by a vehicle in the Southwest Residential Area parking lots last night, but wanted to report it at that time. He was advised to complete a statement when he was done with his exam.

1:45 p.m. A student reported a squirrel that was possibly rabid in the Southwest Mall. Animal control was notified.

1:48 p.m. A person was transported to Cooley-Dickinson Hospital from the athletic fields across from Boyden Gymnasium.

6:41 p.m. A person stated that she had a patient at Health Services who reported that he was physically assaulted outside of Berkshire Dining Common. John F. Keefe, 19, of 275 Old Marsh Hill Rd., Dracut, Mass., was served with summons for assault and battery with a dangerous weapon.

8:47 p.m. A smoke bomb was set off in front of a resident assistant's room on the 17th floor of Kennedy Tower.

Sunday, Sept. 14

12:36 a.m. There were numerous reports of 30 people in a fight near Washington Tower. The officer advised that the problem was only a verbal altercation.

12:59 a.m. A caller reported 20 to 30 people in the Orchard Hill Bowl yelling and making a lot of noise. An officer stated that the group was observed and the noise was minimal. The group was advised to keep the noise down.

2:56 a.m. A caller reported that there was a group of students near Patterson Hall chanting, "Fight!" The officer reported finding one male with no shirt.

4:33 a.m. Brian D. Wells, 18, of 5 Second St., Maynard, Mass., was charged with assault and battery and disorderly conduct.

6:22 a.m. A person was transported to Cooley-Dickinson Hospital from Boyden Gymnasium.

Write for News

Come to the news meetings, Mondays at 4 p.m.

Athletes in Action Weekly Meeting
Tuesdays 8pm in James Dorm SW
Bible study + milk+ brownies = good times for athletes
Info: LA_Love_35@yahoo.com or Dave at 259-1083

Real Life
Thursdays 8pm
in the Campus Center
Teaching, worship, and a whole lot of fun
Info: umasscru.com or brent.vallee@uscm.org

As an engineer in the U.S. Air Force, there's no telling what you'll work on.

(Seriously, we can't tell you.)

United States Air Force applied technology is years ahead of what you'll touch in the private sector, and as a new engineer you'll likely be involved at the ground level of new and sometimes classified developments. You'll begin leading and managing within this highly respected group from day one. Find out what's waiting behind the scenes for you in the Air Force today. To request more information, call 1-800-423-USAF or log on to airforce.com.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

Tuesday, September 16, 2003 Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Coach's request of students admirable

With the expansion this summer of the Atlantic Coast Conference (ACC) in intercollegiate football, feelings were hurt all around. The decision of Miami University and Virginia Tech has led to finger-pointing and a host of ranging accusations, including that the two schools were deserting the Big East Conference without fair warning or concern for how it would affect the other schools in it.

According to the Associated Press, the ACC originally recruited Syracuse, Boston College and Miami for its conference, but Boston College and Syracuse were eventually left out in favor of Virginia Tech, thanks mainly to the politics involved.

All of that only makes Boston College coach Tom O'Brien's open letter in the campus newspaper that much more refreshing.

When Miami plays Boston College this weekend, it will be the first meeting between the two schools since Miami made the decision to jump conferences. The move for the two schools leaves Boston College and several other schools in a perilous position. Without Miami and Virginia Tech, currently ranked No. 2 and No. 8 respectively, the Big East loses much of its start power. The conference will have to fight to keep its Bowl Championship Series bid, as well as all of the revenue that goes with being a BCS conference.

The Associated Press has even reported that Boston College is considering other options, including jumping conferences or becoming an independent with no conference affiliation.

It doesn't matter to O'Brien. He wants his team's fans to behave.

O'Brien's letter to the campus community asked fans to behave at the game Saturday, regardless of what has happened off the field.

"Our goal as a football team is to be champions in the classroom and the community as well as on the field and we expect our fans to be champions, too," O'Brien stated in the letter, according to the Associated Press. "Cheer with class, be supportive at all times and send a message to everyone watching; that BC is a special place with even more special people."

O'Brien refused to blame Miami for BC's current unsettled situation.

"Miami made their decision to do what's best for Miami," he said yesterday during a conference call, the Associated Press reported. "You know, that's what Boston College would have done, what's best for Boston College."

In a modern age when athletes have been disciplined for kicking officials, spitting at umpires and choking coaches, it's a refreshing attitude to present in high stake intercollegiate athletics. Because whether it is widespread corruption being uncovered in the Baylor University athletic program or John Chaney screaming profanities several years back at then-Massachusetts coach John Calipari during a news conference, sportsmanship and healthy attitudes have been more and more difficult to find in competitive athletics.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian applauds Tom O'Brien for being a positive role model on how to handle and accept a difficult situation with grace. By handling the Big East/ACC controversy with class, he provides a lesson to us all.

Unsinged editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

Is anyone really looking out for you?

Daniel Cote

It is a new semester and with it comes more harping and criticism from the Ed/Op page. Now, I am not here to lecture any of you, but rather to shine some light on a few things. So I will start with what seems to get the most attention in the media these days: the future election and democratic candidates. But does either party really care about you?

I'll start with the GOP. Now I am still a Bush supporter, despite his shortcomings. I like that there hasn't been a terrorist attack on American soil in two years. I'm glad he has been and remains committed (for the most part) to chasing after terrorists and the nations that harbor them. I'm glad the Taliban is gone, children can go back to school and women can go out in public in Afghanistan. I'm glad the Baath regime has been destroyed, Hussein's sons are dead and Saddam will never brutalize anyone again. Al Qaeda is on the run and can do nothing more than send videos of Osama Bin Laden to Al-Jazerra Television. And it looks like the economy is coming back slowly.

However – and I hate to sound selfish – I don't work my fingers until they bleed only to have enough money to put gas in my car. The president needs to get it through his head that the Saudis aren't our friends. They're screwing with our oil for fun and our government is allowing it. I am appalled by the number of soldiers that have died during post war Iraq. Why haven't the troops been allowed to crack down on these people? I don't need to know the details of how they plan to deal with North Korea, but I would like to know if they do have a plan. The weapons of mass destruction haven't been found, but every objective thinking person knows they exist. Where are they?

Well, since the United Nation's stalling gave Saddam plenty of time to hide them, the government might want to try looking in Syria, but I doubt they will. I doubt the government will also go after our so-called "friends," the Pakistanis who might have been hiding Bin Laden after the 9/11 attacks. After Sen. Trent Lott's verbal mishap last year, the Republican Party is so scared of the race card that they have stopped harping on sealing up the borders.

Now for the Democrats. Do I really have to get into what is wrong with that party? All you have to do is look at the great state of California. A state that is overwhelmingly made up of democrats has recalled its democratic governor. Pete Wilson left Gov. Davis with a billion dollar surplus and he has given the state an economic heart attack. But that's what happens when you sell your soul to special interest groups to get yourself elected.

I'm glad the Baath regime has been destroyed, Hussein's sons are dead and Saddam will never brutalize anyone again.

Basically, if you're a democrat, you spend 10 times the amount of money you have and then tax your citizens out of the state. The way Gov. Davis has ruthlessly and maliciously taxed his citizens makes the Sicilian Mob look like a bunch of cream-puffs. What's Davis's idea of business as usual? Giving drivers licenses to illegal immigrants and taxing people who make $15K to 30K a year. He panders for votes while he sells out our national security.

Now let's look at those candidates. Whether you like George Bush or not, you can't say in good conscience that he has been a complete failure, as one candidate called him. With the exception of Sen. Lieberman, they have all taken their potshots at the Commander in Chief. Way to show your respect. Howard Dean is so smart that he aligns his plans for peace in the Middle East with the ones Bill Clinton had. Yeah, Billy Boy did a great job with the Middle East. Does anyone believe that Dean will go after terrorism or side with nations like France and Germany?

Al Sharpton touts himself as an advocate for minorities. But where does he find the time for them with that haircut and coming up with those one liners that get people all riled up? I apologize for not being able to remember the names of the other six idiots running for money, fame and power, but I doubt anyone can.

So, you see, no one is really looking out for you, and please don't be fooled by rhetoric and sanctimony because neither party has the answers.

Daniel Cote is a Collegian columnist.

Catholic mindset needs work

Dan Lamothe

When John J. Geoghan was strangled to death in his lonely prison cell late last month, many people thought it was the perfect ending to a tragic story.

The things said immediately after were predictable.

"The bastard got what he had coming," or "justice is served." The lines were automatic.

Many predicted that the murder of Geoghan would serve as closure for his victims and their families. They said life would be able to move on, and the healing process would be complete.

They were wrong. If it could only be that easy.

The Catholic sex abuse scandal and Geoghan's path of destruction in particular has proven to be a never-ending litany of accusations, frustrations and broken promises. The pain cut deeply on this one, deeply enough where somewhere along the line, the priorities of many Catholics changed.

For many, Geoghan's strangulation wasn't the latest twist in the plot to a story that's now been horrifying for years – it was what he had coming all along.

One of the basic fundamental things that Catholics learn growing up – forgiveness – was tossed by the wayside in exchange for the continuation of a vicious cycle. Getting even became an easier way of dealing with the shock and pain, rather than learning how to cope.

Other Catholics can dispute this, but I won't. My first reaction was disbelief upon learning how widespread the corruption in the Catholic Church I grew up in was. After that came white-hot anger, and, perhaps most selfishly, relief. Relief that it hadn't been me, relief that the innocent, happy and unsuspecting upbringing I had within the Catholic faith wasn't shattered by a monster in a robe. All the relief did was lead me right back to the feelings of anger at the Church and the abusers, and thanks to the guilt I felt for feeling fortunate enough to have been spared the horror.

Catholics can say they needed to protect their children from predators. They can say they needed to make the Church pay and understand how much its oversights and irresponsibility harmed thousands of innocent people. They'd be right, if that's where it had ended.

Unfortunately, the trauma that went with having the most innocent part of our population completely violated by a group of people that should have been so easy to trust did not go away. Because of that, extracting an eye for an eye became the next best thing. The size of the financial settlement became important. Maximum punishments for the abusers became important. Making them pay became important, in any way possible, to the fullest extent allowable by law. For many, Geoghan's strangulation wasn't the latest twist in the plot to a story that's now been horrifying for years; it was what he had coming all along.

If things are ever going to return to normal in the Church, that prevailing attitude needs to change. It needs to change not for the sake of the Church, and not for the sake of the abusers, but for the sake of the victims and the thousands of good, regular everyday people that call Catholicism their faith. The cycle of vicious revenge needs to end.

There are numerous examples of that need for revenge, starting with the most dramatic and violent: the murder of Geoghan himself. When Geoghan was sentenced, the end result was entirely predictable. It's no secret that convicted child molesters and others who abuse the innocent, weak and elderly are immediately targets once they step inside the walls of a prison.

Considering how emotionally charged Geoghan's situation was, he was a sitting duck. Somebody was going to get to him "for the children," as Joseph L. Druce, Geoghan's alleged killer, supposedly did. It was a matter of time. Regardless of how much of an animal he might have been, Geoghan's strangulation only perpetuates the same type of misery that he brought to others.

One of the most horrifying things that I have noticed as this story continues to play out is the way that a lot of people have glorified Druce as a hero. He's not. Indicted for the murder last week, Druce is a hateful man serving time for the murder of a gay man who allegedly made a sexual advance on him. He pled insanity to that charge, and his lawyers say that he'll plead it again in this case. Authorities told the Associated Press that he hates blacks, Jews, homosexuals and many other minority groups just because of who they are. Since when is that the definition of a hero?

Maybe I'm just hoping things can go back to the way they used to be. Maybe I'm hoping that at some point, people will start remembering that there are at least some good men running the Church.

Catholics as a whole won't be able to pick up the pieces from this mess until we're willing to admit that there could be some hope that things will eventually turn out OK. Perhaps it's naive to believe that a healing process needs to begin.

Trust, however, cannot be built back up until people are willing to stop hating. It's that simple.

Dan Lamothe is a Collegian columnist.

A pig's perception

Robert Carey

By working calluses into my hands this summer, I was able to scrap together enough money to take a trip.

Because I was working on a small budget, which was largely devoted to purchasing alcohol and baseball tickets with my friends, I thought we would save cash and stay at a hostel. (To those of you don't know what hostels are, it is cheap temporary housing catered to young worldly travelers, who, like myself, are low on funds.)

Upon arriving at our West Coast destination, we were immediately met with hostility from the Scottish desk clerk for no deserved reason. At dinner, we were harassed for putting lukewarm coffee in a plastic cup by a French employee who lived up to the widely accepted social stereotype of her people, having hairy armpits and pungent body odor.

I was left with the bitter taste of resentment that most of the world feels toward Americans.

After one night of staying in that place, we realized that we were the only Americans there and that we were unwelcome by the staff and most of the guests at this California hostel.

We were expected to act like crude, uncultured boars whose belligerent stupidity would ravage the hostel in an Iraqi fashion. Although we didn't fully live up to that stereotype, I will admit I was surprised that they allowed us to keep the key deposit. Rather than being allowed the experience to meet people from all over the world, I was left with the bitter taste of resentment that most of the world feels toward Americans.

I am aware that the poor worldly perception of the American people is nothing new. However, this perception has grown far worse since the belligerent days that have followed 9/11 under the Dubya regime.

Rather than sharing with the world tear-filled stories of that awful day, American travelers are asked to explain themselves as to the purpose of military action in Iraq. They ask carpenters, landscapers and undergraduate college students why our country has gone and done something so atrocious. The rest of the world has either forgotten (or was never informed) that a very large fraction of the American population – including a large number of politicians – has adamantly been against the war.

George W. Bush won the election by the tightest margin of any president in one of the sketchiest elections in world history. He does not even come close to sharing the thoughts and ideas of half the American population; and his approval rating, which has plummeted 40 points since 9/11, reflects that.

The leaders of strong European nations have spearheaded the movement to vilify Americans. The speeches given by these NATO countries, who not too long ago were nothing but yes-men to any sordid foreign policy the United States wished to pursue, have given the people of their country a renewed hatred for America's foreign practices. But because people can't protest directly to the American politicians themselves, they protest to the people who they think are in charge of putting the politicians there.

This type of treatment by the world's general public has resulted in a prejudice to all those who are American. This prejudice, to my surprise, is found even amongst some of the most well-traveled and supposedly well-learned people of the world.

As an American who did not vote for Bush, who has not approved of 99 percent of his policies and who can still locate any country in the world on a map despite the fact that I have not traveled much, I shouldn't be judged as a member of an indulgent mob of pigs.

It should also be noted that many of the countries that have finally decided to take a stand against America are only doing so because American foreign policy is stepping on the economic toes of these nations. Many countries like Germany, France and Russia had contracts with Saddam Hussein and Iraqi oil. There were contracts that were negated when the American army overthrew him. The anti-war sentiment raised by the leaders of these nations wasn't because of any noble change of heart or sudden achievement of Zen. It had to do with money and power.

Instead of accosting all American citizens like their politicians want them to, foreign peoples should turn toward their own leaders and ask them why they didn't protest American policy sooner.

Robert Carey is a Collegian columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

editorial@dailycollegian.com | 413-545-3699 | Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center Way, Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Recent findings in hormonal birth control for women

Sex-iversity

Julia Kristan

Sex-iversity is a question and answer column designed to provide important information and answers to questions regarding sex, sexuality, sexual orientation, sexually transmitted infections (STIs) and reproductive rights. Voiced by Julia Kristan, a member of Voices for Planned Parenthood (VOX) branch at the University of Massachusetts and an active volunteer for the Everywoman's Center on campus, the column is intended to help educate the university community about reproductive health, rights, legislation and responsibilities. Much of the statistical information provided in this column derives from research done through and obtained by Planned Parenthood and its national affiliates.

Q: Have there been any recent developments in hormonal birth control for women?

A: Yes, there have been two original new developments in the past few years. Both the birth control patch and the hormonal vaginal ring called the "NuvaRing" were approved in late 2001. These two advancements have changed the daily pill-taking routine of hormonal birth control.

The birth control patch, put out by the Ortho-McNeil Pharmaceutical Company, is a thin square less than two inches in width and length. The patch is worn on the skin, where it time-releases hormones into your body. The adhesive lasts long enough and is strong enough to withstand exercise, showers and movement for the seven days it is worn. At the end of seven days, you switch to the next patch and repeat for a total of three weeks. On the fourth week, you do not wear a patch and you will menstruate.

Since the hormones are the same as or similar to oral contraceptives, benefits such as a less painful period come along with regular usage. This can be a great option for women who aren't the best at remembering a daily pill.

There are downsides to the patch, and of course, before you try any new prescription you should talk with your doctor. For women over 198 pounds the patch has been found less effective, and similarly to other hormonal contraceptives, women are discouraged from smoking while on it.

The patch does not prevent sexually transmitted diseases. Please reread that sentence carefully. At this point only your classic condoms and abstinence do that job. The patch must be worn in one of the following places: the buttocks, abdomen, upper torso (front and back, breasts excluded) or on the outside of your bicep. Due to the fact that you have adhesive with hormones on your skin for three weeks, irritation in the area of the patch may occur. Because the patch is relatively new, many insurance companies will not cover it fully or at all, costing you $30 to $35 a month. Its effectiveness is comparable to the daily pill, at 98 to 99 percent when used correctly.

For women who may forget pills and patches, Organon Inc.'s "NuvaRing" is an exciting new contraceptive. It is just what it sounds like: a ring, less than two inches in diameter, made of flexible plastic. The "NuvaRing" is inserted into your vagina and left there for three weeks. Your body heat activates the release of the hormones from the ring over those 21 days, meaning you have your period in the remaining seven of the month.

I'm sure you ladies are thinking, "Whoa, INTO my vagina!?" Fear not, the ring is not felt when properly inserted, much like a tampon. Unlike a tampon though, it's not made of absorbent, bulky material, so it fits more naturally and less noticeably in your body.

"But if it's up there, what happens during sex?" The majority of couples report not feeling the ring, and most who do report it to be not intrusive to the mood or positive sensations. Additionally, the "NuvaRing" provides the lowest dose of hormones of any contraceptive out there at this point in time. As women and doctors have learned in the past, the lowest possible dosage to provide contraception and/or menstrual symptom relief is best.

The "NuvaRing" has one substantially different downside than the pill or the patch. Having the ring in your vagina for three weeks releasing hormones can cause irritation. Women who are prone to yeast infections and vaginal irritation are recommended to switch off the ring if they feel discomfort. The ring is a new product; many insurance companies are not covering it at all or are only providing partial coverage. The ring is $40 a month without insurance. It does not provide protection against sexually transmitted diseases. The contraceptive effectiveness is comparable to the pill at 98 to 99 correctly when used correctly. Bear in mind it's a lot easier to use correctly because the stream of hormones is constant into your body.

In the months and years to come, keep your eyes and ears open for new developments. There are tests in the works for a male contraceptive, which would make sperm unable to fertilize an egg. Unfortunately, it's far easier for the hormones to control one egg as opposed to thousands of sperm. Contraceptives remain in women's bodies for now. Of course that doesn't mean responsibility is solely on women, so grab your partner and go to the doctor. In same-sex relationships, get talking as well. Although pregnancy may not be an issue, hormonal contraceptives won't prevent sexually transmitted illnesses, and they're a health issue for us all.

When you go to your health practitioner, ask about the new options. Demand better medical care; advances clearly can be made when the pressure is on. We deserve the right to health care in all aspects of health.

As a final note, please research contraceptive options further before deciding on one. Only your doctor can prescribe them, and this column is not meant to replace information given by your doctor.

For more information, visit www.orthoevra.com and www.nuvaring.com.

Questions? Comments? E-mail arts@dailycollegian and subject the e-mail "Sex-Iversity."

Cage sparks the screen

'Matchstick Men' explores the intricate mind of a criminal

By Lauren Freeman
Collegian Staff

"Matchstick Men" was an interesting choice for director Ridley Scott, whose film canon is predominantly comprised of high-action blockbusters such as "The Gladiator" and "Black Hawk Down". But on the other hand, Scott's classic film, "Thelma and Louise" clearly demonstrates that his capabilities extend to slower, more character-centered projects.

Regardless, "Matchstick Men" is definitely a character piece. This film has a minimal amount of suspense and action; there are no gunfights and there are no car crashes. But it is somewhat of a relief to acknowledge that a movie which explores the grittier reality a criminal's life – while not entirely a comedy – has avoided the use of excessive violence.

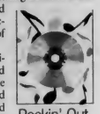
Another way this film veers from the average criminal narrative is in the development of the main character Roy, a con artist played by Nicolas Cage. While he a smooth operator during a scam, Roy is an obsessive-compulsive, agoraphobic, chain smoker at home with a number of strange nervous tics to boot. When he gets jittery, his eyes constantly twitch blink rapidly, while he makes a soft humming noise in the back of his throat. Luckily for Roy, he has medicine that prevents this from occurring during a job.

However, when his psychiatrist moves out of town and his prescription drugs run out, Roy's mental neuroses become uncontrollable. Roy's partner, Frank Mercer (Sam Rockwell), intervenes and insists he seeks professional help. He provides Roy with the number for Dr. Klein (Bruce Altman). After all, Roy is an occupational hazard in the state he is in.

Dr. Klein suggests that Roy try to re-establish some of the relationships in his life that dissolved after his divorce 14 years earlier. In particular, Dr. Klein feels that Roy should attempt to find out about the child his ex-wife may or may not have had.

Alison Lohman plays Angela, Roy's tornado-like daughter who enters his life and disrupts the highly controlled structure he attempts to form. For a man who is nauseated by the sight of a loose carpet fiber, Roy's life translates to a train wreck when Angela leaves her laundry all over the bathroom and when she does other teenager-like disorderly things.

The story gets irresistibly interesting when Angela convinces her dad to show her the tricks of the trade. When she gets in the way of one of his operations and almost causes an arrest, Frank provides Roy with an ultimatum



Continued on page 5

COURTESY WARNER BROS.

Nicolas Cage plays a sadistic criminal named Roy in Ridley Scott's newest plot-twisting piece, "Matchstick Men."

Internet music is now a crime?

Rockin' Out

Samara Marblestone

Hey guys ... did you hear the latest?

Apparently It is a crime now to download music, and it is a serious crime at that.

People who download music from the Internet, particularly college students like us, are getting fined large amounts of dough for listening to their favorite musical artists via the Internet. The government is cracking down to make this tragic and unethical practice a thing of the past.

In an article by Ted Bridis of the Associated Press, he said that as of right now, 261 lawsuits have been filed across the country for trading music online. He quoted Recording Industry Association of America president, Cary Sherman, who compared illegal music downloads to shoplifting: "Nobody likes playing the heavy. There comes a time when you have to stand up and take appropriate action."

I don't download music anymore since there are virtually no sites that offer it for free. But when I used to, I absolutely loved it. I loved how I could listen to any song ever created at any time I ever wanted to. The best part was that it was only a click away from reaching my ears. If I had a craving to listen to The Doors or Ace of Base, I could satisfy that craving in a heartbeat. I downloaded almost 2,000 songs during my freshman year here on campus, and it was awesome.

Downloading music is the furthest thing from a crime, and it should not be treated as such. People who download music are innocent souls who just want to satisfy a music fix. They aren't murdering or molesting anyone, and they shouldn't be punished as if they were.

What if you only like one or two songs on an album? Why should you have to buy the whole CD if you are only going to listen to 10 percent of it? I could just download those two songs for free online.

If someone truly likes an artist, he or she will buy the artist's record regardless of whether or not they download their music. If anything, downloading music helps artists get their music out into the air. If you are allowed to try on clothes before you buy them, you should be able to listen to music before you buy it.

I admit that I don't buy as many CDs now as I used to. Only a tiny part of that has to do with the ability to download music for free; it mostly has to do with the fact that CDs are so expensive these days. Maybe if CDs were priced more reasonably, more people would be buying them.

Continued on page 5

Pop-punk veterans extend their boundaries

MxPx collaborates with friends on new record

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

Pop-punk veteran band MxPx was playing the pop-punk game before Good Charlotte and Simple Plan were out touring on the Warped Tour and it has weathered its share of punk world controversy.

Getting started on the Christian music scene, the increasingly secular songs of Tom, Mike and Yuri drew ire from religious fans that accused them of abandoning their roots. Static came from the punk purists who rejected the band's brightly melodic sound, and from the fans who accused them of selling out by doing such things as starring in a recent Pepsi commercial.

To shore up their pop-punk credibility, the trio has enlisted the aide of such genre names as Benji Madden (Good Charlotte), Kris Roe (The Ataris) and Jordan Pundik (New Found Glory) to back them up on six of the tracks off the band's latest, "Before Everything and After."

In the limited field of pop-punk, "Before Everything and After" stands as a superior, rather indistinct release. "Before Everything and After" blasts right out of the gate with the individuality ode, "Play It Loud." And the energy never flags from there.

The album covers the usual range of topics of the genre: broken hearts, romantic confusion, self-doubt, non-conformity. It's the same old grab bag of punk themes, polished and packaged for the teenaged piercing and tattoo crowd.

Which isn't to say that "Before Everything and After" is a bad album. That's hardly the case. Though MxPx occasionally borrows familiar topics, it isn't out of creative exhaustion; it's out of the comforts of the culture. The vocals may be high-pitched, but they're also charismatic. The drums and guitars experiment with new melodies without surrendering completely to art. MxPX is capable of moving beyond the usual three-chord punch, as on the slinky "Kings of Hollywood," the acoustic-tinged ballad, "Quit Your Life" and the billowing "The Capitol."

In the world of punk, MxPx deserves its props for creating an album that extends beyond the genre's clichés without totally giving up the sound.

COURTESY A&M RECORDS

MxPx comes out of its shell on the new album "Before Everything and After" by crossing musical genres.

Scott's new mind-bender

Continued from page 4

– his partner or his daughter.

What follows is an unpredictable ending that turns the events of the story inside out. In the vein of movies like "Fight Club" or "Sixth Sense," it makes the viewer question all of the subtle plot points that preceded. Although it is perhaps the most interesting element of "Matchstick Men," this surprise ending also presents the biggest narrative flaw.

The problem resides in the fact that when an audience encounters a surprise ending, even the casual viewer will re-evaluate the events of the movie with the most scrutinizing eye. This "in your face" type of ending draws attention to itself and hence the rest of the film. It becomes increasingly important for the plot points to form an impenetrable cause and effect chain. In other words, in any story where the viewer is led to believe that A is happening only to find out that in fact B has been occurring the entire time, the plot better hold when the viewer tries to make sense of why they didn't foresee B.

Unfortunately, in the case of "Matchstick Men," the plot points fail to reunite when they are presented with the surprise ending. In short, there are too many ambiguities that are unaccounted for.

In addition to the sloppy surprise ending, this film suffers doubly from a denouement that leaves nothing to the imagination. It is a common occurrence for tinseltown productions to overemphasize a happy-go-lucky resolution. The rumor has it that American moviegoers dislike unhappy, ambiguous endings. The irony of "Matchstick Men" forcing an extra 10 minutes of unwarranted closure on its viewers is that the surprise ending seems to become somewhat of a facade.

Just when it seems like this film might be an exception to a canon of films that play to audience expectations, "Matchstick Men" jumps on the bandwagon and ends happily ever after.

In retrospect, during a time when new releases have been suffering from a marked decrease in ticket sales during the second weekend run, maybe this type of ending will help promote a second viewing. At least it is probable that viewers will want to give "Matchstick Men" a second chance after release to DVD/VHS, if not simply because of the excellent acting and interesting cinematography.

'El Mariachi' story contiues in Mexico

By Brendan Lee
Collegian Staff

From the very first frame, "Once Upon a Time in Mexico" feels like equal parts Sergio Leone western, student art film and 1970s action-thriller hopped up on good amphetamines and bad tequila. And master of ceremonies Robert Rodriguez wouldn't have it any other way.

'Once Upon a Time in Mexico'
Directed by Robert Rodriguez
Starring Antonio Banderas Johnny Depp Salma Hayek
Dimension/Troublemaker
Rated R
103 mins.
Grade B

After completing the immensely successful "Spy Kids" trilogy earlier this summer, the one-man film production crew known as Robert Rodriguez decided to put the finishing touches on his other franchise, the fabled celluloid crossover story of "El Mariachi."

Begun in the 1992 indie breakthrough "El Mariachi" and continued in 1995's big budget "Desperado," the film writes the final chapter in the life of a heroic nameless gun-slinging musician, a role most famously played by Antonio Banderas. If "Spy Kids" put Rodriguez's name on the map in Hollywood, the "El Mariachi" story is the director's homespun labor of love.

Rodriguez isn't alone either. Banderas and Salma Hayek reprise their roles for "Once Upon a Time in Mexico," but the cast is chock full of enough star turns to fill an entire marquee: sultry newcomers Eva Mendes and Enrique Iglesias, the demented genius of Willem Dafoe and oddball cameos from Ruben Blades, Mickey Rourke, Danny Trejo and Cheech Marin. Despite the best efforts of Dafoe and Banderas though, the film belongs to the reclusive Johnny Depp, in his best role since 2000's "Before Night Falls."

Like any good western, "Once Upon a Time in Mexico" is about blood revenge, a simple theme that Rodriguez throws against a backdrop of international espionage and Mexican political history.

The film opens with the mysterious CIA operative, Agent Sands (Depp), drawing the fabled killer known only as "El Mariachi" (Banderas) out of hiding for one last job. As a fish-out-of-water gringo, Sands desires to "restore balance to this country" by preventing a bloody coup by drug kingpin Barillo (Dafoe), backed by the menacing and corrupt General Marquez. The twist is that Sands actually wants the popular Mexican president to die in the attack and he offers El a chance to avenge the death of lover Carolina (Hayek) at the hands of Marquez. Confused yet?

From there, Sands weaves an intricate web of deceit that involves numerous disguises, an omnipresent fried pork dish, an ex-FBI officer, Mexican narcotics police, hardened ex-cons, a guerrilla army, a hit squad of mercenary musicians and a fake arm. Oh, and the entire operation is supposed to take place on the Day of the Dead.

Despite the convoluted plot and huge cast, "Once Upon a Time in Mexico" works astonishingly well because of Rodriguez's kamikaze production technique. Shot entirely on the sexy new format of Sony high definition digital camera, the movie takes on the claustrophobic feel of low-budget '70s classics like "Mean Streets."

At one point, the camera is so close to the action that the viewer can actually see blood on the lens. The violence might be highly stylized, but it certainly isn't subtle. The frantic pace of editing only enhances the brutality to a shocking effect. Again, the kudos goes to the mastermind of Rodriguez, who describes his work as editor on the film as "chopping" in the opening credits.

Although Dafoe gleefully tears into his role with sneering, moustache-twirling villainy, Johnny Depp single-handedly walks away with the film with seemingly effortless style and panache. In a role custom-made for him by Rodriguez, he bluffs his way through comically obvious costume changes with a vicious assortment of one-liners and a sociopath's sense of morality.

It is the type of highly-nuanced and memorable performance that made Marlon Brando famous and has established Depp as the preeminent actor of his generation. In fact, Depp pays homage to idol and friend Brando during the film's church scene (you'll know it when you see it), mimicking his rasp whisper and conversational tics.

If Depp is all craft and detail, Banderas paints with broad strokes in his depiction of El. Rodriguez orchestrates the Day of the Dead sequence with a keen eye for the history of Mexican political upheaval, complete with larger-than-life mural posturing for Banderas, portrayed as the defender of Mexico. With his trademark good looks and penetrating glower, Banderas is up for the role, at one point clothing himself in the Mexican flag while defending a befuddled president during the people's uprising against military opposition. Through a story based on personal revenge, Rodriguez manages to make the El Mariachi character iconic, taking on a bigger meaning in the context of oft-corrupt Mexican politics.

COURTESY DIMENSION/TROUBLEMAKER

Salma Hayek stars in "Once Upon a Time in Mexico."

At its best, "Once Upon a Time in Mexico" is a celebration of pop filmmaking at its finest. With Rodriguez presiding over every last detail (he even scored the film's soundtrack), it becomes a sharp reminder that the best action movies almost always come from outside the Hollywood machine, even if they are produced in L.A., and that a big budget is no substitute for passion.

The movie will almost undoubtedly become a financial success and like his hired gun Depp, Rodriguez will have limitless options in its wake. The smart money should be that he'll continue to do it his way, even if he has the keys to the kingdom.

To download our favorite music is a serious crime?

Continued from page 4

Before you know it, we won't be able to listen to music for free anymore on the radio. In order to listen to a song over the radio waves, we're going to have to preorder it and buy it individually.

Songs will cost approximately $1 to $2.75 each (plus tax of course) and if for some reason you illegally listen to the song without pre-payment, you will be fined $1,000 per song that you listened to, and you will be subject to jail time and/or community service.

Instead of Pay-Per-View, this barbaric new program will be called Pay-Per-Listen.

This is so freaking dumb. All I want to do is download one song. Just one. But I'm not allowed to do that anymore, and neither are you.

So what are we going to do about this? What can we do? We now live in a society in which music is no longer free to the people. Music is healthy, soulful, essential and therapeutic. Apparently you are classified as a criminal if you download it and listen to it for free.

Sometimes I wish the government would stop creating new problems by coming up with imperfect solutions that they think are solving other ones.

Samara Marblestone is a Collegian columnist.

Bartenders Have More Spirit! Why not be a bartender?

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA

Call TODAY! (413)747-9888
www.bostonbartender.com

Young Men's Club
138 East Street Hadley, MA
413-584-9726
Monday Night Football
• Pool Table
• Darts
• Horseshoes
• Keno
• Smoking
• Public Invited
• Women Welcome
Transportation Available
Free Munchies with this ad!

UMASS Campus Recreation
Get those forms in by:
Ice Hockey (M/W) 9/18
Tennis Singles (M/W/C) 9/22
Weekend Softball (M/W) 9/22
Ultimate Frisbee (M/W) 9/22
Volleyball (M/W/C) 9/25
Officials Needed:
Ice Hockey - Clinic Dates: September 23, 24, 25
Volleyball - Clinic Dates: September 30, October 1, 8, 9
Call for requirements, times and locations.
On The Web: www.umass.edu/umim

uptown or round robin?
pink or clear lipgloss?
mid or knee length boot?
STEVE MADDEN
1 unique you.
OWN IT.
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

UNIVERSITY HEALTH SERVICES
Mental Health Groups Fall 2003

ALCOHOL AND DRUG DISCUSSION GROUP
Mondays, 3:45-5:00 pm
This is an informal, confidential place for individuals to explore their relationship with alcohol and drugs. Discussions will be guided by members' interests. Self-assessment tools and referral information will be made available. Members may attend as few or as many meetings as they wish.

COED SELF-EXPLORATION GROUP FOR UNDERGRADUATE STUDENTS
Tuesdays, 2:30-4:00 pm —
or — Wednesdays, 3:30-5:00 pm
For college men and women who experience difficulties in interpersonal connections or who have concerns about their relationships.

WOMEN'S EATING ISSUES GROUP
Tuesdays, 4:00-5:15 pm
This is a group for women who are interested in changing negative eating patterns, decreasing food and weight concerns and enhancing self-acceptance. Members will have an opportunity to learn about the underlying dynamics contributing to eating issues and to develop coping strategies.

WOMEN'S SELF-EXPLORATION GROUP
Thursdays, 9:00-10:30 am
This is a group for older undergraduates, graduate students, student dependents, and covered employees. The group provides an opportunity for women to explore personal relationships, work, studies, family of origin, health, acculturation, and other relevant concerns. The group is ongoing with members added as space permits.

ANGER ISSUES GROUP
Thursdays, 1:00-2:30 pm
This group is open to any students who would like to learn how to better manage and understand their anger. Meetings will focus on identifying emotions, memories, and situations that trigger anger, as well as strategies to manage it.

COED SELF-EXPLORATION GROUP FOR GRADUATE STUDENTS
Thursdays, 4:00-5:15 pm
For graduate men and women who experience difficulties with interpersonal connections or who have concerns about their relationships. Members will have an opportunity to explore personal relationships, work, studies, and other relevant concerns.

MINDFULNESS-BASED STRESS REDUCTION (MBSR)
Thursdays, 5:15-6:30 pm
Start Date: September 18, 2003
Mindfulness is a particular way of paying attention:
➢ with mindful intention
➢ in the moment
➢ without judgement
Although MBSR embraces the acceptance of things as they are without striving, research has show that, with regular practice, it has the potential to lower stress, anxiety, and depression. It can promote relaxation, improve concentration, raise self-awareness, and enhance the immune system. Referrals and inquiries may be made to Kathryn Proulx @ 545-2337.

Groups are conducted by Mental Health Division staff.
Payment is deducted from your UHS Basic Plan, Student Health Insurance Plan, GIC, or Health New England plan subject to plan limitation and co-pays.

Groups require an initial screening that can be arranged by calling 545-2337 or stopping by at 125 Hills North, Monday-Friday 8 am-5 pm.

Pats stand by Belichick

Team says Jackson's comments were false

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press

FOXBORO, Mass. – The New England Patriots don't hate coach Bill Belichick.

Not that it would matter if they did.

"We're all here for a common goal, and that's to win," linebacker Willie McGinest said yesterday, a day after the Patriots beat the Philadelphia Eagles 31-10.

Sunday's win helped erase the memories of last week's 31-0, season-opening loss to Buffalo. Just five days earlier, Belichick decided to cut four-time Pro Bowl safety Lawyer Milloy to make room under the salary cap; Milloy signed with the Bills and helped them shut out the Patriots.

On Sunday, ESPN's Tom Jackson reported that Patriots players were so angry about Milloy being cut that "they hate their coach." Some of the players saw the report before they left for the stadium for their late-afternoon game with the Eagles.

"I respect Tom Jackson, but that is one of the stupidest things I ever heard," Patriots safety Rodney Harrison said yesterday. "He has no idea what we think about Belichick."

Harrison, a former Pro Bowler who signed with the Patriots in the off-season after he became a salary cap casualty in San Diego, said the players in New England are too professional to take the Milloy move personally.

"Sometimes you have to make business decisions," he said. "I was disappointed that Lawyer left, but it's a business move."

Belichick, who was a low-level assistant on the Denver staff when Jackson was playing for the Broncos, said he has spoken to Jackson recently. But asked how it felt to hear Jackson report such a thing, Belichick repeated:

"I am not going to dignify the comments with any type of response."

But that's more information than the tight-lipped Belichick would give out about the other big topic surrounding his team yesterday: injuries.

Linebacker Rosevelt Colvin limped off the field in Philadelphia in the second quarter and did not return. Center Damien Woody was not even on the active roster for the game and was replaced in the lineup by rookie center Dan Koppen.

Woody, who has an unspecified chest injury, said yesterday he would be back at practice this week as the Patriots prepare to host the rival New York Jets in Foxboro this weekend in their first home game of the season.

Colvin was not in the locker room during the period it was open to members of the media; there was still unopened mail in his locker and his chair was folded up and put away, as it was for other injured players like line backer Ted Johnson and special teamer Je'Rod Cherry.

"I don't think I could say that at this point," Belichick said when asked if any of the injuries were serious. "A lot of times what happens the day after the game, as we all know, is things that look serious on Sunday, don't look as serious on Monday. Some things that don't look serious on Sunday could be a little bit more of a problem on Monday."

Harrison said losing the talented Colvin for an extended period would be a bad break for a defense that's already missing two leaders from last year.

"We've already lost our stud middle linebacker," Harrison said of veteran Ted Johnson, who is out indefinitely with a broken foot. Colvin "was brought in because he was the best linebacker out there on the free agent market."

A Patriots spokesman said later yesterday afternoon that there was no update on Colvin's injury. The first NFL injury reports on players hurt this weekend aren't due until tomorrow.

"I am not trying to give you the run around, Belichick said.

"I am not saying we don't have any injuries. I can't tell you right now – any more than the doctors and the trainers can tell me – exactly what it is or exactly what we are dealing with."

GERALD H. LINGUS/COLLEGIAN

Meghan Pawlowski and UMass were unable to post a shot on goal against Harvard on Sunday.

Minutewomen drop pair to state rivals BU, Harvard loss, while Crimson goalies didn't see any action.

Continued from page 8

Harvard dominated play, keeping the ball in the UMass circle for the majority of the game. The Crimson had 15 penalty corners to the Minutewomen's zero, and they were able to convert two into goals.

"The work rate has to be high for everyone collectively as a unit," Shea said. "If we have five to seven working at a high work rate then there's some breakdowns along the way. That's what we found today, we just didn't perform very well."

Minutewoman Katelyn Woolfrey got hit in the arm after the ball ricocheted off a Harvard stick in the second half. She returned to the game after some ice and attention from the trainer.

"We won't know anything until later," Shea said, "She seems OK."

Saturday's game against Boston University ended in a 6-1 loss, but that wasn't a disappointment for Shea.

"It's not about wins and losses, it's about improving," Shea said. "This was our best game of the season. We attacked well as a unit."

The Minutewomen handled the ball well, keeping it in the Terriers' half of the field for much of the game.

"We dominated possession and the ball this game," Shea said.

Senior Dalinda Banuelos scored an unassisted goal to put the Terriers ahead 1-0 eight minutes into the game. Less than a minute later, senior Lindsey Domers notched goal number two off an assist from senior Celeste Hubbard.

"The defense fell asleep," Shea said, "We got caught ball watching."

STUDENT TRAVEL
elevate
as seen on MTV's the Real World Paris
europe
This is THE trip of the season! Follow the casts' Footsteps From Paris to » Nice » Florence » Rome » Zermatt Experience beach Fun, city nights and mountain dreams in 2 weeks or less! starting at $607*
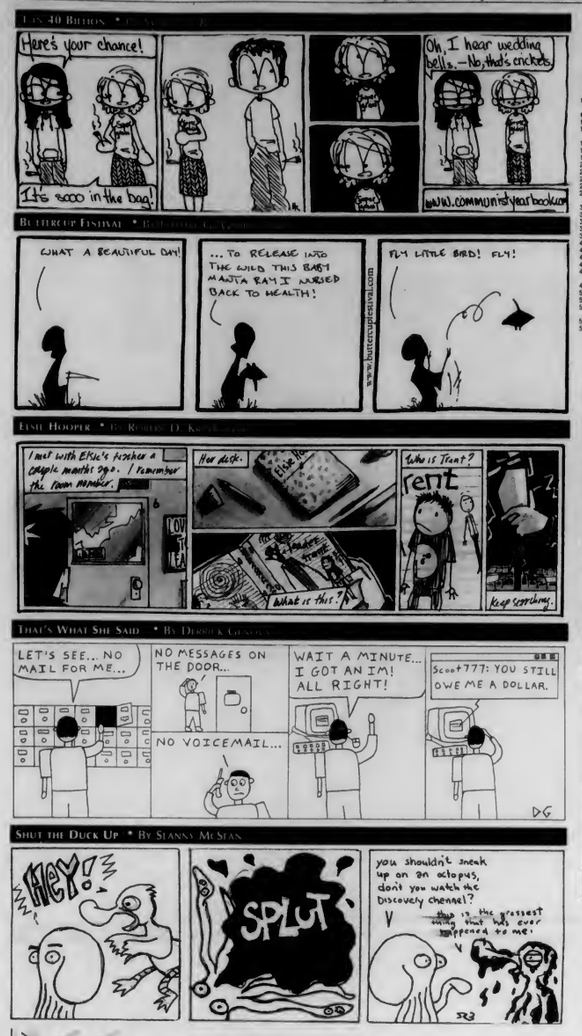
*airfare not included

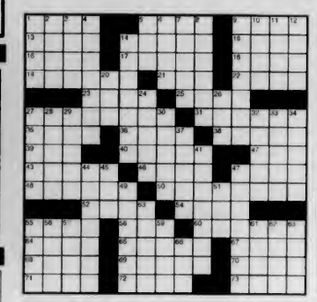
STA TRAVEL www.statravel.com we've been there.
ENTER TO WIN THE trip For 2 at your local branch or www.statravel.com!
Lufthansa airline special Take a Friend For $99!* *see your branch For details
44 Main St (413) 256.1261
STA TRAVEL WE'VE BEEN THERE.

Our Famous 2 BURGS FOR 2 BUCKS
Phantom Gourmet's 2003 Pick Top 8 Burgers in New England
"Pete's Big Bopper Deluxe"
OCMP CREDIT CARDS
ADVOCATE ★BEST★ OF THE VALLEY READERS POLL 2003
1st- BURGERS 2nd- HOT DOGS 3rd- FRIES
PETE'S DRIVE-IN
www.petesdrivein.com 287 RUSSELL ST • ROUTE 9 HADLEY • 585-0241



The BLUE WALL PUB
THIS WEEK at The BLUE WALL PUB
MONDAY Monday Night Football AND 10¢ Wings
TUESDAY Karaoke
THURSDAY Open Mic Series
FRIDAY Live Acoustic Rock WITH Ryan Montbleau (Eddie Mcgarry Opening)
SATURDAY Dance Music of the African Diaspora WITH M'peli Mwakaliku
LIVE MUSIC starts at 9:00PM.
OPEN MIC starts at 7:00PM. The Sign-Up sheet goes out at 6:00PM. Bring your talent and your friends and your instruments. We'll provide the stage and sound equipment and 20 minutes for you to knock'em dead!
ALL MUSICAL STYLES are encouraged to participate!
AS ALWAYS, 18+ to party, 21+ to drink.

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
2 A great place to get contact lenses
3 FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
4 Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
5 Contact lenses mailed directly to your home or office
6 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*



"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.
For appointments or questions, call 577-5244
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

sports@dailycollegian.com sports@dailycollegian.com sports@dailycollegian.com sports@dailycollegian.com sports@dailycollegian.com sports@dailycollegian.com sports@dailycollegian.com sports@dailycollegian.com sports@dailycollegian.com sports@dailycollegian.com sports@dailycollegian.com sports@dailycollegian.com sports@dailycollegian.com sports@dailycollegian.com sports@dailycollegian.com sports@dailycollegian.com

Want to make friends that last a lifetime???
Sorority Recruitment
Call us at 413.545.2711
Sept.16-21
or check us out online at www.umass.edu/greek/panhel.htm

THE HARP
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
Sarah Pub
116 Sunderland
Just off Campus North of the apartments
Tonight!
www.theharp.net
Tuesday - Pub Trivia Night
Wednesday - Reggae Night
•Labatt Blue: $1.75 a pint
$6.25 a pitcher

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH

- BBQ Pork Sandwich
- Chicken Pesto Pasta
- Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

DINNER

- Chicken Pot Pie
- Boston Scrod
- Native American Stew (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

TUESDAY
- High: 78
- Low: 50

WEDNESDAY
- High: 77
- Low: 52

THURSDAY
- High: 73
- Low: 57

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR Barbara Lotto
PHOTO TECHNICIAN Sarah Lloyd
COPY EDITOR Sheryl Wolnik
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR Dan Simmons
PRODUCTION STAFF David Pessah / Nikolas P. Markantonatos

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Take time out of your schedule for some TV, there's great shows on.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Keep your phone turned on, people are trying to get a hold of you.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Be vewy, vewy quiet, it's rabbit season.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Take small bites, no one likes when you talk with your mouthful.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
When you leave you will be greatly missed by all who know you.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Your carelessness will cause controversy.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Turn your phone off in class you don't want to be "that kid."

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
If your name is Bill, you'll have a happy birthday today.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
It won't get much worse. Relax.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Be proud of soap opera addiction.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Go to bed early, you have a long day tomorrow.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Careful of flying hockey pucks, they really hurt.

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"I put my heart and soul into my work, and have lost my mind in the process."

-Vincent Van Gogh

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ACTIVITIES

Montreal Weekends $99. Includes R/T Luxury Motor Coach from Springfield. 3 Days-2 Nights- 4 Star Hotel Downtown- Meals-Night Club passes. www.montrealexpress.net 1-781-979-9001 Special Group Rates

AUTO FOR SALE

1988 Mazda $950 413-586-5728

1994 Toyota Paseo well maintained, great gas mileage. $2,900 413-584-2634

AUTO FOR SALE

1993 Pontiac Bonneville. All power. Very Good Condition. Must Sell. Best offer. 253-5537

1992 Silver Subaru Stationwagon 140K, dependable, Call 546-0383 after 6p.m.

Jeep Cherokee Sport- 1995. Perfect student car, A/C, Great CD system, original owner, excellent condition, 90K, automatic. 413-296-0060 $3,600 or O.B.O.

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Participants sought for listening experiments. Call 545-6837 leave message or write jkingston@linguist.umass.edu

Drivers and Kitchen help wanted Apply at D.P. Dough. Downtown Amherst

EMPLOYMENT

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

EMPLOYMENT

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals for part time positions. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are must. Call (413) 584-4746

FOR SALE

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons- w/retired pro Djata Bumpus. In Northampton. 584-1966 or visit www.western-massboxing.com Accepts all Major Credit Cards

Jazz Piano Lessons Explore your creativity Beginner to Advanced Learn a wide range of styles Reasonable Rates Contact Stephen Page at 413-297-7910

MISCELLANEOUS

Want to buy/sell TEXTBOOKS & other stuff LOCALLY? ... NO shipping hassles, NO payment middlemen! All 4 FREE! Visit www.college-shack.com today!

SERVICES

Do you know your rights as a student, tenant, worker and consumer? The Student Legal Services Office provides free help with your questions. Come to 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. 1-800-648-4849

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplash-tours.com or 1800-426-7710

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A losing state

Local foes take pair from UM

By Becky Horowitz
Collegian Correspondent

Unable to find a common ground, the Massachusetts field hockey team went from one extreme to the next. They'll go onto the field as a unit; the question is whether or not they'll come off that way.

Harvard	4
UMass	0

The Maroon and White (2-5) are two wins wealthier than they were at this time last season. Although a team's record is what earns them a trip to the NCAA tournament, for coach Patty Shea, the level at which they play is far more important.

"It's not about wins and losses," Shea said. "It's about improving."

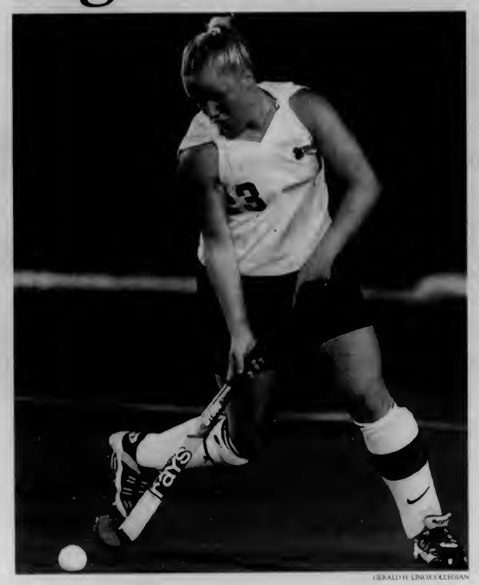
Sunday's game against Harvard (3-0) was not a notable outing for the Minutewomen. Unable to get into a rhythm, the Maroon and White fell 4-0 in non-conference action.

"[Today's game] was not the worst," Shea said, "but we stepped backwards."

The Crimson's offense was everything the Minutewomen's wasn't. Harvard was in a rhythm: they handled the ball well, made clean, accurate passes and capitalized on opportunities in the circle.

It appeared as if UMass might get something going toward the end of the first half when they converted a stopped shot into a fast break, but Harvard quickly recovered and ended the Minutewomen's brief surge.

The Maroon and White held strong in the first half, allowing only one Harvard goal. The second half, however, proved to be a bigger problem for the Maroon and White, as it became harder for them to hold off the Crimson.



"We need to have everybody on the same page," Shea said. "If we have one or two people that aren't there or aren't ready then we're in trouble, we're not prepared and we're not ready to play as a unit."

Senior Mina Pell started the scoring in the second half for the Crimson off an assist from junior Kate Gannon at the 46:18 mark. Thirty seconds later, off a penalty shot, junior Tiffany Egnaczyk hurled one past Minutwomen goalkeeper Christin Tocco.

Senior Elizabeth Andrews scored Harvard's final goal at 57:34 off assists from Laura Werner and Jen Ahn.

Tocco tallied 13 saves in the

Continued on page 6

GERALD H. LINUCOLLEGIAN

Kristin Hopwood and the Minutewomen lost a pair of contests to intra-state rivals Boston University and Harvard over the weekend.

Smoltz a must for playoff push

Touchin' 'em all

Mike Marzelli

Bad news for Braves fans, as the organization is still unsure when all-world closer John Smoltz will return from a injured elbow.

Smoltz, who currently has 44 saves this season, is clearly the anchor of the shaky Braves bullpen, and his absence will make it nearly impossible for the Braves to advance deep into the playoffs.

While some baseball experts will point to San Francisco's success without the services of its all-star closer, Robb Nen, the Giants have been able to get by with a strong supporting cast, good setup work and one of the best bullpen managers in the game in Felipe Alou. Also, veteran Tim Worrell has stepped in valiantly with 33 saves, and has been fairly reliable.

So while Bobby Cox and Leo Mazzone are quite capable of managing a bullpen, they simply don't have the horses. The Bravos will be hard pressed to find someone in their paper-thin pen to step up and fill the role as Worrell has.

Will Cunnane is currently the go-to guy, but does he have the gumption to take the ball in the late playoff innings and record the big outs Smoltz has been accustomed to getting?

Managing success

Speaking of Alou, is there anyone more deserving of National League Manager of the Year than the veteran Giants bench boss?

All he's done is go from bench coaching duties for baseball's worst team – Detroit – to taking over for one of the games most beloved mangers in a city coming off a league championship, and not miss a beat.

If the Giants are able to make a return trip to the World Series, despite not having Nen or any form of consistent starting pitching behind Jason Schmidt, Alou should certainly be recognized.

A voice in the crowd

Having watched the Devil Rays play horrendous baseball year in and year out, it's hard to believe that anyone would pay to sit and watch Chuck LaMar's team on a regular basis, even after he was able to lure Lou Piniella to St. Pete.

However, I must applaud one individual. Those who have been to the Trop, or listen carefully on TV, know who I'm referring to.

The Heckler, as Red Sox analyst Jerry Remy calls him, is a middle-aged man adorned in full Rays' regalia who takes a seat behind home plate for every game.

As if that is not noble enough, he singles out one opposing player from each visiting team, and heckles him relentlessly every time he comes to bat over the course of an entire series.

When Boston was in town it was Todd Walker, and the Yankees' Bernie Williams received the same treatment as well.

All in good fun and never out of taste, it's more fans like The Heckler that will make Tampa a baseball town after all.

Amityville horror

Mike Maroth of the Tigers recently became the first pitcher to lose 20 games since Brian Kingman went 8-20 for the Oakland A's in 1980.

Maroth, who came to the Tigers from the Red Sox organization in the deal that sent Bryce Florie to Boston, will now live in infamy as having had one of baseball's worst seasons.

Maroth does have a quality arm, and while he doesn't have overpowering stuff, he moves the ball in and out and changes speeds well enough to have a solid major league career. It was simply his poor luck to land on what could be baseball's worst team ever. He has been without run support and good defense behind him all season, and has basically had to win games on their own.

While Tigers management would argue that pitchers such as Maroth, Jeremy Bonderman and Nate Cornejo are gaining experience while cutting their teeth in the majors this season, they are clearly not ready.

Instead they are risking the fragile psyche and confidence of their young arms by throwing them to the wolves too soon.

Mike Marzelli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at Marzelli_Collegian@yahoo.com.

De La Hoya protests decision

Plans to file legal inquiry

LAS VEGAS, Nev. – Sugar Shane Mosley came on in the late rounds Saturday night to beat Oscar De La Hoya for the second time in three years, winning a close but unanimous decision to take the WBC and WBA 154-pound titles.

De La Hoya's camp, however, is planning to ask for an inquiry into the decision, claiming that the judges were acting with hidden or misguided motives in giving the decision to Mosley.

Mosely was the beneficiary of a decision many thought would go to De La Hoya, although the fighter insists he was indeed victorious.

Tennis

COMPTON, Calif. – A 24-year-old man was arrested in the investigation of the shooting that killed the older sister of Venus and Serena Williams, the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department announced early yesterday.

The suspect was identified as Aaron Michael Hammer. He was jailed without bail, said sheriff's Deputy Richard Pena.

Yetunde Price was shot in the chest early Sunday. Price, 31, a registered nurse who owned a beauty salon, was a personal assistant to her famous half-sisters.

NFL

BALTIMORE, Md. – Baltimore's Jamal Lewis set a single-game NFL record with 295 yards rushing on Sunday as the Ravens beat the Cleveland Browns 33-13. Lewis carried the ball 30 times and scored two touchdowns.

MLB

MONTREAL, Canada – Vladimir Guerrero homered in his final at-bat to complete the first cycle of his career in the Montreal Expos' 7-3 over the New York Mets on Sunday.

Basketball

STOCKHOLM, Sweden – Lithuania won its third title at the European Basketball Championships on Sunday, defeating Spain 93-84.

Italy won an Olympic basketball berth by beating France 69-67 for the bronze medal. Lithuania and Spain already qualified for the Athens Olympics by winning semifinals Saturday. Host Greece and world champion Serbia-Montenegro had automatic spots.

NHL

ANAHEIM, Calif. – The Anaheim Mighty Ducks agreed to terms with Petr Sykora on Sunday, ending a three-day impasse that caused the forward to miss the start of training camp. The sides agreed on a three-year deal that will pay Sykora $12 million.

Golf

LODDEKOPINGE, Sweden – Europe won the Solheim Cup on Sunday, beating the U.S. team 17 1/2-10 1/2 on Sunday.

Annika Sorenstam won her fourth match of the week, 3 and 2 over Angela Stanford. Catriona Matthew earned the decisive point for Europe when Rosie Jones conceded after missing a birdie putt.

SAINT-NOM-LA-BRETECHE, France – Retief Goosen won the Lancome Trophy on Sunday, closing with a 1-under-par 70 for a four-stroke victory. He finished at 18-under 266.

HUNT VALLEY, Md. – Larry Nelson shot a 2-under-par 70 for a two-stroke victory at the Constellation Energy Classic. He finished at 9-under 207 on Sunday for his first win of the year and 17th on the Champions Tour.

INZAI, Japan – Jyoti Randhawa of India won the Suntory Open on Sunday. He became the first Indian to win on the Japanese tour. Phil Mickelson closed with a 2-under-par 71 for a 2-over 286 total, leaving him in 18th place, 10 strokes off the lead.

Auto Racing

LOUDON, N.H. – Jimmie Johnson used fuel strategy to win Sunday's NASCAR Winston Cup race at New Hampshire International Speedway. As the rest of the leaders were forced to pit for gas, Johnson moved closer and closer to the front, finally regaining the top spot on the 294th of 300 laps of the Sylvania 300.

MONZA, Italy – Michael Schumacher won the Italian Grand Prix, holding off Juan Pablo Montoya for his first Formula One victory in three months. Schumacher maintained his lead from start to finish to win his 50th Grand Prix for Ferrari.

LOUDON, N.H. – Brian France was appointed NASCAR's board chairman and chief executive Saturday, replacing his father, Bill France Jr.

The elder France will cut back on his daily business activities, but will remain co-vice chairman and an active member of the board of directors.

NCAA Football

Oklahoma and Miami remained in the top two spots in The Associated Press College football poll. The Sooners, who have been No. 1 all season, received 50 of the 65 first-place votes and 1,601 points.

The Hurricanes got three firsts and 1,508 points.

Michigan, which got four firsts, moved up two spots to No. 3 following a 38-0 win over Notre Dame. The Irish fell from 15th to out of the poll.

Track and Field

MONTE CARLO, Monaco – Kelli White finished fourth in the 100 meters Sunday at the inaugural World Athletics Final.

White, who tested positive for a stimulant at the World Championships in Paris, was timed in 11.08 seconds. She needed to finish in 10.77 to overtake South African high jumper Hestrie Cloete in the women's rankings for World Athlete of the Year.

Morocco's Hicham El-Guerrouj won the men's World Athlete of the Year award.

LONDON – Paula Radcliffe broke the world record in the 5-kilometer road race Sunday, beating by three seconds the mark set last year by Deena Drossin of the United States.

Radcliffe was timed in 14 minutes, 51 seconds to win the Flora Light women's challenge in Hyde Park. Radcliffe also holds the world record at 10 kilometers and the world best in the marathon.

Reports compiled by the Associated Press.

COURTESY ASSOCIATED PRESS

Oscar De La Hoya plans to launch an inquiry into the decision that cost him the WBA and WBC championship belts. Sugar Shane Mosely defeated De La Hoya in a unanimous decision Saturday night in Las Vegas, Nev.

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 11

Free but forgotten?

Student legal services unknown throughout student body

By Aileen Corrigan
Collegian Correspondent

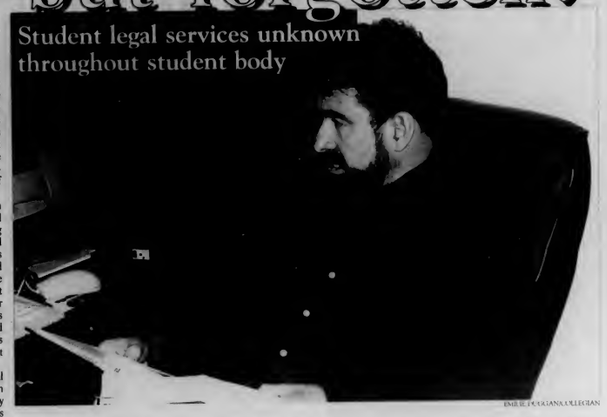
Younger people are often at a disadvantage in legal matters, because they often don't have either enough money or enough knowledge to prosecute or seek legal services to defend them. But that's just why the Student Legal Services Office was created: to help prevent organizations and students at the University of Massachusetts from becoming victims of legal problems because of inadequate advising and representation.

The Student Government Association and Graduate Student Senate created SLSO in 1973 with the goal of providing "counseling, advice, representation and education to the student body of UMass concerning all legal matters." It opened for business one year later, when the Massachusetts legislature created a trust fund to be established and maintained for its use. According to Director Charles Dimare, last year they received $334,000, about 75 percent of which is usually paid for by the SGA and the rest covered by the GSS.

SLSO does more than provide legal advice to UMass students, Education Outreach Coordinator Julia Mahoney said. It represents students in select cases or refers them to affordable, quality representation in other instances. The office also publishes a quarterly newspaper and multiple pamphlets, provides internships for students interested in law and hosts workshops available to student organizations and campus groups.

The SLSO provides legal advice to around 1,500 students each year, according to administrative coordinator Corey Carvalho. Advice is free to students who have paid the Student Activities Trust Fund or the Graduate Senate Tax. Other services, such as legal document preparations and dispute resolution services, are provided for a small fee. Mahoney likens it to a "get out of jail free card" for UMass students.

"I think Student Legal Services is a valuable resource that many UMass students don't know about," Ashley Hovis, a senior at UMass said. She sought consultation at SLSO when she was having legal problems with her landlord. She was very happy with their services and said they provided her with useful information.



Although attorneys from SLSO only personally represent a limited number of cases in court, they refer most to the local private bar. They cannot sue the University or represent one UMass student against another, as that would be a conflict of interests, said Dimare, nor do they personally litigate and handle criminal defense cases. He said the most common issues students need help with involve consumer, criminal, housing and higher education laws.

Dimare said "out of the several hundred cases that come here every year, I'd say 95 percent of them that come here for legal services get out of it without prosecution." He provided the example of the students arrested last May at the Hobart Hoedown, the notorious annual riot on Hobart Lane. Most of the individuals involved avoided prosecution and spent $100 to $200 on legal defense by using attorneys referred to them by SLSO, rather than throwing several $1,000 down on a self-appointed lawyer.

SLSO achieved a dramatic victory when a former UMass student was awarded $117,689 in a sexual harassment suite, according to a press release from SLSO attorney Lisa Keni. The female student was forced to resign from an internship in 1994, settled out of court and sued again for emotional distress caused by a feeling of "powerlessness and vulnerability" when the company president did not honor the settlement. Attorney DiMare tried the case, and with the help of SLSO, she won her case at the Middlesex County Superior court on April 4.

This victory is not only beneficial to the one sexual harassment victim who

Continued on page 3

EMILIE POGGIANA/COLLEGIAN

Student Legal Services Director Charles Dimare works at his office in the Campus Center. According to Dimare, 95 percent of the cases brought to legal services do not get prosecuted.

ALANA meets today

By Courtney Charles
Collegian Staff

The ALANA caucus will hold a meeting today at 5 p.m. in the New Africa House Library on the second floor.

The event, a pizza party sponsored by the Office of ALANA Affairs, is the first Registered Student Organization ALANA unification meeting this academic year.

Gladys Franco, Chair of the ALANA caucus, said the meeting is "to create a better sense of unity/community within the ALANA community." She said she wants to try to bring everyone in ALANA together.

"As chair of the caucus, my goal for this evening is to get everyone on the same page as to what's going on at UMass," Franco said.

A large part of the meeting will be geared toward informing students about the SGA nomination process and promoting elections. Nominations are due Friday, and there are 66 open seats to fill in the Senate. Franco said she was concerned students, especially freshmen and sophomores, didn't know how the whole nomination process worked, and were unaware that their nominations would have to be in this week.

"Education is the word!" Franco said.

Recently, ALANA has struggled with Student Government Association Speaker Iared Nokes' decision to eliminate appointed seats, such as those of the ALANA caucus in the SGA Senate.

Last Thursday, ALANA held a rally on the steps of the Student Union and passed around a petition for support. The rally ended in the SGA office where Nokes was approached and given a list of demands, including a demand to reverse his earlier decision to eliminate the appointed seats of the caucus.

According to Franco, ALANA received over 100 signatures, but at this point, the petitions are not going to be sent to anyone. Right now, the issue is to get the signers involved and informed and hopefully to get them to support ALANA, she said.

The subject of future rallies will be addressed as well, during the meeting.

ALANA's next steps will be discussed during the meeting, as questions involving the caucus will be put on the ballot next week.

On Sunday, members of the Coordinating Council decided to pose three referendum questions to the student body for the Sept. 25 elections.

The first question will ask if the SGA constitution should be amended to include ALANA caucus appointed seats. If the appointed seats are not adopted by the Constitution, the ALANA caucus will still exist, only their Senate seats will need to by won through the electoral process, according to SGA Speaker Iared Nokes.

Nokes is not taking a public position on this first question as of yet.

The second question is whether to eliminate Area Government appointed seats from the SGA bylaws.

The third question will eliminate ALANA Caucus appointed seats from the bylaws, only if the Constitutional amendment does not pass or the Board of Trustees refuses to amend the constitution.

Isabel charges toward coast

By Emery P. Dalesio
Associated Press

RODANTHE, N.C. (AP) — Cars, recreational vehicles and SUVs streamed inland from North Carolina's Outer Banks yesterday, as more than 100,000 people were urged to get out of the way of Hurricane Isabel, the most powerful storm in four years to menace the mid-Atlantic coast.

Isabel's winds weakened during the day to around 105 mph from a peak of 160 mph over the weekend. But forecasters said the hurricane could strengthen when it crosses the warm waters of the Gulf Stream on a projected course that could take it straight into the Outer Banks early Thursday.

Holly Barbour, vacationer from Wheeling, W.Va., said she and her family planned to head south to Myrtle Beach, S.C.

"Yesterday was so nice, we couldn't believe that a storm was coming," she said. "A lot of people were saying they were heading out when they told us to evacuate. So we're going to do the same."

Coastal residents from South Carolina to New Jersey boarded up homes and businesses and stocked up on batteries, water and other supplies. North Carolina Gov. Mike Easley declared a state of emergency, allowing him to use the National Guard and also seek federal disaster relief after the storm passes.

Easley urged residents to evacuate low-lying coastal areas.

"Now is the time to prepare," he said. "The course and intensity of this storm may change very quickly."

Thousands of tourists and others abandoned parts of North Carolina's Outer Banks as rough surf pounded the thin, 120-mile-long chain of islands. But some weather-tested residents treated the evacuation orders as just a suggestion.

"It's easier to stay on the island," Margie Brecker said as she and her husband boarded up their Christmas shop in Rodanthe and made plans to hunker down. "That way, we are right here when it's time to clean up, and we're able to help others."

At 5 p.m. EDT, Isabel was about 570 miles southeast of North Carolina's Cape Hatteras, moving northwest at around 8 mph. It was down to a Category 2 storm on the Saffir-Simpson Hurricane Scale of intensity, from Category 5 over the weekend.

A hurricane watch was posted from Little River Inlet, S.C., to Chincoteague, Va., including a large part of the Chesapeake Bay.

About 110,000 people were urged to evacuate the Outer Banks. And about 6,000 military personnel and their families on or near Langley Air Force Base in Hampton, Va., were ordered to leave.

"If it was a 5, I'd be gone. If it was a 4, I'd be gone. But right now it's looking like a 2 or less," said David Kidwell, a 64-year-old retiree who is staying put at his home in Kitty Hawk. "That's just nothing more than a big nor'easter as far as I'm concerned."

National Hurricane Center meteorologist Eric Blake said people should not let their guard down even though the storm was weakening.

"Hurricanes are notorious for gaining strength as they cross the Gulf Stream," he said. Even at a Category 2, "there's still a lot of potential for danger."

After hitting land, Isabel could also spread heavy rain from North Carolina all the way to the New England states.

The last major hurricane to threaten the mid-Atlantic coast was Floyd in 1999. The Category 2 storm, with 110 mph winds, came ashore near Cape Fear, N.C., and continued along the coast into New England, causing 56 deaths and $4.6 billion in damage.

Navy ships manned by 13,000 sailors headed out to sea from Norfolk, Va., and Earle, N.J., to ride out the storm and keep from being battered against their piers. Military aircraft were flown to airfields inland.

In Simpson, N.C., a man preparing for Isabel accidentally burned his home down Monday when a generator he was testing caught fire.

In Atlantic City, N.J., Miss America Pageant officials said they were prepared to postpone Friday's Boardwalk parade and even the pageant itself on Saturday, if necessary.

Religious broadcaster Pat Robertson prayed on his Christian Broadcasting Network, based in Virginia Beach, that Isabel would turn from the coast. He asked God to put a "wall of protection" around Virginia Beach and the East Coast.

Democrats to hold meeting

The posters around campus pose a question: "Do you hate this man?" They further depict President George W. Bush holding up three fingers to a presumable crowd. A word bubble spouts from his mouth and reads "four."

The posters announce the University of Massachusetts Democrats' first meeting, scheduled for today.

President David Mason and Vice-President Alex Kostadinov head the organization this academic year. According to the group's brochure, UMass Democrats members have met former Vice-President Al Gore, U.S. Senator John Kerry, U.S. Representatives John Olver and Barney Frank, former Massachusetts governor, Michael Dukakis, and Amherst State Senator Stan Rosenberg. They have also met Amherst State Rep. Ellen Story, former governor of Puerto Rico, Pedro Rosello, and the manager for the Gore/Lieberman 2000 campaign, Donna Brazil.

Not only have former UMass Democrats had the opportunity to meet many people involved in

Continued on page 3

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
DNA DETECTIVES WHERE IS THE LINE DRAWN?
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
NEW GRISHEM NOTHING TO STAND UP FOR
SPORTS PAGE 10
DOGGIN' IT MEN'S SOCCER VISITS BOSTON UNIVERSITY
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 9

INQUIRER AND DISPATCH

Spin that Wheel!

A member of Lazer 99.3 encourages a student to spin the wheel of prizes during a visit to campus last Friday.

Being a student,
you can live without a lot of things.

Cable shouldn't be one of them.

Get your first month of select Comcast Digital Cable packages featuring HBO for just $1!
Add Comcast High-Speed Internet for just $1 more! Plus get FREE basic installation!

1-877-407-7806 • comcast-ne.com

Comcast

HBO MTV Discovery Channel MTV2

*Comcast may not service your address. All services are not available in all areas. Offer available in Comcast serviceable areas only. Restrictions may apply. For restrictions, minimum requirements and complete details about service and prices, call 1-877-407-7806. Comcast Digital Plus, Digital Silver, Digital Gold and Comcast High-Speed Internet: duration offer includes basic installation and one month of service for each product. Offer does not apply to services to which customer currently subscribes. Offer does not include Standard Cable, Federal, State and Local taxes, franchise fees, other related fees or equipment charges. After first month, posted rate card rate for Comcast Digital Plus, Digital Silver, Digital Gold, and Comcast High-Speed Internet applies. Installation offer is valid for new customers only and does not apply to non-residential or non-standard installations, including installations over 150 ft. from outside cable system. Offer available to residential customers located in Comcast Cable wired and serviceable areas only and is not available to current or former Comcast customers with unpaid balances. Additional charges for non-standard installation, wiring time, and materials may apply for homes not yet wired for cable. Certain services are available separately or as part of other levels of service, and all programming and services are not available in all areas. You must rent a converter and remote control for an additional charge to receive certain services. Installation, additional outlet, change of service, programming access, and other charges may apply. Franchise fees, taxes and other fees may apply. Pricing, programming, channel location and packaging may change. Offer applies to one TV. Not valid with any other discount or coupon for Comcast services. Basic Service subscription is required to receive other levels of service. Comcast Digital Cable service is subject to terms and conditions of Comcast Cable Policies & Practices. Ethernet device is required for Comcast High-Speed Internet service and may be purchased from Comcast or through a local retail location for an additional fee. Actual speeds vary. Minimum computer system requirements apply. Offer expires 10/05/03. ©2003 Comcast. All rights reserved. ©2003 Home Box Office, Inc. All rights reserved. HBO® is a service mark of Home Box Office, Inc.

A15-090103-ABC

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-3499 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Robert Krzykowski
Editorial Editor Erika Lovley
News Editor Courtney Charles
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Staman
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Lisa Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsey Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Jessica Pelletier
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Kelly Farrell
Assistant News Ferron Salniker
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Martelli

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Adobe Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Legal Services: an unused resource

Continued from page 1

won her case, said DiMare: "It's about strengthening the rights of sexual harassment victims across the state."

He also said it "represents the first time in the state that a judge has expressly held that sexual harassment victims can get emotional distress damages when the perpetrators renege on promises to compensate them."

Students should keep an eye out for the soon to be released fall 2003 issue of SLSO's quarterly publication "The Students' Rights Advocate." It informs students of important legal facts and news and in the past has addressed topics such as the controversial USA Patriot Act and how traffic tickets and other violations affect insurance rates.

Literature on a wide array of legal topics can be found in the Student Legal Services' office. They have published a large number of brochures and also carry legal literature put out by other groups.

SLSO offers internships to students interested in law to students from UMass, as well as other schools. DiMare said they have had over 400 interns come and go in his 24 years as director of SLSO. He emphasized how valuable it is in their education and said most of them feel the experience they get there is more valuable than what they have learned in class.

Mahoney added that their next interns were going to put on skits at cultural events such as concerts to make the campus members more aware of their services and more educated about legal issues.

As an educational tool, SLSO hosts presentations for student organizations and constituencies educating them about rights and regulations that may affect them. Mahoney said they have hosted workshops for international students, ALANA students and provide a workshop for the Everywoman's Center annually. In October, they will be instructing a workshop for Greek affairs about hazing. They conducted a presentation for those arrested at the Hobart Hoedown and offer many other instructional workshops.

According to DiMare, there are two other attorneys on staff beside himself: Lisa Kent and the newly hired Michelle Leaf, who is especially knowledgeable about the international student program. There are also several volunteers and six to eight full time interns and an administrative director, Cory Carvalho.

This spring, SLSO will be celebrating its 30th anniversary and Mahoney said they plan to commemorate this occasion, although they are not exactly sure how yet.

SLSO sees students on an appointment only basis. Appointments can be made by calling 413-545-1997 or stopping by the office at 922 Campus Center.

John Edwards formally joins Democratic race

By Nedra Pickler
Associated Press

ROBBINS, N.C. (AP) — Democrat John Edwards, the Southern moderate looking to reinvigorate his lagging presidential campaign, formally launched his candidacy Tuesday and promised to be an advocate for working-class Americans.

The North Carolina senator spoke before a now empty textile mill where his father worked for 36 years and he earned money for college mopping beneath the looms, trimming the shrubs and serving as weekend night watchman. The site was chosen to draw a distinction with President Bush, whose father served as congressman, vice president and president.

"America deserves a president who understands that the people of this country work, and the people of this country work hard," he said. "A president who will stand up for those people, someone who will stop at nothing to create opportunity for all the great people of this country."

Before he gets the chance to take on Bush, Edwards must come from behind Democratic rivals who are beating him in primary polls. His announcement lost some thunder to retired Gen. Wesley Clark. Just before Edwards took the stage, word circulated of Clark's plan to announce Wednesday that he would become the 10th candidate in the race.

Edwards called Clark "a good man" and said he's welcome in the race. "The people of America will hear my message. A lot of them will hear it today, a lot of them will hear it over the months to come."

Edwards, who made millions as a trial attorney before entering politics five years ago, first announced his presidential intentions in front of his Raleigh, N.C., home Jan. 2. He had a strong start, raising more than any of his Democratic rivals early this year, but has since lost the money edge to insurgent candidate Howard Dean, a former Vermont governor.

His campaign has yet to draw a winning following. In most polls, Edwards draws single-digit support. Nationally, he ranks among rivals with less funding and organization, such as Al Sharpton and Carol Moseley Braun, despite working for the nomination for more than a year.

After his kickoff in Robbins, N.C., Edwards headed to Columbia, S.C., a must-win state in his strategy to reach the White House. Rather than try to capture Iowa and New Hampshire against more seasoned foes, Edwards is banking that voters in the neighboring state would be attracted to a moderate with Carolina roots.

In the latest South Carolina poll, Edwards has moved into the lead with John Kerry, Joe Lieberman and Howard Dean, though none were above 10 percent. Nearly half of the state's voters were undecided, and Edwards plans to focus on wooing them in the next few months.

"Those of us from the South, we have a special responsibility when it comes to civil rights," he told the crowd at the University of South Carolina. "We have a responsibility to follow, not to lead."

Grant Halverson/Associated Press

Sen. John Edwards, D-N.C., makes the official announcement that he will run for the Democratic presidential nomination in 2004, yesterday at the old Milliken Mill in his hometown of Robbins, N.C.

UMass Democrats meet tonight

Continued from page 1

the state and federal government, but they have also worked for such notable politicians as Senator Edward M. Kennedy, Senator John Kerry and State Rep. Marty Meehan, according to the organization's brochure.

The UMass Democrats have been advertising on a platform that includes many issues that lie in hot debate in the current American political forum. Their flyer states they support the common democratic belief on topics such as increased funding for public education, universal health coverage and environmental protection. Other issues included were fair trade and human rights, affirmative action, a woman's right to choose, clean elections, rights for gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender individuals, workers' rights and a fair tax system for everyone.

The UMass Democrats contend that Democrats in Congress battle obstinately to support funding for state schools, which includes the amount of funding designated for state grants such as the Pell Grant.

Students involved insist that the Democratic Party is most representative of our country's concerns in local, state and national government. They plan to endorse moderate and progressive issues and back Democratic nominees for offices at all levels.

The first meeting for the UMass Democrats is scheduled for 6 p.m. in room 306 of the Student Union. For further information, contact President David Mason at 253-7530 or e-mail umassdems@yahoo.com.

-Michael Busack

www.dailycollegian.com

LSAT
GMAT
GRE
MCAT
DAT
OAT

higher test scores guaranteed or your money back

Attend all required classes or make-up sessions, complete all scheduled tests, and do your homework. If your score doesn't improve on test day from your Kaplan diagnostic or a prior official test score, you can choose to repeat our program for free or get a full refund of your tuition. It's that simple.

World Leader in Test Prep and Admissions

KAPLAN

1-800-KAP-TEST
kaptest.com

*Test names are registered trademarks of their respective owners.

To be eligible for this offer, you must be enrolled in Kaplan's full classroom, tutoring, or online courses. In addition, you must present a copy of your official score report and your course materials within 90 days.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

DNA: a natural, yet controversial, solution

The leading forensic technology of the world today is allowing police detectives to reach the bottom of crimes and convict criminals with such increasing speed that American's Most Wanted's John Walsh may soon be out of a job.

However, a new wave of forensic investigation is leaving both criminals and lawmakers twisted in a double helix. Police detectives often need only a trace amount of DNA to link a suspect to a crime. For example, for New Jersey construction worker John Athan, simply licking an envelope gave more than enough DNA to link him to a semen sample left at the scene of a rape and murder from 1982.

This was a great triumph for the family of the victim; however, the process in which justice was achieved has recently been under moral scrutiny. In similar cases, police detectives have been stooping to all levels in order to collect DNA samples from suspects. Everything from digging through trash, collecting used silverware from fast food chains where the suspect has eaten, and even scooping up spit wads and cigarette butts from the sidewalks has been reported.

Defense lawyers often argue that investigators have crossed a line that breeches the suspects' right to privacy. Suspects may be incriminating themselves without knowing it. When eating at a restaurant, one rarely considers that by eating off of the silverware provided, he may be surrendering a sample of his DNA to law enforcement officials disguised in dish-boy attire.

Where exactly do we draw the line to privacy? When kissing one's date goodnight, are we giving an open invitation for our private lives to be examined and investigated through a spit swab? What would it be like to live in an environment where we can't trust the garbage man, the public health care worker drawing our blood, the rape counselor, or the guy behind the counter at Taco Bell? (These are all actual positions that undercover cops have taken just to get a DNA sample from a suspect.)

While attorneys argue that evidence gathered under such conditions should be invalid in court proceedings because the suspect has not willingly or knowingly given the DNA sample, the facts need to be faced by all parties. Science is taking a front-row seat in the modern-day courtroom, and it's got a test tube full of genetic evidence for the jury.

Lawyers would never get away with telling a jury that the videotape of the Rodney King beating was invalid evidence because the police officers didn't know they were being filmed. The investigators who "collected" the DNA were not chasing down suspects, tackling them, and scraping the inside of their cheeks with a Q-tip. Suspects are allowed to refuse lie detector tests, blood tests, and DNA tests when asked up front. However, this DNA snatching continues to raise questions of ethics and morality.

Some suspects have even feared that their own lawyers may not be trustworthy. Police officers are allowed to lie and mislead their suspects. However, in most states, it is illegal for anyone to impersonate an attorney. At least now you can chew at will on your lawyer's fountain pen.

Due to scientific technology, nothing that we say or do is private anymore; everyone is the public eye. While in some ways this is rather upsetting, the news does bring hope for the high crime levels in this country. It is said that every solution to every problem can be found in nature. Right now, biology is handing us the crystal ball of crime solving. Perhaps if criminals understand the skyrocketing chances of being caught and sentenced for the crimes they commit, there will be a drastic decrease in crime activity in this country.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian Editorial Board.

All right ALANA, listen up

Yousef Munnayyer

This could be a column about how the Student Government Association is functionally challenged, or how it makes the California gubernatorial race look like an episode of the West Wing, but (sorry to let some people down) I will leave that column for a day when we can all use a good laugh. No, this column is about a related issue, the status of the ALANA caucus, which has dominated the headlines of this paper for the past week. Honestly, I have mixed feelings when it comes to this issue.

I guess I have to start off by saying that I used to work with the SGA, particularly last semester when I served as Chancellor of Elections. Though it was quite an experience, I'm not going to be continuing with that position. Again, that's the subject for another more comical column. This issue is more serious.

Reading the news stories that have developed over the past week or so, about the so-called elimination of the appointed seats, the name-calling and the rallies made me realize how much of a mess this whole thing is.

First off, I heard the argument that the appointed seats, though permitted through the bylaws were contradictory to the SGAs constitution. This makes legal sense but little sense other than that. Who writes these bylaws? The Senate, the legislative body of the SGA does.

So ladies and gentleman, here is a classic example of people not knowing what they are doing. How can the student senate, a body the students are supposed to trust with legislative power for campus issues (not to mention a 1.7 million dollar budget), write into its bylaws statutes that contradict its very constitution? It's simply mind-boggling. And better yet, how does it go on for a period of about 10 years without being addressed until now? I'm not sure what the answer is to that one, but it has to make you wonder what the driving force behind the elimination of these appointed seats was.

Let's get one thing straight; the idea of appointed seats to a representative body of legislature contradicts the very essence of democracy. Yet it's important to understand more about this issue, especially because this argument about appointed seats being unconstitutional has, for the most part, flared up just now.

I spent some time at senate meetings, unfortunately, and I have been able to see into how this crazy machine works. The ALANA caucus was extremely disliked by certain members in the senate body. Not because of who they were, but because of what they stood for, which was, at times, contrary to the beliefs of the many who opposed them.

The way that the ALANA caucus was eliminated was dirty, underhanded and probably motivated by the very thing ALANA works to fight against.

The ALANA caucus advocated diversity in the student senate. (Let's not get into defining diversity since that has proven to be a losing initiative.) The caucus worked to voice the interests of minority students before a senate that represents a student body made up of nearly 18 percent minority students.

The way that the ALANA caucus was eliminated was dirty, underhanded and probably motivated by the very thing ALANA works to fight against. In fact, it probably wouldn't have been bad if the SGA judicial branch considered this issue, as it is their job to interpret the laws of the SGA.

I don't agree with some of the things that ALANA advocates. For example, I myself am very critical about the affirmative action system that we have in this country, and I think it could use reform. And though on an issue like this, I might be at odds with members of the ALANA caucus, I think their presence in the senate is not only tolerable but also very necessary. Look around you. For those of you who are from Massachusetts or non-urban areas, the 18 percent minority figure may seem adequate, but for those coming from cities and many other places located out of this bubble we call the pioneer valley, our campus seems whiter than Chris Rock's teeth. What ALANA does is very important, and they should not stop doing it.

Now here is my advice to ALANA. First and foremost, even though, as I have stated I disagree with some things you guys do, it's important that you keep doing it. Never give up what you're doing because your message is important. I'm not some fascist that would want issues like this suppressed; leave that to the Republican Club. Also, give Jared Nokes a break; he's in a tough position, and don't forget that the caucus was a major factor in voting for the apportionment motion that eliminated appointed seats last semester. I'm not sure what you feel Speaker Nokes' motivation is, but focus on the fact that this attack on you has been premeditated for longer than he has been the speaker, and by individuals who did not want to see your message brought before the senate.

This is the key issue: Focus on that message, not the method in which you deliver it. You don't need those appointed seats to do it. Organize your community, get those nomination papers, and run and win the races for senate seats the democratic way. Why stop at 13 percent? The interests of minority students should not have some measly numerical limit. Take this all the way. You can easily have a greater presence than that if you want, and trust me, having an understanding to the student elections process, I can tell you that this would not be hard. There could be no sweeter revenge for you than to reorganize a stronger caucus than before with elected seats. They wouldn't know what hit them.

Yousef Munnayyer is a Collegian columnist.

The history of alcohol 101

Ben Feder

I was at Charlie's the other night and overheard a conversation between two women. The extent of the conversation was basically that chivalry is dead, or more specifically, that nobody had bought these two ladies a drink the entire night. Well, I did what any good Samaritan would do: finished my beer, tipped the bartender, and went out thinking of ways to remedy this problem.

What I came up with is a little thing I call the "ice breaker." Basically, what one can do while buying a drink for a special someone is state an interesting fact about the staple ingredient, and watch as the conversation starts flowing. At least, this way you can try to sound interesting or intelligent. So, here's some info to help get you started.

Captain Henry Morgan, of pirate fame, was also a figure in the Second Anglo-Dutch War. Morgan commanded the British buccaneers in the Caribbean. During the war, Morgan captured Camagey, Cuba, and sacked Portobello on the Isthmus of Panama. In 1671, Morgan, with 36 ships and nearly 2,000 buccaneers, defeated a large Spanish force to take the City of Panama. Morgan was sent in chains to England.

However, because of increasing tension with the Netherlands and the outbreak of the Third Dutch War, Morgan was released, knighted and made governor of Jamaica, where he spent his days drinking rum and listening to Bob Marley, maybe.

For lagermeister, the legend goes that in the seventh century, a young lad named Hubertus was envied for his purity. The jealous Theoderich of Burgundy waged war against Hubertus. By defeating Theoderich, Hubertus proved himself valiant in battle and won the hand of the beautiful princess, Floribana. Together they lived happily with the benefits of wealth, and good fortune until the good princess fell ill.

In his grief, Hubertus became a recluse, often going to the woods to hunt alone. During one of these hunting trips, he encountered a stag with a cross that appeared to float between its antlers. The vision moved him to change his life, and to continue to eat the mushrooms he found. He gave all his material possessions to the poor and founded several monasteries. After his death, Hubertus became the Patron Saint of Hunters. Hence the name lagermeister, which is German for "hunt master."

Vodka was originally made for medical purposes. This crude anesthetic and disinfectant was distilled from rye, and it was not until the middle of the 14th century that vodka was discovered to have intoxicating characteristics. Families and communities were producing the drink before the end of the 1300's for the purpose of drinking. From then on it had become customary for vodka to be served at Russian imperial banquets. All meals were begun with bread and vodka. Vodka is distilled at very high proofs and then filtered through vegetable charcoal: the higher the proof, the less the flavor and clearer the color.

Tequila's origins can be traced back to the golden days of the Aztecs, who regularly produced and drank pulque, a milky alcoholic beverage made from the agave cactus. The name tequila comes from the town of the same name, which in turn took its moniker from Tuiquila, the name of the Aztec tribe that inhabited the region. When Spain conquered Mexico, the Spanish began to distill the beverage into mezcal, the precursor of Tequila.

Tequila is not considered authentic unless it adheres to Mexican law mandating that it ... be made only in the Mexican towns of Tequila, Arenal, Amatitian or the region of Los Altos de Jalisco. These four areas alone produce the world's entire supply of tequila, as well as body shots.

Tequila is not considered authentic unless it adheres to Mexican law mandating that it contain at least 51 percent blue agave and be made only in the Mexican towns of Tequila, Arenal, Amatitian, or the region of Los Altos de Jalisco. These four areas alone produce the world's entire supply of tequila, as well as body shots.

Jasper Newton "Jack" Daniel, one of 13 children, was born in 1850. Hired to work with the Dan Call family at the age of seven, Jack learned everything he could about whiskey making. Call sold his distillery to the teenage Jack, who then registered it in 1866, making it the nation's oldest registered distillery.

In 1904, Jack entered his Old No. 7 Tennessee sipping whiskey at the World's Fair. Of the 20 whiskeys from around the world, his was the only one awarded the World's Fair Gold Medal and honored as the world's best whiskey. One morning, Jack arrived at work early and tried to open the safe in his office. He couldn't remember the combination and so he kicked it in anger. The blow broke his toe and infection set in. He eventually died from blood poisoning.

Schnapps come from the alcohol family of cordials and liqueurs. Technically, liqueurs refer to spirits redistilled with fruit juice, plants, and herbs. The foundation of a liqueur is always a spirit, such as whiskey, brandy, rum, or gin. The spirit is then redistilled with different substances, like fruit, flowers, or juices, to impart unique flavors to the finished drink.

In medieval times, cordials and liqueurs were thought of as love potions. This philosophy came from their respective root words; cor, which means "heart" in Latin, and liquefacere, also in Latin means "to melt."

Information for this column was taken from the Seagram's Bartending Guide.

Ben Feder is a Collegian columnist.

The United States of Iraq?

Elizabeth Carter

I like to think of myself as a problem solver. You got a problem? Well, ask me. Maybe I can solve it for you. Taking this into consideration, I got to thinking about the problems festering in Iraq that seem to keep trickling down and affecting our own nation as well. In doing so, I decided I should put my adept mind to disentangling these pressing issues once and for all.

After some in-depth pondering, the solution hit me like a stroke of lighting — just without that burnt hair smell. The solution was since we have a president who is so enmeshed in the affairs of the third world country Iraq, why don't we just send him on over there and have him run that country? I mean, he's done an incredible, phenomenal, unspeakably brilliant job of governing our own country, so why shouldn't Iraq benefit from some of Bush's unparalleled genius and expertise?

Honestly, it's not as if we need him here, since things are going so well, and it's not as if Bush gave us the largest budget deficit in decades after coming into office with a surplus from his successor. With no threat to affirmative action and no widening gap between the rich and poor, things seem only positive in my eyes. Along with an unemployment rate that has been slashed and civil liberties that have reached soaring heights, the only conclusion I could come to was that we should send this eloquent mastermind over to a country that actually needs him. Clearly, Bush has done his job, and then some, here on the domestic front.

Why shouldn't Iraq benefit from some of Bush's unparalleled genius and expertise?

Now some of you may have read my first paragraph and found yourself shocked, flabbergasted even, and I understand. The suggestion of sending our president to a foreign land and having him undemocratically usurp control may appear a bit extreme, even wrong. Yet, to you crazy hippie naysayers, I respond, who cares? We're the strongest country in the world, and we can embark on any political or military endeavor abroad that we deem fit. Hell, we went to war without the consent of the United Nations. I should think we can insert a leader here or there in a third world country if we so desire. It's not as if their prior regime was democratically elected anyhow, so they should be used to a governmental coup d'etat here or there.

Moving right along, once we've implemented Bush as the president of Iraq, there's going to be a lot that needs to be accomplished. One must consider that we are talking about a third world country here. You know, starving people, homelessness, the whole shebang. Considering all this, why don't we bring in the only people actually qualified to deal with poverty?

As I'm sure you all assumed, I'm referring to the entire Republican party. They could form a Senate, divide the oil-seeped land into states and really start putting things in order with their fair government tactics.

Although I do not claim to be clairvoyant, I feel I can honestly presume that things will truly start looking up for Iraq after my solid plan is set into motion. Iraq will have a mind that only comes along once a millennia presiding over its government, as well as a slew of empathetic Republican officials whose genuine love for the people helps them relate to the devastating consequences and hardships of poverty. Taking all this into consideration, I simply don't see where this fool-proof idea of mine can fail.

In closing all of this, I'll state the obvious and say, just kidding.

It's pretty clear that the majority of this article has been a satire. Maybe not the most brilliant of its kind, but nevertheless I'm making a political point here. We have been stuck with this fool of a president, George W. Bush, for the last two or so years, and nothing but havoc has ensued since the questionable Republicans' ascension to power.

It is about time for all of us to stop thinking about how we "won" the war in Iraq, as if we were going to lose to an impoverished third world nation, anyway. Rather, we should start thinking about the serious, far-reaching consequences that Bush's ridiculous crusade against Iraq has rained down upon all of us, both at home and abroad.

The domestic repercussions we have acquired — largely due to the war — include an even more massive deficit, millions out of work due to neglect of the economy and a president who is asking to send $87 billion of our tax dollars to Iraq because things have (surprise, surprise) erupted into pure chaos over there.

It is time for all of us to look past the imaginary weapons of mass destruction and to start feeling some due anger that our nation was thoroughly bushwhacked into believing so many lies. The only question that remains for me at this point is, for what? For what ends did we wage this war against Iraq? For what cause, for what purpose, for what ultimate goal was this war pursued? To me, it seems the answer is for nothing at all, and now both the people of the United States and Iraq are suffering the resounding consequences.

Elizabeth Carter is a Collegian columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

editorial@dailycollegian.com

413-545-3999

Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center Way
Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Film stirs horror genera

Cryptic flick full of thrills

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

"Cabin Fever" is hyped as the latest horror movie to "save" the genre (and now there seems to be some new revolution every other week).

However, it starts with a premise familiar to anyone who has ever seen "The Evil Dead," "The Blair Witch Project" and "Friday the 13th." Take a quintet of pretty young things and strand them in the woods, where they are beset by a deadly, marauding enemy intent on their destruction.

The enemy in "Cabin Fever" is not a masked madman, but a flesh-eating virus that besets the five college graduates looking for a weekend of sex and booze in a rural woodland cabin. One night they are confronted by a bloody and bleeding hermit. After beating and inadvertently setting him afire, they begin to develop, one by one, bleeding sores that rapidly cover their bodies.

'Cabin Fever'
Directed by Eli Roth
Starring Rider Strong, Jordan Ladd
Lions Gate
Rated R
94 mins.
Grade A-

COURTESY IMDB.COM

Rider Strong keeps it together as everyone else falls apart.

The director, Eli Roth, is a former protege of David Lynch, and he retains his mentor's love of head-scratching abstraction while indulging in his fanboy's adoration of horror movies. Roth wears his influences on his sleeve; like "28 Days Later," this being a movie almost proud of the fact that it references or earmarks previous classics of the genre.

"Cabin Fever" assembles the usual assortment of victimized archetypes. There's the sexy girl (Cerina Vincent) and the sweet girl (Jordan Ladd), the cocky jerk (Joey Kern), the doofus drunk (James DeBello) and the sensitive hero (Rider Strong), who sends them into a backwoods country where every local seems to have studied the sacred scrolls of "Deliverance." Roth, however, doesn't take these clichés too seriously. He puts all his heart-on-sleeve influences and ideas and strings them through a tongue-in-cheek, post-modern blender. He at once embraces the clichés and uses them to upend the static samey-ness of modern horror movies.

In how many other horror movies would you see the director giving his comely female stars disfiguring wounds, or make his hero a spineless nice guy who can't even bring himself to make a move on his long-time best friend? And how many horror movies nowadays would ever try to attempt the ending that "Cabin Fever" gets away with?

As a hook for a splatter picture, a flesh-eating virus is a limited proposition. Certainly it looks gruesome enough — scabs and sores break open on the flesh, the hapless soul begins to vomit blood and soon, there's nothing but flesh and bone – but it isn't exactly proactive. It's not something that chases 'you around. There's a little blonde boy who likes to bite people, a stoner with a vicious rabid dog and a party-hearty police deputy (Giuseppe Andrews) just this side of nerdy-annoying. The performances are solid enough to make us wish that the young victims didn't die. (Contrast that to, say, "Freddy vs. Jason," in which the victims couldn't die soon enough.)

"Cabin Fever" has "cult movie" written all over it, and as a genre movie that deftly — transcendentally — straddles horror and humor, it works as a gloriously, brilliantly nasty surprise.

COURTESY IMDB.COM

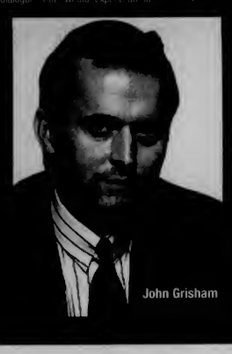
Jordan Ladd dropps her nice girl persona to save herself from the flesh eating virus.

New Grisham novel leaves fans hung up

Story not quite strong enough to pull readers out of their seats

By [illegible]

Novelist John Grisham best known for his novels "A Time to Kill" and "The Client" veers from the familiar in his newest novel, "Bleachers." It is the tale of a high school football hero, Neely Crenshaw, who returns to his childhood home of Messina after a 15-year absence to attend the funeral of his over-the-top high school football coach. He has also come home to confront the demons that faced him in his final high school season.



The novel is a [illegible] reader is intrigued [illegible] those demon[illegible] something happened between Coach Rake and Coach Rake [illegible] the night [illegible] Crenshaw quits [illegible] unfortunate. Grisham [illegible] the story with [illegible] flashbacks and pr[illegible] dictable dialogue. One would expect [illegible] after year.

Readers may feel let [illegible] with high action and suspense [illegible] of his previous legal dramas, but [illegible] Talk to exotic and leaves readers [illegible] through all of its 163 pages.

There are [illegible] however, a few bright spots. One [illegible] that is when the members of the former [illegible] on the bleachers to listen to an old [illegible] from out of their 1987 state-title comeback [illegible] game. Grisham's writing during [illegible] part of the prose is quite good. "Fourth and one. Spartans are slow coming to the line. Coach knew this didn't feel too well right now, doesn't look too steady." Grisham enchants his [illegible] to read on and leaves them wanting [illegible] know what happens next.

After this scene Grisham lets the reader down the action slows to a stop. The end of Bleachers is bland and conventional. Crenshaw confronts his demons with little controversy and leaves Coach Rake's funeral with promises to keep returning to Messina year after year.

John Grisham

Grisham enchants his audience to read on and leaves them wanting to know what happens next.

down and a little angry with Grisham by this end. It seemed as though he had taken the easy way out and just ended the novel on a positive note. When picking up "Bleachers," don't hope for a Grisham story filled with action and excellent writing. "Bleachers" is decidedly not that. Perhaps Grisham should stick with what he knows best — the courtroom.

Dear readers:

Many people have questions about movies and the art of movies. Sometimes, it's about a movie you've watched, the craft of filmmaking or a question concerning who I think I am to be critiquing movies.

Starting next week, I'll start a new biweekly column devoted to answering all these questions and concerns ... and more. Whatever query you may have, e-mail it to askthecritic@yahoo.com, and I'll do my best to answer you in print.

Your esteemed movie critic,
Johnny Donaldson

Punk fans get an album they can dig

By Brendan Lee
Collegian Staff

Pretty Girls Make Graves want to change your life. No, really. They mean it.

On their latest release "The New Romance," singer Andrea Zollo spits a rapid-fire delivery of lyrics aimed squarely at the young and the apathetic.

"We may have never met but / it might be you who pulls me through / stand up so I can see you / shout out so I can hear you," she chirps on the album's lead single, "This is Our Emergency."

Whether or not Zollo can marshal a small army of disaffected punks remains to be seen, but "The New Romance" is more of a declaration than an album.

Pretty Girls Makes Graves
'The New Romance'
Matador

COURTESY VERTMETAIX.WIRECORDS.COM

Disturbing art and lyrics of rebellion fuel new album.

Formed after the breakup of Murder City Devils in 2001, the band managed to unite the Seattle scene by drawing members from diverse groups like Kill Sadie, Sharks Keep Moving and Bee Hive Vaults. After a series of well-received seven-inches, Pretty Girls released "Good Health" on Lookout! Records in April 2002. The album's best track, "Speakers Push the Air," ranks as one of the best love letters to punk rock, with Zollo and the boys screaming, "Do you remember

Continued on page 7

NCAA Football 2004 wakes up the echoes

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

It's Saturday. The forecast is for chilly but clear weather, a beautiful day for a game. The packed stadium is full of conversation and cheers. Suddenly, the rhythmic thump of bass drums and the machine-gun patter of snares fills the air, and soon the brass band comes in, blaring out its marching tune.

The gridiron appears lustrous, and the teams charge out onto the field. The Fighting Irish punch the "Play like a winner today" sign, the Clemson Tigers gather at the end-zone, and for the first time ever, the Massachusetts Minutemen prepare for battle just outside their locker room.

It's EA Sports' NCAA Football 2004, but until you actually take control of the players, you could probably fool a few people into thinking you're just watching another college football game on Saturday afternoon.

The production is only the beginning. Once the teams take the field, things only get better. NCAA is beyond great. It's overwhelming, and in some ways, even better than its pro cousin, Madden NFL.

The gameplay is incredibly smooth, to the point that players won't be frustrated because the catch the computer just made was impossible, but rather because the coverage broke down. It's just that slick.

There are some changes for the Madden crowd to get used to. Principal among these is the option. Nearly every squad has an option play in its playbook somewhere, and some teams have so many variations, it seems like the plays might just be designed to show off. It's a complex play to understand, but once the button combination becomes second nature, it's a deadly weapon, and incredibly fun to try.

'NCAA Football 2004'
X-Box
Publisher EA Sports

There are also some changes in the move system, but nothing so drastic as to send EA football veterans screaming back to the store. Instead — and mind you, this is the Xbox version being referred to — jukes are limited to one button, probably a shoulder button, and the user has to control the direction. There's also a milder juke, which is just a quick change of direction, a nice way to slip through holes on inside-the-tackles rushing.

The passing system is exactly the same, but Quarters Backs are of a different caliber on the college level, for obvious reasons, so that high, deep, home-run pass that can be a sure catch in Madden might end up a floating interception-magnet in NCAA.

But if there's one thing that ought to bring the masses out for this game — especially those in the Pioneer Valley — it's the incredibly deep team database and dynasty mode. For the first time in recorded history, the UMass football team is finally getting some love from game makers.

That's right, the Minutemen are an available option not just for exhibitions and easy-win scheduling (sorry Whipple et al.) Gamers can now take the Maroon and White — or any other of the 36 available I-AA teams — all the way to the National Championship.

With an amazing array of teams and tutorials on how to pull off some of the more stunning plays in the game, NCAA2004 rules.

Before the UMass crowd gets too excited though, remember that the Minutemen are in I-AA, so they're not quite ready for prime time just yet. The first year will be a rough one, and until a few top-notch recruits get to Amherst, it'll be an uphill battle just to win a few games every year.

In fact, that's one of just two flaws in the game. The I-AA teams get absolutely no respect, and it would appear that the folks over at EA have forgotten that Jeff Krohn was a stud in the Pac 10 too. On the UMass squad, giving the ball to durable but fumble-prone virtual R.J. Cobbs is the only way to grab significant yardage, since most of the receivers have hands of stone.

That's not to suggest that UMass players should have the same generic attributes as those on the top 25 squads, but there is still room for a little improvement.

Also, those looking for complete I-AA authenticity might be a little disappointed. McGuirk Alumni Stadium, for example, is just a generic, open, small field, with not much atmosphere. And just about all of the I-AA stadiums look exactly like this, so there's no feeling of being stuck between Comm. Ave and Longwood for a game at Northeastern's Parsons Field.

In all, the playability of NCAA 2004 is matched only by its depth and authenticity. It might be time to buy another TV, football fans, because now there are even more games to watch on Saturday.

John F. Kennedy artwork displayed in a new light

Bittersweet paintings of John F. Kennedy gathered for public viewing

By Laura Walsh
Associated Press

GREENWICH, Conn. (AP) — James Wyeth's 1967 oil painting of John F. Kennedy is how many people like to remember the president.

Wearing a dark suit, his hair neatly combed back, Kennedy is seated — perhaps at his desk in the Oval Office — with his chin resting against a fisted hand. Handsome and stoic, the image is that of an icon.

Wyeth's work is one of more than 40 pieces of art in an exhibit at the Bruce Museum of Arts and Science depicting the 35th American president's life and death.

"JFK and Art," which runs from Sept. 20 through Jan. 11, is a first, exhibit officials said.

"Nobody has done this topic before or from this perspective," said Nancy Hall-Duncan, co-curator of the show and curator of the Bruce Museum.

The exhibit will be presented in chronological order, beginning with images of a younger Kennedy campaigning for president in 1960 and ending after his assassination on Nov. 22, 1963.

"Kennedy's image was being formed before he became president, while he was president and after the assassination," said Hall-Duncan. "We've dealt with each time period."

Not every piece is as idealistic as Wyeth's "Portrait of John F. Kennedy." Pablo Picasso's "Rape of the Sabine Women" is a clear criticism of Kennedy's handling of the Cuban missile crisis. The Spanish artist's 1963 oil painting depicts a contest of will between Kennedy and Russian Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev over missile bases in Cuba.

The flat, boxy and elongated image of Marisol Escobar's "The Kennedys" criticized the larger-than-life image of the family, said Hall-Duncan. The 1960 sculpture, made of mixed media, shows Kennedy with his wife, Jacqueline, and their daughter, Caroline, standing on top of a platform.

Much of the exhibit is dedicated to showcasing the works of Pop artists, such as Roy Lichtenstein and Andy Warhol, who were influenced by popular culture and mass media of the time. The rise of Pop Art coincided with the Kennedy era.

"I think that the Pop artists were fascinated with media image, and there was no single more powerful image than of Kennedy and his wife, Jacqueline," said Kenneth E. Silver, who wrote an essay, "The Presidential Spectacle: Art, Culture and JFK," to accompany the show.

"You might say John F. Kennedy was the first pop culture president," added Silver, a professor of fine arts at New York University.

Lichtenstein's colorful image of Sen. Robert Kennedy looks as though it belongs inside the pages of a comic book.

The idea emerged for the exhibit after art historian Charles Stuckey noticed a popular Jacqueline Kennedy fashion exhibit at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City in 2001.

"I just remember the long lines," said Stuckey, an adjunct professor at The School of the Art Institute of Chicago. "I was quite touched and amazed that after so many years ... there was still a huge part of our public that was in touch with the Kennedy moment. That prompted me to wonder why no museum had ever brought together all the works with Kennedy's image from the time of his administration." He brought the idea to Hall-Duncan soon after and she immediately began digging through old art textbooks.

"It was a lot of research," said Hall-Duncan, "but we were really very lucky when we found a lot of work that hasn't been acknowledged. People aren't aware of all the work that fits this theme."

"JFK and Art" also coincides with the 40th anniversary of Kennedy's assassination, though Hall-Duncan said that was unintended.

The exhibit will travel to the Norton Museum of Art in West Palm Beach, Fla., from Feb. 7 through May 2, 2004.

COURTESY POLAROID PR

Former President John F. Kennedy gives one of his signiture charismatic speaches for which he is so fondly remembered.

J Lo taking over pop

By Anthony Brezican
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — No matter what Jennifer Lopez does, she's followed by a hurricane of hype.

Sure, she's a major movie star with hits like "Maid in Manhattan."

Yeah, she got a ring from Ben Affleck, the heartthrob star of "Pearl Harbor," "Daredevil" and "Armageddon."

And yes, she's frequently ranked as one of the most beautiful people in the world.

Why do so many people care so much?

"Jennifer Lopez is one of these celebrities that no matter what she does, whether her movies are good or bad, or whether critics like her album, her level of celebrity remains very, very high," said Ken Baker, West Coast executive editor of Us Weekly.

The key to the Bronx-raised star's appeal is a mix of working-class grit and temperamental diva glamour, he added. "People, especially women, feel they can identify with her even though she's extremely wealthy," Baker said. "There's an authenticity to her, despite all the bling-bling. They think, 'I'd do the same thing.'"

Her Puerto Rican heritage makes her exotic, a cross-cultural commodity, Baker added, setting her apart from Hollywood's array of "cookie cutter" skinny, blond actresses. So when did the frenzy begin?

After breaking into showbiz as a dancer on the TV sketch comedy show "In Living Color," she became a boldface name by appearing in movies like "Money Train," "Selena" and "Out of Sight" and releasing a hit album, "On the 6."

Then came the night that put her over the top.

On December 27, 1999, she and then-boyfriend Sean Combs (who had not yet changed his nickname from "Puffy" to "P. Diddy") were arrested in connection with a nightclub shooting in New York. Lopez was released without being charged; Combs was later acquitted of weapons and bribery charges.

At that point, Jennifer Lopez became more interesting than her music and movies.

Three months later, she appeared with Combs at the Grammys in a low-low-low-low-cut green Versace dress, causing eyeballs to widen and tongues to wag.

Then she appeared without Combs, breaking up with the hip-hop mogul.

Her virtually every move since then has appeared calculated, aimed at capitalizing on the world's obsession with her. It's no coincidence that flurries of gossip column items precede most of her movies.

Lopez is in the business of selling an image, and associates say she's an excellent salesperson.

Affleck helps fuel her flame but the public also salivated over the details when Lopez married her second husband, no-name dancer Cris Judd, in 2001.

Lopez's celebrity may end up backfiring. Affleck reportedly postponed their wedding when media attention got too crazy, then called the whole thing off a few days later.

During their botched wedding weekend, Lopez was photographed in Miami, in the ocean, in a tiny bikini. Affleck was sighted in Las Vegas.

On Monday, as often with the tabloid monster known as Bennifer, the next chapter in their soap-opera romance was a mystery..

People in the news

Compiled by Associated Press

Lucy Liu

Deadly martial arts master

Lucy Liu practices kali-eskrima-silat, a martial art involving sticks and knives. And while she's shown off her skills in the "Charlie's Angels" movies and "Shanghai Noon," she's never had to use them to defend herself in real life.

"Thank God, no, but it has made me more aggressive," the 5-foot-3-inch actress told Jane magazine for its October issue. "If somebody is confrontational or rude, it makes me more confident. It's like, 'No, you don't treat somebody that way.' It gives you an inner strength and that's what martial arts should be; it should come from inside."

After seeing Liu in action, Quentin Tarantino wrote a character for her in his upcoming martial-arts film, the two-part "Kill Bill."

"Quentin has an incredible knowledge of cinema," the 34-year-old actress said. "And to have somebody like that come up to you and tell you, 'Hey, I wrote this role for you. What do you think?' It makes you feel like you've done something right."

"Kill Bill Vol. 1," starring Uma Thurman and David Carradine, opens Oct. 10. The second half is scheduled for release in February.

Katie Holmes

"Joey Potter" is all grown up

Katie Holmes isn't the little girl from "Dawson's Creek" anymore.

The 24-year-old actress, who stars as a troubled, tattooed New Yorker in the upcoming film "Pieces of April," has grown up and acquired some sophisticated tastes.

"Nothing beats a great pair of Prada heels and an expensive bottle of pinot grigio. They really set the mood," Holmes says in the October issue of Marie Claire magazine. "The shoes are sexy and wine loosens people up — not that I'm endorsing alcohol! Throw in a Cary Grant movie and you're good to go."

But Holmes also acknowledges a fondness for wearing what she calls "comfies."

"There's nothing better than a good pair of fleece pants or sweats," she says. "And Wilmington, N.C., where 'Dawson's Creek' was shot, is such a small town that you could actually get up and go to the coffee shop in your pj's or comfy pants. Sadly, I've learned I can't do that here in Los Angeles. You always run into people in the business, and you don't want to be like, 'Hi!' in your comfies."

James Brown

Brown returns to the Apollo

The dates of James Brown's Apollo Theater concerts have been changed to Nov. 21 and 22.

Last week, Brown's publicist said the shows would be Nov. 20 and 21. They will mark the 40th anniversary of "Live at the Apollo" album, which chronicled his landmark performance at the famed Apollo.

Special guest stars will be announced at a Sept. 18 press event, and Brown will perform three songs, said Dan Forman, the singer's publicist.

Brown's "Live at the Apollo" album, released in 1963, contains classics such as "Please Please Please" and "Night Train."

Lance Armstrong

Biker's fame put wear on marriage

Lance Armstrong says the celebrity he achieved with his cycling successes ultimately took a toll on his marriage.

In an excerpt from his upcoming book "Every Second Counts," which appears in the Sept. 22 issue of People magazine, the five-time Tour de France champion says he and his wife, Kristin, started feeling the pressure after his first victory in 1999.

"Robin Williams had a jet. Kevin Costner offered his house in Santa Barbara. Elton John had a Super Bowl party. Kik (Kristin's nickname) and I felt like Forrest Gump, lurking in the background of photos with accomplished people," Armstrong writes.

"The attention could become addictive. There was no doubt I could have turned into a swollen-headed jerk, and there's no doubt some people think I did turn into one, much as I tried to keep it all straight."

The couple who met in January 1997, just weeks after Armstrong had completed intense chemotherapy to treat advanced testicular cancer announced they're divorcing on Sept. 4. They have three children: Luke, 3, and twins Isabelle and Grace, 22 months.

American Music Award nominations

By Gary Gentile
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Veteran performers, including Fleetwood Mac, Celine Dion and Cher, mixed with youngsters Beyonce and Avril Lavigne on the list of nominees for the 31st annual American Music Awards.

Dion received two nominations Tuesday, for favorite female pop-rock artist and favorite adult contemporary artist, where she's up against Cher and Norah Jones.

Jones, whose folksy, sensuous voice earned her five Grammys earlier this year, is also vying for favorite pop-rock album for her platinum debut "Come Away With Me."

No clear favorites emerged Tuesday, with two nominations each going to R. Kelly, Luther Vandross, Ashanti and Beyonce in the soul-R&B category, Shania Twain in the country category and Sean Paul and Missy Elliott in the rap-hip hop category.

Rapper Eminem also received two nods for favorite male rapper and for the soundtrack to his semi-autobiographical film "8 Mile."

The 20 awards will be presented during a ceremony at the Shrine Auditorium in Los Angeles on Nov. 16, aired on ABC. Talk show host Jimmy Kimmel is the emcee.

The nominations are based on sales figures and radio play. Winners are selected by a survey of about 20,000 listeners.

■■■

The nominees:

Pop-Rock:

Male Artist: Clay Aiken, Kid Rock, John Mayer, Justin Timberlake.

Female Artist: Celine Dion, Avril Lavigne, Jennifer Lopez.

Band, Duo or Group: Fleetwood Mac, matchbox twenty, 3 Doors Down.

Album: "Fallen," Evanescence; "Come Away With Me," Norah Jones; "Cocky," Kid Rock; "Justified," Justin Timberlake.

Soul-R&B:

Male Artist: Ginuwine, Jaheim, R. Kelly, Luther Vandross.

Female Artist: Aaliyah, Ashanti, Beyonce.

Band, Duo or Group: B2K, Dru Hill, The Isley Brothers.

Album: "Chapter II," Ashanti; "Dangerously In Love," Beyonce; "Chocolate Factory," R. Kelly; "Dance With My Father," Luther Vandross.

Country:

Male Artist: Kenny Chesney, Alan Jackson, Toby Keith, Tim McGraw.

Female Artist: Faith Hill, Martina McBride, Shania Twain.

Band, Duo or Group: Alabama, Brooks & Dunn, Dixie Chicks.

Album: "Unleashed," Toby Keith; "Tim McGraw & The Dancehall Doctors," Tim McGraw; "Melt," Rascal Flatts; "Up!" Shania Twain.

Rap-Hip Hop:

Male Artist: Eminem, 50 Cent, Nelly, Sean Paul.

Female Artist: Missy Elliott, Eve, Lil' Kim.

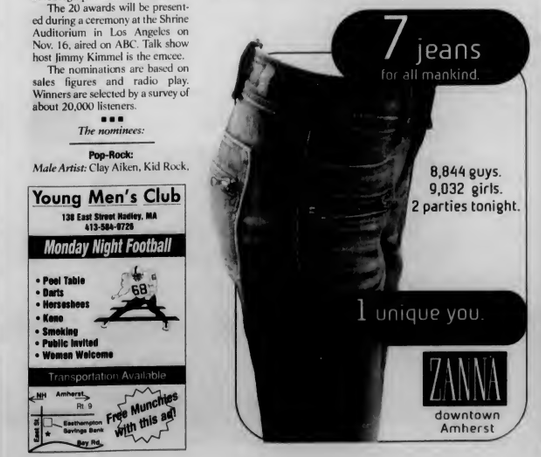
Band, Duo or Group: Black Eyed Peas, Bone Crusher, Eil Jon & The East Side Boyz.

Album: "Under Construction," Missy Elliott; "Get Rich Or Die Tryin'," 50 Cent; "Dutty Rock," Sean Paul; "8 Mile," Soundtrack.

Adult Contemporary:

Artist: Cher, Celine Dion, Norah Jones.

Latin Music:



Artist: Kumbia Kings, Ricky Martin, Luis Miguel.

Alternative Music:

Artist: Coldplay, Linkin Park, Metallica.

Contemporary Inspirational:

Artist: Steven Curtis Chapman, MercyMe, Third Day.

Lions in Hollywood

Secondhand Lions opens to first-rate reviews

By Anthony Brezican
Associated Press

The scared little fella from "The Sixth Sense" has reached his awkward stage.

After two years doing voices for the animated films "Jungle Book II" and "The Country Bears," Haley Joel Osment has boldly transformed his growing pains into a sweet performance in the fantasy tale "Secondhand Lions."

'Secondhand Lions'
Directed by Tim McCanlies
Starring Michael Caine Robert Duvall Haley Joel Osment
New Line
Rated PG
107 mins.
Grade B+

The 14-year-old (now 15) has gangly limbs and is getting tall, but atop that height is a baby face that looks like a peach on a Popsicle stick. His voice sounds like someone kicking a squeak-toy down the stairs.

But hey, the kid deserves credit for making the most out of that weird plunge into puberty that all boys stumble through and all men recall with dread. It's gratifying to see this stage of life in a movie. Too often it's ignored.

The story, set in the late 1960s, involves Walter, a nice kid whose mother (Kyra Sedgwick) is a gold-digging floozie.

She abandons him for the summer at the rural Texas property of two great-uncles who have never met nor heard of him before. Nor do they care to know him now.

Hub (Robert Duvall) and Garth (Michael Caine) disappeared for four decades and only recently resurfaced. When Walter meets them, they are fishing at their pond — with shotguns.

The performances by these two veteran Academy Award winners strike the perfect note of gruff charm.

The brothers are rumored to be hiding a load of treasure. They are millionaires, everyone says. But were they bank robbers? Hit men who stole the loot from Al Capone?

Garth tells the boy that they were adventurers in Africa, shanghaied into the French Foreign Legion, that Hub was a fearsome warrior who fell in love with an Arabian princess, and that they duped a cruel sheik out of a bounty placed on Hub's head.

While he talks, the accompanying swashbuckling flashbacks seem too fanciful to be true — which is part of the point.

Walter is too innocent to be cynical, which is why he believes all the lies his mother has told him over the years. But he has not been corrupted by her either.

To learn more about the princess, Garth insists that Walter ask Hub himself. But Hub has not warmed to the boy and is proud and bitter. He can still haul big sacks of grain and beat up a group of rowdy teenagers, but he can sense those abilities failing.

The title refers to Jasmine, a lioness the brothers purchase from a circus. They intend to release her on their property, then shoot the bloodthirsty beast. But Jasmine is old, too, and tired. She sits in her shipping crate and doesn't want to escape.

Eventually, the tame animal moves into the brothers' cornfield, where she finds a new way to exist. It's a lesson the boy and the two old men have to learn, too.

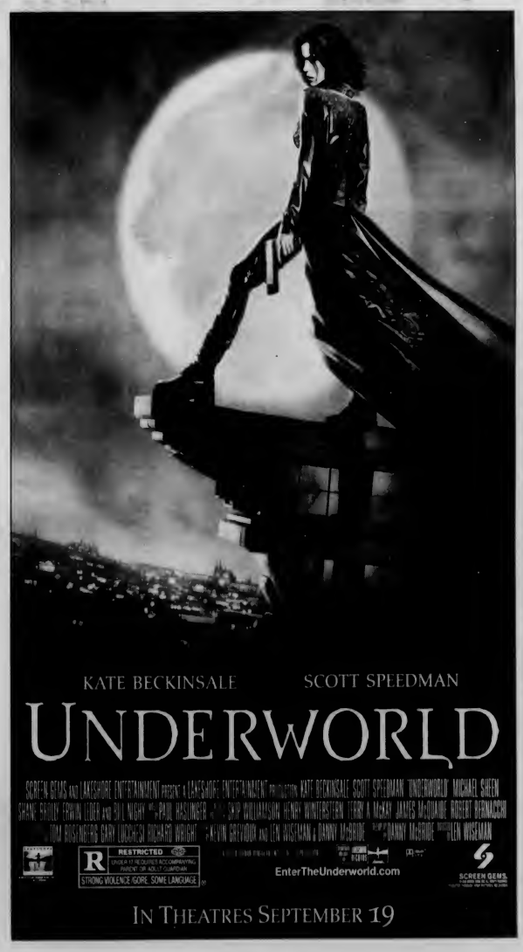
Writer Tim McCanlies ("The Iron Giant") makes his directing debut here, exploring what it's like for a lonely kid to earn the respect of two larger-than-life mentors who don't have to care about him. This is a sweet, funny family film full of adventure, fantasy and optimism.

People are basically good and decent. Money and power don't compare to spirit and heart. True love lasts forever. These are parts of Hub's "be-a-man" speech to Walter.

Maybe those ideals are not always real, Hub acknowledges, but they are still worth believing.

The same can be said of "Secondhand Lions." It's a little too sentimental to be believed, but it's the kind of quixotic tale everybody wishes were true.

Pretty Girls Make Graves keep the feeling



Continued from page 5

what the music meant?" on a white-hot call and response chorus.

On "The New Romance," Pretty Girls sacrifice the powerful simplicity of straight-ahead punk tempos for angular guitar riffs and shuffling drumbeats. Fortunately, the trade does not come at the expense of the band's trademark intensity. "All Medicated Geniuses" best reflects the change in approach, starting with a familiar screaming chorus arrangement before diverging into early '80s post-punk territory. Throughout the record, Zollo sings with unmistakable clarity, showing that the lyrics, not the music, are the message this time around.

Musically, the rest of the band developed a new approach to Zollo's spitfire vocals. The songwriting is filled with a palpable tension that would have been released through driving punk rhythms on past releases. Here, Pretty Girls manage to capture the feeling and stretch it out to cover an entire record on "The New Romance." The farfisa organ running throughout the title track brings a new wave dance beat to Zollo's impassioned lyrics about relenting in the quest for punk purity.

But it's on "This is Our Emergency" where the band demands that an entire generation of political spectators get involved. Now Zollo's irony-free call for unity and engagement could be the most sincere sentiments produced in years by the notoriously jaded punk scene. Sure, other bands make a living calling for the revolution while breathing fire and spewing vitriol, but it isn't this convincing.

One man's retrospective of America's ballparks

GERALD H. LINWOOD/COLLEGIAN

Boston's Fenway Park is one of baseball's oldest ballparks. It opened April 20, 1912 with a 6-5 Red Sox win over the New York Highlanders.

Bob McGovern

The sounds and smells of the American ballpark evoke a feeling of belonging and pride that you will be hard pressed to find anywhere else. Different accents, team colors, fans and so many other things give each park its own sense of individuality.

From the classic, unchanging Fenway Park, to the concrete jungle known as Pro Player Stadium, there are loyal fans who live and die by their team within these fortresses of sport. Fans that respect the game for what it is, what is was, and what it could be again.

This summer was an adventure spanning six such ballparks, nearly 20 games and countless hot dogs that I'm still paying for. It was an experience that brought me to believe that baseball is more than just a game. It is truly America's pastime.

Boston was my first stop, and if there is a place where baseball should be played, it is in Fenway Park. There is an overall feeling that nothing has changed since Ted Williams was the main man in Beantown.

The quarter mile that comes up to Fenway simply exudes baseball, from the nonchalant scalpers to the bobble-head stands. Fans pour down the street carrying the energy that anywhere else would be reserved for a playoff game. Even for an opposing fan, the ambience is unparalleled.

Inside, a sea of young and old Sox fans flood the corridors. That Boston accent you expect at Fenway is jumbled into one wicked loud Red Sox conversation. Every direction you look is another red B on a blue cap. Another devoted fan in mid-afternoon heaven.

Everything is traditional. The only signs of modernization are the few amenities that have been added to keep Fenway up to date. Even the uniforms have changed just enough to keep modern, but still remain respectively classic.

The only non-scalping ticket available was an obstructed view seat, a bad consolation for a novice at Fenway Park. The seat looked promising at first, clear view of the field, right in the mix of things, until the game started.

You don't realize how many people have to go to the bathroom, get a hot dog or just meander around at Fenway until you sit right by one of the exits.

After nearly seven innings of constant head maneuvering, it became apparent that the Sox were on their way to a loss. A large portion of the crowd stayed, but enough people left for me to move into comfortable seats for two innings of Red Sox baseball.

Along my journey, Fenway was the hardest place to get a ticket. That's a good sign; it shows that people really care about the game around here.

A thousand-odd miles later, I was in Miami and confronted with the depressing image of Pro Player stadium. A sleeping giant during the hot and rainy Florida summer and a bustling madhouse during the fall, Pro Player is not capable of handling two major sports.

Miami is a great town to have a baseball team — plenty of fans, sizeable market, and a decently talented squad. The problem is Pro Player, which some people still refer to as Joe Robbie (its former name), was built specifically for football.

The Marlins look lost in the 70,000-seat stadium. Games never sell out, and if you spend more than five dollars to sit anywhere, you got ripped off. Sitting in the cheap seats never lasts long anyway. The security cares about as much as the Marlin's management about the game — you get real close.

Blaring music nearly blocks out the cheers of the few 1,000 that actually show up and you are left watching baseball in silence.

For four dollars, you can sit 20 feet from the center fielder. Because of this, Endy Chavez of the Montreal Expos had to deal with nine innings of insults and profanity from some Marlins fan with a few bucks and nothing to do.

I was moving out to Colorado soon after, so I was hoping to leave with a little pride about the home state team. I really couldn't though. The whole scene was more humorous than anything else.

The drive from Florida to Colorado was long and very boring. After you leave Georgia and start dipping into the Midwest, the monotony of driving really starts to set in.

Coming up toward Missouri, it was decided that St. Louis would have to be a stop. It really sticks out of those rolling plains and amber waves of grain. We all needed a break, and with the Blue Jays in town, it was time for a little Midwest baseball.

Busch stadium was a breath of fresh air after travelling through the heartland of America, which doesn't have all that much heart but a whole lot of land. It stands out as the centerpiece in the middle of downtown St. Louis and looks as proud as the tradition that it encompasses.

St. Louis is a great baseball town, filled with knowledgeable and devoted fans. The whole scene reminded me of a northeast style of ballpark. There is a feeling that the ballpark was made to remind their fans of the past from the outside, and keep them comfortable on the inside.

A huge statue of Stan Musial greets fans right before the ticket office. Surrounding him are classic moments at Busch Stadium, engraved into plaques and strewn about the stadium at eye level. For a visiting baseball fan, the history lesson adds to the anticipation of going inside.

Woody Williams was having a stellar game, and was gunning for a no-hitter, a feat that I have yet to witness. The fans were really getting into it as the game pressed and began to look more nervous than the dominating hurler.

The anticipation carried on until the eighth inning, when Williams gave up a lonely hit, cutting the tension, ending the threat. We couldn't help but stand. It was the moment that lifted everyone to their feet. When you watch an athlete play at that level, it's hard to stay seated. It was a great game and a great ballpark. St. Louis impressed me with its baseball. Busch will be visited again, hopefully without the drive.

For an expansion team's ballpark, the Colorado Rockies did everything right with Coors Field, and then some.

Coors Field looks as if it has always been there, like it grew up with the city of Denver. This classic look compliments the amazing view that fans get just for entering the park.

Any upper deck seat will ensure a great view of the Rocky Mountains standing majestically on the horizon. Sometimes while the sun is setting just right you can see the rays beaming from the silhouettes of these giants and momentarily the game seems secondary.

The fans are loyal, but frustrated. No game is ever over in Coors Field and the offensive production seems almost cartoonish at times. With the nearly mile-high altitude even a pitcher can hit a three-run homer.

This makes it difficult for fans as they can watch even the most commanding lead turn into a pulse-pounding ninth inning.

There was one occasion where the Rockies were down against division rival Los Angeles Dodgers with local hero Todd Helton up to bat. I had been explaining baseball to a 10-year-old sitting next to me for most of the game and at this moment, bottom of the ninth, we were both silent with anticipation.

Helton cracked one deep; everyone stood up, gone, game over. I am not by any means a Rockies fan, but at that moment I was cheering like one. It was then I looked next to me and saw this kid giving me the same smile I was giving him. It's amazing how one instant can rekindle years of lost interest.

After I left Colorado to go back to Florida, I spent a week or two away from major league baseball. I went to some Little League games here and there, a few hometown minor league games, basically baseball on the grassroots level.

It was this time that I learned most about baseball. I revisited what it was like to catch or hit the ball for the first time at a T-ball practice. I saw major league desire, trapped in minor league uniforms.

Baseball is a fickle sport, one that chooses its ambassadors carefully. It makes young men take the field and try there hardest to be the "next one." Working from one rung to the next, dreaming of making it big.

The attention that baseball receives is nowhere near what it used to be. People don't seem to care about our pastime as they once did. Everything has to deal with money, transitions, and transactions. It's hard to explain to a little kid why his favorite player moved halfway across the country.

Baseball has turned into a game of numbers but it still retains its dignity in the hearts of those trying to make it. Even if the interest isn't what it used to be, the love is definitely still there. You can see it in the faces of those who play just to play.

■■■

One of my last stops was possibly the most embarrassing. I stopped at Tropicana Field to watch the Devil Rays play the Blue Jays. I only went to one game at Tropicana, and I don't think I will be back any time soon.

Tropicana field, besides its overall ugly appearance, is one of the hardest stadiums to find. It is not exactly in Tampa Bay, as one would expect, but rather a half hour south in the pits of St. Petersburg.

There is not much to say about Tropicana except that is has a very nice merchandise store. The stadium itself looks as if it was constructed out of a cleared out warehouse, where someone decided to add seats and a scoreboard. Overall, there's a very generic feel.

One interesting fact about sports in Tampa is that you can potentially get into any game for free, other than Buccaneers games. If you go to see the Devil Rays or the Lighting, all you need is the tank of gas to get there. Security pretty much lets anyone in that says, "I lost my ticket."

My final stop was to be New York City. One would expect that any baseball trip would require a stop at the house that Ruth built. Traveling is not cheap nowadays so the last stop of my trip was Howard Johnson's house instead.

This is not to say that Shea Stadium lacks the homey feel that it's cross-town big brother has, rather it seems more family oriented than anything else.

You don't have to spend an arm and a leg to get a ticket like you do over in the Bronx. Shea and the Mets give fans what they want, in a way. From the big homerun apple, to the almost playful feel that it exhibits, Shea is definitely built for entertainment.

Over in the Bronx is the remaining history of what baseball once was in New York. Back in Shea you get the fans that would do anything not to jump on the Yankee bandwagon. These are the some of the most adamant fans in the country, in a strange masochistic way.

Shea brings me back to my first experience on a professional baseball field. Standing on that professional feeling grass, looking into the empty stands, it really made me happy, almost proud.

It was the type of day where everything was good, the sun was shining, there was an occasional airplane flying directly overhead, and it was summer. I can't complain much about a day like that anywhere, and on that field it was heaven.

Baseball players live that life everyday, and as we watch them live their fantasies it's hard not to be envious. They may not be the icons they once were, but baseball players have that professional look to them. That's the look that keeps minor leaguers driven and fading stars reaching for one more year.

It was a journey through the heart of baseball, through that lingering dream of America's pastime. There was a lot to be seen, and with the 5,000 miles I put on my car, there was a lot of thinking.

All the miles, cities, and fans kept me going. Baseball changed for me over this summer, in a good way.

You begin to understand devotion, hatred and passion when involved with baseball. The game is based so much on raw will and desire that when a great play surfaces it is hard to hide the excitement.

That beautiful stink of thousands of fans crammed into a stadium is one of the sweetest smells of summer. The stench can only come from everyone enjoying his freedom in the confines of America's pastime.

It's that moment when the sun goes down, the lights go on and all worries seem to turn off. That's baseball … and it's not going anywhere anytime soon.

Bob McGovern is a Collegian columnist.

Mourning the WUSA

Continued from page 10

Garber told ESPN, "Although we are disappointed by today's action, we believe this decision has no impact on the future viability of the sport of soccer in the United States."

That Garber — and by extension, MLS — would so coldly reject the notion that the WUSA ever mattered is not just chauvinistic, it's foolhardy. This comes from a man whose league was on the brink of death just a few short years ago, and while Garber's presence and ideas have rejuvenated MLS, he ought to try telling all of those women's soccer players who did follow the WUSA just how little their league affected the "viability" of soccer in America.

That leads to the second point, the ugliest of all, which is that beyond anything else, sex is all that women's sports seem to have for leverage these days. Women's tennis is increasing in popularity, and unless an American is in a men's final, the women are more and more visible. But it's not because of their play — just ask "player"-turned-supermodel Anna Kournikova. The WUSA just didn't have that sex appeal.

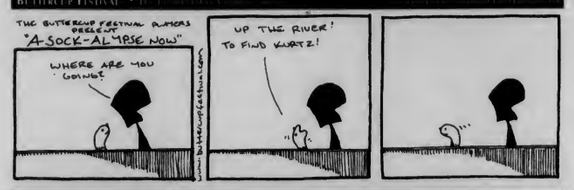
These women sweated, battled and — as shallow as it might be, it's still impressive — played a lot like men.

Shame on all those companies that balked on the 2.5 million the WUSA said it would need from just seven sponsors. Even more, shame on the American sporting world, that it couldn't open up the door just wide enough to allow a young, exciting and important league to survive, at least until the 2003 Women's World Cup — which begins on Sept. 20 — could give it a good shot in the arm.

Andrew Merritt is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at Merritt_Collegian@yahoo.com.

Interested in Business?

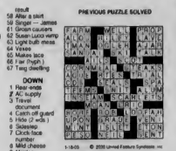
The Daily Collegian is looking for a new Assistant Business Manager for the 2003/2004 school year. Great resume builder! Current Freshmen/Sophomores strongly encouraged to apply Call 545-3500 or stop by The Daily Collegian, downstairs Campus Center. Need to possess strong business and communication skills



www.dailycollegian.com

CVS pharmacy
1 Hour Photo
Student Discount
$1.00 off 1 hour processing (prints only)
$2.00 off 1 hour digital processing (prints & cd)
Valid Student ID required.
Available at both Amherst locations only.
Original roll developing only.
Offer ends: Sept. 30, 2003

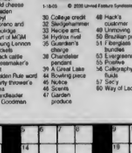
Syracuse @ Study Abroad
Madrid
Florence
Strasbourg
London
Hong Kong
http://studyabroad.syr.edu
1-800-235-3472



QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"The pure and simple truth is rarely pure and never simple."

-Oscar Wilde



Come to the News meetings
write for news | write for news
every Monday at 4 p.m. in write for news | write for news
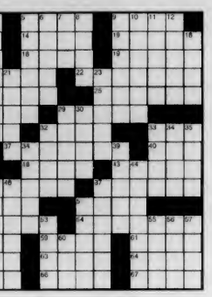
The Collegian's newsroom.



ACROSS
1 Pause the engine
5 Princess
9 Campus building
13 Quit flying
14 Exiled Roman poet
15 Zodiac sign
17 High dudgeon
18 "Star Wars" princess
19 Nick slowly
20 Lion's habitat
23 Lean darkener
24 Advertise
25 Wrestling hold
26 Rough fabric
28 Flexible instrument
31 Map detail
32 Restaurant handout
33 Drag
36 Dune buggy kin
37 Pedro's tongue
40 Dull gray
41 Dip in gravy
42 Smallest pup
43 Bobby — of Indy fame
45 Every morning
47 Camera "eg"
48 Threats
51 Timely benefit
52 Penned course
54 Concussion
58 Alley a skunk
59 Singer — James
61 Golan cavaliers
62 Susan Lucci vamp
63 Light bulb areas
64 Vexed
65 Makes lace
66 Fair (high)
67 Twig dwelling

DOWN
1 Near-ends
2 Fuel supply
3 Friend, document
4 Catch off guard
5 Hide (2 wds.)
6 Sideways
7 Clocks face number
8 Mild cheese
9 Matador
10 Silkyl
11 Mockery and Coolidge
12 Dog's doctor
16 Young Lincoln
21 Jewelry
23 Black cattle
26 Dressmaker's cut
27 Golden Rule word
28 Party thrower's plea
29 Bandleader — Goodman
30 College credit
32 Skedaddle
34 Hercules and Atlas
35 Bird's beak
36 Guarantor's charge
38 Chandelier pendant
39 A Great Lake
44 Bowling piece
45 Nuisance
46 Scarcity
47 Garden produce
48 Hack's quarterback
49 Diminishing
50 Television part
51 Fibrous bundles
53 Largeness
55 Positive
56 Calligraphy tools
57 Sorry
60 Way of Lao-tzu

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

1-16-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

THE HARP
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
116 Sunderland
Just off Campus North of the apartments
Wednesday - Reggae Night

Thursday-	Saturday-
Mama	JP's Peace
Clsta	& Love Show
Funk, etc	Roots, Reggae
No Cover	No Cover

•Labatt Blue: $1.75 a pint
$6.25 a pitcher
www.theharp.net

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH

- Meat Lasagna
- Chicken Nuggets
- Sweet Potato Quesadilla (vegan)

DINNER

- Roast Turkey
- Fried Scallops
- Thai Seitan (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

WEDNESDAY
- High: 76
- Low: 45

THURSDAY
- High: 75
- Low: 50

FRIDAY
- High: 77
- Low: 66

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan
COPY EDITOR
Morris Singer
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Gerry Auger
PRODUCTION STAFF
Sarah Lloyd / Lindsay Clark

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Do not eat at the DC today. The salad is groovy.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Turn your music up and rock out in your bedroom.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Don't ask why? Ask why not?

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Just because you're better than everyone doesn't mean you can act superior.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
People often look at you and do a double take.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Say thank you more, you ungrateful punk.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Be careful where you step, a sprained ankle is in your future.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
If something says, "Don't eat." Don't eat it.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Go with your instincts, other people can be wrong too.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Stand up for yourself, you're letting people walk all over you.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
When something goes wrong, don't yell, just ask some one to help you.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Your hard work will pay off eventually, just be patient.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Montreal Weekends $99. Includes R/T Luxury Motor Coach from Springfield. 3 Days-2 Nights- 4 Star Hotel Downtown-Meals-Night Club passes. www.montrealexpress.net 1-781-979-9001 Special Group Rates

AUTO FOR SALE

Buick Century 1994 Recently inspected 108,000 Miles $2100- 413-549-6648

1993 Pontiac Bonneville. All power. Very Good Condition. Must Sell. Best offer. 253-5537

1994 Toyota Paseo well maintained, great gas mileage. $2,900 413-584-2634

AUTO FOR SALE

1988 Mazda $950 413-586-5728

Jeep Cherokee Sport-1995. Perfect student car, A/C, Great CD system, original owner, excellent condition, 90K, automatic. 413-296-0060 $3,600 or O.B.O.

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Participants sought for listening experiments. Call 545-6837 leave message or write jkingston@linguist.umass.edu

EMPLOYMENT

Temporary help Express/Structure warehouse sale Union Ballroom 9/22-9/26 1st quality current merch at 50-90% savings. We need hard working men & women for all aspects of sale including marketing & promo unloading truck, sales & setup.

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

EMPLOYMENT

Produce Sales Associates Part-time evenings + Saturdays. Competitive Pay Call Atkins 253-9528

Drivers and Kitchen help wanted. Apply at D.P. Dough, Downtown Amherst

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals for part time positions. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are must. Call (413) 584-4746

EMPLOYMENT

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

FOR RENT

Ski House for Rent So. Londonberry, VT: 15 mins to Stratton, 7 mi to Bromley 3 mi to Magic Mtn. 7 Bdrms, 3 baths, sleeps 30- $1000/week. katy.browne@verizon.net or 410-404-6326

FOR SALE

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

INSTRUCTION

Jazz Piano Lessons Explore your creativity Beginner to Advanced Learn a wide range of styles Reasonable Rates Contact Stephen Page at 413-297-7910

MISCELLANEOUS

Want to buy/sell TEXTBOOKS & other stuff LOCALLY? … NO shipping hassles, NO payment middlemen! All 4 FREE! Visit www.collegeshack.com today!

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health. 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Do you know your rights as a student, tenant, worker and consumer? The Student Legal Services Office can help with your questions. Come to 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

TRAVEL

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

TRAVEL

Spring Break – Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun Jamaica and Acapulco from $489. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group- earn FREE TRIPS plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplash-tours.com 1800-426-7710

COLLEGIAN MARKET PLACE! To Advertise Call 545-3500!!!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Mourning WUSA

Andrew Merritt

An event happened Monday that most sports fans probably didn't know about. I can say this with confidence because, well, most sports fans didn't know much at all about the Women's United Soccer Association.

The three-year old WUSA folded Sunday, due to insufficient funds. With it went a historical and relevant piece of American sports culture. So while most people probably flipped past the article in the newspaper, didn't click on the link on their favorite sports website and tuned out when any reports hit the television waves, attention is still due the pioneering league and the hopeful athletes who made it a reality.

Soccer has obvious troubles making a real splash in America. Always has, and probably will for quite a while. Whether it's just American jingoism, or a simple inability by sports fans to accept anything but the norm, soccer struggles just to make the headlines, even as one of the most exciting World Cups was completed last summer. That tournament featured an improbable run by the U.S. National team, upset victories and, most of all, excellent performances. You don't normally see Super Bowl-type blowouts in the World Cup final.

The women's game wasn't far behind, and thanks to the 1999 Women's World Cup, hosted and won by the U.S. team, women's soccer became relevant. Maybe it had something to do with Brandi Chastain's exuberant penalty kick celebration, but one sports bra does not an established sport make.

The real reason women's soccer became viable was because suddenly people realized, "Hey, these girls can play." Of course, there were some who already knew that, but a little nudge from the world stage never hurts. The WWC, which turns 12 this year, provided enough exposure to give a women's soccer league real prospect, just as the 1994 U.S.-hosted men's Cup led to the launch of Major League Soccer, currently in its eighth year.

Thus, the WUSA came into existence. With teams in Atlanta, Boston, North Carolina, New York, Philadelphia, San Diego, San Jose and Washington, the league's earnest beginning had all the right moves. Members of the 1999 U.S. National team were dispersed among the teams, providing name recognition and validation for each team. It seemed like the WUSA would find its niche, as did the MLS, or on a smaller scale Major League Lacrosse.

Still, the organization was troubled from the start. National TV coverage was limited to the now-defunct CNNSI channel, and without any serious audience or other quality programming, both the channel and the league suffered. Sponsors were few and far between. Where the MLS has regular TV coverage on uber-network ESPN and sponsorship from the likes of Budweiser and Mastercard, the only major WUSA sponsors that remained this year were Johnson & Johnson and Hyundai — not exactly the heavy hitters of the advertising universe.

WUSA never really found an audience beyond the group of young female soccer players, a group it didn't really need to do much to attract. The visibility was one issue, but in fan-friendly places like Boston University's Nickerson Field, there's no reason a greater following shouldn't have generated, especially with the prospect of another exciting Women's World Cup on the very near horizon.

There are two reasons behind this, one unfortunate and one that's just shameful. Reason one is that soccer is still on the uphill climb in America. The MLS is still struggling to truly gain national exposure and doesn't really enjoy any hardcore fan bases outside of the few rabid outposts like New England, where the Revolution's fans have been recognized time and again as some of the league's best. And goodness knows, if a men's league can't prosper, a women's league will be left in the dust.

Which is exactly what MLS commissioner Don Garber did when he spoke to ESPN after the WUSA's collapse.

Continued on page 8

Going to the dogs

UMass set to face state rival Terriers

GERALETH LINDO/COLLEGIAN

Jason Scudamore and the Minutemen look to continue their winning ways this afternoon when they host Boston University at Rudd Field.

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

After a respectable performance in last weekend's University of Massachusetts Adidas Classic, the Massachusetts men's soccer team is riding high going into today's match up against Boston University.

The Minutemen put together victories against Mercer and Navy, but will see an entirely different animal in the Terriers.

BU has had its share of woes this year, dropping the first three games of the season. However, the Terriers have been injury plagued thus far and will bring a fresh squad into Amherst tomorrow.

"They've had a number of injuries and their injured players are coming back, so they're getting stronger and stronger," said UMass coach Sam Koch.

On top of a diminished roster, the Terriers started their season against three soccer powerhouses. Two of their three losses came against a pair of ranked teams in Connecticut and Boston College.

Koch knows the Terriers have potential to turn some heads and disregards their early season miscues. Also not lost on the veteran coach is that BU has been a rival of UMass in the past, winning four of the last five meetings.

"They're a fully funded program, they are picked to finish second in their conference; we're picked to finish fourth. It's a traditional rival for us. It's a big game," said Koch.

BU is currently on a two-game winning streak, beating Georgetown and coming from behind to beat Fairfield. One offensive spark for the Terriers has been the play of freshman Anders Ostli.

Ostlli has scored two goals this season and has provided support for the rest of the Terrier attack. His second goal of the season was a game-ending blast in double overtime against Georgetown.

UMass will need to neutralize the Terrier front field as a unit, as the group has potential to score anytime with the addition of its previously injured talent.

"They have a number of key players you have to watch out for; it's not just one," Koch said. "They have about five guys we need to be aware of. We can't let them get into situations where they can use their strengths."

Recently, the Maroon and White have been looking toward the youth on their team to raise the bar. This year's freshman class has been getting more touches, adding depth to an already talented squad.

"I feel [the young players] are contributing, and for a freshman class they are doing very well," Koch said. "It shows you that we have good depth coming off the bench. For the most part everyone on this squad is helping us win."

The Minutemen have been having trouble scoring recently. In last weekend's invitational, the Maroon and White out shot their opponents 51 to 24, but only managed three goals.

"Sooner or later one of our shots are going to bounce in, we just need to keep doing what we're doing," said Koch.

Both BU and UMass are at a vital stage in their season. There is a sense of urgency to win and both lineups are fully stocked.

The Terriers are pitted to do well this year and with a full healthy roster; the Minutemen will be their first test.

"I think by the end of the season, they're going to be fighting to be one of the top teams in New England and one of the top 25 in the country. ... Right now, I'm concerned about how we are playing our game, we have to take care of ourselves."

Hurting Minutewomen take on BU

By Matt Stewart
Collegian Staff

Just as it seemed the Massachusetts women's soccer team's health couldn't get any worse, another key starter fell victim to an injury. In Sunday's 1-0 loss to Syracuse, sophomore forward Adair Blyer went down on an apparent knee injury.

Coming off a tough loss to Syracuse, UMass will travel to Nickerson Field for a 7 p.m. match against intra-state rival Boston University without the high-scoring Blyler.

"They've played in some really tough games this season," UMass coach Jim Rudy said about BU. "Every game that they've played in has been tight. They are very organized with multiple systems of play."

Blyer was hurt when she got tied up with a Syracuse player, landing awkwardly and clutching her knee. She was unable to walk off of the field on her own, and her status for tonight's game has not been determined yet. This is latest addition to the list of weapons for UMass without 100 percent health. The list already includes junior forward Lindsey "Stormy" Fairweather.

"We're using a lot of duct tape," said Rudy. "And just trying to get something together on the field. It's been a very strange attrition."

The Minutewomen (2-1-1) are led offensively by Blyer, who has tallied three goals and leads the team in points with six. Right behind her is sophomore mid-fielder Lindsey Bellini, who is credited with five points on the season thus far.

"They're working hard and haven't given up," said Rudy about his team. "Any coach would be pleased to coach this team."

Defensively, goalkeeper Kelly Nigh continues to dominate in net for the Maroon and White. Nigh holds a 0.95 goals-against-average along with an 85.7 save percentage.

"She's very steady," said Rudy of his senior keeper. "And really gets it down. She had to raise her level in the second of the Syracuse game ... [Our goalie] has been a nice reliable thing for us this season."

The Terriers (1-3-1) split a pair of games at this past weekend's George Mason Tournament. BU knocked off host George Mason 1-0, for their first win of the season, but ended up dropping the second game 2-1 to Delaware.

The biggest threat in the Terriers' arsenal is sophomore forward Melissa Shulman. Shulman leads the Terriers in scoring with two goals, overall points with five, and also in shots with 14. Also performing well for BU are Lauren Ciccone, who netted the team's lone game winning goal, and assist leader Emily Dionne.

Jessica Clinton will be taking on the net-minding responsibilities for the Terriers, and has posted a 1.67 Goals Against Average, a 75 percent saving percentage, and has started every game this season. She has also recorded one shutout.

When asked about the keys to tonight's match-up Rudy replied, "We have to bring the A-game in the first few minutes."

Pedro leads Sox past Rays

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

BOSTON — Pedro Martinez pitched a six-hitter for his 100th win with Boston, and the Red Sox used a two-run eighth inning to beat the Tampa Bay Devil Rays 3-2 on Tuesday night.

Martinez (13-4) had thrown 15 consecutive shutout innings before Tampa Bay tied it 1-1 in the eighth when shortstop Julio Lugo walked, moved to second on a groundout and scored on Al Martin's pinch-hit single.

Red Sox	3
Devil Rays	2

The Red Sox, who won their third straight, began the day with a 1 1/2-game lead over Seattle in the wild-card race and trailed the New York Yankees by 5 1/2 in the AL East.

Martinez, in his sixth year with Boston, walked one and struck out six in his second complete game of the season. He allowed fewer than two earned runs for the 14th time in his last 19 starts. The win was his third victory in the past 12 days.

The Red Sox scored the go-ahead runs in the eighth inning as Nomar Garciaparra broke out of a 4-for-36 slump with a leadoff double in the eighth off Rays reliever Travis Harper (4-8). He took third on Todd Walker's groundout before Manny Ramirez was walked intentionally.

Lefty Joe Kennedy came in to face lefty David Ortiz and threw three straight balls. He came back with two strikes before Ortiz lined a single to right that scored Garciaparra and sent Ramirez to third.

Adrian Brown ran for Ramirez and scored on Bill Mueller's sacrifice fly. That run became critical when Tampa Bay scored in the ninth on a two-out single by Marlon Anderson. Defensive indifference sent him to second, and Pete LaForest singled. But Lugo popped to second to end the game.

Martinez had to be sharp because Tampa Bay's Jeremi Gonzalez pitched six solid innings, allowing just six base runners and three hits, including Walker's RBI single in the third.

Gabe Kapler started the rally with a one-out single. He went to second on a groundout and, after Garciaparra walked, scored on Walker's single.

Gonzalez faced Toronto's ace Roy Halladay in his last start, and the Blue Jays won 3-1 as Halladay won his 20th game.

Martinez got into a jam in the seventh when Aubrey Huff tripled on the first pitch. But Martinez needed just six pitches to retire the next three batters and leave Huff at third.

Travis Lee fouled out to catcher Jason Varitek on the second pitch, Anderson popped out to shortstop Garciaparra on the first pitch and Damian Rolls struck out on three pitches.

Martinez allowed just three runners through the first six innings. Rolls was hit by a pitch in the second, Toby Hall singled but was thrown out trying to stretch it to a double in the third and Hall doubled in the sixth with no outs, but was stranded at third.

Notes: Red Sox centerfielder Johnny Damon crashed into the scoreboard in left-center, trying to catch Huff's triple, and lost his hat but stayed in the game. ... In the bottom of the seventh, Tampa Bay centerfielder Rocco Baldelli leaped against the center-field wall to catch a drive off the bat of Sox first baseman Andy Abad's. ... The Devil Rays have played 84 games decided by one or two runs. ... Manny Ramirez drew his American League-leading 26th intentional walk in the eighth inning.

It broke his Red Sox team record of 25 in 2001 for most by a right-handed hitter. Lefty Ted Williams set the Sox team record of 33 in 1957.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Gabe Kapler's one-out base hit began a rally that brought him home for Boston's first run.

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 12

ALANA meets to strategize SGA seats

GERALETH LINDO/COLLEGIAN

Gladys Franco speaks about ALANA's role in the SGA to a group of supporters at last night's meeting in the New Africa House library.

By Courtney Charles
Collegian Staff

"We're not there to play around. We're there to be your voice," Gladys Franco, chair of the ALANA caucus said last night concerning ALANA's role in the Student Government Association.

"We don't shut the door on anyone."

The ALANA caucus and supporters met last night in the New Africa House Library to discuss issues facing ALANA.

"There's a lot of stereotyping in the SGA," Aiysha Cooper, ALANA member said. "People don't think racism exists."

The crisis facing the ALANA caucus is the elimination of their appointed seats in the SGA. During the meeting, Cooper, Franco, Eduardo Bustamante and Rene Gonzalez spoke to a group of about 75 supporters, urging them to run for the Senate and rally for the ALANA cause.

ALANA is given 13 percent of seats in the SGA Senate, set aside for people that are appointed and approved by members of the ALANA community.

"Elimination comes up every two years because we have one of the strongest voices in the SGA," Cooper said.

She also said that having appointed seats allows the ALANA community to take a look at who will be representing their community. She said elections are usually based on popularity, which is not real democracy.

"We need appointed seats because there has been a history of racism and exclusion on campus," Franco said.

According to Cooper, incoming students hear what a diverse school UMass is, but when they get here, they find it is a different story.

"Our first concern is not race, that's just what some people assume," Cooper said. The caucus is more concerned with supporting issues that matter, as opposed to motions like the one concerning French fries brought up last year in the Senate, she said.

Anyone can become part of ALANA.

As part of the ALANA controversy, it was said Speaker Jared Nokes had barred the four ALANA representatives entitled to be on the Coordinating Council. The Coordinating Council acts as the greater Senate during the summer and has recently announced the three referendum questions to be on the ballot on Sept. 25. The Coordinating Council started with six members, plus Nokes at the beginning of the summer. It now has four members, including Nokes.

According to Nokes, no ALANA members approached him to nominate someone to the council at the end of the last Senate meeting. He said that if there are vacant seats on the council, they must remain vacant.

"[Nokes] didn't consult anyone — that's the definition of a dictator," Gonzalez said. "He's taking the law into his own hands, since there is no one to stop him."

The caucus has existed for over 30 years, according to Gonzalez, and the SGA Constitution approval by the Board of Trustees for about 10.

The three referendum ques-

Continued on page 3

Professor speaks on Cuban identity

By Kochnov Jean-Noel
Collegian Correspondent

There exists only 90 miles between Cuba and the United States — a short distance that outlines the proximity that has and will forever link the two nations, a professor of Latin American history said to a capacity crowd yesterday evening in Memorial Hall.

Luis A. Perez, the J. Carlyle Sitterson professor at the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill, lectured before an audience of University of Massachusetts faculty, undergraduate and graduate students.

"My comments this evening are within the reach of the imagination. The place that Cubans and Americans occupied in each other's imaginations," Perez said in opening.

A guest of the Five College Graduate Program in History, Perez is the seventh lecturer since the program began in 1997 to be chosen to inaugurate its series of yearlong activities. Jane Rausch, the graduate program director of history at UMass, said that once it was decided to invite a Latin American specialist, Perez was the ideal choice.

"[Perez] was not inclined to study narrowly defined topics, and his work on U.S.-Cuban relations has spanned the separate fields of U.S. and Latin American history," Rausch said.

In looking to bridge U.S. and Cuban history, beginning in the immediate pre-Cuban Revolution era of the 1930s to '50s through the cultural influences of each on the other, Perez sparked dissent among the audience. Some felt there was too much attention paid to the influence of American culture on Cuban culture.

Martha Calas, a professor at the Isenberg School of Management, and a Cuban émigré, said, "I thought it was a little bit more complicated than the story he presented."

Perez painted a picture of a Cuba where the ideal Cuban woman had to have the face of Eva Gardner and the sex appeal of Sophia Loren, a Cuba where children grew up playing with American toys and coloring American cowboys-and-Indians coloring books, while their parents smoked Camel cigarettes.

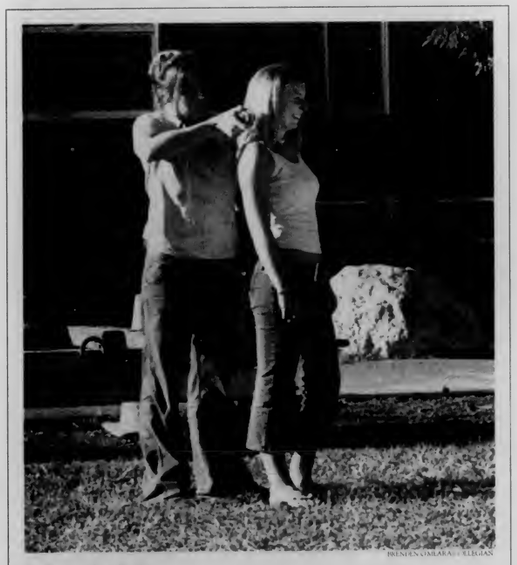
"When I was growing up in Havana," Calas said, "American products were seen as second-class European products. There [was] much more gradation in terms of race and class."

Gardy Guiteau, a UMass graduate student studying social justice education, said, "There were parts of the narrative, like some of the questions at the end pointed out, that were missing. Specifically the Afro-Cubanos, and how what he was presenting reflected in that population."

Another student said although she enjoyed Perez's points, she would have liked to see a greater focus on the issue of race, not simply class.

"It's nice, but it's obvious."

Perez did say that his primary focus was the Cuban middle class. Perez said that the black population of Cuba was not represented in the "Miami tract" of white Cubans that were able to fly from Havana to Miami for $26 and take in American movies. But black Cubans nonetheless were influenced by American culture, "like the Grandes Ligas [Major League Baseball]," Afro-Cuban baseball players aspired to one day play in venues like Yankee Stadium and the old Ebbets Field. The first Cuban world champion boxer was an Afro-Cuban named Kid Chocolate; he won the title in Madison Square Garden, Perez said.



Roberto Marquez, professor of Latin American and Caribbean history at Mount Holyoke College, said Perez's presentation was indeed compelling and interesting, and that "he didn't try to give a complete picture, [but] was trying to make an argument about a particular relationship and consequences."

In the end, Marquez said, Perez could only "give a sense of the complexities of the relationship between Cuba and the U.S."

BRENTEN GMARA/COLLEGIAN

Luis A. Perez, a professor at the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill, lectures to a crowd on Wednesday evening in Memorial Hall.

BRENTEN GMARA/COLLEGIAN

Follow the light

Jacqui Phillips and Jenn Gassone work on a light metering project for the hands on film class, COM 441.

Isabel closes in on North Carolina

By Emory P. Dalesio
Associated Press

NAGS HEAD, N.C. – Hurricane Isabel closed in on North Carolina's Outer Banks yesterday with 105 mph winds and the potential for up to a foot of rain, threatening to cause ruinous flooding across a huge swath of the already soggy East.

Isabel had weakened to a Category two hurricane from a Category five, 160-mph monster, but was still expected to be dangerous when it hit the barrier islands Thursday morning with a storm surge of up to 11 feet.

More than 250,000 people in North Carolina and Virginia were urged to move to higher ground, leaving the vulnerable Outer Banks mostly evacuated. Evacuation orders were also posted for low-lying inland areas and islands of the Chesapeake Bay, which could get a seven-foot surge.

After days of warnings, anxiety over the onrushing hurricane finally appeared to take hold, even among longtime Outer Banks residents who pride themselves on their ability to ride out big storms.

"There's probably no one in the area within a quarter-mile," said Jason Ribeiro.

Ribeiro had planned to play a gig with his Nags Head rockabilly band Wednesday night. But with most of his neighbors gone and bars closed under an evacuation order, he packed his sport utility vehicle with five guitars and headed out onto a mainland road virtually clear after days of hurricane warnings.

"That five-day thing that they have on the Weather Channel, I mean, take a look around," he said. "There's nobody here."

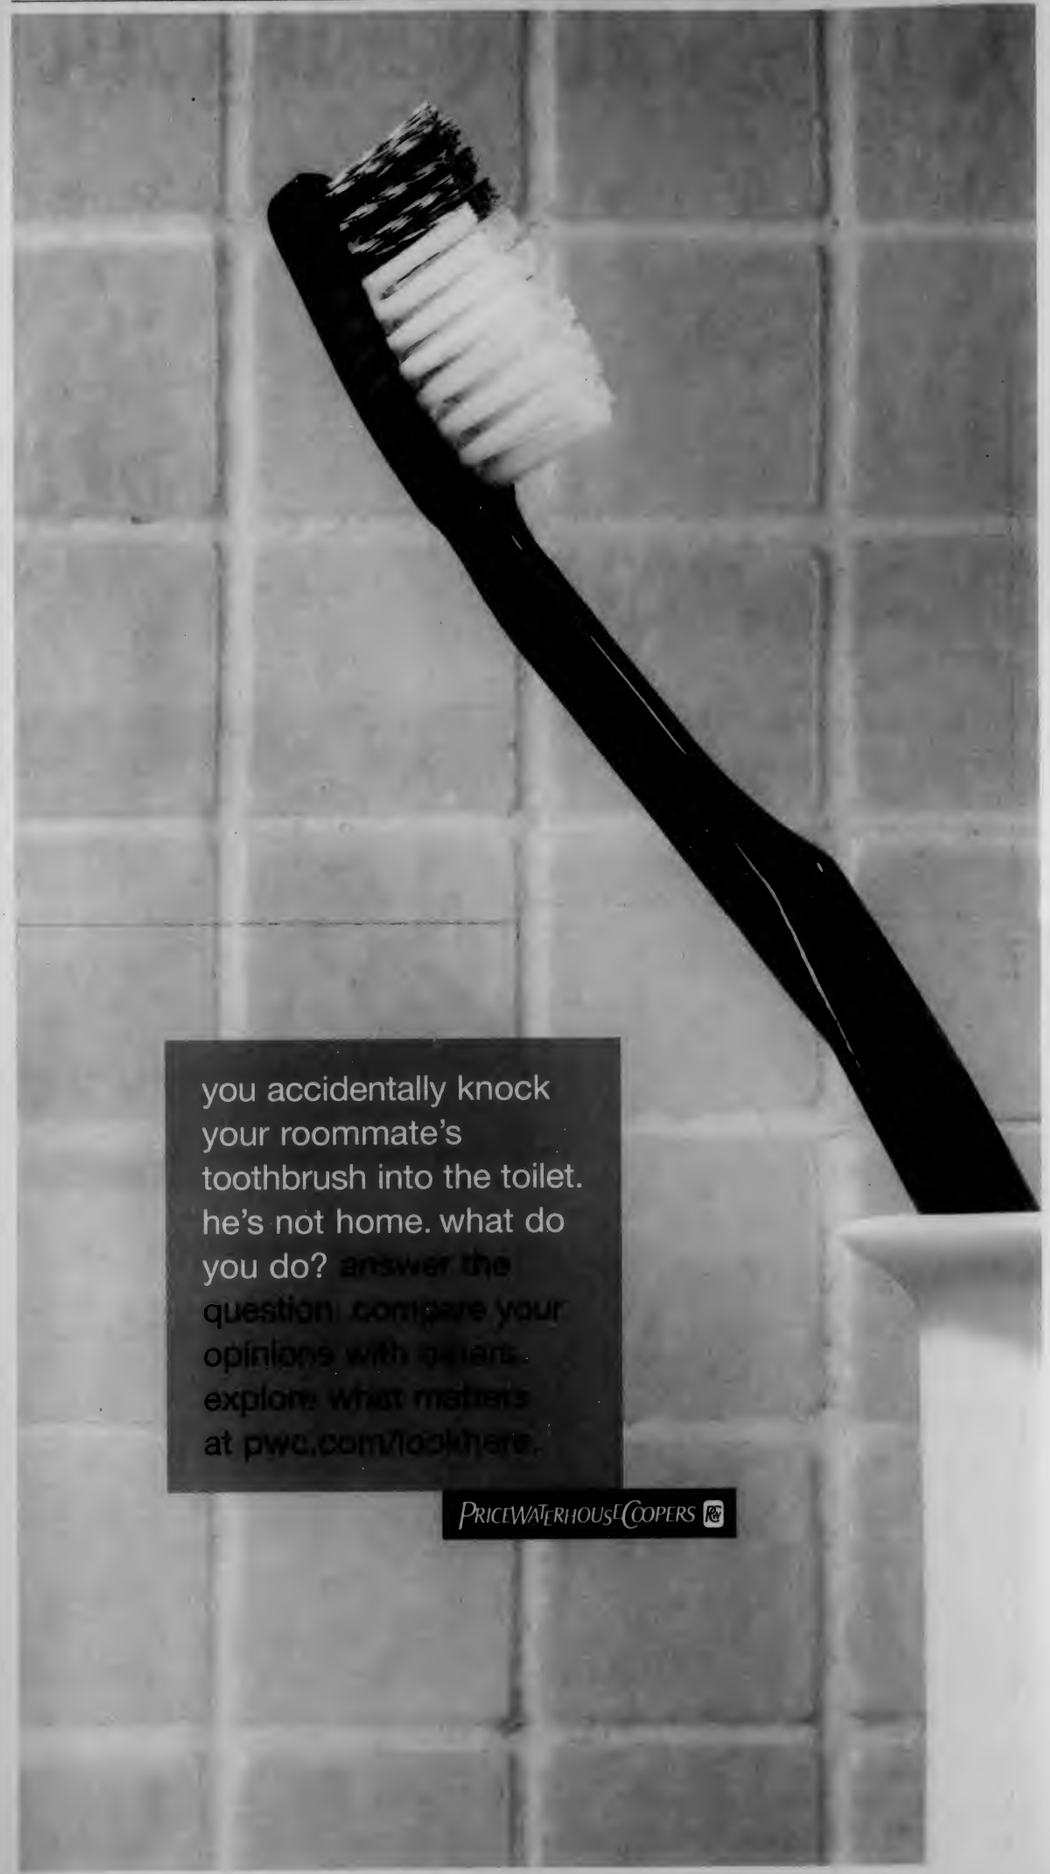
At 2 p.m. EDT, Isabel was about 350 miles southeast of North Carolina's Cape Hatteras, moving northwest at around 11 mph. It was expected to pick up speed as it approached the coast.

A hurricane warning was in effect from Cape Fear in southern North Carolina to the Virginia-Maryland line. Tropical storm warnings extended from South Carolina to New Jersey.

For many in Isabel's path, an area stretching from the Carolinas to the fields of Pennsylvania and the hollows of West Virginia, one of the rainiest summers in years could get considerably worse.

More than 9 inches of rain was forecast for parts of Pennsylvania, and National Hurricane Center director Max Mayfield said heavy rain could extend all the way to New England.

Governor Bob Wise declared a state of emergency for all of West Virginia, anticipating heavy flooding in the Potomac River basin. He also ordered highway crews and National Guardsmen to areas most in danger from Isabel. Up to 12 inches was possible in Morgan County.



Delaware Gov. Ruth Ann Minner declared a state of emergency, saying she was particularly concerned about a northern part of the state still recovering from flooding that washed away roads and creek beds Monday.

Pennsylvania officials said the ground is so sodden that it would take as little as 2 to 4 inches of rain to cause rivers and creeks to spill their banks.

John and Rita Razze's home in Chadds Ford, Pa., was flooded with several inches of water when rain earlier this week caused the nearby Brandywine River to overflow. Now, with everything pumped out and cleaned up, he worried that the ground would be unable to absorb any of Isabel's rain.

He left work Wednesday afternoon to pull his heater out of the basement and take everything he could carry to the second floor. Furniture and anything else that was too big to move was propped up on chairs.

EDITORIAL/OPINION Page 4
STEALING MUSIK? Questioning Internet music downloading
ARTS & LIVING Page 7
FESTIVUS SEASON Three Hampshire County Festivals
SPORTS Page 14
KICKOFF UM opens A-10 slate
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS Page 13

U.S. evaluates Iraq's reconstruction

By Barry Schweid
Associated Press

WASHINGTON – Led by President Bush, senior U.S. officials yesterday set about recasting a proposed U.N. resolution to accommodate demands from allies that want a bigger role in Iraq's reconstruction.

"We're still talking about it," Bush said, adding that the key to the discussions is "to make sure the political situation in Iraq evolves in a way that will lead to a free society."

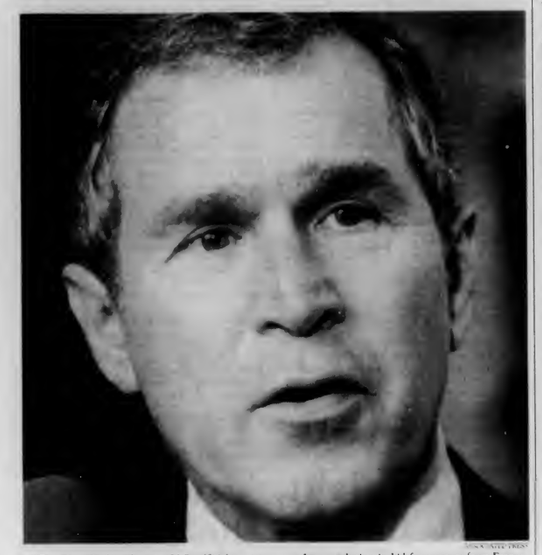
The administration already had agreed to assign a vital role to the United Nations in postwar Iraq. But France, Germany and, to an extent, Russia were pressing for a quick end to the U.S. occupation.

Administration officials said no ground would be given on the main elements of the U.S. position: that the United Nations should not have the leading role and that Iraqis should control the time table for taking over their country.

These officials said the resolution was being reworked to be more specific about a U.N. role and to try to accommodate other governments.

"We're talking amongst ourselves," Bush told reporters, indicating the United States was not ready to present a revised resolution to other governments.

He also stressed Iraq needed time to develop a constitution and to hold free elections. After that, he said, "we can deal with the sovereignty issue."



At the State Department, spokesman Richard Boucher said "certainly we are trying to listen carefully to what we've heard from other countries. listen carefully to the many helpful suggestions that we've gotten."

Describing the U.S. move as both an act of good will and a challenge, a senior administration official said the United Nations would be offered a larger political and economic role as well as coordinator of food and other humanitarian programs.

The administration had hoped the Security Council would adopt the U.S. resolution before Bush's scheduled speech Tuesday to the U.N. General Assembly. But the likelihood now appears dim.

One reason for the resolution is to attract more peacekeeping troops from other countries by having the United Nations authorize the mission.

The administration also hopes to persuade other countries to make sizable financial contributions to Iraq's reconstruction.

President Bush and senior U.S. officials met to recast Iraq resolution in bid for support from France, Germany and Russia on Wednesday.

Senate begins session

Senator Stanley Rosenberg will address the Faculty Senate today at its regular meeting.

Rosenberg plans to discuss recent budget decisions by the state legislature, as well as the emerging issues and tensions between the current republican governor, Mitt Romney, and the democratic legislature. Following his address, the senator will answer questions and address concerns with the Senate.

Following Sen. Rosenberg's address, the Senate will hear comments from Chancellor John Lombardi. Lombardi is expected to respond to concerns about the departure of former Athletic Director Ian McCaw, as well as budgetary issues for the upcoming fiscal year.

The Senate will then hold elections for Associate Delegate to the Board of Trustees, Four At-Large Members of the Rules Committee and Chair of the Rules Committee.

John Jenkins, Chair of the Academic Matters Council, will give a special report concerning the Revision to the Requirements of the Major in Chemistry leading to the B.A. The Rules Committee approved the report on May 23 that acted on behalf of the Faculty Senate, which was not in session for the summer.

Following Jenkins' report on the Chemistry major will be two annual reports. Tabled from the May 22 Faculty Senate meeting, the University Writing Committee's annual report will be presented by Co-Chairs Brian Ogilvie and Lee Badget. Chair Anthony Butterfield will then give the Graduate Council's report for the Academic year 2002-03.

The meeting will conclude with remarks from the Chancellor, Interim Provost and other administrative officers and leader of campus governance units, such as the Student Government Association.

The Faculty Senate is a legislative body, like the Student Government Association, consisting of elected faculty members and administrators who hold faculty rank. The Senate develops and reviews University of Massachusetts policy, as well as a myriad of issues facing the campus.

According to their web site, the opening announcement and question sessions of the Senate meetings "constitute the only public forum where the principal administrative officers of the campus and representatives of the faculty, staff and undergraduate and graduate student governance bodies regularly meet to raise questions and discuss matters of importance to the campus." When appropriate the Senate invites legislative and academic leaders, such as state Sen. Rosenberg, to address the Senate on current issues.

Faculty Senate meetings are held every other Thursday in Herter Hall, room 227 at 3:30 p.m.

-S.J. Port

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3499 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Robert Krzykowski
Editorial Editor Erika Lovley
News Editor Courtney Charles
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamas
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Jessica Pelletier
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Page Cram
Assistant News Kelly Farrell
Assistant News Ferron Salniker
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marzelli

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on advertising revenues. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Near 75 ALANA supporters meet

Continued from page 1

tions that will be on the ballot include an amendment to the Constitution that the trustees must approve that will include ALANA-appointed seats. The second question is to eliminate Area Government appointed seats from the bylaws. The third question is to eliminate the ALANA caucus if the amendment does not pass or if the Board of Trustees refuses to amend it.

"The Board of Trustees will most likely not agree because they don't, appointed seats are needed – which is funny because they're appointed themselves," Gonzalez said.

He said the whole thing is a "catch-22." If the Board of Trustees does not approve an amendment, then Nokes will get his way and blame the trustees, Gonzalez said.

Another part of the controversy is the problem of a lack of a judiciary branch. According to Nokes, the appointed seats should be a judiciary issue.

Unfortunately, there are now only three members on the judiciary. There are seven seats on the committee, and there must be five present for quorum, or for their actions to mean anything. Nokes was not sure who the three members actually are.

Positions on the judiciary branch are approved by the SGA President and Senate. No one has been nominated for it in well over two years, Nokes said. "I'm not against their ideas," Nokes said about ALANA. "I disagree with them sometimes, but I wouldn't want to prevent them from getting into the Senate – they just need to run like everyone else."

Nokes also said that personal attacks on him are "just inappropriate."

"I worked with Gladys on the Ways and Means Committee, and I've taken classes with her," Nokes said. "We were never best friends, but we got along, we worked together."

He also said that among the signatures on the Ways and Means Committee who signed the budgetary recommendation for this year, there were only two other white men on the committee who signed, besides himself. This included the then-Chair Brian Thompson. Franco had also signed this document.

"I don't see anything changing that would alter my decision," Nokes said. "Personal attacks are not going to make me stop upholding my responsibilities."

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors

Beer:	Liquor:	Wine:
Becks 24 btl case. $19.99*	Margaritaville 1.75 lt...$27.99	Canyon Road Chard., Cab., Merlot 1.5 lt...$10.99
Miller lite 30 pk cans. $18.49*	Chivas Regal 750 ml...$24.99	Jacobs Creek Reserve Chard., Cab., Shiraz 750 ml...$9.99
Keystone 30 pk cans. $13.49*	Bushmills 1 liter...$22.99	Inglenook Chard., Cab., Shiraz, Merlot 4 lt...$8.99
Busch & Busch Light 24 pk btls. $10.99*	Jagermeister All Flavors 1 liter...$18.99	Nathanson Creek Chard., Cab., Merlot 1.5 lt...$6.99
Red Hook 12 pk btls. 9.99*	Seagram's Vodka All Flavors 1.75 lt...$14.99	Santa Carolina All Flavors 1.5 lt...$6.99
Rolling Rock 12 pk btl. $7.99*	Bacardi All Flavors 750 ml...$10.99	Marcus James Chard., Cab., Merlot, White Zin 750 ml...$2.99

*all beer prices plus deposit

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon.- Sat. 9am- 11pm
SALE 9/18 THROUGH 9/24

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club
90 Gatehouse Road, Off Rt. 9, Two miles East of Amherst Center
On the Bus Route • TEL: 256-6446
Shopping for a health club? • Do your homework first
JOIN NOW!
for our Semester Special
15 weeks – For Students: Only $179!
Inclusive membership / No additional fees / includes free T-Shirt
Hampshire Fitness Club has it all for you
•FULL SIZED INDOOR POOL •AQUA AEROBICS •CYBEX/NAUTILUS CIRCUIT •BOXING STUDIO
•CYBEX FREE WEIGHTS •FULL COURT BASKETBALL •VOLLEYBALL •INDOOR TENNIS
•YOGA/PILATES •AEROBICS/STEP/BOSU •JACUZZI/SAUNAS •CARDIO-VASCULAR EQUIPMENT
Open: 6am to 10pm Mon-Fri 8am to 9pm Sat-Sun

GET PAID TO GO TO SCHOOL. TALK ABOUT ROLE REVERSAL.

The U.S. Air Force will pay for you to continue your education while you serve your country as a nurse. Through selection into the Air Force Institute of Technology program, you could earn your advanced degree in as little as two years and get paid to do it. You'll be part of an elite team of medical professionals who have chosen to serve their country in this proud institution. To learn more about Air Force Nursing, please visit airforce.com or call 1.800.423.USAF to request more information.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

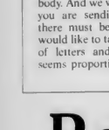
SGA still accepting nominations

With all the talk concerning ALANA and the Student Government Association, the fact that nominations are still being accepted for the senate race has almost slipped through the cracks. There are a number of seats opening up this year in the senate, and the more competition for those seats, the better.

Let's face it – except for the small percentage of people who are actively involved in student government here, most of us students tend to adopt an attitude of apathy when it comes to the goings on of the SGA. Part of it is that we simply are unaware of what is happening, but the other part of it is that we just can't be bothered to find out.

That is, of course, until something major happens, like the latest ALANA debacle for example. As soon as news of what happened spread around campus, the Collegian began receiving all kinds of input. We received letters from students, both outraged and concerned, wishing to express their opinions on the subject in hopes that it would bring about some sort of action.

We certainly welcome this type of outreach. In fact, there's nothing we love more than to hear personally from members of the student body. And we would think that since so many of you are sending us your written responses, there must be equally as many of you who would like to take action. However, the number of letters and columns we received hardly seems proportional to the number of students who are interested in actually running for senate.



It's puzzling to us here at the Collegian, and we would like to pose one question to all of you – what are you waiting for? The SGA elections are coming up, and nominations are open until Friday. So, get out there, get those signatures, and run for senate! If you believe that things need to change, you have to change them, and there's no better way to ensure that your voice gets heard than holding a seat in office.

If that's not enough to convince you to get involved, how about the fact that an election needs competition? Think about it, if all of our current senators know that they have job security, why would they bother trying extremely hard to please us as students? We have to challenge our incumbents in order to demand better performance and ensure the best senate we can get. We deserve that much at least.

For the rest of you who don't have the time for a commitment to the SGA, but would still like to be heard, keep sending us your opinions. It's the next best way to bring about change! But if you have the time, and the conviction, don't let laziness get in your way. It's a simple process, and there's plenty of motivation to get those measly twenty-five signatures that it takes to be nominated for the senate race. So don't wait; you only have one day left. Good luck!

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Both sides now

Brian Thompson

I have read many articles on the Massachusetts Daily Collegian's Web site claiming that Student Government Association Speaker Jared Nokes "has done this" or "has done that." These claims have primarily come from ALANA caucus members who feel personally slighted, or Collegian editorial writers who have not been involved with the SGA before the issue of appointed seats came to forefront.

I would like to set the record straight: The reason why Nokes did not include appointed seats in the Senate apportionment this year – and the only reason – is because the Senate and coordinating council told him to. That is the Speaker's job.

Every year, the Senate sets the apportionment for the following fall's election. The apportionment was passed without appointed seats. When the caucus realized this, they tried to push through a motion during the last meeting of the year – weeks after the apportionment was passed – to include appointed seats.

The Senate, after two lengthy elections in which Nokes and Associate Speaker Chris Eckel were elected, voted to adjourn the meeting by an overwhelming majority. After the last meeting of the year, the Coordinating Council became the acting legislative body. The coordinating council was comprised of the chairs of the standing committees. All were elected as senators and elected again as chairs. A motion was passed which, again, clearly stated that appointed seats should not be included.

It is also important to note that the coordinating council has spots reserved for ALANA senators as voting members. This is not a new policy and is clearly stated in the bylaws. The caucus chose to not take advantage of this opportunity. So the claims that the caucus was not represented at the meetings do not hold water. They had a chance, and it was their responsibility. Responsibility is really what this issue comes down to.

You see, I am interning this semester in Washington, D.C. at the real Senate. There are no appointed seats here. The Senator I work for – like all the other 99 Senators – chose to serve in the Senate and took the responsibility to run for office. Elections are the only way to ensure a fair process where the people can decide who they want to represent them. This is not to say that I am not for diversity. Making sure the needs of minority students are being met should be the top priority of student government.

Responsibility is really what this issue comes down to.

However, if appointed seats, as the caucus claims, are necessary to ensure the needs of minority students are being met, why should the ALANA community be the only ones with a caucus of appointed seats? What about Jewish and Muslim appointed seats? Gay/Lesbian/Transgender students appointed seats? Left-handed appointed seats? Where does it end? If the ALANA community should get appointed seats, so should every other minority.

In closing, it seems that the majority of coverage in The Collegian has attacked the decision to eliminate appointed seats. I believe that is crucial to journalistic integrity that both sides of the story are told. I stand by my decision as a voting member of the coordinating council to not include appointed seats in this year's Senate, and I hope that Speaker Nokes stands by his decision no matter how many demands are made and no matter how many times his office is stormed. We cannot expect our leaders to pick and choose when to follow the rules, no matter how we may feel about those rules.

So let me repeat this one more time so there is no confusion: no matter how you may feel about Speaker Nokes – I, myself, have had many disagreements with him – he did not make any decisions regarding appointed seats because of his "arrogance" or because he is a "dictator," as Rene Gonzalez gracefully described him. We told him to. Personally, I think it's a good thing when the speaker does his job, follows the Constitution and listens to the legislative body. The caucus should be storming the offices of the elected chairs that made this decision. If you want to hop on I-95 South, I am in the Russell Senate Office Building and would be happy to meet with you if I can find the time. If not, stop complaining that the rules are being followed. Run for a Senate seat and change the rules.

Brian Thompson is a UMass student who chaired the Ways and Means Committee in 2002-03.

International super highway robbery

Gilad Skolnik

Slightly more than a week ago, the heinous, crime-ridden days of evil Brianna LaHara were finally put to an end. No longer could she steal what was not hers, and no longer could she break the law. The Recording Industry Association of America decided it was time to sue 12-year-old Brianna for stealing music, and not just a few songs, but hundreds upon hundreds of songs.

Among other criminals that were finally caught was 71-year-old Durwood Pickle. His cruel grandchildren went onto his computer while he wasn't home and downloaded about a thousand songs, but justice had still not been done. The RIAA went on to sue over 260 more people, forcing them to pay thousands of dollars for the songs that they stole. And they've almost put an end to the theft of music off of the Internet, as they only have about 60 million more people left to sue.

Surveys estimate that about 60 million people in the United States alone steal music from the Internet. The thought that so many people in our country are breaking the Eighth Commandment is sickening, almost as sickening as a record industry that chases after middle school girls and grandfathers and sues them out of everything they've got.

Is this really stealing? Are you a thief because you download music from Kazaa? Is the man who takes a few napkins from a McDonald's without ordering food a thief? Is recording your favorite TV show on your VCR stealing? What if you record a music video with your VCR, and then give that tape to your friend who makes a copy of it? Or how about recording music off the radio?

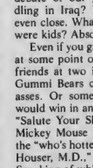
There's a lot of gray area, and there's a difference between walking out of a music store with a few Beatles CDs that you haven't paid for and downloading them off of the Internet. The record companies need to realize this.

There's a difference between walking out of a music store with a few Beatles CDs that you haven't paid for and downloading them off the Internet.

I find it odd that the record industry has decided to suddenly enforce the law and crack down on people who steal, after stealing from consumers for years. Currently the RIAA is being sued for a price fixing scandal in which all of the record companies decided to fix the price of new CDs at about $20 to $25. They complain that CD sales have dropped by more than 30 percent in the last few years, but frankly they got what they deserved.

So far, the RIAA has used a combination of scare and guilt tactics in a desperate attempt to get your hard earned money. Aside from randomly suing people, they rant and rave that you are hurting musicians' incomes when you download music for free off the Internet. Do poor artists such as Eminem really need you to buy their CDs so that they can afford to make ends meet?

I would actually feel bad for stealing from the music artists who have mansions in every state, personal jets and millions of dollars collecting dust in their bank accounts. Except in the meantime, millions upon millions of Americans are struggling below the poverty line without any health or dental insurance while simple things such as owning a car or going to college are but a distant dream.



But even if you do feel bad, don't. A recent New York Times article stated that artists make most of their money from their concerts and expensive merchandise. From calendars and posters of themselves to advertisements and $100 concerts, they're pretty well off.

The fact is that when you download music from Kazaa, you are just keeping the filthy rich record companies that are owned by one of the five media conglomerates from becoming a bit richer. You are stealing from the pirates themselves. Downloading music from the Internet will not stop artists from producing more music; they make more than enough from concerts.

Just as people can see movies, read books and listen to music from public libraries without paying a dime, they should be able to borrow music from their Kazaa-using online friends. In first grade, I remember learning of the importance of sharing what you have. So go on and liberate that music from the Internet; give yourself a pat on the back and keep on giving.

Gilad Skolnik is a Collegian columnist.

It's alright, 'cause I'm saved by the Sox

Matt Brochu

"When the teacher pops a test, I know I'm in a mess, and my dog ate all my homework last night."

If this doesn't sound even remotely familiar to you, then stop reading. No really, I don't want you as my reader. And that's due to the simple fact that these words remain at the core of the most timeless and important debate of our generation. Bush's meddling in Iraq? No. Romney's budget cuts? Not even close. What was the best TV show when we were kids? Absolutely.

Even if you grew up without cable TV, we've all at some point or another gotten heated with our friends at two in the morning over whether the Gummi Bears could kick the Care Bears' pastel asses. Or sometimes it was a battle over who would win in an eating contest: Donkey Lips from "Salute Your Shorts" or the entire cast of "The Mickey Mouse Club." My personal favorite was the "who's hotter" argument: Vinnie from "Boogie Houser, M.D.," or Boner from "Growing Pains." Speaking of which, I wonder what Boner is doing nowadays. I mean, I liked Boner. Boner was great. How could anyone not like Boner?

In 'Saved by the Bell' terms, the Red Sox are the Samuel 'Screech' Powers of the baseball world, and the Yankees, collectively, are Zack Morris.

Anyway, to defend this argument, you've got to look at shows as a whole, which means the following are vital; great characters (some of which must fall off the face of the earth shortly after the show peaces out), predictable storylines, potential drug problems, at least one hot chick who's out of everyone's league, and an early '90's studio audience that yells "Wooooooooo!" every time two people make out with no tongue. So if you haven't figured it out by now, that show is and will always be "Saved by the Bell." I also love the Red Sox so I threw them in too. Enjoy.

In "Saved by the Bell" terms, the Red Sox are the Samuel "Screech" Powers of the baseball world, and the Yankees, collectively, are Zack Morris. Just think about it for a second. Like the Yankees, Zack is always top dog. He's the one who goes steady with the hottest girl in school, Kelly Kapowski. He's the one who could've cheated his way into winning a trip to Hawaii if he wasn't such an idiot (it's Bonsai, not Bolshoi you ass). He's the one who gets a kiss from Stevie, and the one with the wicked cool cell phone. He's the one who can freeze time by saying, "time out," yet never uses it to get into the girls' locker room. And he's the one who gets a 1600 on his SATs.

But when do we actually root for Zack? Never. Who's the brains behind the operation? Who rigged the tape recorder in Kelly's bedroom to help Zack bag that hunny? Who sat in the Max, under a table, in a hardhat, to patch Zack through to Ken Kelly for the opportunity to win that Hawaii trip? Who gets taken advantage of time and time again by the big, bad preppy for moneymaking schemes (Screech's Secret Sauce and Screech's Lucky Beret, just to name a few)? Who not only gets suckered into singing the lead for the dorky glee club concert, but also gets stuck hooking up with pre-boob job Tori Spelling in the same episode? You guessed it, Screech Powers.

Like the Sox, no matter what Screech does, he just can't win...or land Lisa Turtle. Let's be honest, I could bag Lisa Turtle. The last time she had an acting job was in Dru Hill's "Remember the Times" video, before they broke up, got back together, and sold seven more records. So why not Screech? Well, he's likeable, but he's got three major things going against him from the start besides his hair – 1) He's unlucky 2) He's an idiot, and 3) By the time he's got his books, and gives himself a look, he's at the corner just in time to see the bus fly by.

It's not like nothing good ever happens to him, but being the class valedictorian, beating Peter Breznep in the chess final, or winning the Ms. Bayside pageant just doesn't compare to one day getting a booty call from Lark Voorhies. Meanwhile, Zack combs his hair differently one episode and falls backwards into a random make out session with her. And that's why we, as Screech fans, hate Zack (Yankees Suck!) and root for Samuel Powers (Nomah's Bettah). It's a little thing called loyalty; it's a little thing called hope, a hope that some special day in our lifetimes, Dustin Diamond will come out of rehab for a SBTB reunion special and finally nail that fine piece we call Lark (World Series 2003). I wouldn't give up that hope for anything in the world.

And you know what? Maybe that day will come, and maybe it won't, but that's not even the point. Because even if it doesn't, we know that we can take solace in the fact that every once in a while, Zack will end up with an ugly chick on a motorcycle named Tori, at which point we will laugh, and then we will riot.

Matt Brochu is a Collegian columnist.

Letter to the Editor

Ever since news about the sad demise of the ALANA seats on the Student Government Association broke, this editorial section has been littered with articles of anger and bitterness, mostly aimed at the "evil anti-democratic Jared Nokes" who was clearly bent on getting ALANA out of the SGA almost as bad as Mitt Romney was ... well, lets not get into that one. The truth is, when I heard about ALANA losing its allotted seats in the SGA, I was outraged as well, but I think in a different way than most. I was outraged to learn that ALANA was even given seats without election on the SGA in the first place.

You see, unfortunately the daily issues and concerns of the SGA seems very far from my life that is cluttered enough with OWL's, Tuesday/Thursday lectures, Friday morning discussions, etc. While I'm certainly interested in how the SGA affects my existence here as a student, I was definitely not aware that seats on this SGA were handed out to some organizations without so much as a student signature.

I mean here I am, thinking that I'm enrolled at an overwhelmingly liberal campus and suddenly, walking past the Student Union, me and my big brown conservative Republican eyes see an ALANA rally in support of what appears to me to be the presence of racial quotas in our student government. I mean, what else do you call student government seats being handed out to a minority organization, allowing them to circumvent any sort of election, just based on the fact that they are from such an organization? Is that not the definition of a racial quota?

To extend the ridiculousness even further, it's incredibly easy to get into the SGA! There's never a year in which there are too many people who even want the job. From what I've read, the motion to eliminate the ALANA caucus was made, voted on, and passed in front of the ALANA representatives whom didn't even make an effort to protest. What is that about?

So ALANA, if you're going to block the entrance to the Student Union, rally about tuition increases, the elimination of the physical education department, the rising cost of parking lot stickers or the quality of DC food. But please, don't get in my way and shout in my ear about SGA seats that you didn't earn, didn't use, and could obtain the democratic way by getting 25 measly signatures and three student votes. Racial quotas should have no presence in student government. Period. Go Bush '04.

Michael Reardon
UMass student

www.dailycollegian.com

Submit a letter or opinion

You only live twice

Sanam Hakim

Throughout time, humans have been disagreeing about everything, all with valid reasoning. For example, half of the population argues that abortion is morally incorrect, while the other half argues that it is morally acceptable. Both groups can give some pretty good arguments, and technically, both groups can be correct.

On the other hand, there are topics with completely unprecedented arguments that disqualify the topic from being an argument to begin with. Cloning is one such topic.

I think cloning, as a debate topic, is just a major misunderstanding. People that think cloning is bad are merely looking at it the wrong way, or, more specifically, blind to how cool it would be to have little clones running around everywhere.

Physiologically speaking, these clones should probably all be really short and wear special clone hats, just so when they're walking down the street, there will be no doubt that they are the clone. It would cause a lot of problems if the clones were our height and didn't wear the hats because then someone would constantly be mistaking them for us.

Realistically speaking, these clones should not be educated to a full degree – no one wants a smart clone. Let's say, for example, that you are meeting one of your friends for dinner, and your clone found itself very attracted to your friend. Your clone could knock you out, hide you in a closet, take of it's hat, and go out with your friend in your place, making moves on him or her the entire night.

The next day, when you try to explain to your friend that it was all a misunderstanding because your clone beat you up and hid you in a closet, your smart clone might just think to disappear for the night. Try getting THAT friend to talk to you again, psychopath!

Otherwise, having a clone would be a complete convenience. If you're trying to make a box of Pasta Roni, and you realize you don't have the two-thirds cup of milk to make the cheese sauce, you could just send your clone out to run some errands. For this reason, it should probably be federal law for all clones to have driver's licenses. Actually, it might even be better if they had their own little underground clone transportation system. As I said earlier, if the clone forgot or lost its hat, it could be mistaken for us, and, thus, cause serious problems with our social lives. The underground clone transportation system would just keep them on a low profile.

Clones would be college-friendly and great for students with any major. Vocal majors would always have someone to harmonize with. Culinary students would always have a helping hand to baste turkeys or frost cakes. Athletes will always have someone to toss a ball around with. As far as the budget goes, having clones live on campus would not put a big dent in the budget. Clones wouldn't need a meal plan because most of us have a hundred or more swipes left at the end of each semester, anyway. The only change would be to have each meal plan be a joint account between the student and the clone. Housing presents a slight problem that could easily be solved with my proposition to order mass quantities of lofting kits. The clones could probably fit in the giant under-the-bed storage containers, but it would be blatant cruelty to make them sleep underneath an un-lofted bed.

Having a clone would also give you the opportunity to make one huge mistake in your life.

Having a clone would also give you the opportunity to make one huge mistake in your life, which is something we all try to avoid. Let's say you get arrested for something. All you'd have to do is call your clone and tell it you miss it. Then, when it comes to visit you, you can just switch places and go on living your life ... no harm done.

In conclusion, I think cloning is a great idea that should be implemented in our society. It would not only help boost individualism and self-improvement, but it would completely turn around the mentality based on the quote, "you only live once." Let's face it, if we had clones, we'd all be able to live TWICE.

Sanam Hakim is a Collegian columnist.

R-E-S-P-E-C-T

College town living means college town drinking. Of course, the parents can't expect every student to devote their entire four-plus years to studying. What do they think this is, a full-time job? Social skills are equally as important as reading and discussing Howard Zinn's People's History of the United States. You don't cite substance in that interview with Morgan Stanley; you use form. If this is confusing, maybe it will all be a bit clearer after I tell you a story.

Aaron R.S. Lorenz

Some of my friends and I decided to venture out of our over-priced apartment and drown the sorrows of being 21 in the local taverns. There were five of us, and we were ready to release the tension that builds after sitting through an entire 50-minute lecture on a Friday. I mean, why is it relevant to discuss revolution and what that entails anyway? I certainly can't use that in my future.

Back to drinking. So we walked into this bar and stood at the host/hostess stand. While I saw the sign that read, "Please wait to be seated," I assumed it was meant for someone else. I gallivanted up to the bar and pondered what it was I would drink. The bartender had a busy bar, but my friends and I were thirsty. My friends seemed discouraged that the bar was so full because this would hamper our need to drink fast and often. I calmed them down quickly because I know the universal sign to get a bartender's attention: I waved my crisp, clear twenty-dollar bill.

I know the bartender saw me because he looked at me, and my money, but helped other customers before he got to me. He must have been in a bad mood. When he finally got to me, I ordered my beer. I didn't want the fifty cents change so I left it for the help. Then the bartender seemed upset as my friends individually ordered beers for themselves and paid separately. What did he expect us to do, develop a system whereby someone buys the first round and another buys the second?

We walked around the bar and made our presence known. I finished my beer and set it down for some waiter or waitress to pick up later because I wanted another drink in a fresh glass. The bar had become busier in the meantime, so I had to wait again. Instead of waving my money this time, I decided to try and get his attention a different way. I waited for the bartender to notice me standing there but after about 30 seconds, I figured he didn't see me. So, I walked to the other side of the bar. I waited there for a minute, but the bartender seemed to be helping everyone else but me. He really needed to establish some kind of system so that people like me didn't have to wait two minutes for a drink.

For my third drink, I thought the best way to get the bartender's attention was to use common sense, so I shouted, "Hey!" He walked right by me but glared at me as he passed. I know he had a full bar but I am as important as everyone else sitting there, right? This time, I told him I wanted to run a tab and gave him my credit card. I think that was a good move.

My friends and I stayed at the bar until it closed. Right before last call, I waved the bartender over with my hand, just to get his attention. He was glaring at me again. It was like I couldn't do anything right. I told him I would take my credit card back and pay cash. He gave me my check but my friends and I were drinking and talking. Finally, they turned off the music, turned up the lights, and started cleaning the bar.

All the while the bartender kept asking me if I needed anything else. What else would I need? Last call was already done; I was just relaxing with my friends. I figured I could pay my tab whenever since he had to clean up and everything. I mean, that is what they are there for right – servants?

In case you haven't guessed yet, I am a bartender. That is an amalgamation of various stories that unfortunately occur on a regular basis here in Amherst. Since there is no course on proper bar etiquette, let me give those of you who are 21 some pointers and those nearing the drinking age some guidance when you enter the great beyond.

First, do not wave me over with any appendage or monetary amount. I am not a servant. I am serving you on your night of relaxation. If you sit patiently, any good bartender will notice you within 30 seconds.

Next, tipping is designed to thank the bartender for serving you because you did not want to serve yourself or lack the ability to do so. I perform a task that you cannot perform, but I am not paid like a mechanic or an attorney. Therefore, the tip is because I make $2.63 per hour in Massachusetts.

Also, remember, this is our job. We are skilled in this area. We have an idea of what we are doing and will get to you as soon as possible. Believe me, we want a drink in your hand as much as you do.

When you come up to the bar, have the entire order ready. It saves everyone time. Paying for five drinks with five twenty dollar bills goes against all forms of logic.

And most importantly, be sure to respect your server. Bartending is not a glamorous position; life is not like "Cocktail" and we are not all Tom Cruise. After you go home with a good buzz, we mop the floor and scrub the dishes. If you approach your bartender with respect, it will be returned. If your bartender is rude to you, it is almost certainly because you did something asinine. Be introspective.

Feel free to ask any bartender to clarify these points. We are more than happy to make your drinking experience one that we will all enjoy.

Aaron R.S. Lorenz is a UMass Student.

The logical question: Why?

I had originally planned on writing my column on another topic, but a couple of recent columns here in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, devoted to "terror in Israel," should be put into context, a context that is absent from those columns. Those pieces were conspicuously absent of any reference to the cause of the terror, something obvious to anyone with any familiarity with the region. In these pieces, the most important question has not been asked: Why is Israel's safety in peril? The reason, of course, is the 36-year occupation of the lands of the Palestinians.

Jeffrey Napolitano

Thirty-six years – can U.S. citizens even comprehend what having their country occupied by a hostile, foreign military entails? Can you imagine the disposition of fellow citizens if Mexico invaded and occupied 78 percent of the United States for 36 years, however laughable that might be? Would people of the United States be justified in anger against a foreign occupier? Do you think a portion of our population would resort to violence against a foreign invader?

There is an often-invoked argument concerning the war of 1967, in which Israel was at war with surrounding Arab countries. During the war, Palestinians fled or were driven from their homes, and Israel still refuses to allow them to return. The argument is along the lines of, "Israel won the Palestinian territory in a war, fair and square. Why should they give back territory they won?" If we applied the same standard to America after World War II, then Germany, Italy and Japan would all be U.S. colonies. Do you think many Europeans would be happy with America occupying and continually giving new parcels of German, Japanese, or Italian land to U.S. citizens?

In another part of the world, our country has now occupied Iraq for four months, and most of us can sympathize with the Iraqi people wanting to have their country back within their control. Israel has held on to Palestinian land for not four months, but 36 years, so our sympathy for the victims of that occupation should be just as strong.

References to "Israel's suffering" and "Israel's hope for peace" fly utterly in the face of the behavior of the government of that country. While the attitude of the people of Israel may be separate from the government, Israel is a democratic country, and ultimately the actions of the people are reflected in the government. Israel is a country that performed torture as an interrogation method until it was outlawed by its high court in 1999. Israel is a country which has violated human rights over and over again, including, but not limited to, collective punishment, demolition of civilian buildings and homes and confiscation of land. Israel is a country that has violated far more U.N. Resolutions than Iraq, including U.N. condemnations for not observing the Geneva Conventions, committing international aggression, and deporting Palestinians from their own country. Most striking of all, Israel has committed war crimes, crimes against humanity – ironically, the very kind of crimes Nazi leaders were convicted of after WWII.

Israel's "safety" is in jeopardy because it refuses to adhere to international law, it refuses to allow a deported people to return to their land and because it refuses to adhere to standards of human decency. Its safety is in jeopardy because it has carried out an illegal occupation and acts of terrorism against the people it occupies. That answers the question of why.

The other point, pleadingly made in both "A Virtual Insanity" and "Bus Bombing Hits Close to Home." is the United States' support of Israel. The author insists that we "urge our government leaders" and "must support Israel's defensive military action." There are two responses to such requests; we already do, and secondly, should we continue to?

The United States is the strongest, and sometimes only, ally of Israel. Since its creation, the United States has given Israel its unwavering support, for the obvious reason that its position gives the United States a pivotal client state in the oil-rich region of the Middle East. Israel's overwhelming military power, derived from the United States and greater than any Western European country, includes illegal possession of nuclear arms. When one decries the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction in Iraq and the Middle East, it is hypocritical to ignore the blatant threat of nuclear weapons by Israel. And the hypocrisy is intensified when we consider which country gave those weapons to them.

How much support has the United States given to its favorite client, its number one recipient of foreign aid? Since 1948, roughly 89 billion dollars. That seems like a lot of "support" to me.

But U.S. support doesn't end there. U.S. aid often comes in the form of Boeing attack helicopters and F-22 jets. These are not "defensive" weapons, and have been used only for either assassinations or indiscriminate killing in Palestinian territory.

Furthermore, the most grievous abuse of power by the United States on behalf of Israel is the myriad of U.N. vetoes it has cast. In fact, just this Tuesday, the United States vetoed a U.N. resolution calling on Israel to refrain from abducting or assassinating Yasser Arafat, the leader of the Palestinian government.

The United States has dismissed, almost always by itself, resolutions dealing with human rights abuses, incidents of Israeli violence in Lebanon and much more, preventing Israel from being held accountable for its crimes.

If Israel wishes to end violence in its land, the most sensible action it could take is simply to stop committing violence and to begin to obey the most uncontroversial of international laws.

If we, as members of the greatest supporter and benefactor of Israel, are to urge our government to do anything, it should be to begin to hold Israel accountable for its behavior and to, in turn, urge it to end its illegal occupation. When that happens, then will come the day we won't have to worry anymore about buses being blown up.

Jeffrey Napolitano is a Collegian columnist.

Actions speak.
Words are louder.
Write for Ed/Op.
Be heard.

Big Y® WORLD CLASS MARKET™
We've Got It All!

WELCOME BACK UMASS® STUDENTS!

175 University Drive
Amherst · 413-253-0416
Monday-Saturday
7am-11pm
Sunday 7am-10pm

WE ACCEPT OCMP!

Prices Effective September 18th to 24th
In Our Amherst Store Only.

From Our Kitchen

Sandwich Shop Hours:
7am to 9pm Every Day
Pizza Shop Hours:
9am to 9pm Every Day

Slice of Cheese Pizza and Regular Fountain Soda
$1.99
Save On Up To 5

Honey Stung Drummies
BUY 1lb·GET 1lb*
FREE
Save On Up To 5
*Package of equal or lesser value

13 Inch, Take & Bake Pepperoni Pizza
2 FOR $5
Save On Up To 10

To Place A Grinder Order
Call: 253-8098

Your Choice of Large Grinder
$5
Save On Up To 5

Come In and Sign Up For Your
FREE
Big Y® Express Savings Club™ Card
To Save On Items Throughout The Store Week After Week... After Week!

Big Y Unmass Athletics Express Savings Club

See Store For Details On More Ways To Save!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
ARTS & LIVING
Thursday, September 18, 2003
arts@dailycollegian.com

Hooked on festivals

Three events will keep the young and old of Hampshire County entertained this weekend

Wormtown Music Fest

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

It's not quite Bonaroo or Berkfest, but if you are sucker for "jam band" festivals, you can get your kick close to home this weekend.

Friday, Sept. 19 marks the start of the fifth Annual Wormtown Music Fest — a three-day musical and camping extravaganza jam-packed with some of the best "jam bands" from around the nation. Held on the campus of Camp Kee-Wanee, located of Rt. 91 in Greenfield, the festival kicks off at 1 p.m. on Friday with the band Attention Shift on Stage 1. The fest concludes on Sunday at 8:45 p.m. with a set from Percy Hill.

Planned to perform during the three days and two nights are such acts as bluegrass banjoist Gordon Stone, former Strangefolk front man Reid Grenauer and a past winner in the University of Massachusetts Battle of the Bands contest, Psychedelic Breakfast.

Event organizers have called this year's concert, "the biggest and best of all the Wormtown Music Festivals." All together there will be 39 bands playing on three stages over roughly 72 hours.

And unlike most other music festivals, organizers have allowed the audience to stay and camp overnight on Sunday to refrain from any drunk or sleep-deprived driving.

On Saturday and Sunday the music begins bright an early at 9:30 a.m. Also, during the two nights, there will be late night jam sessions with such bands as Brothers Past and Holywater Undertoe to keep those who are having trouble getting to bed – for some reason – entertained.

Tickets to get into the festival cost $48 in advance and $60 at the gates. They are available at www.jambasetickets.com or by calling 508-753-8882. A portion of the proceeds will be donated to Camp Kee-Wanee, which specializes in programs in visual and performing arts for campers with disabilities.

For a complete artist line-up and schedule see page 9.

Anime 2 Festival

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

This weekend swords will clash, castles will fly and children will see their parents turned into giant pigs. No, it is not a crazy dream. It is Anime 2, the second annual fair of its kind put on by the Academy of Music and the Northampton Arts Council. The fair will run Saturday and Sunday at the Academy of Music Theater in Northampton.

This festival celebrates the art form that is Anime, a genre of Japanese cartoon that is gaining a cult following here in the United States. Most of the films that will be shown at the festival will over a decade old, but others such as "Perfect Blue" are created through using the latest computer animation.

"The whole thing is pretty geeky, but it is a great time," said Ian Adams, an Amherst Regional High School senior. Adams was brought on board for the initial Anime festival, "I heard that they were trying to put together an Anime fest and then [spokesman for the Academy of Music] Bob Cilman came to talk to me about helping him put together the lineup of films for the event."

Adams ended up working at the festival announcing the movies to the 2,000-plus member crowd.

"It was huge, and the great thing was, none of use expected it to be that big," Adams said.

All proceeds from the festival are donated to the Academy of Music Theater. Last year's show, which was only a one-day event, raked in about $10,000. Tickets are sold by the series for $20, day tickets for $12 or individual shows tickets are $6 apiece. Series tickets can be bought in advance at Modern Myths Comics and Cards, located at 34 Bridge Street Northampton.

Anime 2 will be more than just an all-day cartoon binger. There will also be a Cosplay, or costume contest held each day at 1 p.m. in front of the theater. Enthusiasts are encouraged to come dressed as their favorite anime character in order to have a chance at winning DVDs and other prizes.

This year's anime selections include

Continued on page 9

The Big E

Entertainment for everyone at the Big E

Entertainment at the Big E varies from Equestrian to Journey, from stomach-dropping rides to ABBA cover bands. There is no shortage of activities to partake in or performers to watch, and this year is no exception.

The Comcast Stage, which is the main performing stage at the fair, is no stranger to huge musical acts. Groups such as O-Town and Def Leppard have graced the grounds of the fair in its extensive history. This year is no exception. Bjorn Again, an ABBA cover band, was the first major act of the 2003 season to light up the stage. Also making appearances at this year's fair are country superstars Darrel Worley and Martina McBride, R&B princess Ashanti, as well as a one-night performance of the Irish international dance troupe "Spirit of the Dance."

The Comcast Stage is a refreshingly intimate setting to see performing superstars of today and yesterday. It's post-

Continued on page 9

Big E food facts to satisfy your appetite

As the summer begins its steady march into the past, a single event sparks the interest of New Englanders everywhere. It's true, folks, the Big E has returned to the Springfield area and will remain there until the end of the month. So if you haven't made the trip to the fairgrounds yet, there's still ample opportunity before the gates close and autumn officially returns to western Massachusetts.

Any reason for attending the Big E is a good one. Thrill-seekers might want to wait in line for the chance to be dropped, flung, spun or bounced on one of the Midway rides. Animal lovers can mingle with furry friends at the horse shows in the Coliseum arena, the petting zoos interspersed throughout the grounds or one of the many livestock buildings. The musically inclined fans should grab early seats for whatever performance the evening holds.

One popular pastime for any ticket holder includes sampling all the food items the fair has to offer, before grabbing a seat on any available plot of grass and people watching for a few hours.

Continued on page 9

Timeless classics headline exhibits

When it comes to a rural country fair, one thing is for sure. It's all about the exhibits. And one exhibit this year at the Big E stands out in particular from the rest ... and with good reason. This one's all about the main news stories of years past — the blockbusters, surprises and even disasters that have shaped the United States into what it has become today.

Introducing "20th Century Headlines," as it's titled — an exhibit that takes up 5,600 square feet of the 48,000 square foot Young building. History buffs, newspaper junkies and mere culture enthusiasts will delight in walking around this annually dedicated space. Browse 115 framed original newspapers covers, from various papers throughout 28 states.

Each sports a front-page article from the world's most impacting stories, up to present day. Find the headlines on the infamous stories of the times:

Continued on page 9

Thursday thirsty for more

'Screamo' band infiltrates mainstream music world

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

This past summer, The New York Times ran a piece on the "summer of the screamo." Once again an underground style of music has been dragged into the mainstream, where it will processed, polished and manufactured until the sound with the hip new moniker grows weary and decidedly not hip. It's grunge all over again, as an indie subgenre is given a chance to shine, only to grow safe and toothless thanks to corporate conformity.

Thursday 'War All The Time' Victory/Island

Fatalistic doomsaying notwithstanding, screamo – like grunge in the early '90s – has already found it's leading voice, and that leading voice has given the genre its first true masterpiece: the band Thursday, who are hitting their stride – and boy are they hitting it – with their third release, "War All The Time."

COURTESY VICTORY/ISLAND

Thursday plays a combination of punk and hardcore called Screamo. The band's new album is called "War All the Time."

Screamo, for the uninitiated, is the third cousin of punk and hardcore, a marriage of the latter with the former's sensitive, pained, mostly mocked cousin emo. The lyrics of screamo often emphasize the personal, vulnerable aching of emo, while the music is often as brutalizing as the sound of hardcore: a typical screamo band, such as The Used or Finch, often alternate between sweet whisper and hoarse, violent screams.

The history of the major label's capitalism of grunge does cast a deep shadow over the sudden interest in screamo, but there is hope that the artists of the field can overcome the initial feeding frenzy: this is, after all, a proud musical community. Yes, there are glimmers of blind major label acceptance – Columbia recently signed A Static Lullaby and will reissue their debut CD "...And Don't Forget To Breathe," even though it's a CD wholly unworthy of such attention – but the jump of Thursday from indie Victory to major Island does signal an optimistic turn towards music that is vital and emotional rather than the plastic sounds of teenybop, nu-metal and bling-bling hip-hop.

At first glance, Thursday seem like a typically non-descript band. The members all look and dress like their fans, and do nothing that gives them much attention – even their name is not very grand. But their sound certainly is.

Thursday first was noticed when the video for "Understanding in a Car Crash," off their sophomore effort "Full Collapse," became an unexpected hit on MTV2, and lead the CD to sales of 240,000, an impressive feat for a band from such a small, underground world. "Full Collapse" was a record of promise for a rising band, a shattering mixture of gut-wrenching emotional honesty, vocals both raw and soft, and twisting, turning musical craftsmanship. It was also an album in which the music never quite gelled – inpressive, but not enough to awe.

With "War All The Time," Thursday come to realize the promise and hype of "Full Collapse" and then some. It's a jaw-dropping achievement, at turns crushing and hopeful (sometimes at the same moment), full of the kind of virtuoso musicianship rarely heard in music anymore. It rivals Brand New's summer release "Deja Entendu" as the punk/hardcore/emo artifact of the year – and, yes, I'm fully aware of Rancid and The Mars Volta's new albums.

"War All The Time" is also one of the most perfect reflections on the devastation of 9/11 put to music, without ever once mentioning 9/11.

"For the Workforce, Drowning" begins with the line "falling from the top floor/your lungs fill like parachutes/the windows go rushing by/the people inside they're dressed for the funeral in black and white," a mind-blowing lyric that could refer to either that September tragedy or the mindless drudgery of corporate life. Thursday isn't the happiest group of souls – singer Geoff Rickly's high voice recalls that of The Cure's Robert Smith, and the music is often dark and tragic. But this isn't music without hope. In fact, this is a band whose logo is the dove, the symbol of peace.

On the title track, the destruction of a relationship strikes as painful a blow as the destruction of war ("we grew up too fast/ now were falling like ashes of American flags"); "Asleep at the Chapel" questions the blind faithfulness in both religion and idolatry; "M. Shepard" is a call to acceptance of all and everyone.

Rickley does the bulk of the lyric writing here, and he has a poet's ear; the words have a dark beauty to them. And the music is a perfect match, the guitars coiling and careening with serpentine majesty, the drums barreling and drumming with boiling intensity. The scream/sing dynamic has grown more comfortable and natural and the band continues with the sonic experimentation they flirted with on "Full Collapse" – the title track is a full-blown ballad, while "This Song Brought to You By A Falling Bomb" uses only a spare piano arrangement.

This isn't just good, this is major: a furious tornado that pounds and writhes with awesome force. This is the birth of a band to be reckoned with.

Keller Williams goes 'Home' alone

By Meghan Healy
Collegian Staff

It is a brave move for a modern-day musician to release an album that strays from the conventional and in Keller Williams's case, an intelligent one as well. With his latest release, "Home," Williams offers up a musically complex and lyrically clever record, simultaneously proving himself as a formidable musician and setting himself apart from all the other boys with guitars that seem to be dominating today's airwaves.

Keller Williams 'Home' Sci Fidelity Records

Among the tracks on "Home," Williams fans will be excited to see a collection of live favorites mixed with new songs created in the Fredericksburg, Va. studio where the album was recorded. Listeners may also be surprised to learn that the only musician appearing on the record is Williams himself. "I played acoustic and electric guitars and basses, guitar synthesizers, piano, organ, all kinds of percussion, drums, cymbals and of course, all the voices," Williams said in the album's release statement.

Though such an undertaking could prove disastrous for many artists, for Keller Williams it proved suiting. Since "Home" is his sole vision and his sole creation, every beat seems to fall in sync. Not only did this experiment in record-making grant solidity to the album, it also allowed the musician the chance to fulfill a long-standing dream. "Being the sole player on the record is something I've wanted to do for a long time," Williams said.

Armed with an arsenal of previously unreleased material and scores of tracks written in the studio, Williams and co-producer Jeff Covert stumbled over which direction to take the material in. "The original idea was to do a double CD; one being vocal and one being instrumental. Instead, I trimmed it down to one disc; half vocal and half instrumental," said Williams in a letter to fans on his website. The balance between these two song forms is brilliant, keeping "Home" inventive and engaging throughout. The album is an evolving entity, shifting with each track, shaping a unique experience for the listener.

Though the eclectic sound found in the instrumental tracks is the strong point of the album, "Home" does not hesitate to prove its lyrical propensity as well. "Love Handles," the album opener and the most radio-friendly track of the bunch, is a humorous and intelligent commentary on the pressures society places on people to have a certain body type. "So if you need a hand hold/ Baby you can take hold/ of my love handles/ More of me to love" shows Williams is whimsically offering up his imperfections as something others should grab on to.

Tracks like "You Are What You Eat" and "Victory Song" again allow Keller Williams the chance to display his impressive wit and remarkable ability to play with words, putting an unforeseen spin on the more traditional modus operandi for lyrics. In "Victory Song," a tune ostensibly about Martians, Williams asks the listener to hear what is being said underneath the comical facade. He decrees, "pretty soon some humans from Earth/ Will want to defect/ Be a part of the winning team/ Hopefully that can be avoided/ And we can be the underdog/ Come back from behind/ I think there is still time."

In "Home," Keller Williams offers more than solid instrumental tracks and thought-provoking lyrics. He has created a work of art.

COURTESY WWW.WKNR.COM

Keller Williams goes completley solo on his record "Home."

Entertainment at the Big E

Continued from page 7

tioned at the very entrance of the fair, and seating is extraordinarily limited. During O-Town's stint at The Big E two years ago, teenyboppers began arriving and picking their seats when the fair opened in the morning. Everyone who wants to see the show sees it though, as the Big E provides large screens on both sides of the stage so even those who don't make it into the arena in time to find seats can see the performers from the outside. The best seats in the house aren't even in front of the stage, they are in fact in the area behind the stage where the performers occasionally stop and sign autographs.

On top of a bill of performance acts to satisfy any musical taste, the Big E has a wide selection of other forms of entertainment, including parades, horse shows and petting zoos.

There is a daily parade with a Mardi Gras theme that takes place on weekdays at 7:30 p.m. and on weekends at 5 p.m. There are many vibrantly colored floats with costumed performers tossing beads into the crowd. Parade attendees have the chance to catch a "lucky" strand of beads, which wins them a surprise gift and an opportunity to win a special grand prize at the end of the month.

Animals make up a huge part of the fair; there are several 4-H competitions that take place through out the month-long fair, as well as equestrian competitions and petting zoos. The petting zoos feature sheep and goats, as well as a mother pig and her squealing babies. The Eastern States Exposition Horse Show is another event that an avid fairgoer doesn't want to miss. Spectators can young competitors participate in equestrian or witness the strength of teams of horses compete the North American Six-Horse Hitch Classic World Championship, as both are held in the Coliseum on the fairgrounds.

There are many different flavors of entertainment to satisfy any kind of performance preference. From music to animals, to riding elephants or seeing a world-renowned dance troupe, The Big E offers a wide variety of performances and entertainment to watch while you're digesting those famous Maine baked potatoes.

-Lizzy Nielsen

Newspaper classics exhibit

Continued from page 7

the sinking of the Titanic, the beginnings and ends of wars across the decades, presidential elections and losses of life.

Papers in cities form Boston, New York, Washington, Chicago and more populate the walls. Even the local Union News of Springfield has a few showcases of its own.

But perhaps the most exciting bit this exhibit derives from the blandest of covers, for the front of the show hall offers American newspapers from the 19th century. Each case houses parchment from the days of old, clearly printed on aged paper and run through the old presses of yesteryear. The fanciest among them even flaunt the classic ink and pen sketches for which vintage papers have become so well known.

The exhibit is open from 10 a.m.-10 p.m. while The Big E – the ninth largest fair in the country – runs, from Sept. 12-28.

-Jennifer Eastwood

PHOTOS COURTESY BIG E CO.

Crazy foods all over the E

Continued from page 7

The palate-pleasing fair fare can entice even the most finicky of eaters.

Whether you enjoy the traditional corn dogs and sausage grinders found at variably any carnival or the at-home feeling of a plated chicken dinner, the Big E will make sure you leave satisfied.

Neither the stomach nor the wallet of any person can withstand the amount of food presented during a single evening at the Big E. Tried and true fairgoers will admit to bringing a willing friend to split both cost and portions of any food purchase. Oftentimes this advice works for dieters who just want a little taste instead of a big waistline.

Those persons who choose to disregard caloric intake can settle in for a night of greasy fingers and powdered sugar moustaches. Recent trends in the carnival circuit lean towards battering our favorite guilty pleasures and giving them a quick plunge in a fat lacuzzi. Fried Oreos have appeared on the menu of at least one cart and I'm sure it won't be long until deep-fried Twinkies and candy bars join the ranks as well.

Speaking of desserts, fans of the Big E Creampuff may rejoice once more! The behemoth, Bavarian wonder returns as the dessert of choice for fairgoers. Last year's introduction of the dessert left a permanent impression on the taste buds of thousands and accordingly the creampuff is making an encore appearance. Long lines are to be expected, but dessert lovers will discover the wait is well worth it.

The Avenue of States is a culinary adventure in itself. Each of the six buildings represents a particular state in the Northeast with examples of indigenous crafts, foods and attractions. Overstuffed baked potatoes from the Maine building have people forming lines and waiting for hours to experience the freshly baked spuds. And who could ask for a better finish to this meal than a slice of warm blueberry pie or Vermont's famous Ben and Jerry's ice cream?

September doesn't last forever, so if you do choose to join the festivities, it's important to remember one rule; go to the Big E with an empty stomach and leave with a smile on your face.

-Jessica Pelletier

Wormtown Music Fest Schedule

Friday, Sept. 19

Stage 1	1-2 p.m.	Attention Shift	Stage 2	2-3 p.m.	Grapes of Vaudvillian Fantasy
	3-4 p.m.	Reed Street			ulu
	5-6:15 p.m.	Luke Patchen		4-5 p.m.	Depth Quartet
		Monigomery of Strangefolk		6:15-7:30 p.m.	Reid Genauer & The Assembly of Dust
	7:30-8:45 p.m.	Slipknot		8:45-11 p.m.

Late Night Cabin: Oak Street, Peter Prince & the Trauma Unit, Revival, Brothers Past

Saturday, Sept. 20

Pavilion 9:45-10:45 a.m. Jeff Martel

Stage 1	10:45-11:45 a.m.	Dr. Juice	Stage 2	11:45-12:45 p.m.	A440
	12:45-1:45 p.m.	Rather Beats		1:45-2:45 p.m.	Zen Tricksters
	2:45-3:15 p.m.	The Wedding		3:15-4:15 p.m.	Uncle Sammy
	3-4:15 p.m.	Flipper Dave		5:15-6:30 p.m.	Psychedelic Breakfast
	4:15-5:15 p.m.	Gordon Stone			Max Creek
	6:30-7:45 p.m.	Jen Durkin & the Bomb Squad		7:45-11 p.m.

Late Night Cabin: Jiggle, RAQ, Concentric, Brothers Past

Sunday, Sept. 21

Pavilion 10-11 a.m. Coalboilers

Stage 1	11 a.m.-1:30 p.m.	Leroy White	Stage 2	12:30-1:30 p.m.	Townhall
	1:30-2:30 p.m.	Electric Blue & the Kozmik Truth		1:30-2:30 p.m.	Electric Blue & the Kozmik Truth
	4-5 p.m.	Rev. Tor Band		4-5 p.m.	Rev. Tor Band
	6:15-7:30 p.m.	Entrain		6:15-7:30 p.m.	Entrain
	8:45-10:45 p.m.	Percy Hill		8:45-10:45 p.m.	Percy Hill

Late Night Cabin: Seth Yacovone Band, Holywater Undertoe

Kids and adults find fun at Anime 2 festival in Noho

Continued from page 7

six of the most representative animas available, running the gamut from G-rated family flicks to R-rated thrillers.

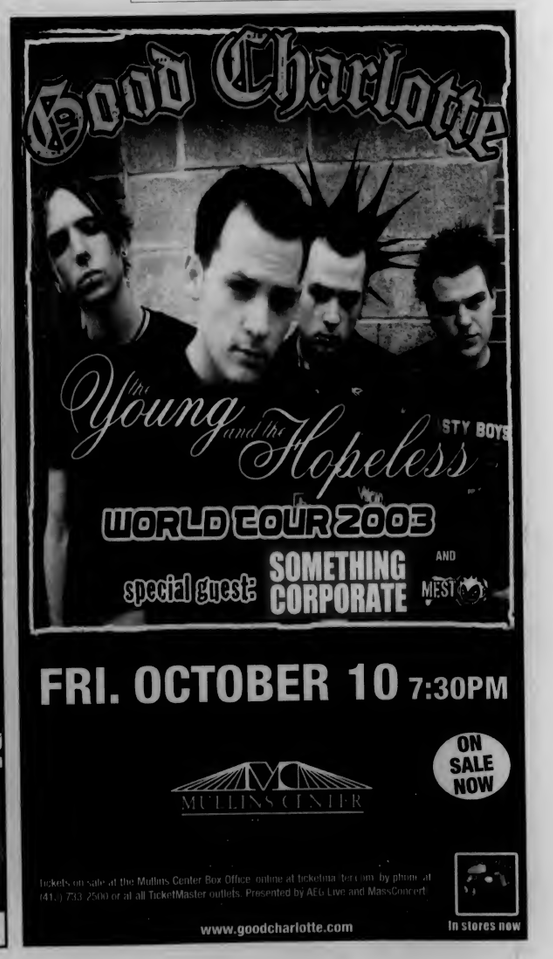
Saturday's lineup kicks off with the G-rated "Kiki's Delivery Service" at 11 a.m. Presented by Disney, "Kiki's Delivery service" is the tale of a young witch forced to leave her home by tradition in order to become independent. This is a film for all ages and running time is 105 minutes.

Following the Cosplay comes the box office smash "Castle in the Sky" at 1:30 p.m. Released in 1986, this Disney presentation is the story of a boy who meets a little girl and together they discover a floating castle complete with treasure and trouble. Running time for this film is 125 minutes and it is rated for all ages.

Winding out the opening day will be the newest anime of the day, the 1996 release, "X." This is the tale of a warrior who is caught in a battle between two dragons. One wants to save humanity and the other wants to destroy mankind altogether. It is rated R for violence and nudity and running time is 98 minutes.

COURTESY DISNEY

The Anime 2 festival will show movies dating as far back as 1986.



Sunday starts off at 11 a.m. with the family anime, "My Neighbor Totoro." Released in 1988, this anime is about two girls who move to a country house in the 1950s with their father where they encounter a multitude of magical creatures. This flick is rated G and the running time is 86 minutes.

"Macross Plus: The Movie" follows the second Cosplay. This movie tells the story of two space pilots and a woman who manages a hot galactic act and are reunited after seven years. Their past comes back to bite them, though. This movie contains some mild violence and has a running time of 120 minutes.

Closing the festival will be, "Perfect Blue." This is a highly cinematic anime that tells the story of a woman pursuing her dream of becoming an actress. This movie contains violence and some nudity and may not be suitable for all audiences.

The theater will be providing its usual array of goodies accompanied by fresh sushi donated by the Teapot and the Osaka restaurants. For more information contact the Northampton Arts Council.

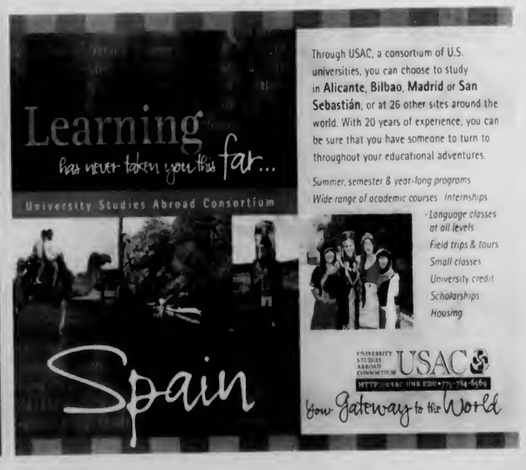
Are you on a spiritual quest?
Seeking community?
Wondering how to love Christ and creation?

Catholic Christianity may be the way for you.

Learn more during an informal inquiry session. Your hosts will relate journeys of faith, respond to queations, and describe how people come into full communion with the Church through RCIA (Rite of Christian Initiation for Adults) is a sacramental process in which the Church intiates new members.

The door is open: baptized and non-baptized adults are regularly called into communion through RCIA. Come and see if it is for you.

Inquiry Sessions:
September 14, 21, or 28, 2003
5:30-7:00 p.m.



Newman Center Quigley Room
Your hosts: Deacon Richard Talbot,
Mrs. Joanne Talbot, Chris Clark
info 413-549-0300
email: info@ncc-umass.org
Newman website: www.umass.edu/catholic

The Newmn Center
is a Roman Catholic religious and cultural center located at the entrance of the University on the corner of North Pleasent St. and Massachusetts

Shear Bliss
Fantastic one time student package!
For $50 you receive …
* A Perfect haircut!
* Aveda mini-facial with hot towel!
* 10 Face framing foils!
* And More!
Take advantage of this fantastic offer and call!
253-2322
First 50 callers!
1st Time customers only!
Ends October 20th!

LIQUORS 44
Welcome Back!
Smirnoff Twist All Flavors 1.0 liter $12.99
1.75 liter $21.99
Jose Cuervo 1.75 liter $30.99
Crown Royal 750 ml $18.99
Smirnoff 80° Vodka 1.75 liter $18.99
Baileys Irish Cream 1.75 liter $34.99
Hennessy Cognac 750 ml $24.99
Johnnie Walker Red Label 1.75 liter $31.99
Tanqueray Gin 1.75 liter $26.99
½ KEGS
Bud / Bud Light $52.99
Coors Light $49.99
Natural Light & Ice $44.99
Michelob & Michelob Light $52.99
Berkshire Brewing (All Flavors) $99.99
All Kegs Plus Deposit
AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344
FULL REDEMPTION AT ALL LOCATIONS
VISA MasterCard
NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR TYPOGRAPHICAL ERRORS
DON'T DRINK & DRIVE

Obey the 'mix' of good music

By Nathan Rothstein
Collegian Staff

The sun had just begun to set and the towels had been gently placed on each microphone. A drawing of a large brain rose high above the stage, and the crowd bustled to their seats to brace themselves for the entering of Philadelphia's The Roots.

With the crowd standing and anticipating a great performance, the lights went out, and a loud bass chord could be heard, and then Black Thought began with, "Where the freaks at looking at me," on his boastful tune "Thought@Work."

The legendary Roots performed, but were missing Scratch and Rahzel, but featured two recently added members. Kirk Douglas, a guitar playing version of Michael's dad, and the soul singing, musical version of Martin Luther.

Their namesakes may be more notorious, but they proved themselves worthy of mention with outstanding performances at Sprite Liquid Mix's final stop at the Tweeter Center in Mansfield. Martin Luther sang the parts of Cody Chestnutt on "The Seed" and Musiq on "Break U Off", and even the first verse of Prince's "When Doves Cry." The crowd responded to these unique versions of The Roots hits, and he even briefly sang Erykah Badu's Grammy award winning chorus on "You Got Me."

As usual, The Roots finished their show by letting the crowd see what each member could do with their respective instruments. When The Roots had finally finished their set, they had once again surpassed expectations.

After Slightly Stoopid began the beautiful, Sunday afternoon doing nothing more than testing to see if the speakers worked with a dull, and lackluster performance, Robert Randolph and The Family Band reminded the audience why they had spent money on the show. The soulful, talented, blues/rock/funk band introduced and re-invented a new sound of music that pleasantly impressed the audience.

Talib Kweli, one half of hip-hop duo Black Star, but talented enough to carry a crowd by himself, was the first rapper of the six band set that lasted from 4-11 p.m. Playing as the sun set, Talib spoke of the better things in life, and inspired everyone to dance and have a good time on "Waiting for the DJ." He finished with a stirring and soulful version of the very powerful single, "Get By."

The Roots were a difficult act to follow, but O.A.R kept the crowd stimulated with a rousing performance that made even their disbelievers get out of their seats. They played their hits, and it never hurts to cover "No Woman, No Cry."

By the end of their set, most people had been at the Tweeter Center for six hours, and the last act seemed almost to be an afterthought. Despite being the headliners, Pharell's rock band, N.E.R.D. played to a half-empty crowd. Pharell's voice is very captivating, but was not enough to get the crowd going, the same way Martin Luther and The Roots had a few hours earlier. It was quite a disappointment to see everyone gone, and a full crowd would have made their performance much more worthwhile.

N.E.R.D.
O.A.R.
The Roots
Talib Kweli
Robert Randolph & the Family Band
Slightly Stoopid
'SpriteLiquid Mix Tour'
Tweeter Center
Mansfield
Sept. 12

COLLEGIAN/JEN SWEARINGEN-CLINTON/FILE

The Roots frontman, Black Thought.

Colvin to miss home opener

LB out with hip injury

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FOXBORO, Mass. – New England Patriots coach Bill Belichick was definite about one thing: Linebacker Rosevelt Colvin will miss the next game with a hip injury.

If Belichick knew the exact nature of the injury or how long Colvin would be out, he wasn't saying.

Belichick rarely gives details of injuries and said first that Colvin was hurt in the upper leg area before modifying that to "more in the hip area." Coaches are wary of having opposing teams learn such details.

Given the importance of Colvin, who led the Chicago Bears in sacks each of the past two years, coupled with the fact that the Patriots lost key defenders Lawyer Milloy and Ted Johnson already this season, Belichick was being pressed for information.

"What do you want me to tell you?" he told a persistent reporter at his regular Wednesday news conference. "It could be six weeks, it could be 12 weeks, it could be three weeks, it could be eight weeks. Take whichever one you want. That's why they're doing more tests."

So the left hip injury suffered in the second quarter at Philadelphia last Sunday will sideline Colvin for the Patriots' home opener Sunday against the New York Jets. But will he be back for New England's game the following Sunday at Washington?

"I don't know exactly how long he'll be out. He won't play this week," Belichick said.

Asked what was wrong with the hip, Belichick said he wasn't concerned with the specific nature of the injury, just how much time Colvin would miss.

"I don't know what to tell you," he said. "You can be as belligerent as you want about it. I can't give you any more information"

In a calm locker room, it was business as usual for the Patriots –another week, another missing defender.

On the Tuesday before the season opener at Buffalo, they released safety Milloy. In that game, linebacker Johnson broke a bone in his foot that could sideline him for half the season.

Then Colvin, who already had two sacks this season, was hurt when he recovered a fumble by Philadelphia's Donovan McNabb.

"It's tough on a team because if you could replace them that easily then they wouldn't be starters," safety Rodney Harrison said. "We will be tested now and we have to see what we're made of because those are three difficult losses for us."

Willie McGinest replaced Colvin and sacked McNabb twice. He's expected to start against the Jets. Roman Phifer got his first start of the year against Philadelphia as Johnson's replacement at inside linebacker.

Fortunately for the Patriots, linebacker is one of their deepest positions.

McGinest, a first-round draft pick in 1994, lost his starting position in 2001 but started 10 games last season. In his first nine seasons, he had 57 sacks.

"He's still a good pass rusher," defensive end Richard Seymour said. "He's filling in but he could easily be a starter in the league."

Without Johnson and Colvin, the other starting linebackers are Tedy Bruschi on the inside and Mike Vrabel outside.

"It's sort of similar to when Ted went down," Bruschi said of losing Colvin. "You just slide somebody up and you expect them to do the job."

Phifer said Colvin's absence won't change the game plan, and Harrison believes talk about the absent players will subside if the Patriots are successful.

"It has to come down to winning," Harrison said, "and if you're losing then people start questioning, you know, 'What about Rosevelt?' you know, 'What about Lawyer? What about Ted?'

So, coach, what about Rosevelt?

"He's not playing this week," Belichick said. "So you can write whatever you want to write, make it however long you want to make it. I don't know. I can't verify it one way or another."

ABC to continue John Ritter's sitcom without him

By Lynn Elber
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) – ABC executives have decided that the show must go on and will continue production of "8 Simple Rules for Dating My Teenage Daughter" despite the death of star John Ritter.

Network officials said Tuesday that the sitcom will show the TV family coping with his character's loss.

"Everybody recognizes that John loved that show. He'd have wanted the show to continue," Lloyd Braun, chairman of ABC Entertainment Television Group, told a telephone news conference Tuesday.

Braun and ABC Entertainment President Susan Lyne said the sitcom will premier next Tuesday as planned and that the network will air the three episodes Ritter filmed before his death last week. After that, the series co-starring Katey Sagal will go into repeats while writers retool it and production starts. No date was given for when the show will return to the air.

Ritter, making a TV series comeback 25 years after he starred in "Three's Company," became ill on the "8 Simple Rules" set and died last Thursday of an undetected heart problem. He was 54.

It hasn't been decided if the death of Ritter's character, Paul Hennessy, will mirror what happened to the actor, ABC executives said.

Ritter's series, which debuted last year with solid ratings, was considered a key part of ABC's comeback effort and anchored its Tuesday night lineup of family comedies.

www.dailycollegian.com

ADVERTISEMENT

Dear members of the University community past and present,

The coordinating Council is entrusted with the powers of the Undergraduate Student Senate during the summer. This summer the previous Senate left us the question of appointed seats and their role in the Senate apportionment. Since the previous Senate did not include appointed seats in the 2002-2003 apportionment schedule, the council voted that the Speaker should take no action that the Senate hasn't authorized with regard to appointed seats. Over the past week the issue of appointed seats and particularly the ALANA Caucus role in the Senate has been highly politicized.

The Coordinating Council is disturbed by the notion being portrayed in the media and by the members of the University community that the caucus has been eliminated. This is simply not true, over the years the ALANA Caucus has been far more than 8 seats. The ALANA Caucus has long been a force for inclusion in the Student Government Association and the Coordinating Council looks to the ALANA Caucus now more than ever to be a force for racial, ethnic, and cultural diversity. We look to the ALANA Caucus to increase voter turnout so that fourteen seats are not won with a single vote in the upcoming Senate election. We look to the ALANA Caucus to continue to be a great support to ALANA organizations and students as we continue to try and make this University a more welcome and inclusive environment. The Caucus is a vital component of the Student Government Association and we have every confidence that the Senate, in collaboration with the Caucus, will take a far more pro-active approach to diversity on campus. We look to the ALANA Caucus to be a resource in bringing these issues forward and we know that this year will bring a new commitment to the diverse needs of students.

In a perfect world we would not have to worry about diversity in Student Governance for it would always be present. The Coordinating Council understands that we don't live in a perfect world yet we are very pleased that two thirds of the Way and Means Committee, which formulates the Student Activities Trust Fund budget, were members of the ALANA community. We are also very pleased that over thirty percent of the Senate were members of the ALANA community (more than half of which were elected seats), a fact that has been inaccurately reported in the media over the past few days. The Coordinating Council is excited about the upcoming Senate elections and encourages everyone to get involved in the Student Government Association, where students continue to work for the enhancement of student life and the University as a whole.

Coordinating Council

The BLUE WALL PUB

THIS WEEK at The BLUE WALL PUB

MONDAY — Monday Night Football AND 10¢ Wings

TUESDAY — Karaoke

THURSDAY — Open Mic Series

FRIDAY — Live Acoustic Rock WITH Ryan Montbleau (Eddie Mcgarry Opening)

SATURDAY — Dance Music of the African Diaspora WITH M'peli Mwakaliku

LIVE MUSIC starts at 9:00PM.

OPEN MIC starts at 7:00PM. The Sign-Up sheet goes out at 6:00PM. Bring your talent and your friends and your instruments. We'll provide the stage and sound equipment and 20 minutes for you to knock'em dead!

ALL MUSICAL STYLES are encouraged to participate!

AS ALWAYS, 18+ to party, 21+ to drink.

COLLEGIAN/JENNIFER CLINTON

Jason Peebler and the Minutemen will look to get off on the right foot in conference play when they travel to Orono, Maine Saturday evening to face the Black Bears.

Tough test for UMass

Whipple winless in A-10 road openers

Continued from page 14

and I felt that they came out and competed. At some point you have to make plays to win the game, and that's what we have to do."

Part of the reason the coach was pleased with his squad's performance in Manhattan, Kan. was the tidiness with which the Minutemen handled the ball.

"I was happy about that, because if you turn the ball over against them, forget it, you're done," Whipple said. "We got a couple of picks, momentum swings, but we couldn't do anything on offense. I hope it's more of a credit to Kansas State's defense."

The highlight of the day — quarterback Jeff Krohn's 65-yard TD strike to Jason Peebler — even earned a spot on ESPN anchor Chris Berman's Top Ten, the result of a promise Berman made to Whipple, a fellow Brown alumnus.

Still, Whipple would rather focus on Saturday's contest.

"I'm more excited about this game than I was last week," he said. "I try to keep it under wraps, I knew the kids would be excited [last week], but we've got to make sure that they know that this is what it's all about, it's the biggest game of the year so far."

The next chapter of this season's happiest surprise — sophomore tailback Steve Baylark — also comes this weekend. Baylark, who was originally listed third on the depth chart but has been thrown into action after classmates R.J. Cubbs (academic discipline) and Raunny Rosario (week one knee injury) were eliminated from playing status, at least in the short term, has responded without missing a beat, averaging 4.7 yards per carry.

Sox shut out at home for first time in 2003

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) – Victor Zambrano allowed three hits in seven innings Wednesday night and Rocco Baldelli homered, leading the Tampa Bay Devil Rays to a 7-0 victory over the Red Sox – the first time Boston's been shut out at Fenway Park in more than a year.

Devil Rays	7
Red Sox	0

The last-place Devil Rays – 33 1/2 games out in the AL East – hurt the Red Sox in the wild-card race. Boston's lead over Seattle fell to two games, with the Mariners playing Texas later Wednesday night.

The Red Sox also missed a chance to gain ground on the Yankees in the AL East. New York lost 5-3 at Baltimore but remained 5 1/2 games ahead of Boston, cutting its magic number for clinching the division to five.

Tampa Bay had 16 hits to win for just the second time in nine games. Marlon Anderson was 3-for-4, and Al Martin was 2-for-2 after entering as a pinch-hitter in the sixth.

Zambrano (11-9) improved to 4-0, with one save, in his last five appearances at Fenway. He walked five, struck out three and hit two batters with pitches.

Lance Carter pitched two innings, finishing the six-hitter. Zambrano's last seven wins have come against teams with winning records.

It was the first time the Red Sox were shut out at home since Aug. 28 last year, when Mike Mussina blanked Boston on three hits; the previous day, David Wells and Steve Karsay combined to shut out the Red Sox on five hits.

Todd Walker's ninth-inning double was Boston's 608th extra-base hit of the season, breaking the major league record set by the 1996 Mariners.

Jeff Suppan (2-3) allowed five runs – four earned – on 10 hits in 5 1-3 innings. He walked three and struck out five.

Suppan left with runners on first and second, trailing 3-0. Scott Sauerbeck walked Aubrey Huff to load the bases, then struck out Travis Lee.

Jonny Gomes was announced as a pinch-hitter, and Mike Timlin was brought in to pitch to him. Then Tampa Bay manager Lou Piniella brought in Martin, and he singled to right-center to make it 5-0.

Anderson singled and scored the Devil Rays' first run in the second inning. Baldelli homered leading off the third, then Lee walked, went to third on Pete Laforest's single and scored on a base hit by Julio Lugo to make it 3-0.

Notes: Carl Crawford snapped an 0-for-13 stretch with his leadoff single in the first. ... Baldelli's homer helped commemorate Rhode Island day at Fenway. ... Huff leads all major leaguers with 44 RBIs since Aug. 1. ... CF Johnny Damon was a late scratch from the lineup with a left abdominal strain. Adrian Brown replaced him in the lineup.

Oasis Body Wraps and Tanning
243 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 587-9742

NOW FEATURING SUN SPRITZER UV FREE TANNING

• The first UV FREE tanning machine in the area
• Get $5.00 off your first visit
• A rich golden tan in just a few seconds
• You'll look and feel great

1/2 Price tanning every Tuesday

Conveniently Located
OASIS • Hampshire Mall • University Drive • UMASS

The Future of the Church & Your Role in it

A CONFERENCE FOR CATHOLIC COLLEGE STUDENTS IN THE DIOCESE OF SPRINGFIELD

27 SEPTEMBER 2003

NEWMAN CENTER SOCIAL HALL
472 NORTH PLEASANT STREET
AMHERST MA 01002 (on the edge of the UMASS campus)

Program

CHECK-IN - 9:30 AM

PANEL AND DISCUSSION - 10:00 AM
"LAY WOMEN AND LAY MEN IN THE CHURCH"

LUNCH IN THE CAFETERIA AND BREAK - 12:00 PM – 2:00 PM

PANEL AND DISCUSSION - 2:00 PM
"THE FUTURE OF THE CHURCH"
Four Panelists, including Dr. Mary Johnson, SND de Namur: Sociologist and co-author of "YOUNG ADULT CATHOLICS".

MASS - 4:30 PM
Newman Center's Chapel celebrated by Bishop Thomas Dupre

DINNER IN THE CAFETERIA - 6:00 PM
Film - 7:00 PM - for those who wish to stay

NO FEE: However, registration is necessary.

PLEASE RSVP:
by Sept. 24 to 413-549-0300 or info@ncc-umass.org.

Check out who's Recruiting at UMass this Semester!

Consolidated Graphics
The Pepsi Bottling Group
General Electric
Microsoft
Shawmut Design & Construction
MIT Lincoln Laboratory
Raytheon
Staples Inc.
Abercrombie & Fitch
The Boston Beer Company
Walt Disney World
Pepperidge Farm

For more information about internships, co-ops and full time opportunities with these (and other!) exciting employers, go to www-ccn.acad.umass.edu or call us at 545-2224

CareerServices

ATLANTIC 10 FOOTBALL

Preseason poll results:

Northeastern
Delaware
Massachusetts
Maine
Villanova
Hofstra
William & Mary
James Madison
Richmond
New Hampshire
Maine

-Preview written and compiled by Mike Marzelli-

Delaware
2002 record: [6-6 (4-5); seventh]
Current record: [2-0 (1-0)]
Head coach: K.C. Keeler (second season)
Preseason rank: 2

The Blue Hens had an up-and-down season in 2002 under first year head coach K.C. Keeler. However this group is a year older and wiser now, and should be primed for success in its second year in Keeler's system.

Quarterback Andy Hall returns to lead the spread offense in which he ran for 863 yards last year, although he is coming off of a shoulder injury he suffered in the spring.

UD will look to Germaine Bennett to carry the bulk of the load on the ground, and he will surely benefit from running behind a mammoth offensive line that includes All-American Jason Neyer.

The focal point for the Hens, however, will be on a very talented defense. Shawn Johnson, a Duke transfer and 2002 All-ACC selection, will anchor a strong defensive line while All Conference cornerback Sidney Haugabrook will lead an aggressive secondary.

James Madison
2002 record: [5-7 (3-6); ninth]
Current record: [1-1]
Head coach: Mickey Matthews (fifth season)
Preseason rank: 8

Head coach Mickey Matthews is in hot water at JMU, where the Dukes are coming off a year that saw them finish ninth in the A-10.

Florida transfer quarterback Patrick Dosh spurned the Dukes and instead landed at East Carolina, forcing Matthews to turn to the oft-injured Matt LeZotte (1,481 passing yards in 2002) to run the offense.

Alan Harrison is back after catching 55 balls in 2002, and will look to connect with LeZotte much more in 2003 if JMU is to be successful through the air.

On the ground, LeZotte will hand the ball off to promising true-freshman tailback Alvin Banks, who is considered by many around the conference to be a star in the making.

Since the Dukes could have difficulty moving the ball on offense, they will rely on their defense to keep them in games. Back is undersized defensive end Jerame Southern (4.5 sacks in 2002), as well as linebacker Isai Bradshaw.

New Hampshire
2002 record: [3-8 (2-7); 10th]
Current record: [1-2 (0-1)]
Head coach: Sean McDonnell (fifth season)
Preseason rank: 10

All is not well in Durham, as the Wildcats have now completed two consecutive losing seasons, allowing a whopping 33.5 points per game over that stretch. Back are nine starters on coach Sean McDonnell's defense, but that does not translate into a promise it those players do not improve upon their poor performances of a year ago.

Linebacker Alan Tolliman (72 tackles in 2002) will look to restore order to the ineffective unit, and will pair with Chris Robinson to give UNH an effective combination at linebacker.

Defensive back Aaron Thomas will look to solidify a shaky secondary that gave up a lot through the air last year, but he will not be able to do it alone.

On the offensive side of the ball, all eyes will be on quarterback Mike Granieri, as he is the team's top returning passer (1,826 and 12 touchdown passes), and rusher (186 yards).

The graduation of All-Conference back Stephen Lewis leaves a gaping hole in the Wildcat backfield, and Granieri must combine with R.J. Harvey in filling it if the 'Cats aspire to improve on their dreadful 2002 campaign.

Maine
2002 record: [11-3 (7-2); tied-first]
Current record: [2-1 (1-0)]
Head coach: Jack Cosgrove (11th season)
Preseason rank: 4

Maine won its second consecutive share of the A-10 title in 2002, however a three-peat will be difficult following the graduation of quarterback Jake Easton and All-American linebacker Stephen Cooper.

The Ron Whitcomb era began in Orono with the Black Bears season-opening loss to Montana, however the Bears will rely heavily on tailback and preseason All-American Marcus Williams to carry the load. When Whitcomb does look to throw, he has steady targets in Ryan Waller, Ivi Nwosu and Williams out of the backfield.

Maine's strength of the defensive side of the ball will be up front, where end Dennis Dotton-Carter and his 9.5 sacks in 2002 will be relied on to pressure opposing quarterbacks.

Freshman cornerback and A-10 Rookie of the Week Manauris Arias is part of a young, up-and-coming secondary that could be a weakness teams will look to exploit.

Massachusetts
2002 record: [8-4 (6-3); fourth]
Current record: [1-1]
Head coach: Mark Whipple (sixth season)
Preseason rank: 3

After missing the postseason in heartbreaking fashion, the Minutemen return 18 starters, including 10 on defense, giving coach Mark Whipple a seasoned, veteran squad with championship aspirations in 2003.

Former Arizona State-transfer Jeff Krohn will lead the offensive charge in his second year as signal-caller in Amherst, and will be playing behind one of the biggest offensive lines in school history.

Although he has not had the luxury of A-10 Rookie of the Year R.J. Cobbs playing along side him – Cobbs has been suspended indefinitely for "academic discipline" – as well as projected starter Raunny Rosario, who went down with a knee injury in week one, Krohn does have a capable back to work with in sophomore Steve Baylark, as well as a pair of veteran receivers in Jason Peddler and Jimmy Howard.

Defensively, the Minutemen return one of the strongest units in the nation, led by All-conference linebacker Jeremy Cain.

Senior All-American Valdamar Bruwer anchors the line in defensive coordinator Tom Masella's 3-4 system, while safeties Shannon James and Anton McKenzie return as core of a loaded secondary.

William & Mary
2002 record: [6-5 (5-4); fifth]
Current record: [1-1]
Head coach: Jimmy Laycock (24th season)
Preseason rank: 7

Coming off a season in which they struggled out of the gates after being dubbed as the pre-season pick to win the A-10, the Tribe may struggle again in 2003 after graduating quarterback David Corley.

Lang Campbell is the heir apparent to Corley under center, and he will benefit from being able to throw to arguably the conference's top receiver, Walter Payton Award candidate Rich Musinski (58 receptions, 1,140 yards in 2002.)

Junior Josh Smith and freshman Steven Platgrove will combine to give coach Jimmy Laycock a one-two punch at tailback, while wideout Danny Wade gives Corley an option other than Musinski through the air.

Defense was a weakness for W & M last season, and doesn't appear to be any stronger a year later. Cornerback Billy Parker returns to strengthen a mediocre secondary, while senior linebacker Paul Carpenter will look to put up good numbers from his linebacker position. However the Tribe may again have difficulty stopping opponents.

Villanova
2002 record: [11-4 (6-3); third]
Current record: [3-0 (1-0)]
Head coach: Andy Talley (13th season)
Preseason rank: 5

Quarterback Joe Casamento has the daunting task of taking over for the graduated Brett Gordon, who had one of the most prolific seasons in school history in 2002, leading the Wildcats to within inches of the national championship game. However if Casamento's early performances are any indication of his success, 'Nova fans will be breathing easy. The sophomore earned National Offensive Player of the Week honors from The Sports Network after throwing for 347 yards and two touchdowns in the 'Cats overtime victory over Division I-A Temple.

Casamento certainly has talent to work with, including tight end Matt Chila (48 receptions in 2002) and tailback Terry Butler (868 yards and nine touchdowns), although coach Andy Talley will be looking for the young gunslinger to avoid making mistakes against veteran defenses in the A-10.

Defensively, Villanova will call upon end Terrence Taylor (8.5 sacks in 2002) and safety Ray Ventrone (101 tackles) to lead a somewhat inexperienced group that has the potential to be a solid unit.

Hofstra
2002 record: [6-6 (4-5); sixth]
Current record: [0-3 (0-1)]
Head coach: Joe Gardi (14th season)
Preseason rank: 6

Hofstra had a down season in 2002, falling to sixth in the A-10 after taking the league crown the previous year.

The Pride will now have to overcome the loss of quarterback Ryan Cosentino, who played baseball in the spring against the wishes of the coaching staff, and will not play in 2003. Coach Joe Gardi had planned on using sophomore Bobby Seck as Cosentino's replacement, but Seck left Hofstra's contest with Marshall early after breaking his non-thruwing hand.

That will leave quarterbacking duties to transfer Alex English, who transferred from Marshall and will have some effective targets to work with, including 6-foot-4 receiver Marquez Colston, who was injured much of last season, and Ohio State-transfer Ricky Barrett.

All conference linebacker and Buck Buchanan Award candidate Renauld Williams will lead a defense that will also benefit from the return of senior outside linebacker Tyree Johnson and junior strong safety James Glee.

Richmond
2002 record: [4-7 (4-5); eighth]
Current record: [0-1 (0-1)]
Head coach: Jim Reid (ninth season)
Preseason rank: 9

Richmond posted some quality wins in 2002, including victories over William & Mary and Delaware, and has Virginia-transfer Bryson Spinner to inject some life in its wishbone-style attack. Senior David Edwards should serve as the halfback for RU, giving Spinner a viable second weapon when running the option.

When the Spiders do go to the air, Spinner will have a solid receiver in Boyd Ouden (809 yards, seven touchdowns in 2002), as well as junior Jake Schools.

The trademark of any Reid-coached team, however, is defense. While the Spiders do have talent returning on that side of the ball, including end Clifton Coker (51 tackles, 6 sacks) and free safety Danny Young (three interceptions), they are quite young and may not hit their stride until later in the season.

Defensive back Joe Mallory is an aggressive, solid young player who, like the whole unit, will get better with experience.

Northeastern
2002 record: [10-3 (7-2); tied-first]
Current record: [3-0 (1-0)]
Head coach: Don Brown (fourth season)
Preseason rank: 1

Northeastern had a breakthrough season in 2002, going 10-3 and claiming a share of the Atlantic 10 Conference crown. Most of that success was based upon the Huskies' ability to run the football effectively on offense, and to stop the run on defense, and that will not change this season under coach Don Brown.

NU returns a potent one-two punch at tailback, with bruising all-conference performer Tim Gale (860 yards in 2002) combining with shifty Anthony Riley (940 yards) in allowing the Huskies to alter the looks they show opponents in the ground game.

Shawn Brady also returns under center. However, he will surely feel the heat to perform following the arrival of Syracuse transfer Coali Howard. Nonetheless, Northeastern's fate will be determined far more by its success running the ball than its ability to air it out.

All-American middle linebacker Liam Eaddicl, coming off a campaign that saw him record 145 tackles, looks to again lead a defensive unit that was the backbone of the team's success in 2002.

Rhode Island
2002 record: [3-9 (1-8); 11th]
Current record: [0-2 (0-1)]
Head coach: Tim Stowers (fourth season)
Preseason rank: 11

After a promising 2001, the Rams took a major step back in 2002, finishing last among 11 teams in the A-10. However, coach Tim Stowers has hopes that his spread-option offense will spell success for the Rams in 2003.

Quarterback Jayson Davis (679 rushing yards, 11 touchdowns in 2002) will be the focal point of the system, and will be counted on to move the football consistently both through the air and on the ground.

Helping out at what is a vital position in any option attack will be fullback Dustin Piccioti, who will look to open holes for Davis and the veteran tailback trio of seniors Luther Green and Wendall Williams, as well as junior Jason Ham.

URI does figure to be weak defensively, especially stopping the run, as evident by the 42 points they surrendered in a loss to Northeastern.

Safety Victor Crenshaw (8.5 tackles, two interceptions) is back as the anchor of the Rams secondary, but look for teams to be able to move the ball consistently against Rhody, both on the ground and through the air.

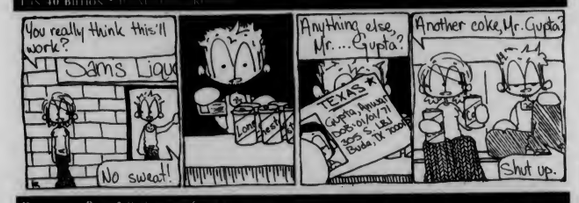
sports@dailycollegian.com

Young Men's Club
130 East Street Hadley, MA
413-584-8728
Monday Night Football
• Pool Table
• Darts
• Horseshoes
• Keno
• Smoking
• Public Invited
• Women Welcome
Transportation Available
Free Munchies with this ad!

WORMTOWN MUSIC FESTIVAL
Sept. 19, 20 & 21
Camp Kee Wanee, Greenfield, MA
Food, Arts, Crafts, Wooded Camping, Music, Vending, Kids Cabin, Body Art & Lots of Fun!
Advance Tickets (until 9/17): $48 Gate: $60
Available at all Max Creek, Brothers Past shows & Wormtown booths
Check out www.Wormtown.com for last min info, directions, & tickets!
Max Creek · Reid Genauer & AoD · Slipknot · Percy Hill · Depth Quartet · Spookie Daly Pride · Jen Durkin with Bomb Squad · Ratter Bats · Fuzz & the Gratuitous Sextet · Revival · Reed Street Town Hall · Oak Street · Entrain · Bruce Mandoro Band · Holywater Undertow · Seth Yacovone · Luke Patchen · Dr. Juice · Electric Blue & the Kozmik Truth · ulu · RAQ · Psychedelic Breakfast · Attention Shift · Peter Prince & the Trauma Unit · Jiggle · A440 · Grapes of Vaudevillian Fantasy · Concentric · Jeff Martell · Coalboilers · Zen Tricksters · Gordon Stone · Uncle Sammy · Leroy White · Flipper Dave · Rev Tor Band · Brothers Past
Puffin Stuff · Cosmic Turtle's · Cafe R-Bin · Hemp & Linen · Hemp Lace & Butterflies · Trading Post · Wormtown Trading
NORTHAMPTON · FLYNN · TICKETS

Rent One of Ours
No additional fee for 21–25 year old drivers
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Road North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

Our Famous 2 BURGS FOR 2 BUCKS
Phantom Gourmet's 2003 Pick Top 8 Burgers in New England
"Pete's Big Bopper Deluxe"
OCMP
CREDIT CARDS
ADVOCATE ★BEST★ OF THE VALLEY READER'S POLL 2003
PETE'S DRIVE-IN
1st- BURGERS
2nd- HOT DOGS
3rd- FRIES
www.petesdrivein.com
287 RUSSELL ST • ROUTE 9
HADLEY • 585-0241



ACCOUNTING · TEACHING · MBA · HEALTH ADMINISTRATION · JOURNALISM · BIO MED SCIENCES · LAW · E-MEDIA · CIS · NURSING · PHYSICIAN ASST.
HAMDEN, CT 1-800-462-1944 check out grad programs
www.quinnipiac.edu
HAMDEN
QUINNIPIAC UNIVERSITY

Student Jobs
Great Job opportunities for students in humanities and social sciences. Work to protect the environment ad hold corporations accountable. Flexible Hours, fun progressive workplace, valuable job skills. We are seeking motivated, articulate, and creative people to organize in diverse communities around the valley. Call today, start tomarrow. $8-10 hr. plus bonus
Clean Water Action: 584 9830

JESSE HOOPER * BY JESSE HOOPER

LEN 10 BITTOS * BY LEN 10 BITTOS

DEPRESSING BOY * BY BRENDAN GOLDMAN

THAT'S WHAT SHE SAID * BY DERRICK GENOVA

THE TORQUES * BY KEN FREDETTE

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"Once in a while you get shown the light in the strangest places if you look at it right."

-Jerry Garcia

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

ACROSS
1 "Vamoose"
6 Electrical unit
9 Andes capital
14 Far-out planet
15 "C'mon — — pair"
16 Beneath
17 Tenderized meat (2 wds.)
19 Coral formation
20 Actor — Vigoda
21 Bronte governess
22 Ridiculous
23 Sorcerer
25 Board game
26 Kind of director
29 MOMA artist
31 Careless
32 Perched
36 Strong wind
37 Crane arm
38 Similar
40 Part of FDIC
43 Williams of tennis
45 Cow's bellow
46 Blueprint detail
47 Teas brisk
50 Pinhead
51 Exude moisture
52 Object on radar
54 Elf-sized
57 Pepe Dot ruled it
58 Furiously (2 wds.)
61 Egged on
62 Night before
63 San Diego pro
64 Nervous
65 Film director — Craven
66 Out in front

DOWN
1 Humane org.
2 Skout stick
3 Bumpkin
4 Had for dinner
5 Aug. and Feb.
6 Does as told
7 Listen to
8 Invent
9 Squelches
10 Loosen
11 Goddesses' stallues
12 Divulges
13 Pens: airport
18 Anti-sued
23 Swabbed
24 "Alley —"
25 Corp. biggie
26 Food additive
27 Honeyed
28 patron saint
29 Decorated brewers
30 Whale-o diet
30 Underhand throw
33 Seer's deck
34 — out (barely gets by)
35 Wine's companion
37 Chet
39 "Mona Lisa" singer
41 Righteous Brothers song (2 wds.)
42 — Dawn Chong
43 Range or extent
44 Annex
47 Plugged in 48 Consecrand
49 Writer Joyce Carol —
50 Embankments
51 Locks
52 Spent unwisely
53 Not pre-recorded
54 Use hip boots
55 "Rabbit Ben —"
56 Watched
59 Tax prp.
60 Sidelines cry

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
• Pizza Casserole
• Santa Fe Chicken
• Cuban Red Beans (vegan)

DINNER
• Boston Scrod
• Szechuan Beef & Broccoli
• Szechuan Tofu & Broccoli (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
For Amherst

THURSDAY
• High: 74
• Low: 57

FRIDAY
• High: 75
• Low: 65

SATURDAY
• High: 76
• Low: 49

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Gerald H. Ling
COPY EDITOR
Andrew Merritt / Matt Brady / Dan Lamothe
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Shannon Farrington / Katie Dwan / Oliver Chong / Nikolas Markantonatos

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Don't forget pickles on your turkey sandwich.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You're a star today, so be sure to sparkle.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Be more cautious. You hurt your foot last time you did that.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
People will steal anything, no matter how useless it is.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
If everyone is a leader, then there won't be anyone to follow you.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Things go wrong. They go wrong all the time.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Don't be so abnoxious; keep it at a level annoying.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Don't step on glass with barefeet. It hurts.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Eat more butterscotc; it's sweet, sticky and delicious.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
That duck by the pond isn't dead; it's just wooden.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Start your weekend extra early. You deserve it.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Wear cowboy boots more often. They're HOT!

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Fraternities-Sororities- Clubs-Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven Campus-Fundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

Montreal Weekends $99. Includes R/T Luxury Motor Coach from Springfield. 3 Days-2 Nights- 4 Star Hotel Downtown-Meals-Night Club passes. www.montrealexpress.net 1-781-979-9001 Special Group Rates

AUTO FOR SALE

Buick Century 1994 Recently inspected 108,000 Miles $2100-413-549-6648

1993 Pontiac Bonneville. All power. Very Good Condition. Must Sell. Best offer. 253-5537

1988 Mazda $950 413-586-5728

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/PC's guaranteed 584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Produce Sales Associates Part-time evenings + Saturdays. Competitive Pay Call Atkins 253-9528

EMPLOYMENT

Temporary help Express/Structure warehouse sale Union Ballroom 9/22-9/26 1st quality current merch at 50-90% savings. We need hard working men & women for all aspects of sale including marketing & promo unloading truck, sales & setup. KathleenQuag@aol.com

Looking for responsible outgoing people to promote Mike's Hard Lemonade in bars and stores. Must be over 21 and have reliable transportation. Applications will be accepted at Rafters Sports Bar on Mon 22nd and Tues 23rd only from 2-4pm. No phone calls please.

EMPLOYMENT

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

Rent us your ears! Participants sought for listening experiments. Call 545-6837 leave message or write jkingston@linguist.umass.edu

Drivers and Kitchen help wanted Apply at D.P. Dough. Downtown Amherst

EMPLOYMENT

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

FOR SALE

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jaguly.com or (413)253-0051.

FURNITURE

Large Corner Computer Workstation: Filedrawers, cubbies, & more. $125.00 OBO. 367-0096

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

TRAVEL

Spring Break '04 with StudentCity.com and Maxim Magazine! Get hooked up with Free Trips, Cash, and VIP Status as a Campus Rep! Choose from 15 of the hottest destinations. Book early for FREE MEALS, FREE DRINKS and 150% Lowest Price Guarantee! To reserve online or view our Photo Gallery, visit www.studentcity.com or Call 1-888-SPRINGBREAK!

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

TRAVEL

Spring Break – Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun Jamaica and Acapulco from $489. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group-earn FREE TRIPS plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED, non-smokers. Ages 21-32. Generous compensation & expenses paid. For more information contact Robert Nichols, Esq. (781)769-6900, Rnichols@gbnlaw.net, www.robertnicholsesq.com.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Kickin' it off

UMass heads to Orono for crucial opener

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

Forget 51-7 over Central Connecticut State.

Forget 7-3 over Kansas State in the first quarter, as well as the final lopsided result in favor of the Wildcats.

For the Massachusetts football team, the season starts now. The Minutemen (1-1) travel to Orono, Maine this weekend to open up the Atlantic 10 season against the Maine Black Bears (2-1, 1-0 Atlantic 10).

UMass coach Mark Whipple repeated the mantra that he was using as early as mid-August, back when the new logo was news, and the guy running the athletic department didn't have "interim" before his title.

"The season starts now," Whipple said. "[CCSU and K-State] was preseason, and now really this week is when it starts."

It doesn't exactly start off with a cupcake, though.

The Black Bears earned a share of last year's A-10 title, splitting the honors with Northeastern. Although quarterback Jake Eaton graduated after a solid senior year — 572 passing percentage (154-for-269), 1849 yards and 16 touchdowns — his replacement, redshirt freshman Ron Whitcomb, is 41-for-77 this year with 492 yards and seven TDs.

Maine's offense doesn't end there, either. Second-team preseason all-conference tailback Marcus Williams, a graduate of Amherst Regional High School, is rushing at a six yards-per-carry pace this season, and averaging 142 yards per game.

"It's their offensive line," Whipple said, "and Williams is a good back, he's improved since last year. First play, he ripped something off, and he had two good runs against us last year, and he's doing it against everybody."

Williams took off for 28 yards on the first play from scrimmage against the Minutemen on Oct. 12, 2002. He went on to gain 92 yards on just 13 carries. Whipple would like Williams to see even less of the ball Saturday.

"You want to make them go left-handed, and that means taking away their run game on defense," he said. "If they can run the ball, we're going to have a long day, if they can sustain drives.

"They have a game plan, and they're going to stick to it, and we have to take them out of it. When they play-action pass, we just can't give up a free play, that's just killed everyone this year. Certainly we'd like to have Whitcomb try to beat us, like I think last year we did with Jake Eaton, and he wasn't able to do it."

Eaton was silenced last year, to the tune of 12-for-35 attempts and just 103 yards in the air.

The Minutemen are coming off a loss to Kansas State that, despite the 38-7 losing result, featured one of the best performances UMass has ever put up against a I-A opponent, and certainly the best since the last time the Maroon and White beat a member of college football's major leagues, a 26-10 win over Ball State on Sept. 1, 1984.

In what has become a new fall tradition at UMass, Whipple was happier with his squad after the loss than he was after the 51-7 dismantling of Central Connecticut on Sept. 6.

"I feel better than I did after Central Connecticut, but we didn't win the game, so you have to make some plays to win the game. But I felt that they didn't flinch.

Continued on page 11

GERALD H. LIMOA/COLLEGIAN

Freshman placekicker Michael Torres will showcase his strong right in Saturday night's Atlantic 10 Conference opener for the Minutemen. UMass has yet to win a conference opener on the road in coach Mark Whipple's six-year tenure.

Bjorn named as interim AD

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts-Amherst Chancellor John V. Lombardi has tabbed Thorr D. Bjorn, associate athletic director for sales and marketing, as interim athletic director. The decision is effective as of Sept. 22.

Bjorn replaces former athletic director Ian McCaw following his decision to resign his post at UMass to take the same position at Baylor University.

After earning his bachelor's and master's degrees from UMass, Bjorn was assistant athletic director for tickets and game operations at the school from 1990-1996. He was promoted to associate athletic director for marketing in 1996, a position that he filled for four years.

A three-year letterman on the Minuteman football team from 1988-1990, Bjorn became director of regional sales and marketing for Resorts Sports Network in Portland, Maine. He returned to Massachusetts to fill his current position in April of 2003.

"I have every confidence in Thorr Bjorn and am certain he will work to ensure that the progress we have made and the plans we have initiated in athletics will continue," Lombardi said.

"As a member of the current administrative team, Thorr can take on this assignment for the relatively short time needed with minimum disruption to the athletic department's many activities."

Lombardi said that he would name a search committee in charge of finding a permanent replacement for McCaw. Bjorn will not be a candidate for the permanent post.

He has also asked Michael Gargano, vice chancellor for student affairs and campus life, as well as John Dubach, special assistant to the chancellor, to serve as an executive committee assisting Bjorn.

"The executive committee's role will be to meet regularly with the interim AD on issues of budget, personnel and other major policy questions," he said.

"[This is] to ensure the athletic program has strong, visible and effective campus support to maintain the strength and continuity of our program through this transition.

"The University remains fully committed to the success of the entire intercollegiate athletic program at UMass Amherst."

An impressive effort

Minutemen able to cruise past Terriers

By Becky Horowitz
Collegian Correspondent

The Minutemen sent the dogs to the pound.

The Massachusetts men's soccer team held nothing back in a 5-1 shellacking of Boston University yesterday at Rudd Field. BU's two-game winning streak was snapped, as the Maroon and White upped its record to 4-2.

UMass	5
BU	1

"We played very well, we put them under right away, we made it very hard for them to play," University of Massachusetts coach Sam Koch said. "But I think they're a better team than what we saw today."

Prior to yesterday's game, UMass fell to BU (2-4) in four of their last five meetings. With the Terriers riding high, and some key injured players coming back, the Minutemen had to up their level of play.

"We played well and they were a little off," Koch said. "I think that's why you had the score you had." The UMass offense dominated the first half, keeping BU goalkeeper Zach Riffett under constant pressure. However, it was unable to capitalize on numerous opportunities.

"I thought they did a good job," Koch said of his offense. "I mean we struggled a little bit in the first half, but we cleaned it up in the second half and put chances away."

With three minutes left in the first, senior co-captain Andrew Eicher drilled one past Riffett off an assist from freshman Ralph Pace, giving UMass a 1-0 advantage.

The Minutemen's stifling defense put a quick stop to BU's second half threats, creating outstanding offensive breaks.

"We were good at closing them down," Koch said. "We had the one lapse where they got behind our outside midfielder and scored, but they didn't have too many chances."

Boston University showed some signs of life at the beginning of the second half. At the 51:12 mark, senior Alan McNamara netted BU's only goal, tying the game at one.

Two minutes later, junior Gabe Barnard booted one past Riffett off an impressive cross-field pass from senior Dan Colwell, and the Minutemen never looked back.

Of his wingmen, Koch said, "We're doing well, but we could do better. We still have to improve upon that. Obviously today I think we did a good job, but I know we can do it even better than we have so we're going to continue to work on it.

"The last three games we talked a lot about making sure that we stay patient, and we get behind on the ball. We need to stand them up and make them beat us," Koch said.

At the 59:31 mark, Colwell scored off an assist from Eicher after a nice break and polished movement by the UMass offense.

The Minutemen broke up their scoring with some fancy footwork, making sure to keep BU on their toes.

With the goal surrounded by white shirts, senior co-captain Ptah Myers came out of the crowd and put one behind the freshman goalie at 65:48.

Within minutes, Myers netted his second goal of the game off a penalty kick, giving the Maroon and White a 5-1 lead.

"It's about time," Koch said of Myers "I've been expecting him to score goals. [Junior] Oral [Bullen] had two goals on him so he had to catch him, they've been battling."

Freshman goalkeeper Nick Billman had a solid game in the net as well, making three saves and boosting his career record to 2-0.

"He was our keeper today, we'll see how everything goes," Koch said. "He's playing very well, but we're not going to make any decisions. We don't have a keeper for the rest of the year, we need a keeper for Saturday."

The Minutemen travel to out-of-conference Siena for a 1 p.m. matchup on Saturday.

"Each week we try to get better and I think we've been doing that," Koch said.

With just over six minutes left in the game, UMass sophomore Tim Kichell received a yellow card for an illegal slide tackle, but it was too late for the Terriers to take advantage of the penalty.

The Maroon and White outshot the Terriers 16-9, and held the edge on corner kicks 5-1.

"Overall I think everybody played well," Koch said. "Eicher is doing a great job in the center midfield. Devlin Barnes is doing a great job sweeping in the back. Canavan and Camerota both are doing a very good job in their positions. I'm very pleased with the way we've been defending.

"The guys off the bench played well. Pogano had a great chance at the beginning of the second half coming off the bench. Ralph Pace and Todd Skelton came off the bench, and they're doing a good job for us, so you have a number of people contributing. That's the way it has to be."

GERALD H. LIMOA/COLLEGIAN

Dan Colwell tallied a goal and an assist, as UMass easily defeated intra-state rival BU at Rudd Field.

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 13

Amherst becomes UMass flagship

EMILIE DOGGAN/COLLEGIAN

Guest speaker, Massachusetts Senator Stanley C. Rosenberg, salutes the Amherst campus as the flagship of the UMass system.

By S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

The Amherst campus of the University of Massachusetts is now legally designated as a research university and the system's flagship campus.

The move to legally denote UMass Amherst as the flagship campus was the work of Massachusetts Senator Stanley C. Rosenberg. Rosenberg, while addressing the Faculty Senate yesterday, proclaimed this success to be his proudest within the current legislative session.

Rosenberg told the Senate that he had always assumed that somewhere within Massachusetts' statutes on higher education that language denoted the Amherst campus as the flagship. However, after reading every single state statute on higher education this summer, Rosenberg found that nowhere was such a designation made for the University system. Additionally, the Amherst campus was not described as a research university.

Due to growing tensions between the governor and the legislature, and following Governor Romney's attempt to reorganize the University system this year, Rosenberg felt it was imperative that Amherst be legally recognized as a research university and the system's flagship institution.

"This is the first time in my knowledge that Amherst is legally the flagship. It was a battle to put it into law," said Rosenberg. "It should never have been a battle."

Since legally designating Amherst as the flagship campus, Rosenberg has created an additional budget for the chancellor to create a "new strategic plan to inform the legislature what is needed for Amherst to be a true flagship" and improve its level of competitiveness among research universities.

Rosenberg also brought to the Faculty Senate an explanation of what had happened within the legislature during this year's budget crisis, as well as predictions for the upcoming year.

"I don't have to tell you how ugly the budget situation was this last year," Rosenberg began.

Addressing the issue of resigned UMass President William Bulger, Rosenberg said, "The Commonwealth ended up in a disappointing situation on an ugly debate predicated on politics and not on the future of the public higher education system."

Rosenberg, who fought strongly against the re-organizational proposals this spring, explained why he had done so.

"It doesn't matter how we organize the system — it matters how much money is put into it and who pays," he said. "Every eight or nine years the idea to reorganize the University system comes up. It's a cover used while they [the state legislature] cut the heart out of your budget. It doesn't matter what academic setting you are in — the person above you is useless — you want independence. Chancellors don't need presidents, and presidents don't want Boards of Education."

The senator went on to explain that in the past decade the University has seen great success, and improved tremendously due to work within the system at the lowest levels. Rosenberg said that in the past decade the University system has worked to place the power in the hands of the people who do the day-to-day work on each campus, allowing them to make the appropriate decisions. Rosenberg believes that this move to put power in the hands of the faculties, and campus administrations, instead of the Board of Education and Board of Trustees, has been "enormously successful." He saw Romney's reorganization proposals as a way to obscure the issues that are important to higher education, especially the University.

"I wasn't going to allow them to cloud the issue. We beat back every one of these silly proposals that would have them cover for cuts to your budget," he said. "It is a provable, undeniable fact that public higher education has improved in the last decade. They refused to look at this, or to talk to anyone. With my own eyes, I watched a television interview in which our Lieutenant Governor, Kerry Healey, said that we need to 'cut off Amherst to build up our flagship campuses Dartmouth, Lowell, and Boston.' "

Continued from page 2

Kennedy says Iraq war was a 'fraud'

By Steve LeBlanc
Associated Press

BOSTON — The case for going to war against Iraq was a fraud "made up in Texas" to give Republicans a political boost, Sen. Edward Kennedy said Thursday.

In an interview with The Associated Press, Kennedy also said the Bush administration has failed to account for nearly half of the $4 billion the war is costing each month. He said he believes much of the unaccounted-for money is being used to bribe foreign leaders to send in troops.

He called the Bush administration's current Iraq policy "adrift." The White House declined to comment Thursday.

The Massachusetts Democrat also expressed doubts about how serious a threat Saddam Hussein posed to the United States in its battle against terrorism. He said administration officials relied on "distortion, misrepresentation, a selection of intelligence" to justify their case for war.

"There was no imminent threat. This was made up in Texas, announced in January to the Republican leadership that war was going to take place and was going to be good politically. This whole thing was a fraud," Kennedy said.

Kennedy said a recent report by the Congressional Budget Office showed that only about

Continued on page 2

Valley commuters call for travel times

By Alyson Zillman
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts Regional Traveler Information Center recently began a local traffic information hotline, which may be of use to some if Hurricane Isabel produces any bizarre weather in the next few days.

The phone line, which can be reached by dialing 413-549-RTIC, became operational Aug. 29. Since then, mainly faculty and local Amherst residents have called to get the latest on travel conditions in the area, said Stewart Rosenberger, a technician at the center.

The phone line was used most heavily immediately following the press release in August.

Rosenberger said that callers most frequently wanted to know the exact travel time between Northampton and Hadley.

"We're still feeling it out to see what people want," he said. CRS, a company in Cambridge, is providing the software and phone services for the center, and Rosenberger said as of right now the phone service is an experiment.

In addition to the phone line, the center has its own website, which features information about travel times, alternative modes of transportation, events in the Pioneer Valley and Calvin Coolidge Bridge information, as well as a handful of web cameras.

Rosenberger said the webcams were first used to get a look at traffic around the Calvin Coolidge Bridge, which was under construction this summer.

He said that the webcams are popular, perhaps due to their novelty, and that the center plans on adding more as soon as they become available.

Rosenberger said that most of the feedback the website receives is about the webcams.

The center's hotline and website both provide exact travel time information.

Isabel pounds Carolina coast

DREW WILSON/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Bill Ackliss, of Kitty Hawk, takes cover behind the relative stability of a power pole yesterday, in Kitty Hawk, N.C.

By Emery P. Dalesio
Associated Press

KILL DEVIL HILLS, N.C. — Hurricane Isabel plowed into North Carolina's Outer Banks with 100 mph winds and pushed its way up the Eastern Seaboard Thursday, swamping roads and knocking out power to more than 1 million people but packing nowhere near the terrifying punch it had days earlier.

The storm that had once threatened 160 mph winds and a 12-foot storm surge rolled in around midday just south of isolated Ocracoke Island with a 5-foot surge and gusts that rattled plywood boards spray-painted "Bring it on Izzy."

"A lot of trees are down — there's one down across the garage," Rudy Austin said as he looked out on his yard in Ocracoke surrounded by a knee-deep soup of sea water and debris. "There's a lot of stuff floating around: boards and buoys and boxes and young'uns' plastic toys."

Despite downed trees, snarled air traffic and widespread power outages — about 1.3 million in North Carolina and southeastern Virginia alone — there were no immediate reports of any deaths or widespread flooding.

But National Hurricane Center Director Max Mayfield said fast-moving Isabel still poses a threat because of its dimensions — about the size of Colorado — and its potential to bring 6 to 10 inches of rain and flooding to an East Coast already sodden from one of the wettest summers in years.

"This is certainly not over for people experiencing Hurricane Isabel," he said. "This hurricane will not be remembered for how strong it is. It will be remembered for how large it is."

There were isolated areas of damage and distress on the Outer Banks and inland areas nearby.

In Harlowe, a small community about 25 miles inland, about 30 to 40 homes were destroyed, either by winds, falling trees or flooding, said Jeremy Brown, chief of Harlowe's volunteer fire department. He estimated about 200 homes were flooded.

Firefighters rescued a mother and her two children who were stranded by the floodwaters, Brown said. But the flooding receded quickly, said resident Joe Fernandez, who watched the water rise over his street and yard.

"It was like a toilet flushing. It just came up and went down," Fernandez said.

In Williston, Marcella Willis, 62, had a half-foot of water in her home and waist-high water all around it. Her house was almost destroyed by Hurricane Floyd in 1999.

"This time it's even worse," she said. "It came so fast I was sitting there listening to the radio and my feet felt wet."

The storm tore apart two beach houses in Nags Head on the Outer Banks, picking up a washer, dryer and refrigerator and carrying them about 500 feet down the street.

Wind blew out the windows of a storm shelter near Elizabeth City, injuring five people hit by flying glass.

The storm spread rain across North Carolina and Virginia and into Maryland, Delaware and parts of West Virginia and Pennsylvania.

Isabel's top sustained wind eased to nearly 90 mph after it hit land, and it was expected to continue weakening. Hurricane-force wind — at least 74 mph — extended up to 100 miles out from the center.

At 5 p.m. EDT, the center of Isabel's "very large eye" was over North Carolina's Pamlico Sound, between the mainland and the Outer Banks. It was moving northwest at around 24 mph, up from 14 mph as it approached the coast 24 hours earlier.

The increase in speed is not unusual, and could mean lighter rain and less flooding, said Chris Sisko, a meteorologist at the hurricane center.

"They'll still have flooding issues over the next day or two, but the faster motion is at least a more positive impact," Sisko said.

Isabel was expected to move north across Virginia and cut through western Pennsylvania and western New York State before dissipating in Canada by Saturday.

Rhonda Davis, whose parents had to be airlifted from their

Continued on page 2

EMILIE DOGGAN/COLLEGIAN

Tug!

Students participate in an event co-sponsored by the Orchard Hill/Central staff. The tug-of-war was sponsored by the Community Developement program as a way to build dorm pride through competition.

EDITORIAL/OPINION Page 3
Tuck Tock
ARTS & LIVING Page 4
Louisa Hawa
SPORTS Page 8
Dog Days
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS Page 7

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COMICS EDITOR Scott Pihl
EDITORIAL EDITOR Erika Lovley
NEWS EDITOR Courtney Charles
PHOTO EDITOR Gerald H. Ling
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Julie Beauchamp
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE Sandra Marquez
SPECIAL ISSUES Betsy Feldman
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Ben Ratner
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Mark Lagatic
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Liza Lynch
LAYOUT MANAGER Lindsay Clark
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Jessica Pelletier
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Cram
ASSISTANT NEWS Kelly Farrell
ASSISTANT NEWS Ferron Salniker
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marzelli

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SPOOL IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

Surfing through a storm

Officials warn surfers about Isabel's power

By JACK HAGEL
Associated Press

NARRAGANSETT, R.I.—The waves crashing along East Matunuck State Beach on Thursday were the kind John Magno longed for as a kid.

"You waited for this all year, and you took advantage of it," said Magno, 54, of Cranston, who was walking along the shore with his boogie board.

"This has always been a fabulous surf spot" when hurricanes hit the mid-Atlantic region, he said.

Surfers and boarders took to Rhode Island's shores as the effects of Hurricane Isabel pushed waves to several times their normal heights.

But meteorologists and state officials urged people to stay out of the water Friday, when swells from the storm are expected to crescendo along the state's southern coast.

On Thursday, the Coast Guard pulled a man from the water off Narragansett's Black Point near Scarborough State Beach. The 67-year-old man from Uxbridge, Mass., was flown to South County Hospital, where he died, said Petty Officer Amy Thomas.

Thomas said a rescue swimmer was lowered from a Coast Guard helicopter to retrieve the man, who had reportedly been swimming.

State Department of Environmental Management spokeswoman Gail Mastrati said state-operated beaches have been closed to swimming since Labor Day, because lifeguards are no longer on duty. Enforcing that ban is up to a small staff of rangers, as well as local authorities.

In South Kingstown, police will have patrols along popular surfing spots, such as Matunuck and Green Hill beaches.

"You know, you can't stop people," said police Lt. Geoffrey Peckham. "You can primarily recommend. And a lot of people will do it anyways."

The National Weather Service predicted swells of 9 to 14 feet by Friday afternoon in Block Island and Rhode Island sounds. Normal swells are from 1 to 3 feet. The swells are expected to be 15 to 20 feet offshore, about 20 nautical miles from coastal lines.

High tide is expected at 2:32 p.m. Friday in Newport.

The waves from Isabel could produce dangerous rip tides, as the rushing water exerts a powerful tug as it returns to sea, said Kim Buttrick, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service office in Taunton, Mass.

"Even your seasoned surfers would have a hard time coming back to shore," Buttrick said.

The weather service posted a high surf advisory that was to begin Thursday evening.

Ben Johnson, 38, of Colorado, was surfing at East Matunuck beach on Thursday afternoon and said the rip tides were already powerful.

"You just go in up to your knees and you get sucked in," he said. "The surf is excellent, it's just the rip tide."

The surf could erode beaches and threaten coastal properties, even around Narragansett Bay, because the wind will be blowing the water in from the south, officials said.

Meteorologists expect some rain from Isabel as it passes through New York on Friday, but the main threats are from ocean swells and wind. Wind speeds are predicted to be 20 to 30 mph, with 45 mph gusts.

State officials, including Gov. Don Carcieri, have met for days at the Emergency Management Agency headquarters in Cranston. The EMA's executive director, Al Scappaticci, said it appears damage will be limited to spotty power outages from some downed wires, but the threat doesn't appear to be worse than from a good-sized storm.

Rosenberg announces UMass victory

Continued from page 1

Rosenberg declared that his vast experience in higher education had taught him a few "huge truths," one of which was that, "the best campuses and the best schools have some form of central administration that keeps their hand off most of the campus specific issues."

He continues to support the president's office and the current organization of Massachusetts' public higher education.

"I am happy to report that we did not blow up the president's office or campuses, or merge any schools."

Rosenberg doubts that the issue of reorganization will be brought up again in the second half of the current two-year legislative session. This he says will benefit the University as it allows legislators to focus on budget figures, and allows the University to focus the legislature on funding contracts, which have now been unfulfilled for three years.

Rosenberg closed his address to the Senate by saying, "With dark clouds on the horizon, our little victories have set the stage on campus for a new visionary to make the next move for UMass."

Hurricane Isabel begins assault on Eastern coast

Continued from page 1

home four years ago when Hurricane Floyd killed 56 people, said she was not convinced Isabel would leave eastern North Carolina unscathed.

"When something like this happens, I don't care what it is, you prepare for the worst," she said. "I don't think it's going to be bigger than Floyd, but I think it's going to be larger than what people think."

Up to a foot of rain was possible in West Virginia's hilly Eastern Panhandle and 6 to 9 inches was forecast for parts of Pennsylvania.

President Bush granted North Carolina Gov. Mike Easley's request for a federal disaster declaration, ordering federal aid to the state. In anticipation of flooding and wind damage, Pennsylvania Gov. Ed Rendell issued a statewide "disaster emergency" declaration. The governors of West Virginia, Maryland, Virginia and Delaware had earlier declared emergencies, and the governor of New Jersey planned a declaration Thursday.

Well over 1,500 flights were canceled at airports in the major Eastern cities, said David Stempler, president of the Air Travelers Association. As the storm moved north, all flights to and from the Washington metropolitan area's airports were likely to be canceled, he said.

The federal government shut down in Washington. Amtrak halted service south of Washington, and the Washington-area Metro system shut down all subway and bus service.

Miss America pageant organizers went ahead with plans for their annual parade Friday night in Atlantic City, N.J., hoping the boardwalk would escape damage.

For many, the hurricane's passing was merely a sightseeing event.

"For me, this is just like another little rainstorm, but you take what you can get," storm chaser Warren Faidley said as he videotaped the frothy, 15-foot swells on Atlantic Beach, N.C.

He was impressed that in the middle of the hurricane, he was able to get a hot sausage biscuit at a pier right on the beach.

"Hot food during the hurricane," he said, chewing away. "This is the most gentlemanly chase of all times."

Kennedy opposes Bush's claims

Continued from page 1

$2.5 billion of the $4 billion being spent monthly on the war could be accounted for by the Bush administration.

"My belief is this money is being shuffled all around to these political leaders in all parts of the world, bribing them to send in troops," he said.

Of the $87 billion in new money requested by President Bush for the war, Kennedy said the administration should be required to report back to the Congress to account for the spending.

"We want to support our troops because they didn't make the decision to go there ... but I don't think it should be open-ended. We ought to have a benchmark where the administration has to come back and give us a report," he added.

Kennedy said the focus on Iraq has drawn the nation's attention away from more direct threats, including al-Qaida, instability in Afghanistan or the nuclear ambitions of North Korea.

"I think all of those pose a threat to the security of the people of Massachusetts much more than the threat from Iraq," Kennedy said. "Terror has been put on the sidelines for the last 12 months."

Kennedy was one of 23 senators who voted last October against authorizing Bush to use military force to disarm Iraq.

Earlier this year, he supported a Democratic amendment that would have delayed most of the president's proposed tax cuts, and most spending increases, until the administration provided cost estimates for the Iraq war.

The amendment failed.

Write for news

CEA Consumer Electronics Association
Invites you to the...

techknowoverload tour
your life. only cooler.

University of Massachussetts, Amherst
Tuesday, September 23
10:00 am – 4:00 pm
Library Lawn
Hosted by Campus Activities Office

Come see the latest in hi-tech gadgets from leaders in digital technology from across the globe!

Win hi-tech devices, including a Samsung a600 camera phone, a Vespa, and an x105 picture messaging phone. All you have to do is show up!

For more information, including photos and schedules, visit www.TKOtour.com

This is a Mr. Youth, LLC. promotion.
For sponsorship information visit www.MrYouth.com

FEATURING

Ultimate Dorm Room
Want to live the ultimate digital lifestyle?
It all starts with this pad and we're givin' it away!

The CEA Surround Sound Pavilion
Experience Home Theater the way it was meant to be heard

and Much More!!!

Presented By
SAMSUNG
Windows Mobile
TOSHIBA
Image Is Everything

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 2003 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

AOL Time Warner Inc. Offers Valuable Lesson

The board of AOL Time Warner Inc. voted yesterday to remove the letters "AOL" from the company's name after acknowledging the failure of the largest merger in U.S. history.

The AOL company was bought by Time Warner Inc. as a way to jump-start a media revolution by combining "old" and "new" media companies. The plan to combine both companies, however, backfired after AOL's name brand started to diminish.

The Internet company America Online was once seen as a titan powerful enough to add even more power to the various media properties of Time Warner, including HBO, Time magazine (and Time-owned magazines including People and Sports Illustrated) and the nation's No. 2 cable company, Time Warner Cable.

The company's greed and insistence on growth got in the way of smart decisions. AOL is now the company's biggest embarrassment. Although AOL is still profitable, slated to generate nearly $1 billion this year, it is facing hurdles such as a regulatory inquiry into its accounting and a slumping subscriber base as users drop AOL for faster connections to the Internet.

"We believe that our new name better reflects the portfolio of our valuable businesses and ends any confusion between our corporate name and the America Online brand name for our investors, partners and the public," chairman and chief executive Richard Parsons said in a statement. In other words, the AOL name was holding back increased revenue instead of bringing it in.

This should serve as an example that media ownership does not always translate into big profits. The company will focus on reworking its image after the AOL disaster, by simplifying its tangled corporate structure, cleaning up its balance sheet, and selling off businesses in order to pay down debt and focus on its main media and entertainment businesses.

Other companies with the aspirations of purchasing other companies for the sake of increasing revenue should pay close attention to the failure of AOL Time Warner Inc.

Companies that have made similar negotiations such as the Time Warner Inc. company and the AOL company for the sake of generating more money should seek to analyze their current business practices, or risk alienating investors and customers. AOL Time Warner has already announced a deal to sell its two winter sports teams in Atlanta, the NBA's Hawks and the NHL's Thrashers, to a Boston businessman for $250 million. AOL has also sold off a DVD manufacturing facility and its half interest in the Comedy Central cable channel.

Investors and analysts responded well to the name change. When the name change was being considered last month, the company's stock began to rise. AOL Time Warner has said it is not contemplating a sale or spin-off of the AOL division, instead they will focus on trying to fix the problems there.

The best thing for a company is to admit its mistake early and to move on, just like AOL Time Warner Inc. This is something other companies should heed.

Information from the Associated Press was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Submit a letter or opinion

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor 113 Campus Center Way Amherst, MA 01003

A bomb for a bomb

Erika Lovley

On Aug. 28, Brian Wells began his morning as usual, reading the newspaper in his Erie, Pa. hometown. After waving good morning to his landlady, he jumped into his small car and drove to his job as a pizza deliveryman at Mama Mia's Pizzeria. No one could have predicted that this seemly normal day would end in one of the most gruesome crimes of the summer.

Tony Ditomo, the pizzeria owner, called to the back of the busy restaurant in the height of lunch hour around 1:30 p.m.

"Brian! We have two sausage pizzas that need to be delivered three miles south of here." Wells grabbed the piping hot pies, jumped in his delivery van and drove away. That was the last time most of the pizzeria saw Wells alive.

Wells drove to the delivery site, which had been described as a nearby construction site. The site was down a long rutted dirt road, and the construction site was deserted. What happened then, no one can say. All that is known is that somebody or some people were lying in wait for the deliveryman.

When Wells was next seen at 2:30 pm, he was robbing a bank. He drove his Sedan two miles to the local PNC bank and handed a note to the teller, demanding $250,000. Carried with him was a set of written instructions for the robbery. Around his neck hung a bomb, ticking away the last seconds of his life.

Ten minutes later, Wells was pulled over outside a McDonald's. Wells quickly warned officers that there was a bomb ticking underneath his shirt. His instruction booklet was seized from the Sedan, but the pizzas were nowhere to be found.

Time was running out for Brian Wells. The instructions told him he had less than 30 minutes to complete a circuit consisting of five local destinations or the bomb would go off. Police had detained him at the second. The bomb squad was nowhere in site. Wells seemed fairly calm about the entire situation, telling police only that "a man had put this bomb" on him. At one point, he looked around desperately and said, "Why is it nobody's trying to come get this thing off of me?"

Wells did not mention to police anything about the robbery plot or the means by which the bomb was placed around his neck. He seemed in a passive state, arching his back against the tight, heavy bomb before it detonated at 3:18 p.m. He was killed instantly.

He looked around desperately and said 'Why is it nobody's trying to come get this thing off of me?'

The horror and disgust that this case raises within me is unlike any other crime I have encountered. It is not only the fact that a human life was wasted, but the fact that the man was tortured mercilessly until the moment he was executed.

This case raises many baffling questions. Due to the lack of information that was given to police by Wells, it is unclear whether or not Wells was an accomplice in the robbery plan. If he was, what was the point of the bomb? Negative reinforcement? Was the bomb meant to elude the police? If he was not an accomplice, was he a man simply chosen at random to play the losing piece of a horrible game?

If the point of the entire mission was just to murder Brian Wells, this is probably the most convoluted train of thought that any human being could concoct. Why not just shoot Wells when he came to deliver the pizzas? Why take the time and effort to create a "treasure hunt" and watch the man run around in a frantic dance of death?

I'm sure that once the police stopped Wells, he realized that his chances of survival were ticking away; he would never reach his final destination. Even if Wells had found every clue in this sick game, his captors may have refused to take off the bomb.

Described by his family and friends as a quiet and peaceful individual,

Wells most likely was not the type of man to panic, even in a situation that meant life or death. In his last moments of life, he seemed to be fighting a battle not only against the bomb, but also against his natural impulse to panic. It was as if he wanted to leave this world with as much dignity and as little fuss as he had lived.

The overall point is, that whether Brian Wells was an accomplice, an innocent victim, or a target for murder, the ordeal through which he suffered on his last day of life was not only an act of terror and torture; it was an act of evil.

Wells' guilt or innocence does not make this crime any more of less excusable for whoever is behind it. The terror, anger, and pain was experienced not only by Wells, but by his family, friends, and those who tried to aid him as they watched his body explode with the force of the blast.

Whoever is responsible for this heinous deed, I think capital punishment is too good for you. As unconstitutional as this may be, I firmly believe that you deserve to die the same horrible death as poor Brian Wells. An eye for an eye, a bomb for a bomb.

Erika Lovley is a Collegian columnist.

If You Aren't Outraged You Aren't Paying Attention

Eduardo Bustamante

When Jared Nokes accepted his nomination as speaker of the SGA senate, he knew that each and every undergraduate student at the University of Massachusetts had given him $81 of their own money. He also knew that he had been given instructions through the by-laws and constitution regarding the ALANA caucus. The seats are constitutional (the judiciary), they require a democratic removal (a 2/3 vote by the senate and a campus wide referendum according to the By-laws), and the students want them (the most recent referendum passed 2 to 1 in favor of the seats).

But the SGA leadership has been given more than $81. They have been given $81 per student, totaling $1.5 million annually. When $1.5 million is on the table, morals are easily clouded by ambition.

For the past 30 years, the ALANA appointed seats have opposed conservative ambitions in the SGA. Expectedly, conservative students have attacked the ALANA caucus. All attacks have failed. However, this year's attack is different. It's undemocratic; It's a dirty trick.

Most students would think, "because these people promised to represent the students, and are in charge of our money, they will take into account what the students want."

But Jared Nokes and Matt Progen are self-important enough to believe that their discovery of a technicality gave them the moral right to eliminate what the majority of the 18,000 students on campus wanted.

Here's how it went down:

Step 1: Nokes tabled (postponed) his motion to change the apportionment of seats in the Senate until the last meeting he could possibly fit it into the agenda.

Step 2: On that day, Nokes requested that the apportionment be taken in two parts: elected seats and appointed seats. He then told the senate that this would "make the motion less complicated" and deliberately misled the caucus, telling them the motion wouldn't affect them negatively because they were protected by the by-laws.

After the first part of the motion had been voted on and elected seats had been apportioned, Matt "Adjourn As Fast As You Can" Progen called a motion to adjourn as fast as he could. A barrage of republican senators immediately seconded his motion. The ALANA caucus had no idea what hit them. All senate meetings are on public record at UVCTV. However, the tape of this meeting (May 7, 2003) went mysteriously missing over the weekend after I requested a copy.

Step 3: On the following (and final) meeting of the Senate (May 14, 2003), Speaker Election Day, the caucus put a motion to apportion the appointed seats. The second Nokes stepped to the podium, Matt "Adjourn As Fast As You Can" Progen adjourned as fast as he could. Again, the Republican Club voices seconded the motion. On video, one can clearly hear the black women of the caucus screaming, "No! No! Please! It's only two motions! No!"

Speaker Nokes, grinning all the while, took a vote on whether to adjourn or hear the motion. The conservatives outvoted the Caucus 24 to 17.

On video, one can clearly hear the black women of the caucus screaming, "No! No! Please! It's only two motions! No!"

Step 4: There was still a chance that the coordinating council (the summer senate) could hear the motion to apportion the seats. And so, Nokes, chair of the coordinating council, barred the ALANA students from participating over the summer, even though they are mandated seats in the by-laws. Nokes later told Gladys Franco that he did not have to appoint seats over summer from the caucus, whether they were elected or appointed.

Step 5: When Gladys Franco went in front of the summer senate to ask them to hear the motion, it consisted of five members, all white males. I sat on the side of the room during that meeting and listened to senator Brian Thompson disrespect, degrade and harass the chair of the caucus, senator Franco.

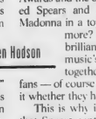
"Ya know," he smirked, "you always have a point of information. But now what? You don't even have a Caucus." The committee refused to see the motion because they weren't satisfied with the way it was written. Shit left the room upset, hurt, discouraged and flustered.

Step 6: Since school started up again, Nokes' policy has been to mislead and deny. He told the ALANA community that he wasn't sure if he would recognize the seats. He claims that the ALANA caucus never asked to participate in the summer.

He waited until Sept. 10 to announce to The Massachusetts Daily Collegian that he would not recognize the seats. This forced the ALANA community to rally on Sept. 11. Expectedly, Nokes responded to the rally and its demands by saying that he was a great patriot. Ignoring that, he was in the process of undermining the democratic process.

Step 7: The final stroke is Nokes' referendum question. It seems to be democratic, "The students will decide, every student will get to vote!"

But the devil is in the details: If students vote against the seats, they are gone. If they vote for the seats, they are still gone. The way Nokes' referendum is worded, the board of trustees will have to approve the seats. Given the current national political climate and the history of the board's decisions (constantly raising student fees, giving Bulger a $1 million severance package), they would likely rule against appointed seats.



I wrote this wrote because I paid my $81 and I am insulted. There is a chance that 18,000 voices will not just be ignored. The $1.5 million in the SGA budget is not the personal possession of its leadership. The true owners of that money might want to make the final decision about how their money is used.

There is a chance that 30 years of protests, building takeovers, petitions, demands, riots, marches, rallies, blood, sweat, and tears will not fall silently into the night. This is only my voice.

There is a chance that the voice that follows mine will be 18,000 times louder; and if it is, it will be powerful beyond measure.

Eduardo Bustamante is a Collegian columnist.

Oops ... I wrote it again

Jen Hodson

The year of 2002 was an exciting one in respect to music. We all witnessed the array of talent as newly released albums hit stores, making an impact on the music industry for years to come. Various artists were either discovered, went solo, or just plain changed their image.

Specifically, last fall was an eventful one for music when Christina Aguilera came out with her new album "Stripped" that had such songs as "Dirrty," "Beautiful," and "Can't Hold Us Down." Artist Justin Timberlake's new album "Justified" with song releases "Cry Me a River" and "Rock Your Body" also came out. Coldplay's new album, "A Rush of Blood to the Head," was a hit with brilliant sounding songs like "The Scientist," "Clocks," and "Warning Sign." Other artists such as Eminem simultaneously released an album, "The Eminem Show," with a new movie, "8 Mile."

The year 2003 has brought new albums from 50 Cent, John Mayer, Linkin Park and other favorites. Yet this is only the beginning. This fall, Britney Spears' new album "Get In The Zone" is due out Nov. 18. Her first single, "Me Against the Music," features Madonna and is bound to attract attention from listeners.

She is not a girl, not yet a woman, and right now just wants to explore and find herself.

The new song is supposed to reach radio outlets for airplay consideration Sept. 30 and a video for the cut is slated to premiere Oct. 13 on MTV. The new album features 13 tracks and will be a follow-up to her 2001 album "Britney," which debuted at No. one and sold 4.2 million copies in the U.S. alone.

"Get in the Zone" isn't the only thing Spears has going for her either. She played a free concert at the Sept. 4 NFL football game with Aerosmith and Aretha Franklin, attracting approximately 130,000 fans. The concert was staged to mark the opening of the football season. Those who didn't see her there can find her on the newsstands. She is or will soon appear on the cover of every major magazine, including Rolling Stone, the British Elle and the French Maxim. That's not to mention every other magazine cover she graced thanks to that kiss with Madonna.

That kiss is a whole other subject. Everyone has been talking about this year's MTV Video Music Awards and the opening act that night. The act included Spears and Aguilera in wedding dresses with Madonna in a top hat groom-to-be-outfit. Need I say more? A reputation for tabloid success and brilliantly staged, I might add. Popular music's three biggest stars performing together with a little extra something for the fans — of course everyone is going to be talking about it whether they hated or loved it!

This is why it doesn't come as a surprise to me that Spears continues to be one of the most talked about icons in music. Her new album, wild behavior, half-nude pictures, and dozens of interviews stir up a new energy that brings back the "entertain" in entertainment. There's something magnetic about her that draws people in, whether you like her or you hate her. She gives people something to talk about and that is what makes her so well-known all over the world.

I myself am a huge Britney fan and think what she is doing is great for her career and image. She is not a girl, not yet a woman, and right now she just wants to explore and find herself. She doesn't try to please everybody and frankly she doesn't care to. I like her carefree attitude and have always been a big fan of her music. Hits such as "Stronger," "I'm a Slave 4 U," "Overprotected," and "Boys" are all crave-worthy songs, not only for listening but also for dance-party purposes.

There is never a weekend that goes by where my roommate and I don't religiously listen to Britney when getting ready to go out for a Friday or Saturday night. It's part of our tradition and there's no other way that I'd have it.

As it stands, Britney Spears continues to make music and be in the limelight. If her fourth album is as good as any of the others, I would like to be the first to say congratulations. You go girl!

Jen Hodson is a Collegian columnist.

www.dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 2003 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The rise of web toons

Press Start to Play

Reid Davenport

As of late there has been a lack of options for gamers to turn to. While titles like "Halo 2" and "Final Fantasy X-2" are due out next year, at the current time there are no major releases for overall gamers to hype themselves up about; it leaves most of us gaming junkies settling for the overplayed games we own. For longtime gamer Randy Solem, there is an alternative to playing video games, and that is making movies with them.

Solem is the creator of the website VideoGameDC.com, which he uses to place his flash animated movies on. These are not just the average flash movies. Solem uses characters he rips from famous video games (termed sprites) via Emulators and creates hilarious, sometimes violent, flash animations. If you have visited the "Game Parodies" area of NewGrounds.com, you may have seen his work. Mostly he works with everyone's favorite plumber, Mario.

"Now I've had just about everything, Atari 2600, Game and Watches, Mini Arcades, etc. But my most memorable system had to be the Nintendo Entertainment System," Solem explains on his site. "It wasn't until early 2000 that I got introduced to the Flash animation program. My cousin sent me an email telling me to check out this site called Newgrounds.com. It was there that I first viewed some video game parodies. They were done by a guy named Clark Lybeck and he had a site called Nintendo Classics."

Randy went from submitting a simple movie to NewGrounds.com to being one of the top flash movie animators of video game parodies. His works include "Mario Gets Lucky," "Mack Daddy Mario," and the epic "Rise of the Mushroom Kingdom: Part 1." His animations are very detailed as he takes great pride in his work. His upcoming piece is one of the most anticipated flash movies on NewGrounds.com; the second part to the Mushroom

Continued on page 5

HIP HOPPIN' TO THE TOP FLAVA UNIT TEARS IT UP

By Eva Piccozzi
Collegian Correspondent

This past May, at the University of Massachusetts' annual Spring Concert, the Flava Unit Dance Team showed their essence in one of the most anticipated events of the year. On the same stage that hip-hop icons 50 Cent and Rahzel graced later that evening, a handful of energetic young women executed a show that any audience member would have easily bought tickets to see again.

Their style and purpose complemented the evening's theme, the evolution of hip-hop and rap. So who are these girls who contain more rhythm in one room than the entire student body of UMass? They call themselves The Flava Unit and although they dance to the same beat, each comes from a distinct background, bringing diversity to the group.

Kimberly Blackett founded the Flava Unit in 1999, making it one of four recognized dance squads at UMass, along with Boundaries, Soul T.V., and Funk Club. Simba Akinnagebe, a senior dancer on the Flava Unit remembers her first year on the team and the great efforts it took to get noticed with three other groups dancing with a similar style.

"A lot of people started with Boundaries or Funk Club and joined the Flava Unit because they wanted to do real stuff relating to hip-hop and not be constrained."

Throughout the past four years the group has carved its own niche, steering clear of conformity and is confident that their style of dance is becoming one of the most popular among college-aged kids.

"When we first started we didn't even put up flyers to announce try-outs or shows most of our advertising was word of mouth," says April Stanford, a current dancer in The Flava Unit and a past member of the Funk Club.

The group has established a community of talented young performers with an incendiary passion for dance. Presently, the team consists of 10 girls and one boy, who have been dancing everything from ballet and salsa to hip-hop since childhood.

"Each one of these girls has their own specific technique that they bring to the group to keep things fresh," says Qasim LaRoche, the sole male member of the Unit.

One of the most enthusiastic senior leaders of the team, Michelle Monestime, spoke with pride about the progression of the choreography. "When we started people would come in and teach us routines now we do most of the choreography ourselves, which makes us more active in every aspect of our presentation."

The Flava Unit has taken the stage at such events as UMass' Midnight Madness, the 10th Anniversary of the Black Student Union, talent and fashion shows in Boston. They have also performed at neighboring Amherst College.

Practices seem to run casually with meaning intervals of perfectly coordinated combinations and small breaks to talk about goals and how to make the team stronger.

"We want to build more awareness this year of who we are and our capabilities, we're always looking for opportunities to perform," says Margot Mussler, a second-year member.

Tryouts for the 2003-04 Flava Unit will be held Sept. 21 at 4 p.m. on the 12th floor of Kennedy. "We're looking for skill, originality, execution, but most of all performance quality," says Monestime.

Those who have a background in dance, preferably hip-hop and believe they will bring character to the team are urged to audition.

New author produces punchy product

New York city through the eyes of an anarchist

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

Michael Tenaglia's first book "Anti-hero" takes a stab, and a few punches, at defining the world created by the baby boom generation. Protagonist Billy Donovan explores what he calls "living a creative lifestyle." Within the first chapter Billy decides to cast away any semblance of a normal life and live as a self-proclaimed anarchist.

'Anti-Hero' Michael Tenaglia Screaming Hills Press

COURTESY SCREAMING HILLS PRESS

Michaek Tenaglia's first novel speaks of the unrest in the up-and-coming generation of americans.

The story takes readers on a first-person, crazy, highly descriptive romp around New York City. Through all of Billy's bad relationships and bar fights, the reader is kept almost close enough to catch a few stray slaps or punches.

Tenaglia, born and raised in New York relates the dirty feeling and the little beauties of the city like only a native can. "The village was like any other place in the city during the daytime. Tracks went here and there, jackhammers banged, all the night people were tucked away somewhere nursing hangovers and headaches, waiting for night to come so the whole great carnival could start again."

Through Billy, Tenaglia dissects the baby boom generation and labels all establishments based on money as debunked. "When did Jesus become a Republican? They (Baby-boomers) highjacked him. The Republicans highjacked Jesus. God is God. At least that's what I think. Whatever you call him Allah, Buddha, or Jesus, it's all the same concept. So if you side against the Republicans you are against God, and then if you do side with them the Democrats call you immoral."

The cover of the book provides an honest Insight into what lies within its pages. It is, at some point, offensive to every single religious, ethnic and political group. Even fellow actors and writers are not safe from Donovan. "And will all the actors please stop over-using the words 'Amazing' and 'Incredible' to describe other actors' movies or anything related to film."

This book takes literal shots at feminists, cabdrivers, hillbillies, and even the Irish. Donovan fights with at least one member of each of these groups in the course of the book. The realness of this book is that our hero, or anti-hero, does not always walk away from these fights unscathed; He takes his biggest beating from a group of women whom he insults at a bar. Perhaps that is Tenaglia's attempt to make amends.

The strongest point of the novel is its detailed bouncing around of New York. In every scene the reader is given a street and avenue name, pinpointing exactly where the action is taking place within the five boroughs. Even when Donovan leaves New York and heads to Key West on a whim, Tenaglia points out landmarks, both noteworthy and obscure.

Perhaps one of the biggest arguments Tenaglia makes in the pages of "Anti-Hero" is against the war on drugs. Donovan reiterates his feelings on this subject so many times that by the end, the reader can practically recite his mantra. "We have no war on drugs; All it is, is a war on addicts, it's pro-prison, prisons are training facilities, they turn men into criminals. We take sick and desperate people and turn them into criminals."

All in all, the book is a great read, but towards the end when one would expect to have the strongest sense of Donovan, it actually deteriorates into pages of anti-establishment ranting. In his first novel Tenaglia has proven his skill as a writer and shown a deep well of passion. Hopefully the very system of capitalism that he reviles in his work won't alter it in any of his future publications.

Garage rock to rant and rave to

The Raveonettes put out but won't sell out

By Brendan Lee
Collegian Staff

One short year ago, people across the nation tuned their radios to the sounds of the hip new noise that would save rock music from nu-metal drudgery.

The Raveonettes 'Chain Gang of Love' Columbia/Crunchy Frog, 2003

The new old-design of garage rock, as interpreted by modern bands like the Hives, the Vines, the White Stripes, and the Strokes, stormed airwaves and TV screens, but something funny happened along the way to rock stardom. There was no "new rock" scene, the bands refused to see why they should be packaged together, and listeners just plain got bored.

The White Stripes became their generation's Carpenters by way of Led Zeppelin. The Strokes have yet to test the shifting critical waters and the other bands just disappeared for the time being. Meanwhile, the music industry, sensing indifference, moved on to finding new saviors in the form of bands bearing the misnomer of punk/emo and, more recently, southern rock.

It's a shame that people didn't stick around the new garage tent long enough to catch the Raveonettes. The band's 2002 debut EP "Whip It On" turned some heads with the eye-candy, '50s flick noir video for the song "Attack of the Ghost Riders." In a nod to Phil Spector, the album was recorded in "explosive stereo (mono compatible)" and all songs were written in B flat minor.

What happens when a real garage-influenced band puts out a record and nobody cares? Apparently, they do it again.

With a sound something like a post-industrial accident Everly Brothers on the set of "The Wild One," the new and improved Raveonettes fill "Chain Gang of Love" with enough feedback, girl group harmonies, and '80s art-punk influence to write a classic pulp novel.

As the band's de facto leader, Wagner wrote and recorded the nearly entire record in his native Denmark. In contrast to "Whip It On," his vocals find their way to the front of the mix, creating sweet harmonies with Sharin Foo's whispery, Debbie Harry stylings. The album's opener, "Remember," Is the sweetest sounding ode to prostitution, heroin, and lost dreams ever recorded. The lyrics for most of "Chain Gang" have a dirty little secret, even when Wagner and Foo rhapsodize about young love on "The Love Gang" ("Chains, black leather, and sex/ Yeah, it's not that complex").

COURTESY CRUNCHY FR

The Raveonettes are into making music, but do not want to become media icons.

None of the songs on "Chain Gang of Love" possesses the handclap backbeat of "Attack of the Ghost Riders," but that doesn't make the album any less catchy. The aforementioned "Remember" is a prime candidate for a mix tape and hip car commercials. In a perfect world, "That Great Love Sound" would be blasting out of car stereos everywhere, with its huge, distorted bass line and wall-of-sound feedback.

Even when he's waxing poetic about "that great love sound ... at the place where lost is found," Wagner refuses to let himself fall too hard. The album's best track sports the ebullient title "Love Can Destroy Everything," employing reverb-laced guitars and a failing heartbeat drum track, complete with the beeps of a monitor. "It takes a little time of getting used to," Wagner and Foo harmonize, "but love can destroy everything."

In the end, "Chain Gang of Love" is an acquired taste. Amidst the distortion and doo-wop harmonies, there are plenty of questions. Wagner's insistence on writing entire albums in one key will eventually leave him with no options. You get the feeling that had Raveonettes released the best songs from "Chain Gang" and "Whip It On" on the same record, they would have had one of the year's best records in their hands.

But if Wagner and Foo are content to ride off into the new garage sunset, unready to find new keys and choruses while the kids go find new psuedo-punk bands to call their own (until something better comes along ...) that is too bad, because it is their loss.

Web cartoons stand in for lack of new games

Continued from page 4

Kingdom saga.

Randy's works are also good for everyone looking for a laugh; he goes beyond the boundaries of a normal imagination and creates hilarious parodies of video games. Many of them are crude to the point where he gets e-mail from angry parents, but his creations are original and definitely worth taking a look at.

If you have taken a look at the site, you may be wondering how soon Mr. Solem will be willing to give you Flash Animation lessons. Don't hold your breath on that one. In his "Q&A" section of the site, he gives hints on how to do certain things and which software to pick up. If you intend on getting started on learning flash, just realize that Randy has been working on projects like these for three year and had drawing experience previous to creating his site.

"There are four things you need to learn to make VG flash movies," Randy said. "Macromedia Flash, an image editing program (Adobe Photoshop and Jasc Paintshop Pro are examples), a video game emulator with roms (an emulator is software that lets you play old console and arcade games on your computer and a rom is the actual game file), and a sound editor. In most cases you can find video game sound effects on the web. But sometimes you may need custom sounds, or sounds you can't find and sound editors are handy in removing certain things. If you become familiar with these four programs, making video game movies should be no problem."

On his site, Randy also gives tips on how to go about inserting your favorite characters into flash movies and where to find the files you need to get started. It is a good way for anyone who is majoring in computer science or interested in computers to build skills and have fun. It also can help to get your name and work out on the Internet so you can have examples to show future employers.

Randy's VideoGameDC.com will soon release part two of "Rise of the Mushroom Kingdom" that provides viewers a chance to see his previous successful pieces, as well as the failed ones. You can also view his work, along with other parody artists', at NewGrounds.com.

Information from www.VideoGameDC.com was used in this column.

Reid Davenport is a Collegian columnist.

COURTESY ARIANNE ALLEN

From 'Brown' to gold: ZOX debut album a hit

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

Since its inception in the basement of a Brown University dorm in 1999, ZOX has developed a sound that is fresh, fun and anything but conventional. Their debut album "Take Me Home" presents the listener with a multitude of song styles and lyrical variations. The quartet skillfully combines the searing melodies provided by violinist Spencer Swain into a high-energy reggae-infused rock, something along the lines of Sublime mixed with some Police and a dash of Beethoven.

ZOX "Take Me Home" Planetary Group

ZOX has made a name for itself by opening for bands such as Rusted Root, Dispatch, Guster, Goldfinger, Common, The Starting Line and The Sugar Hill Gang. They have also performed many of the tracks on "Take Me Home" on the stages of Lupos in Providence and The House of Blues in Boston.

The simplicity running through the band's upbeat and rhythmic music is offset by the sterling violin work, which often takes the lead, providing occasional nuances of jazz and classical. This is definitely energetic, good-time music that's begging to be heard on the radio. On "Take Me Home" ZOX packs a lot of punch and energy into a barrage of four-minute tracks.

The band opens the disc

COURTESY THE PLANETARY GROUP

with an enticing violin solo on "The Squid." With the strings in the lead for most of the song belting out classical sounding sound bites, the rest of the band plays a reggae-inspired beat topped with slightly begging vocals from Eli Miller.

"Butterfly," the album's second track, has a more pop sound, flavored with 311-style vocals and a snappy accompaniment from the guitar and violin. With the lyrical statement, "Everything is a little better without you ... We talk and talk and no matter what it is still my fault," the listener is assured that despite its upbeat tone this is definitely a spiteful declaration of freedom.

With the track "Leaving Me" the band takes a deep dive into a more mellow form of rock 'n' and roll. With smoky guitar rifts and a jamming bass this song is a perfect for driving, especially when trying to mellow out some road rage. As seems to be the bands hallmark, the lyrics and the music appear to contrast in an intriguing way. "Time ticking away this love I've got there's no way to make it stop before you wake, I know you're leaving me."

ZOX is a blast of fresh air into a type of music that was near death. They do for the violin what Jethro Tull did for the flute. With such an innovative style and catchy sound, it would not be surprising to see another album out from these guys soon.

Mexican art exhibit raises eyebrows for critique of United States military

By Patrick Walters
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The whole idea of "Mexico Illuminated" was to bring together artists of Mexican descent to tout the Hispanic heritage of Reading, Pa., and show how its neighbors to the south perceive the United States.

Artist Marcos Ramirez says people should have known better than to expect simple paintings of deserts, cactuses and smiling field hands sporting sombreros.

Ramirez caused a stir when he chose to express his views on America with a billboard-sized piece depicting a green road sign with the distances from Reading to foreign cities the United States military has bombed, including Hiroshima, Japan, in 1945, Baghdad, Iraq, in 2003 and Kabul, Afghanistan, in 2001.

"I wanted somehow to confront the people with history," said Ramirez, one of more than 60 artists taking part in the show. "It's an expression of what could be a very widespread opinion outside of this country."

The show in Reading, about 50 miles northwest of Philadelphia, opens Saturday, but organizers have already been bombarded by angry community members and organizations funding the show. Many were upset that Ramirez's piece was in an exhibit taking place so close to the anniversary of the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorist attacks.

Even though the original work only reached the stage of a digital image, it was enough to cause residents to write scathing letters to Ramirez, the show's organizers, local media outlets and others.

"As soon as I saw it, I said I thought this was completely out of line," said Thomas L. Moses, a board member of the Reading Redevelopment Authority, which had pledged $25,000 toward the project. The group unsuccessfully tried to take back part of the money after hearing of Ramirez's piece, which was to be displayed on a billboard in Reading.

As part of a compromise involving the redevelopment authority, show organizers and others, a version of the work will now be shown inside an annex of the Freedman Gallery at Albright College. It will be a picture of what the piece would have looked like superimposed on a picture of the billboard.

Christopher Youngs, organizer of the $500,000 show and head of the Freedman Gallery, said he felt that was the best way to balance the community's concerns without compromising the integrity of the artists. After all, he said, the purpose was to show how the United States is perceived by Mexican artists and show off their artwork in Reading, a former industrial city where the number of Hispanics has grown rapidly in recent decades and now makes up more than 30 percent of the population.

Ramirez, who lives half the time in San Diego, Calif., and the other half in Tijuana, Mexico, said he's glad people will get to see his work. "Everybody has rights and I tried to exercise mine," he said.

Youngs and Dan Talley, director of the Sharadin Gallery at Kutztown University, made numerous trips to Mexico over the past four years, looking for artists who work in a variety of mediums.

"Mexico Illuminated" is the product of those journeys and will feature works at locations including the Freedman and Sharadin galleries, the Freyberger Gallery at Penn State's Berks County campus and public locations around Reading.

Other works in the show, which will not travel beyond the Reading area, include clay and stone artifacts sculpted by Perla Krauze. Luis Miguel Suro has a variety of objects made of cast clay, including oversized Pop Bic pens and a series of buttons displaying symbols of desire and memory. The show also features four large politically oriented paintings by Raymundo Sesma.

Stephen King, Horror writer recieves award

Novelist recieves highest honor for his lifetime achievement

By Hillel Italie
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Stephen King doesn't have the literary reputation of Philip Roth or Arthur Miller, but now all three authors have something in common: an honorary National Book Award for lifetime achievement.

King, brand-name writer, master of the horror story and e-book pioneer, is receiving this year's medal for Distinguished Contributions to American Letters. The prize, worth $10,000, was announced Monday by the National Book Foundation, a nonprofit organization that sponsors the awards.

"This is probably the most exciting thing to happen to me in my career as a writer since the sale of my first book in 1973," King said in a statement issued by the foundation.

"I'll return the cash award to the National Book Foundation for the support of their many educational and literary outreach programs for children and youth across the country; the Medal I will keep and treasure for the rest of my life."

King, who turns 56 next Sunday, will be presented the award at the annual National Book Awards ceremony, on Nov. 19.

Among the world's most famous authors, he has both enjoyed the benefits and endured the biases of being a "genre" writer. He is a beloved, even iconic storyteller among the general public, whom he has memorably terrified in "Carrie," "The Shining" and other best sellers.

But he has never been a contender for any of the major literary prizes, including the National Book Award. His biggest honor before Monday was an O. Henry prize in 1996 for the short story "The Man in the Black Suit," originally published in The New Yorker.

COURTESY CSNY.COM

The master of horror has been frightening readers for 3 decades

"I'm pleased that they're giving it to him," said Ray Bradbury, author of such science fiction classics as "The Martian Chronicles" and recipient in 2000 of the honorary medal from the book foundation. "I don't think they should exclude any special genre, or they'd have to eliminate Edgar Allan Poe, wouldn't they?"

King has written dozens of books and even defenders acknowledge that not all are worth reading. But they praise him as an exciting, essential writer with a deep feeling for the American psyche.

"I think he's a force for good in the world," said Michael Chabon, author of the Pulitzer Prize winning novel "The Amazing Adventures of Kavalier & Clay."

"People like writers to stay in the boxes. The 20th century was supposedly about breaking down those barriers between high art and popular culture and yet it still feels like there's some kind of transgression when Stephen King gets a National Book Award medal."

Established in 1988, the honorary award cites not only literary merit, but also "a lifetime of service." The Maine-based writer has provided scholarships for the state's high school students, and made numerous charitable contributions through a foundation he runs with his wife, Tabitha.

He was an early advocate of e-books, and caused a sensation in 2000 when his 66-page e-story, "Riding the Bullet," received more than 400,000 orders in the first 24 hours after it was made available online.

He also shares one quality with many literary writers: a dislike of corporate-controlled publishing. In the current issue of Entertainment Weekly, for which he is a featured columnist, King celebrates a novel available only in audio form, Ron McLarty's "The Memory of Running," and attacks publishers for not signing it up.

"Publishing houses, once proudly independent, are today little more than corporate wampum heads, their cultural clout all but gone," wrote King, who is published by Simon & Schuster, a division of Viacom Inc.

Free PowWow

The campus and the five college community are invited to attend the 25th annual UMass PowWow tomorrow and Sunday under the tent at the Campus Pond. The PowWow is a gathering of Native Americans from different regions of the country. It is a way for Native people to meet and join in dancing, singing, renewing old friendships and making new ones. It is also a time to give thanks to the Creator for music, dance, storytelling and more. Those interested in attending are advised to bring a lawn chair and dress appropriately.

The gates will open at 10 a.m. and close at 6 p.m. Grand Entry, the ceremony for dancers and flag bearers to enter the arena, will be at noon. Guest performers at this years PowWow will be recording flutist Joseph Fire Crow, the Wampanoag Singer and Dancers, and Abenaki singer Tom Obomsawin. Host drums are Mystic River Singers and Silver Cloud Singers and youth drum, Quabbin Lake. This event is sponsored by Enrollment Services, The Native American Student Support Services program, The Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center, The Native American Student Association and the UMass History and Biology departments, Office of ALANA Affairs and The Wandering Wolf gift shop.

For more information call 413-577-0980.

— Cameron J. Woods

CVS pharmacy
1 Hour Photo
Student Discount
$1.00 off 1 hour processing (prints only)
$2.00 off 1 hour digital processing (prints & cd)
Valid Student ID required.
Available at both Amherst locations only.
Original roll developing only.
Offer ends:
Sept. 30, 2003

THE SUB
Pizza
Calzones
Subs
and more...
Best! 2002 UMASS Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Best! 1999 UMASS Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Best! 2000 UMASS Massachusetts Daily Collegian
UMass Best: Five Years
Free Delivery
Hours: 11am - 2am
549-5160
Memeber O.C.M.P.

King Tut at MikesMaze/Warner Farm So. Main Street (Rt. 47) Sunderland
$5 with student ID
corn maze
corn cafe' games
pneumatic potato cannon
corn rides corn traffic control tower
& the great bailing twine PYRAMID!
Weekends, holidays, Aug.30-Nov. 2 11AM- 5PM
More info? call 413-665-8331 or www.mikesmaze.com

Our Famous 2 BURGS - FOR - 2 BUCKS
Phantom Gourmet's 2003 Pick Top 8 Burgers in New England
"Pete's Big Bopper Deluxe"
OCMP
CREDIT CARDS
ADVOCATE BEST OF THE VALLEY READERS POLL 2003
1st- BURGERS
2nd- HOT DOGS
3rd- FRIES
PETE'S DRIVE-IN
www.petesdrivein.com
287 RUSSELL ST • ROUTE 9
HADLEY • 585-0241

BU downs injury-plagued Minutewomen

Continued from page 8

Lauren Erwin, who knocked the shot home to send the Terriers into the locker room with a three goal lead.

The Minutewomen were revived in the second half, but still couldn't find the back of the net.

"The kids played much better in the second half," Rudy said. "They were playing a little bit more unnerved."

The Terriers continued their offensive dominance in the second half. Forward Lauren Ciccone took off on a breakaway and beat UMass sophomore goalkeeper Kelly Nigh to make it 4-0.

BU finished off the scoring at the 85:27 mark when Paula Moniz bounced a shot past Nigh, for the fifth and final goal. Brooke Bringham was credited with the assist on the play.

Among the few positives for the Minutewomen after the shellacking is senior forward Erin Lilly's play, which is getting better with each game, as her minutes and productivity increase.

"Lilly showed signs of getting back to her busy self," Rudy said. "She's been playing tentatively coming off of a bad ankle. [The ankle] has been a negative factor for her."

Boston University put forth my productive offense, outshooting the Minutewomen 20-2.

Nigh tallied up nine saves on the night and her counterpart from BU, Jessica Clinton, only needed to save one shot.

"The good news is that we came out of this game relatively healthy," Rudy said. "We survived this game."

This coming week could be just what the doctor ordered for the Minutewomen. They'll have a week of rest, which should hopefully provide the chance for injured players to heal, before returning to action Sept. 24 against the Central Connecticut State Blue Devils at Rudd Field. That game is scheduled to start at 4 p.m.

Lombardi lays down the law

Continued from page 8

n right or do something else, and we're not going to talk about this again while I'm here. We're not going to stay frozen."

Lombardi emphasized the need to run the athletic department as a 501(c)3 program, making it a separate, nonprofit entity.

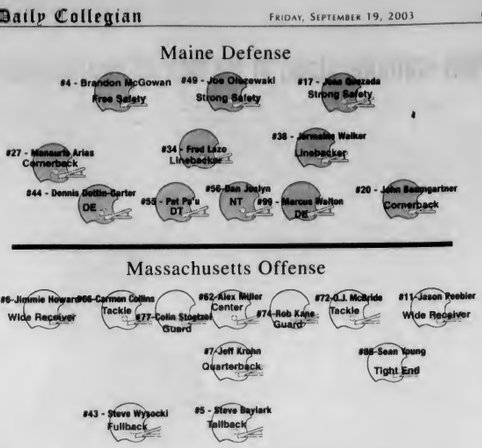
"This is a very powerful operation," he said.

The I-A process is being handled by an ad hoc task force, which is trying to come to a decision on the feasibility of the move by the end of the fall semester. Lombardi said that trustees, with the aid of a "wealthy alumnus" are dealing with the situation and whether or not it can be done without exposing the University to financial risk.

"This is important because we have no margin," Lombardi said. "As an academic institution we can't make risks for athletics."

The important points of the issue, according to Lombardi, are the available resources, as well as the certainty that those people researching the project have "agreed to use correct numbers for discussion.

"There are actual real scary numbers in it, and having lived in this world, I know that the numbers they are looking at are correct."



EMILIE DUGGAN/COLLEGIAN

Chancellor John Lombardi addressed the Faculty Senate yesterday on the future of the athletic department.

Prior to taking the job at UMass, Lombardi was the president of the University of Florida, a school that is no stranger to big-time athletics. Its I-A football team is a member of the Atlantic Coast Conference — a Bowl Championship Series conference — and its men's basketball team has enjoyed national success in the last 15 years.

Joining a BCS football conference is also high priority for those who are close to the UMass football team.

"Can we be in a conference that will generate funds? We might be good but we're sure as hell gonna be broke — unless we're in a lucrative conference," Lombardi said. "Everybody knows there is nothing more depressing than a worthless I-A football program."

SATURDAY MATCHUP
Maine vs. UMass
Orono, Maine
6:00 p.m.

Student Jobs
Great Job opportunities for students in humanities and social sciences. Work to protect the environment ad hold corporations accountable. Flexible Hours; fun progressive workplace; valuable job skills. We are seeking motivated, articulate, and creative people to organize in diverse communities around the valley. Call today, start tomarrow. $8-10 hr. plus bonus.
Clean Water Action:
584-9830

HALLOWEEN
Extravaganza
Grand Opening Saturday!
YOUR HEADQUARTERS FOR ALL YOUR HALLOWEEN NEEDS!
In the Hampshire Mall, near J.C. Penney.
Mention this ad and get 10% off your purchase with a Student ID!

Rent One of Ours
No additional fee for 21-25 year old drivers
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

Panda East 熊国
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine
We bring Chinatown to you!
"Voted best Chinese food by UMass students!"
*SUSHI BAR!
*OCMP ACCEPTED
*DELIVERT AVAILABLE!
Location: Amherst: 103 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, M.A. 01002
Open Hours: Fri. & Sat.: 11:30 a.m.-11:00 p.m. Sun. - Thurs.: 11:30 a.m. - 10:00 p.m.
Delivery: (413)549-0077
Telephone: (413)256-8923 (413)256-8924
Fax: (413)253-1173

CELEBRATING 30 YEARS
MEN'S AND WOMEN'S HEALTH SERVICES
OPEN HOUSES SEPTEMBER 23 3-6 PM
CALL OR SEE WEBSITE FOR DETAILS
www.tapestryhealth.org
1-800-696-7752
TAPESTRY Health
Northampton • Athol • Holyoke • Springfield • Westfield • Pittsfield • Great Barrington • North Adams • Amherst • Greenfield

Young Men's Club
136 East Street Hadley, MA
413-584-9728
Monday Night Football
• Pool Table
• Darts
• Horseshoes
• Keno
• Smoking
• Public Invited
• Women Welcome
Transportation Available
Free Munchies with this ad!

Road to Siena

Continued from page 8

opportunity.

"It doesn't really matter what their offense is, this is a big game for them. They look forward to playing us, it's one of their biggest games," Koch said.

The Minuteman offense is also finally coming alive. Earlier in the season, the Minutemen were outshooting their opposition handily, but it was not until recently that they've been finishing.

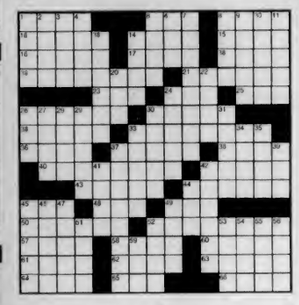
Ptah Myers and Oral Bullen have been a solid one-two offensive punch for the Minutemen this season. The unit has also been getting contributions coming from the likes of Dan Colwell, who has two goals and a pair of assists, as well as Gabe Barnard (two goals).

"Defensively we're playing where I expected us to be. Offensively sometimes we're ahead of schedule, sometimes we're behind. Bottom line is you need to take each week at a time and try to get better each week," Koch said.

While he's not looking past Siena, Koch's concerns have more to do with his own charges.

"I'm not worried about them as much as I'm worried about how we are going to be. They have to worry about us if we play the game we need to play," Koch said.

ACROSS
1 — onto (seize)
5 Chart
9 Overwhelms
12 Exploding stars
14 Bell tower sound
15 Go on the lam
16 Not touching
17 Kauai neighbor
18 Bahrain VIP
19 Invited in
21 Change genetically
23 Beaver's work
24 TV network
25 Up-to-date
26 Hire
30 Gladiator's place
32 Rude
33 Ran
36 Nasty wood
37 Joint problems
38 Extol
40 Intergalactic transport
42 Recent surgical tool
43 Had status
44 Fairly
45 Ripen
48 Mongrel
49 Novak of "Vertigo"
50 Totally wrong (2 wds.)
52 Gym gear
57 Gush
58 Blissful spot
60 Cartoonist — Bushmiller
61 Assayer's samples
62 Yearn for
63 Synthetic fabric
64 Thrush's home
65 "Be my guest!"
66 Pantyhose shades



DOWN
1 Nibble away
2 Canter
3 Egg shaped
4 — Almond of Soft Cell
5 Beowulf's drink
6 Sigh of content
7 Pipe fixers
8 Help a burglar
9 Amazon, e.g.
10 Most select
11 Cast about
13 Dull
14 Sonnet
20 Comic strip's Daisy —
22 Annapolis inst.
24 Inch along
26 Mountain curve
27 "Sister Act" roles
28 Coarse sand
29 Bride's destination
30 Rose pest
31 NASA rocket
33 Dark yellow
34 Maine, from Oregon
35 Combat
37 Shrewdly
39 Thirsty
41 Speedway competition
42 Planks
44 Kirk, to McCoy
45 Composer — Copland
46 Stare baleefully
47 Santa's helpers
49 — lu
51 Frontier, once
52 Family rooms
53 Imp
54 "Orinoco Flow" singer
55 Wide-beest chaser
56 Camera's eye
59 Fawn's parent

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

P	O	L	A	R		A	N	A		A	N	N	E
O	M	E	G	A		M	O	A	T	E		D	O	E
M	A	V	E	N		P	E	O	S		V	E	A	L
P	R	I	N	C	E	L	Y		P	A	S	T	E
				D	I	K	E		E	L	A	N
P	L	A	G	U	E		C	L	U	T	C	H	E	R
E	M	I	S		B	O	B		E	I	N	E
M	O	I		O	H	O			R	A	I	E
U	R	A	L		C	H	E	W	S		D	E	C	K
R	E	N	O	W	N	E	D		H	O	U	S	T	S
				I	S	N	U		L	E	S	S
J	O	I	N	T	S		V	I	S	I	T	I	N	G
E	P	E	E		J	E	E	P		R	A	D	I	O
D	E	R		A	A	R	P		I	N	E	P	T
I	C	K	N		B	R	A	Y		S	T	A	S	H

2-4-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Quesadilla
- Fish Nuggets
- Vegan Cutlets
- (vegan)

DINNER
- Fried Shrimp
- Beef Strudel
- Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
For Amherst

FRIDAY
- High: 73
- Low: 59

SATURDAY
- High: 74
- Low: 44

SUNDAY
- High: 71
- Low: 43

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nikolas P. Markantonatos
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Gerrald H. Ling
COPY EDITOR
Meghan Healy
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Irene Ros
PRODUCTION STAFF
Emilie Duggan / Adam Shane

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Get your work done quickly, there are better things to do.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Technicalities unfortunately do count.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Where did you leave your roller blades?

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Don't pull your hamstring while working out today.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Your lucky no one stole your stuff, you need to be more careful.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Go barefoot more often, it's liberating.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Use napkins, they keep you neat.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Put extra time into your work, you'll be rewarded for it.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Get your act together, your shooting yourself in the foot.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You will be taken by utter surprise with a great compliment.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Happy unbirthday to you!

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
People really aren't out to get you.

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"The only real mistake is the one from which we learn nothing."

-John Powell

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Fraternities-Sororities- Clubs-Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven Campus-Fundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

Montreal Weekends $99. Includes R/T Luxury Motor Coach from Springfield. 3 Days-2 Nights- 4 Star Hotel Downtown-Meals-Night Club passes. www.montreal-express.net 1-781-979-9001 Special Group Rates

AUTO FOR SALE

Buick Century 1994 Recently inspected 108,000 Miles $2100-413-549-6648

1993 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All power Must Sell B/O 253-5537

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/PC's guaranteed 584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Earn up to $100 per hour or more as an exotic male dancer at club Xstatic. 240 Chesnut St, Springfield MA, 413-736-2618 or www.clubxstatic.com

EMPLOYMENT

Temporary help Express/Structure warehouse sale Union Ballroom 9/22-9/26 1st quality current merch at 50-90% savings. We need hard working men & women for all aspects of sale including marketing & promo unloading truck, sales & setup. Competitive wages, clothing discount & bonus opportunity. kathleenqung@aol.com

Rent us your ears! Participate in listening experiments $7.50 /hour call 545-6837 or write jkingston@linguist.umass.edu

Produce Sales Associates Part-time evenings + Saturdays. Competitive Pay Call Atkins 253-9528

EMPLOYMENT

Looking for responsible outgoing people to promote Mike's Hard Lemonade in bars and stores. Must be over 21 and have reliable transportation. Applications will be accepted at Rafters Sports Bar on Mon 22nd and Tues 23rd only from 2-4pm. No phone calls please

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

EMPLOYMENT

Hand out flyers on campus for new business – short term – 5 to 10 hours per week $8 per hour. Call 413-210-9352

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

FOR SALE

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

FURNITURE

Large Corner Computer Workstation: File-drawers, cubbies, & more. $125.00 OBO. 367-0096

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

Spring Break '04 with StudentCity.com and Maxim Magazine! Get hooked up with Free Trips, Cash, and VIP Status as a Campus Rep! Choose from 15 of the hottest destinations. Book early for FREE MEALS, FREE DRINKS and 150% Lowest Price Guarantee! To reserve online or view our Photo Gallery, visit www.studentcity.com or Call 1-888-SPRINGBREAK!

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now... Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

TRAVEL

A SPRING BREAK-ER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips/high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED, non-smokers. Ages 21-32. Generous compensation & expenses paid. For more information contact Robert Nichols, Esq. (781)769-6900. Rnichols@gbnlaw.net, www.robertnicholsesq.com.

COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE
To place a classified call 545-3500!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSFRIDAY

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Lombardi lays down plan for athletics

By Andrew Merritt and S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

Chancellor John Lombardi addressed the Faculty Senate yesterday, and included in his remarks was a plan for both the Massachusetts Athletic Department and the UMass football team's attempt to enter the ranks of Division I-A — a move that has been discussed in some form for nearly 10 years.

Lombardi's statements held a sense of urgency regarding the I-A jump, as well as a departure from the almost non-existent university reaction to the hiring away of former Athletic Director Ian McCaw to Baylor University on Sept. 8. Thorr Bjorn, an associate athletic director with the university since 1990 — with a brief hiatus from 2000-03 — has been named McCaw's interim replacement.

"We had a little setback when our Athletic Director left to bail out Baylor. When Baylor called me to say they were going to talk to our guy I issued an expletive that wasn't appropriate for Baylor. But Ian fits right in there, he's pure as the driven snow, a good Christian – congratulations Ian, you —— [Lombardi only mouthed the good-natured expletive]. It just proves we pick the right guy."

Lombardi also announced that the search for a permanent athletic director would be accelerated to try to have someone in place by the end of the semester.

On the football front, the chancellor issued the decree that once a decision has been made about whether or not the team will enter Division I-A, it will be final.

"We have talked endlessly about Division I-A football," he said. "We have to settle the question 'is the funding available among Athletic donors?' or quit it. We can't sit here frozen in headlights saying 'If lightning strikes and God is good ...' We are going to do

Continued on page 6

XC prepares for Owen Invite

By Matt Barstow and Leah Wyner
Collegian Correspondents

The University of Massachusetts cross-country team is back in action tomorrow, coming off a second place finish in last weekend's home opener.

The Minutemen will travel to New Britain, Conn., where they will compete in the Ted Owen Invitational. The meet will feature a handful of teams, but Maine, Vermont, and Central Connecticut will be of greatest concern.

After a tough one-point loss to Maine last Saturday, UMass coach Ken O'Brien is eager for a rematch against the favored Black Bears.

"It's hard to predict how we will finish, but hopefully we can pull out a second straight good meet as a team," O'Brien said.

The New England Intercollegiate Amateur Athletic Association poll ranked UMass No. 15 and Maine No. 10 going into tomorrow's race. A win against the A-10 rival would be a moral victory, but the Maroon and White are determined not to overlook the six other teams.

"If we go out and run like a team, like we did last week, we should be fine. I'm not worried about the young guys losing their concentration," O'Brien said.

Much of O'Brien's confidence has stemmed from the return of three runners to this week's lineup.

Junior Matthew Clark, and sophomores Sean Corbett and Paul Noone, will participate in this weekend's meet, after sitting out of last week's race due to conditioning issues.

"They weren't quite ready to run, we didn't want to risk injury, but they should be ready to go on Saturday. The trio finished last season among the teams top seven runners," O'Brien said.

The return of Clark, Corbett, and Noone may be enough to push UMass over the top of Maine, who finished with three runners in the top five last Saturday.

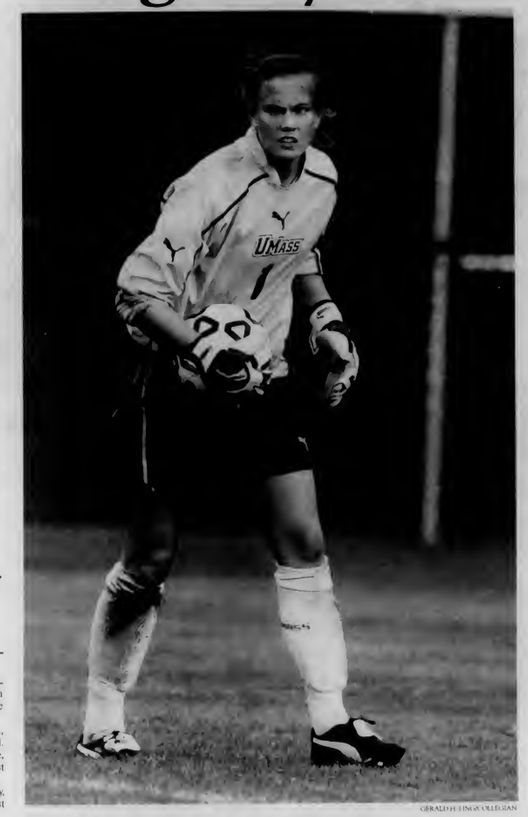
UMass will look for sophomore Ryan Corbett to lead the pack for the Minutemen. Corbett won his first race for the Maroon and White last week with an impressive time of 23:02.

Another key element for UMass will be senior Rich Harris, who finished fourth place in last week's meet, after "coming back in great shape from a good summer of conditioning," O'Brien said.

The largest obstacle for the Minutemen will be Maine's Jeffery Caron, who ran neck-and-neck with Corbett for over half of the race, before dropping to second.

After tomorrow's invitational, the Minutemen will travel to Syracuse, N.Y., for the Orange Cross Country Classic, Sept. 27.

The women's team races at the Ted Owen Invitational as well tomorrow. There will be eight teams running, but the Minutewomen are concentrating mainly on Vermont, Maine and New Hampshire.



The Vermont team will most likely be led by senior standouts Michele Palmer (Plymouth, Mass.) and Tee Gingras (Barre, Vt.), who finished first and second at last week's tri-meet against UMass and Maine. Sophomore Katy Jackson (Sacco, Maine), who came in fifth for the Catamounts at the tri-meet, should be vital as well.

The Black Bears' top runners are Heather Jovanelli (Brewer, Maine), Kristi Vidlak (Thunder Bay, Ontario), and freshman Hana Pelletier (Belgrade, Maine). Jovanelli, Vidlak, and Pelletier finished third, fourth and seventh respectively at the UMass tri-meet.

Seniors Margaret Ackley (Keene, N.H.), Lisa Winn (Rye, N.H.), and Ashley Vance (Manchester, N.H.) should pull the New Hampshire Wildcats through the meet, as they finished 36th, 42nd and 46th out of 96 runners at Boston College last Saturday.

The Minutewomen are rearing to go. Junior Alexis Anzelone (Westfield, N.J.) should lead the team, coming off of a great race last Saturday in which she ran 18:22 on the UMass home course. Senior Tricia Silva (Amesbury, Mass.) and junior Amanda Dahlberg (Gardner, Mass.) will also lead the pack, after running 18:54 and 19:02 at last Saturday's meet.

Dog days in Boston

GERALD H. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Senior goalkeeper Kelly Nigh has remained healthy this season, a fortunate sign for the Minutewomen, who have seen no less than three vital cogs in the offensive scheme go down early.

Terriers take advantage of hobbled UMass

By Matt Stewart
Collegian Staff

Devastated, diminished, and depleted are just a few adjectives that describe the Massachusetts women's soccer squad this season. In Wednesday night's showdown against Boston University at Nickerson Field, the University of Massachusetts was without junior forward Lindsey "Stormy" Fairweather and leading scorer Adair Blyler, among others.

The Terriers took advantage of the injury-plagued Minutewomen team, as they notched five unanswered goals, cruising to the 5-0 victory.

"They were a very good, fit, and organized team," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "Their one exception was that they've played the same lineup for all six of their games ... we were really short and down on players and they weren't."

In all, six UMass players were injured coming into this contest. Fairweather has been on the injured list for the entirety of the season and though she has been waiting all year to get back into the action, her status remained the same.

It appears that Blyer's injury, which occurred 1:07 remaining in the Sept. 14 game against Syracuse when she got tangled up with an Orangewoman and fell to the ground awkwardly, was as serious as it looked, as she didn't take the field Wednesday night.

Senior back Maggie LaBrode, sophomore mid-fielder Morgan Czaja, and sophomore mid-fielder Sarah Davis all sat out the game with a variety of different injuries. Junior midfielder Carly Turman started the game but had to come out only a few minutes into it due to an ailment. In addition to all the injuries the Minutewomen were suffering, sophomore midfielder Lindsey Bellini wasn't in the starting rotation as a result of a yellow card issued to her in the Syracuse game.

"This has been a very unusual year for injuries," Rudy said. "I've never had one like this before and I've coached for many years."

Boston University back Emily Dionne got the scoring started 15:37 into the contest, when she netted an unassisted goal off a corner kick, putting BU up 1-0.

The Terriers wasted no time in striking again, just seven minutes after the first goal. Forward Meghann Cook found the back of the net on a breakaway, giving Boston University the 2-0 advantage.

BU added a third goal before the break. At the 39:28 mark Rebecca Beyer set up midfielder

Continued on page 6

Home turf a welcome sight

By Paula Aiden
Collegian Correspondent

Coming off a series of three straight road losses in Louisiana and Cambridge, Mass., the Massachusetts field hockey team (2-5) will finally return to home turf tomorrow at 2 p.m., when it hosts Providence College at Garber Field in non-conference play.

The losing streak began in Louisville, where the Minutewomen dropped a 5-0 decision to the Cardinals on Sept. 7. It continued with 6-1 and 4-0 losses to Boston University and Harvard, respectively, last weekend in the Bay State.

Saturday, the Maroon and White hopes to use home-field advantage to snap the losing streak.

Junior goalie Christine Tocco has been the player to watch for the University of Massachusetts all season, with a total of 34 saves in the past three games alone. With 147 shots on her goal so far, Tocco has managed a .743 save percentage.

Tocco's goalkeeping ability will be put to the test tomorrow when facing the Friars (3-2). Sophomore Katharine Lary of Providence has been named Eastern College Athletic Conference Athlete of the Week three times this season. Lary has also been the Big East Offensive Player of the Week twice with only five games played this season.

Providence has a strong offense this season, led by Lary (15 points). The Friars have had 37 points in their five games, compared to the Minutewomen's six points in seven games.

Coming off a shutout win against Vermont, the Friars are in a strong position for tomorrow's game. Seniors Kelly Romanowicz and Stefanie Suehnholz, freshman Melissa McGaw, and junior Amy Phillips join Lary in forming a strong forward line that will challenge UMass' defense.

If the Minutewomen plan to defeat the Friars tomorrow afternoon, they will need to bring their offensive play up to the level of Providence. The Minutewomen have struggled to get within striking distance, with just 42 shots in seven games, of which just 23 have been on goal. UMass is averaging less than a goal per game.

By contrast, UMass's opponents in those seven games managed 147 shots, 85 on Tocco's cage.

As a team, the Friars have managed 61 shots against their opponents in five games this season. Juniors Adrianne Monaco and Caitlin Beresin, sophomore Marije Tigchelaar, and freshman Jaime Bawden offer some hope for the Minutewoman offense. Monaco leads the team in shots with 11, followed by Beresin with six. Tigchelaar and Bawden have each scored three of the team's six goals.

Siena is penultimate warmup for Atlantic 10

GERALD H. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Ernie Billitier and the Minutemen will take on Siena tomorrow, one of two more non-conference games this year.

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

As the Atlantic 10 season approaches, the Massachusetts men's soccer team is firing on all cylinders.

Before the Minutemen (4-2) can start the conference slate, they'll travel to Loudonville, N.Y. tomorrow for a 1 p.m. clash with the Siena Saints.

The Saints (0-4) have had their share of tribulations this season. Even with their current record, University of Massachusetts coach Sam Koch isn't looking past the Saints, and sees the game as a challenge of sorts.

"We're playing against a team we should be able to beat. Can we stay focused and make sure we do our jobs, or are we going to be thinking ahead? It's a huge test for us in that regard," Koch said.

The Maroon and White are coming off their biggest win of the season, a 5-1 dismantling of Boston University on Wednesday. Currently riding a three-game winning streak, the Minutemen have momentum that Koch wants to build on.

"I think this is a good game to judge how well we can focus after a big game like Wednesday, and how well we can show up to play on Saturday," Koch said.

The Saints have had their share of troubles finding the back of the net, with just two goals in four games, both of which came in the first two games of the season.

UMass' defense has been playing stellar soccer recently, due to the solid work of Craig Canavan, Chris Camerota and Devlin Barnes. The unit has only let up two goals in the last three games.

While Siena's offense has been stagnant this season, Koch isn't ready to overlook the Saint attack.

"They're strong, they have a couple of good players ... they have some weapons they can beat you if you're not prepared to play them, I assume we will be as long as we stay focused," Koch said.

The Saints have some frontrunners that can pester opposing defenses, but have yet to finish with consistency. T.J. Helly and Alejandro Vazquez are the only goal scorers for Siena, and their supporting cast hasn't found its rhythm yet.

Caio Silva and C.J. Mellini have eight shots apiece for Siena but have come up dry. They have provided constant pressure on opposing teams, and can break a game open if given the

Continued on page 6

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 14

Cleaning up after Isabel:

Coastal areas still struggling with hurricane's destruction

By Erik Stetson
Associated Press

HAMPTON, Va. (AP) — Utility crews had restored power yesterday to more than two-thirds of the people who had been without since Hurricane Isabel struck, but isolated price gouging and a general lack of information were starting to wear down residents in the hardest-hit areas.

Long lines formed in many places where there was news of ice or water or hot showers. But at the Red Cross office in Hampton, workers plastered the front doors with signs declaring in double-underlined words: "We do not have ice."

Newport News resident Shawn Williams went to the office to get water for his three young daughters, but all the office had was rice, meat, gravy and pineapple. His money reserves were running low and he was disgusted to find a local gas station demanding $2.50 a gallon.

"Two days, we thought it was fun. We camped out," said Williams. "Four days is long enough."

Terri Ellis, who was a claims adjuster in Miami in the aftermath of devastating Hurricane Andrew, said Virginia's response to Isabel was abysmal. She vented her frustration yesterday at weary Red Cross volunteers, unable to control her anger at being told to call emergency numbers.

"They say 'call the emergency management office.' When I get home, I have no phone," she said.

"Where is the assistance from other states?" she asked. "This city is not taking care of anything. Where is the water, where is the ice? I have babies in my neighborhood who yesterday couldn't get any milk."

The city had its own complaints about the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

"We've asked FEMA for generators. We haven't gotten them," Newport News Mayor Joe Frank said Sunday. "We've asked them for water, we've asked them for food, we've asked them for ice. So far, we haven't seen any of that."

Frank said the city had to hire trucks to bring ice from Tennessee and Alabama.

FEMA Director Mike Brown was on the defensive.

"We've distributed 650,000 tons of ice down to that area," he said Sunday. "I just find it difficult to believe that we're not meeting someone's needs — if, indeed, they've been articulated to us."

The storm severed electrical service for more than 6 million customers from the Carolinas to New York. By Sunday morning, that figure had been whittled to about 1.8 million.

Virginia was hit hardest by the power loss. The state's dominant provider, Dominion Virginia Power, said it was down to under 900,000 homes and businesses without electricity Sunday.

"It will be multiple days," said Irene Cimino, a spokeswoman for Dominion Power. "We have an enormous task involved here. Parts of our distribution system have to be rebuilt — not restored, rebuilt."

At least 30 deaths are blamed on the storm, 17 of them in Virginia. North Carolina, Virginia, Maryland and Delaware were declared federal disaster areas.

About a dozen Navy ships sent out to sea to get them out of the storm's direct path and keep them from being battered against docks returned to Norfolk on Sunday, joining 24 vessels that had sailed back into port the day before. More than 40 ships of the 2nd Fleet had gone a couple hundred miles out to sea, where they experienced swells of up to 16 feet, said Cmdr. Ernest Duplessis.

People were just realizing the full extent of the damage in Maryland, where nearly 600,000 customers were still without power.

Alice Evans, 60, was one of 79 hardy souls who stayed on Smith Island in Chesapeake Bay despite Maryland State Police efforts to talk them into leaving. Evans, one of two teachers on the island, learned Sunday that Isabel had washed books and other materials out of the tiny grade school.

"I hope I never have to face that again," said Evans, who confronted Hurricane Hazel on the island when she was a child.

North Carolina was still reporting more than 130,000 power outages Sunday, and Bertie County Manager Zee Lamb said Dominion Power officials said some residents of his county could be a month without power.

"They've just got a large territory to handle. We can only assume that sections at a time will be cut on," Lamb said.

On the Outer Banks, where the only road the length of Hatteras Island was washed out, tourism officials were trying not to think about the immediate future and instead focusing on getting things up to snuff for the 100th anniversary of the Wright Brothers' first flight in December.

"We're going to be standing tall and proud on Dec. 17, 2003. I'll tell you that much," declared Carolyn McCormick, managing director of the Outer Banks Visitors Bureau. "It's the day that changed the travel industry forever. It's a day that changed the world forever. And we're going to be ready for it."

Private insurers estimated damage in North Carolina could exceed $1 billion. In coastal Dare County alone — where dozens of homes in Hatteras, Kitty Hawk and Nags Head were destroyed — officials say it could top $500 million.

The federal government in Washington will be open for business on Monday after being shuttered for two days because of Isabel. Employees were told to report to work on time, said Rusty Asher, spokesman for the Office of Personnel and Management.

More than one-quarter of a million customers were still without service Sunday in the capital and its suburbs in Virginia and Maryland.

In Hampton, Michelle Patterson got her power back Saturday night but couldn't afford to buy food because she hasn't been working. "If I had money, I'd go wait in line," she said. "If you have money in the bank, you can't get to that either."

DAVE MARTIN/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Paul Roland of Kitty Hawk, N.C., tours his neighborhood after returning to the hard-hit resort city yesterday. Many of the homes along the beach in Kitty Hawk were destroyed when Hurricane Isabel made landfall last Thursday.

Cannabis rally held in Boston to support reform of drug laws

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

BOSTON – Thousands of pot smokers and marijuana supporters rallied for support of marijuana legalization on Boston Common Saturday at the 14th annual Freedom Festival.

Forty-five people were arrested according to published reports, all for marijuana possession and distribution. A fair number of people did not seem to mind the presence of law enforcement, as droves of men, women, and some children found seats on the lawn to enjoy the sights, music, beautiful weather, and in some cases a hit of pot smoke from a tobacco pipe.

The event featured many speakers, musicians, and vendors with gifts and clothes – many of which were created from hemp, a legal derivative from the marijuana plant – for sale. At one point the activists and musicians stepped aside to allow for a hemp fashion show, in which many lucky models got to show off an array of clothes made entirely out of hemp. The clothes ranged from pink skirts to green sundresses and had just about everything in between.

Speakers of the rally called for an end to marijuana laws, saying that government resources could be better spent elsewhere. Countless speakers pleaded that the money spent on enforcement of marijuana laws could be better spent on improving the state's education system.

"We need to take the money we spend on the war on drugs and put it into drug education programs so we can educate people [on the effects of drugs,"] said Boston City Councilor Chuck Turner as he publicly addressed the crowd.

Nationally, the government spends billions of dollars each year on the "War on Drugs."

Turner said that people should support the legalization of marijuana for medical purposes and said that by doing so would be a first step in complete legalization of pot.

"We need to take the first step in the war on the War on Drugs," Turner said.

The councilman went on to say that prescription pot would be a much better alternative to most of the medicine that is already on the market.

"You see these ads on TV for all these drugs that are out there. Then during the ad they tell you about four or five other side effects that you can get from taking them. With marijuana, you don't get any of that."

Artists performing on stage echoed Turner's views on illegal drugs. Some of these performers included the band Scissorfight, who exclaimed to the crowd at one point, "This song's about growing your own!"

The crowd had fewer people than the number expected by National Organizations for the Reform of Marijuana Laws. The group anticipated between 50,000 and 75,000, but the number of attendees was somewhere just below 50,000.

While the number of people may have been slightly lower than expected, there was still a large enough target audience for marketing ideas, products, and political campaigns.

There was a large amount of campaigners for Congressman Dennis Kucinich (D-Ohio), a candidate for President in 2004. The congressman does not support the prohibition of marijuana.

In his literature that was handed out at the rally, he pointed out that countries in Europe are turning away from "failed drug policies." He claims that the rate of violent crime has been reduced throughout countries viewing drug addiction as a medical problem. Kucinich does not provide actual numbers to support his claims, however he does point out that in the United States there is only one bed for every 10 drug addicts who apply for treatment.

Congressman Kucinich also points out the problem of racial bias by the criminal justice system when arresting and prosecuting drug offenders.

"According to a Human Rights Watch report based on FBI statistics, blacks were arrested on drug charges at nearly five times the rate of whites. Drug use is consistent across racial and socioeconomic lines – yet in the state of New York, for example, 94 percent of incarcerated drug offenders are Latino or African-American, mostly from poor communities," said Kucinich, whose message was already being felt among the thousands of marijuana supporters.

Also marketing to people of college age were the creators of Seat of Our Pants productions, the group that produced a DVD movie of people doing funny and odd things. The DVD is based on the book "Get Stoned and Read This Book:" by Gordon G. Gourd.

The book, which is primarily photos, poems, and other works of art, has been in print for five years, according to Rudy Seigel of Seat of Our Pants.

"This is a great venue for us," Seigel said. "Our target is the 18-30 age bracket, and in a college town like Boston, there are around 350,000 [people of that age.]"

The book's primary distributor is the store Urban Outfitters, which has a large consumer base of 18-30-year-old people. The book has sold over 50,000 copies since it was released at Urban Outfitters 3 years ago.

Recall candidates sprint to finish

By Beth Fouhy
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) – With a federal judicial panel likely to reinstate the Oct. 7 date for the California recall election, Gov. Gray Davis and the candidates vying to succeed him are preparing for a final two-week campaign push.

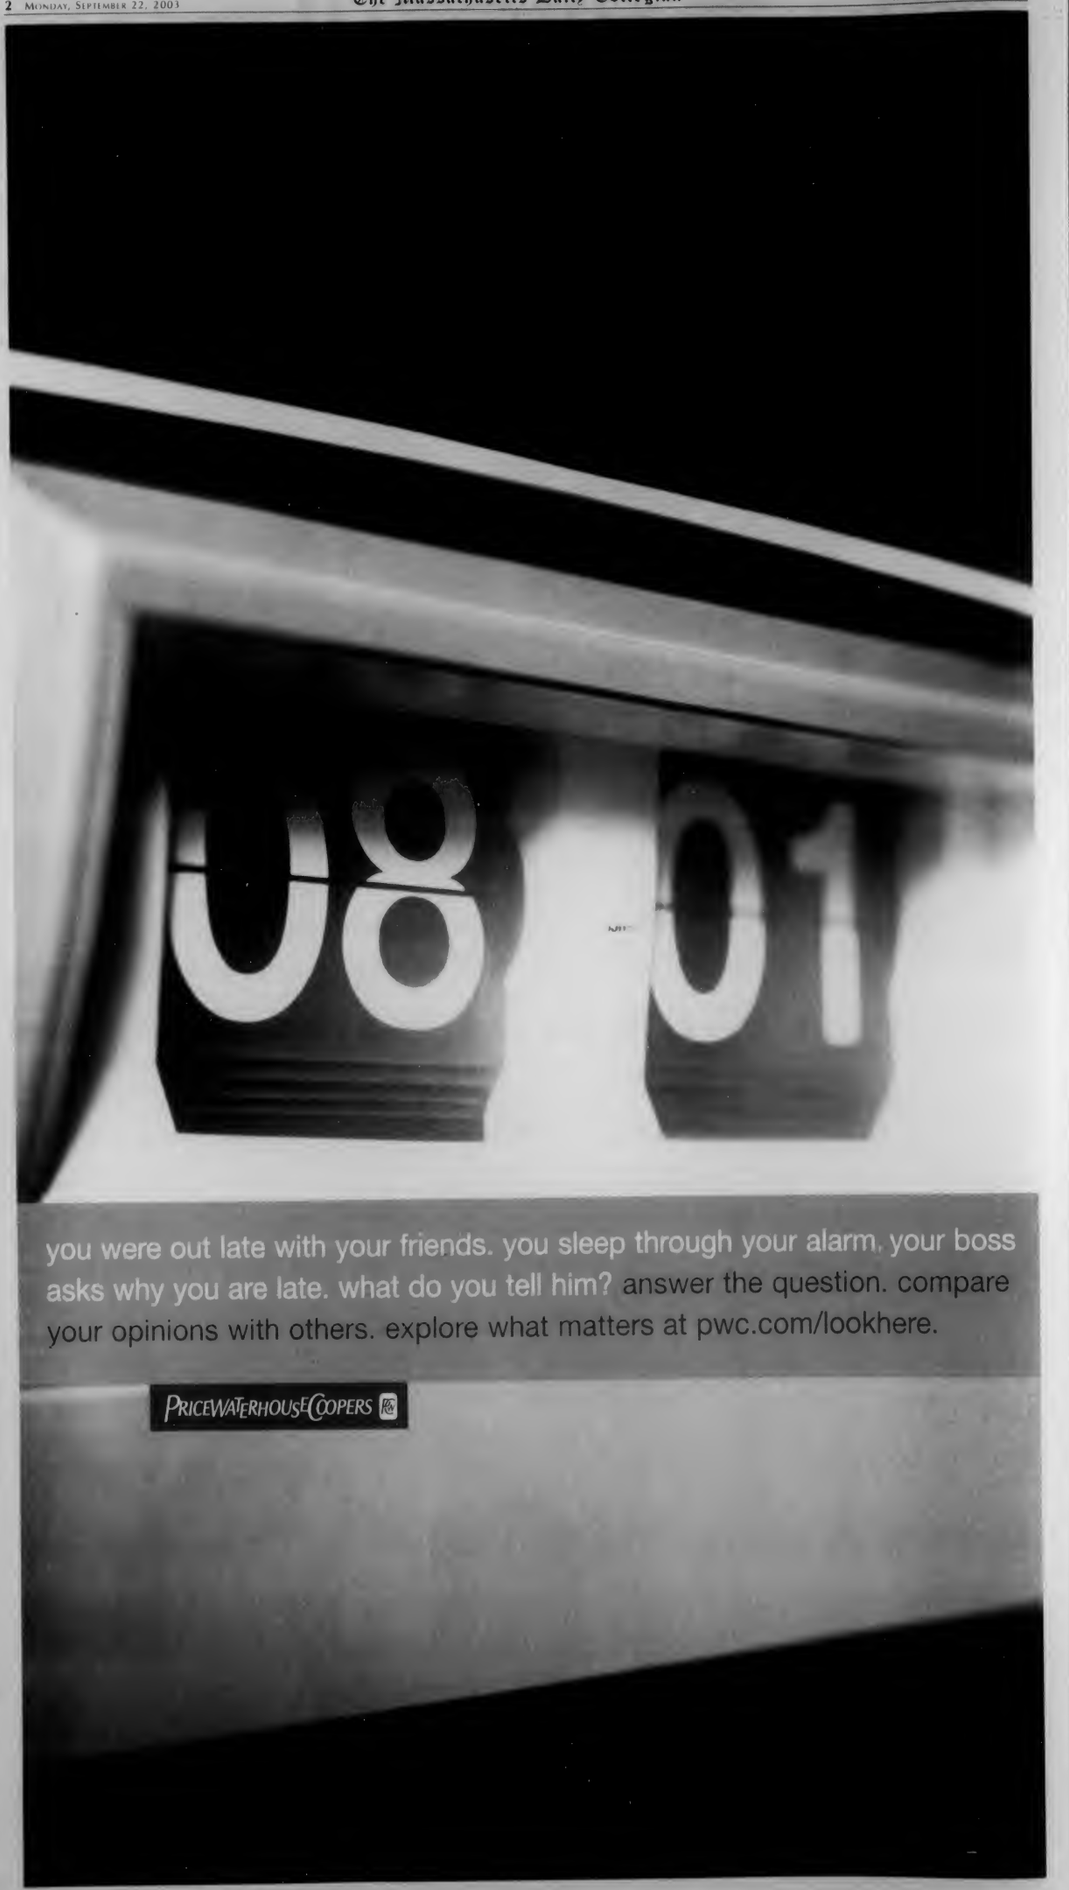
EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
RECALLING OUR PASSIONS MOVING AWAY FROM WHAT WE LOVED
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
THE REAL WORLD I WANT MY MTV REAL WORLD/ROAD RULES CASTING CALL AT UMASS
SPORTS PAGE 8
STATE AND MAINE UMASS BEATS BLACK BEARS IN ORONO
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 7

A new poll showed the race tightening in Davis' favor.

An 11-judge panel of the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals will hear arguments Monday on whether to uphold a ruling by a smaller panel last week that the election must be postponed until six counties still using punch card ballots can upgrade to more reliable voting machines.

The judges chosen for the new panel are said to be more conservative than the three who made the original ruling. Observers say the new panel will likely reverse the earlier ruling.

"As they say at the racetrack, we're going into the clubhouse turn," said Jack Pitney, professor of government at Claremont-McKenna College.



The best known Republican in the race, Arnold Schwarzenegger, was preparing to step into the spotlight for his first and — chances are — his only debate of the campaign Wednesday.

ASHLEY HANCOCK/COLLEGIAN

UMass Pow Wow

Kitty Hendricks-Miller, left, of the Wampanoag tribe from Mashpee, and Erin Saulnier, right, of the Micmac tribe from New Bedford attend the UMass Pow Wow held this weekend by the campus pond.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Erika Lovley
News Editor Courtney Charles
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pippas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Lita Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Ferron Salniker
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marselli

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became The College Signal in 1903, The Weekly Collegian in 1914 and The Two-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been incorporated since January 1998. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 pm

For the Record

Correction & Clarification: The Page One story last Wednesday on the Student Legal Services Office contained several reporting errors. The correct spelling of the office's director is Charles DiMare. The office phone number is 413-545-1995. When the office cannot represent students, they are sent to area lawyers with extensive experience in criminal cases and who have knowledge of the local courts. The office educates students about the legal process they face. The sooner the office becomes engaged with a case, the better the results are likely to be for the defendant. For those reasons, the office enjoys a nearly 95 percent rate of criminal defense cases that yield positive results for the defendant.

Correction: Because of an editing error, the pictures in Friday's Arts section were incorrectly identified as those of the Flava Unit dance team. The pictures, however, were of the UMass Dance Team.

Correction: Because of a reporting error, The University of Florida football team was incorrectly identified as a member of the Atlantic Coast Conference in Friday's Sports section. Florida is a member of the Southeastern Conference.

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Young Men's Club
136 East Street Hadley, MA
413-584-8728
Monday Night Football
• Pool Table
• Darts
• Horseshoes
• Kono
• Smoking
• Public Invited
• Women Welcome
Transportation Available
Free Munchies with this ad!

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
$139
★ Student Special ★
4 months
Best Aerobics-Best Machines
KEINER • NAUTILUS • FREE WEIGHTS • CYBEX • STAIRMASTERS • LIFTCYCLES • TREADMILLS • ELLIPTICALS • LIFEROWER
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
256-0000
RT. 9, AMHERST
ON BUS ROUTE • OPEN 7 DAYS

Campus Perspectives

"Do you think that it is important to vote in the SGA elections on September 25th?"

By Amelia P. Lincoln

"Yes, it is important if you care about the future of our school."
- Lindsey Zwart
senior
Operations Management

"I think it's important for the student body to be accurately represented in the SGA and the only way for that to happen is for a large amount of students to vote."
- Greg Mitchell
freshman
Communications

"It's important to vote because there are so many things that go on behind the scenes here; the person who would deal with them should be someone whom you agree with."
- Nathan Bedrick
sophomore
Undeclared

"We could have more power if we cared more. The SGA offers a formalized way we could organize ourselves and it has a name that people already respect."
- Jana Katz
sophomore
Spanish

"I think it's important to vote because it's using your voice at a local level where it probably affects you the most."
- Ann Nguyen
senior
STPEC and Political Science

"Yes because people need to be educated about campus politics, the way they deal with politics now will affect them when they get in the outside world."
- Ben Koebler
senior
Sports Management

CVS pharmacy
1 Hour Photo
Student Discount
$1.00 off 1 hour processing (prints only)
$2.00 off 1 hour digital processing (prints & cd)
Valid Student ID required.
Available at both Amherst locations only.
Original roll developing only.
Offer ends:
Sept. 30, 2003

New WORLD Theater
Undesirable Elements/ Pioneer Valley
Celebrating 25 Years of New WORLD Theater
Created by Ping Chong and Talvin Wilks
Sept. 24 and 25
8pm, Bowker Aud.
A part of Ping Chong's innovative interview-theater project.
Culture, community and identity collide to form a living history on stage. Immigrants from Senegal, Haiti, Puerto Rico, Cambodia and El Salvador share their journey in becoming a part of the rich immigrant history of the Pioneer Valley.
CARLOS
NAHID
Students (with valid ID are $5
TICKETS ARE $15-general public, $8-low income patrons/ seniors, $5-students. Call FAC Box Office 413-545-2511. For more info about the shows, call NWT at 413-545-1972
Open Mic Series
-FREE!-
WORD for WORD
Oct 7 at 7 pm
Cape Cod Lounge, UMass SUB
For more info call 577-2990

The BLUE WALL PUB
THIS WEEK at The BLUE WALL PUB
MONDAY Karaoke, Monday Night Football AND 10¢ Wings
TUESDAY Open Mic Series
WEDNESDAY Rhythm Systems - Bill Arnold DJ
THURSDAY Live Music With Great American and Nefertiti Jones
FRIDAY Live Music With Bathtub Mary co-sponsored by Laser 99.3
SATURDAY Live Music With Echohead and The Tint
LIVE MUSIC starts at 9:00PM.
OPEN MIC starts at 7:00PM. The Sign-Up sheet goes out at 6:00PM. Bring your talent and your friends and your instruments. We'll provide the stage and sound equipment and 20 minutes for you to knock'em dead!
ALL MUSICAL STYLES are encouraged to participate!
AS ALWAYS, 18+ to party, 21+ to drink.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Lombardi puts budget on the World Wide Web

Chancellor John Lombardi wants to communicate. He wants students, faculty, staff and University supporters to communicate and understand the financial situation the University of Massachusetts is in. To better the exchange of information, his office has set up a Web site specifically designed to convey information about the budget crisis and explanations of the budget.

"The purpose of this discussion is to be clear about the sources of our income and the major categories of our expenses so that all of us can focus on improving the effectiveness of our expenditures and enhancing the acquisition of our income," Lombardi writes.

"Universities are revenue machines: the principal limit on their success is defined by the maximum amount of revenue they can bring into the campus."

The website, www.umass.edu/budget was introduced last spring as an opportunity for the Chancellor to keep the UMass community up to date on fiscally important news. During rumors of tremendous budget cuts in the spring and again during the realization of outlandish budget cuts in the summer, the Chancellor e-mailed and openly discussed the situation with community members, including any interested students.

Last Thursday, the first of a series of installments explaining the University budget went up on the Web site. This first installment involves a letter from Lombardi detailing how the University's budget is divided and what part of it is important to whom. It also details who pays what — what state money pays for — and what students' fees pay for.

Did you know that students contribute approximately $177 million to the campus' budget, which represents 29% of the institutions total budget? The state generally contributes only $152 million, or 25.5% of the University's yearly revenue. Or did you know that the campus spends about $136 million on teaching and student related activities — not including residence halls or food services — but including the $19 million cost of operating intercollegiate athletics? All of this, and more, you can discover via Lombardi's revealing and educational website.

The letter is clearly organized and easy to follow, it makes easy what newspapers and reports coming out of the university, for years have not. It elucidates the situation we are in, and points us toward the exit sign.

"University budgets often confuse the most expert observers ... nonetheless, all of us who care about the success of the University must understand the budget, because the quality and productivity of the institution depends on the amount of money available and how well the University spends it."

Lombardi walks across campus with a "Students First" pin on his backpack, inside that backpack are the pedagogical materials he uses to teach his history course: he is first and foremost a professor. His needs to communicate and teach are obvious through his work with this website. Lombardi has gone beyond being open with information; he has pushed information into the fists of the UMass community. He wants us all to understand that this University continues to provide a quality education, but also that things will get better if we work together.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian believes that students should get involved in this discussion, learn the facts, contribute to the process of rejuvenating the University and in turn, inflating the value of their degree.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

Five steps to victory

Mark Ostroff

Hello, vigilant citizen and fellow patriot. The Project for a New American Century is proud to present "The Patriot's Field Guide to Winning an Election." This short guide will teach you what it takes to beat the democrats and conquer an election like a real neo-con.

In this guide, you will learn the awesome strategy of our hero-in-chief George W. Bush – a man who valiantly led the one-man retreat of the Texas Air National Guard home base in 1972.

This guide will only have one edition, as we expect that as a true American you will smile, nod, and request no further clarification.

Step One: When Enemies Attack

In the event that 11 intelligence agencies from around the world offer you specific warnings of a large-scale attack, it's important to stay calm. Take a bath, jog, play golf and read about pet sheep. If an agency provides you with a list of terrorists inside the U.S., discard this list immediately. The last thing you would want is for these guys to get caught. Just let them do their job. As the PNAC asserts, America needs a "catalyzing event – like a new Pearl Harbor," to get those flags waving and those guns blazing.

When the attack actually happens, chances are that there will be a lot of screaming and bloodshed. This is perfectly normal during a forewarned attack. Act surprised. Immediately call your political advisor and be sure to have a lot of cameras handy. Pictures of your shocked-yet-cool face make good press and make even better souvenirs to peddle for campaign contributions.

Step Two: Domestic and Foreign Possibility

You're probably thinking that it's impossible to find all those terrorists and bring them to justice. It can be done, but why bother? It's far too time consuming and elections are right around the corner! It is much more convenient to go after whole regimes instead. We at the organization suggest Iraq as a warm-up.

Because of the shock and awe of an attack on American soil, Americans will be more vulnerable than usual to suggestions made by leaders and the media.

Use slogans like 'Support our troops' to tangle the public web of abstraction. Remember: if they don't like our war, they don't like our soldiers either.

Appeal to the people with stories of torture chambers and "rape factories," and insist that Iraq had a lot to do with the attack on their country.

Assure them that Iraq will "welcome us a liberators," and don't be afraid to interject with comments like "He tried to kill ma' Daddy." It all just adds to the fun of fooling everyone.

Now, there's a little thing called the United Nations that stands in your way. In order to start a war, you'll have to show them proof of an imminent threat. This can be done by forging the necessary documents, or with blatant lies, office bugging and even blackmail. Don't worry; they probably don't speak English anyway. If all else fails, just pretend that they don't exist. After all, we ARE America, aren't we?

Step Three: Dissention at Home

This is a big problem among these so-called "liberals." You should suggest to the public that they are a major part of the problem.

Ask people to put American flags EVERYWHERE. Be sure to chastise anyone who refuses to line local streets with countless American flags. Use slogans like "Support our Troops" to tangle the public in a web of abstraction. Remember: if they don't like our war, they don't like our soldiers either.

For a little fun, renaming popular foods in support of the war is an option (See the book: "101 Ways to Eat your Liberty").

Step Four: Victory!

Things may not go as planned, but it is important to not acknowledge this. Let the liberals do all the acknowledging.

Instead, dress up in your favorite military attire and fly around on a fighter jet, like in the movie "Independence Day." Land on an aircraft carrier and declare the war is over -- even if it isn't.

Let the public know, however, that because the situation is so unstable, you'll need to stay on to fix the mess. Let them know that it wasn't your fault, either.

Step Five: Time to Campaign

While using the attacks as a backdrop to your campaign, you should emphasize how much you have done for people in OTHER countries. If necessary, bring up the torture chambers and "rape factories" again for emphasis.

Try to not bring up domestic issues. Instead, preach about the imminence of more attacks. When they happen, take a minute to congratulate yourself on a job well done. This is what defending America is all about. Repeat "I told you so" ad nauseum, take a pretzel break, and go back to step one.

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian columnist. For more information on the PNAC, go to www.PNAC.info.

Graduate students still students, not professors

Allison Edles

This September, I entered my first year of college at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst. As any freshman does, I had a few expectations, among which were the overwhelmingly large sizes of my classes and the in-depth capacity of my now college level courses. In addition to these conjectures, I had mistakenly assumed that my classes would be taught by actual professors as well.

Of the five courses I am taking this semester, two of them are being taught by graduate students. While I applaud graduate students for their dedication and intrigue, I do not believe that being left to teach an entire class, let alone to incoming freshmen, is a job they should be allowed to undertake.

Graduate students have been and remain an integral part of every major college/university in the United States. For some people, the thought of going to graduate school is an impending threat, an option that people try to avoid knowing very well that their particular major requires further schooling. For others, it is a way to advance one's learning in hopes to one day turn things around and give back to society in some way.

Graduate programs are great ways to further expand and explore what a certain career has to offer. However, consider what a first year undergraduate student is undergoing. For an in-state student, the average cost of room/board and tuition per semester is about $6,000. For the out-of-state student (like myself) it's about $12,000, and not to say anything of the budget cuts that will increase those prices next semester.

Now, one of the reasons I chose to attend UMass over the other schools I had been accepted to was because the price was a lot more reasonable. In fact, that was one of the points that the UMass faculty and students kept pushing and stressing when I came up for an open house. "Come to UMass because you'll get your money's worth!" As an out-of-state student, I am paying about twice the amount an in-state student is paying. If I'm paying all this money for my education, I would expect my classes to be taught by degree-baring professors, not students of the University.

Now, granted, there's no better way to determine how well you understand the material than by seeing if you can teach it back to students with the same fervor that you learned it with. The feedback from the students and the experiences earned from being on the other side of the classroom will be beneficial in any aspect of one's career.

Graduate students have been instructing undergraduate students going back as far as the 1960s and, even back then, it was an issue. However, the concept of a teacher's assistant is one that seems to solve the issue of upper level students acquiring the knowledge and skills they need.

Rather than giving entire classes to graduate students to design and instruct, why not have the classes be co-taught by both a professor and a graduate student? The professor can work together with the graduate student to create the curriculum and devise a program that will work for the students they're teaching.

Have the professor lay the ground rules and then have the graduate student instruct the class. That way, the students will still have the feel and experience of a real professor teaching them, but will also have a graduate student fulfilling their requirements for their program. Sometimes, it is beneficial for a class to be co-taught.

Placing all discrepancies aside, teaching a class is a challenging endeavor to undertake, regardless of what skill level you have. According to UMass' Graduate School, "A full-time teaching assistant is normally required to devote 20 hours per week to preparation and teaching," and receives a stipend for their work as a form of financial aid.

As a graduate student working on their dissertation, devoting 20 hours a week, possibly teaching a 300 level course to students not much younger than themselves and working a full-time job isn't benefiting the teacher or the students. If the teacher is so swamped with work, then that delays in returning the students' work and everyone will consequently fall behind.

Although graduate students are far more advanced in their studies than undergraduate students, allowing them to teach a course alone would not only result in added stress to their lives, but also to the students they're instructing.

Allison Edles is a Collegian columnist.

Passions: things we live for

Paige Cram

All of us have that one thing that we live for, that one thing that fills us with adrenaline and makes us feel more alive than anything else. For some of us, it's a sport; for some of us it's singing or dancing; and for some it may be something completely different.

But the feeling is still the same. It's a feeling that is completely passionate, a feeling we can't live without. Maybe it's something you've done your whole life, or maybe you've only just recently discovered it. But regardless, we all have a passion.

Then you go off to college, and for one reason or another, you let things fall by the wayside as you get busy and experiment with different activities. After all, that's what college is for right?

So, time goes by, and suddenly one night, as you're watching "Godzilla" dubbed into English at four in the morning with your friend, you get to talking about things you used to do, things you used to be good at, things you haven't done in a long time. And suddenly it hits you: you've given up on your passion, on the one thing you used to love most in the world. And for the first time, you acknowledge that you feel like something is missing; you feel the void that used to be filled by that adrenaline rush.

Then the question becomes "for what?" What is it that makes our old priorities seem unimportant? Why do we give up the things we enjoy the most?

Part of it is laziness. Let's face it. We, as college students, have a natural tendency to be lazy. We rarely change out of our sweatpants, we take buses to class when we can, and when we don't feel like walking the three minutes to the DC, we order from one of the hundreds of delivery places (Sugar Jones is my personal favorite) that cater to our lethargy. So, naturally any extra effort that it would take on our part to get involved in something, we can't be bothered with.

It's a feeling that is completely passionate, a feeling we can't live without.

I think another thing that holds us back is fear. Think about it: You spend your whole pre-teen and adolescent years playing soccer, for example, and maybe you're really good. But then you come to the University of Massachusetts, a Division I school, and suddenly you're a little fish in a big pond and not the all-star you thought you were. A lot of times, It takes a lot more work and practice, in addition to the years of experience that we have, before we could even have a hope of making it here. So then we fall back on using our laziness as an excuse when really, we're just scared that we won't make the cut.

The other part of it is that when we get to a new place, we want to try new things. We've spent so long doing one thing, why not try something else? But nothing can really ever take the place of the oxygen that you breathe, and let's be honest: although it has many sport-like qualities, playing Beirut will never give you that same rush that you get from a real game of basketball. Running to catch the bus will never be the same as crossing the finish line in first place, and having a dorm room full of people applaud you for your masterful funneling skills will never be like taking a bow after a flawless onstage performance.

The point is that, once you realize this, you can do something about it. We all "used to do" something, but what do we do now? We go to class, we go to work and we go to parties on the weekends. We try to pretend that it wouldn't all mean so much more if only we still had that one thing. We try to ignore that pang of sadness we get when something reminds us of how much fun we used to have, how good it felt to feel completely alive and satisfied with ourselves. Life without passion is nothing but a monotonous routine, and if you know what it is that makes you come alive, you shouldn't let it go for anything.

Paige Cram is a Collegian columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

editorial@dailycollegian.com

413-545-3999

Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center Way
Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

MTV arrives to find the 'Real World' of UMass

Real World/Road Rules casting call to be held Tuesday

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

Long before there ever were reality television-based shows like "The Bachelor" or "Temptation Island" crowding the minds of couch potatoes across the country, a little cable channel that played music videos around the clock had an idea for a show that would change the way TV executives targeted their audience.

Music Television, better known as MTV, had a simple plan: take seven strangers put them in a house, and see what happens when "people stop being polite and start getting real." The project seemed relatively simple so why not give it a simple name such as "The Real World," "The Real World," which at times has been denoted as anything but the real world, is now the New York Yankees of reality TV — consistently on top.

"The Real World" is currently MTV's longest running show as "The Real World: Paris" cast is the 14th group of college students to enjoy an amazing pad in one of the most spectacular cities in the world.

For its 15th season though, the casting directors of Bunim/Murray Productions are stopping on the campus of the University of Massachusetts in search of its newest cast members for "The Real World" and its sister show "Road Rules."

'Real World' Casting Call
Campus Center Basement Room 101
10 a.m. – 5 p.m.
Tuesday, Sept. 23

Tomorrow in room 101 of the Campus Center Basement, MTV, with help from University Productions and Concerts, will hold an open casting call for the next season of "The Real World" and "Road Rules."

"We are very excited at the opportunity to come to a college town like Amherst," "Real World/Road Rules" casting director Jason Horowitz said. "College towns are great because people are really enthusiastic about trying out for the show and we can really narrow down our [18-24] age group."

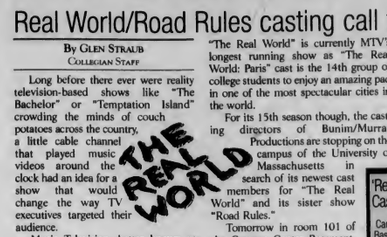
Horowitz is in the middle of a 12-stop tour around the United States to find the next cast members for the 2004 season. Some of the other stops along the way are Madison, WI., another classic college town, Dallas, Brooklyn, N.Y. and even Billings, Mt.

Contrary to popular belief, according to Horowitz, the majority of cast members picked for the show today are chosen from the open casting calls rather than sent-in videos.

"In the very beginning, for the first couple of seasons we had a lot of people on the show that sent in their applications and videos but now that has switched," he said. "Our casts are basically entirely made up of casting call attendees.

"The auditions are a great tool for us."

For the audtions, applicants will need to bring a recent picture of themselves (which will not be returned) and a photo ID.



According to Horowitz this will be the process of the day: After reaching the end of the line (which is expected to be very long) the applicant will speak briefly with one of the casting directors. Then s/he will be asked to fill out a one-page application. The final part of the audition is a group discussion with 10 other applicants in which the casting directors lead forums discussing political, social and religious topics.

"We are looking for all different types of stories from people," Horowitz said. "Usually the most dynamic stories told by the individuals who are not shy to share it with us and the rest of the group get a chance to move on to further auditions."

As for the burning question of where the next "Real World" and "Road Rules" location will be, MTV is keeping hush-hush as always and only the winners will find out when they are chosen.

There has been much criticism of the casting process for "The Real World" and "Road Rules" shows during the years, especially recently. It seems that sex appeal has become a major qualification for the show now. But according to Horowitz, the show tries very hard to avoid casting the same type of people each and every year.

"It is our challenge as casting directors to find someone with a different story from anyone who has ever been on the show," he said.

The current Road Rules cast works together on an array of challenges in the South Pacific.

COURTESY MTV.COM

"Real World: Paris" cast member Chris is from UMass-Dartmouth.

COURTESY MTV.COM

History of REAL WORLD and ROAD RULES

REAL WORLD
- Season 14: ??????????
- Season 13: Paris
- Season 12: Las Vegas
- Season 11: Chicago
- Season 10: Back To New York
- Season 9: New Orleans
- Season 8: Hawaii
- Season 7: Seattle
- Season 6: Boston
- Season 5: Miami
- Season 4: London
- Season 3: San Francisco
- Season 2: Los Angeles
- Season 1: New York

ROAD RULES
- Season 13: ??????????
- Season 12: South Pacific
- Season 11: Campus Crawl
- Season 10: The Quest
- Season 9: Maximum Velocity Tour
- Season 8: Semester at Sea
- Season 7: Latin America
- Season 6: Australia
- Season 5: Northern Trails
- Season 4: Islands
- Season 3: Europe
- Season 2: Season II
- Season 1: Season I

LUCAS/COURTESY MTV

Anime 2 fails to receive the same fanfare as last year's fest

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — In an attempt to acknowledge the growing culture of Japanese animation, the Northampton Arts Council held Anime 2 last weekend, the second ever anime festival held in Northampton.

Though there may be a strong underground culture developing for these anima flicks, the attendance at the festival was less than the previous year, which had 2,000 people come through the doors.

Anime 2 Festival
Northampton
Sept. 20-21

At Anime 2, the crowd that did attend the festival was nearly completely composed of local area high school students.

"I think it is because the festival was spread out over two days this year. Last year when it was only one day we had people come down from all over," said Ian Adams, an organizer for the festival.

Though the anima chosen for the festival were all of good quality, there were many attendants at the festival who voiced opinions on what should have been shown or what must be shown next year. Both days were structured as thus: at 11 a.m. a G rated anime was shown, followed by the cosplay, a chance to dress up as anime characters, at 1 p.m. At 1:30 there was a PG rated movie for teenagers, and finally at 4:30 an R rated anime was shown, and attendance was strictly monitored on these.

The locally donated Sushi added an authentic cultural vibe to the intermission between the afternoon and evening shows. Though the price was a bit steep, the quality of the food was worth it. Even after buying sushi and paying $12 for a ticket, it was still cheaper than renting three animas and buying pizza.

Hans Teensma, along with Adams, coordinated the movie selection through Disney Entertainment.

" It was great to see the families here for the early movie," Teensma said. "But I think that the weather hurt us a bit, all of the Goth [kids] are hiding inside."

One truly interesting part of the festival was the cosplay, which in actual anime lingo meaning is to dress up as an anime character. The cosplay was operated similar to the type of contest held for the best Halloween costume. There was quite a range in the quality, anything from lifelike representations to brown paper bag masks with rudimentary renditions of characters on them. Following the presentation of the costumes, awards were handed out, with the first place prize going to a Vampire.

Calling Anime 2 a festival may have been a bit of an overstatement, it felt like a movie marathon broken up with a costume contest. That is not to say that Anime 2 was a failure; while it may not have been a fully immersing experience in the world of anime, there was some good anime on the big screen, which is a rare thing.

"Next year we will probably make it a one-day event like it was last year," Teensma said. "There will definitely be more sushi and the movie's will be different though we would love to bring back Castle in the Sky."

"Castle in the Sky" was a highlight of this year's anime festival in Northampton held by the Northampton Arts Council.

COURTESY DISNEY

'Secondhand Lions' is second rate in quality

By Lauren Freeman
Collegian Staff

A cornfield dwelling lion named Jasmine. An elderly man single-handedly fighting off a gang of knife-wielding punks. A pig with a chicken riding on his back. These moments make "Secondhand Lions" a success among those filmgoers who love a mild-mannered family film that can deliver genuine laughs with fairly clean humor. Yes, that's right, good clean humor.

Needless to say, this film was not marketed to high school or college-aged kids. Although, many who did not get to the box office in time to get tickets for "American Pie 4" (relax, that was sarcasm) and watched this instead might find that in an embarrassingly geeky sort of way, this film is an unexpected charmer for all ages.

'Secondhand Lions'
Directed by Tim McCanlies
Starring
Haley Joel Osment
Michael Caine
Robert Duvall
New Line Studio
Rated R
117 mins.
Grade B-

Warning: if you don't get a warm, fuzzy, childish feeling when you see animals, you probably will not like this film. A large part of the humor derivcs from the human-like characterizations of five mangy farm dogs, a pig and an old retired lion. It's not quite "Babe" because the animals don't talk, but the overwhelmingly mammalian mise en scene and subplot requires an audience who doesn't hesitate to "oooh" and "ahhh" at the sight of cute animal antics.

"Secondhand Lions" is of a hybrid genre – comedic, fantastical and dramatic. Haley Joel Osment has grown several inches since "A.I." and likewise the character arch of Walter (played by Osment) encompasses a boy coming of age. This movie deals with some very important social issues; the psyche of the elderly as they perceive themselves becoming increasingly useless, the importance of family bonds and traditional stories passed down through the generations, and the relativism of reality ... our ability to selectively believe or not believe what we are told.

All of these thematic elements are carried throughout the film with equal weight but the importance of these messages are at times belittled and lost in an overloading of contrived flashbacks. The first and last five minutes of "Secondhand Lions" take place in contemporary time; the majority of the remaining 107 minutes is delivered through flashback, and then flashback within flashback.

The movie begins with 30-something-year-old Walter, played by Josh Lucas, answering a phone call. Something awful has happened to his two uncles in Texas. The flashback begins as memory; young Walter's cruel and selfish mother drops her son with Uncle Hub (Robert Duvall) and Uncle Garth (Michael Caine) at their rundown farm in Texas and takes off for Las Vegas. Hub and Garth are old and cranky; they have no use for a kid and no telephone or TV to boot. When Walter, amazed at their lack of technology, asks the uncles what they do for fun he is surprised and horrified when they answer him by sitting on the porch and shooting at drive up salesmen.

As eccentric and unfriendly as these two old men first appear, Walter is inspired by rumors told to him by his mother and local townies, that his uncles are sitting on a large sum of money from God knows where. In truth, Walter's mother wants Walter to win the hearts of the two men so she can partake in their inheritance when they die. Apparently, Walter's mom isn't the only one trying her hand at the acquisition of the fortune, as sudden appearances from Walter's obnoxious Aunt, Uncle and bratty children become frequent and intrusive.

Walter is less greedy and only sees the rumored money as motivation to learn about his uncles' pasts which little by little, through the excessive use of flashback, he does. Uncle Garth is the less eccentric of the two uncles and tells Walter stories about Uncle Hub who apparently was a sword-wielding, princess snatching warrior in his time. Garth, too, apparently has had his share of adventure travelling alongside the notorious Hub. Hence, the name "Secondhand Lions" refers to the fact that these two washed up men were in their time heroes of sorts.

This film is perhaps overly dependent on old-fashioned chauvinistic values. The women in the film are entirely dependent on their male counterparts. The final showdown of the film occurs when Walter begs his Mom to do what is best for him for once. It is degrading from a woman's perspective that his mother sees the "best thing" being leaving her son with the two men rather than ditching the abusive creep she is dating. Similarly, Walter is overly excited about receiving the man-to-man talk from Uncle Hub. It almost appears that Walter at first is a timid and passive character is subduing his natural tendencies to become more of the stereotypical male ideal.

The excessive use of flashback is irritating but perhaps acceptable for a film marketed to kids . they don't mind artifice, do they? In fact, the biggest dilemma posed by this film is that so much potential is inhibited by the PG rating that the mature viewer might almost wish that the narrative was less geared toward kids. If the film were made for an adult audience, which it easily could have been, it would have been more capable of shining light on the complex issues that come from the rare and wonderful relationship between the three characters.

Robert Duvall, left, and Michael Caine star in "Secondhand Lions."

COURTESY NEW LINE

GERALD M. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Eyes on the prize

Jason Scudamore (above) played a pass through the box to Ptah Myers set up Myers' winning goal in overtime Saturday, as the Minutemen beat Siena 2-1 after 101 minutes of soccer. Read all about it tomorrow in Sports.

Tough crew wins out

Continued from page 8

of a Marcus Williams fumble for a touchdown gave the Minutemen a 12-point cushion heading into halftime, one that they would not relinquish.

"I made a big mistake on the punt, and broke down on coverages. But I was able to go out there and make a play on the fumble and make up for at least one of those, which I felt I needed to do."

Torres has been quite impressive with his booming kickoffs in each of the season's first three contests, but had yet to hit a field goal. So when his 37-yard field goal was blocked — just as his previous attempt was rebuffed by K-State last weekend — the UMass faithful were surely wondering if they would be able to rely on the young man's right leg.

However the true freshman showed his resiliency when he lined up for a second 37-yarder late in the fourth quarter: he drilled it between the posts to give the Minutemen the additional three points they desperately needed in what was a five-point game.

"That's a big kick," Whipple said. "We were in a situation where they were making big plays, and we only had a five point lead. We were just one play away from falling behind and [Torres] made a big kick to give us that eight point edge we wanted."

Finally Boyer, who seemed to struggle mightily early on with the speedy Maine receivers, may have been the most resilient of all.

After being victimized by pass interference calls and struggling to keep Perriera and Ryan Waller in front of him, Boyer's task became even more difficult when Costello went to the sideline with an injury.

Yet the junior went on to record seven total tackles, five unassisted, and broke up two passes. But his biggest play came at crunch time, as he intercepted a Ron Whitcomb pass at his own 34-yard line, and preserved a well-fought victory for his team.

"That's just Bobby making a play," Costello said. "They went right at him the whole game, and he had to carry even more of a load out there because [we were shorthanded."

"That's the way the players on this team are," he said. "Everybody makes mistakes, but the first thing we want to do as a team is to go out there and make plays to make up for when we mess up."

Minutemen bear down

Continued from page 8

From there, the Maroon and White held the edge for the rest of the game, although a late charge by Maine necessitated a 37-yard field goal by Mike Torres – who was blocked earlier in the game – to give the Minutemen a cushion.

Whipple had plenty of praise for his two rookie kicking specialists, each of whom came into the season with big soccer cleats to fill. Torres, out of Fort Union Military Academy in Virginia, replaces Doug White, who went 8-for-10 on field goals last year. Even harsher is the spotlight on classmate Christian Koegel, who takes over for departed David Sanger. Sanger averaged over 40 yards a punt on 68 attempts last year, 24 of which landed inside the 20-yard line.

"You've got two true freshmen that have never been in this situation," Whipple said. "Kansas State's not so much of a problem when you're getting your tail kicked 24-7 or something, and then when you're ahead 51-7 against Central Connecticut. This was a lot more pressure, and we asked those kids to step up and they did it."

The Minutemen were also effective in shutting down Williams, who was averaging six yards per carry entering the game. He was held to just 70 yards on 17 carries Saturday, for an average of 3.9 yards per carry.

"The coaches told us in the beginning of the week that 'we've got to shut this kid down,'" Costello said, "and we came out, he challenged us, and we stepped up to the challenge. We came out and did our job to shut down the running back, and once we shut him down, it was pretty much a wrap."

The Minutemen also silenced the Maine air attack, though a few long receptions flawed an otherwise solid performance by a depleted UMass secondary. Costello was hurt in the first half and didn't return, though he guaranteed a return to action this Saturday against James Madison. Junior Boyer was also hampered by a beat-up shoulder, according to Whipple.

"We're banged up, and I think our guys need rest," Whipple said. "We talked about it as a staff all week. We looked very slow on Wednesday and Thursday and our scout team looked fast, so I have to maybe address that a little bit. But it's been two hard physical games on turf on the road, and we're just glad to get out with a win."

The Black Bears, who led early after a gaffe by the Minuteman offense, found themselves trailing the entire second half, and most of the second quarter. They did make things interesting as the clock ticked down the final seconds of the third quarter, when Whitcomb found Pereira for a 56-yard touchdown pass, making the score 21-16 with all of the momentum in the home team's favor.

Maine couldn't manage any more offense, though, and a desperation heave from Whitcomb with 32 seconds left was intercepted by Bobby Boyer, effectively ending the game.

While sophomore Steve Baylark never found the endzone, he carried most of the load for the Minutemen, rushing for 110 yards on 24 carries. Baylark, who is starting to make his "fill-in" title obsolete, performed admirably, giving the Maine defense fits even on the simplest rushes.

Pats beat injury bug, Jets

Continued from page 8

"I knew Vinny was going to [Wayne] Chrebet because that's his main guy," Samuel said.

The Jets came right back on Testaverde's 29-yard scoring pass to Chrebet less than two minutes later, but came no closer as they converted just one of 13 third-down opportunities.

"It was a character drive," Testaverde said. "We felt like we had momentum but then we can't go out and repeat it."

The Patriots broke a five-game home losing streak against the Jets.

"We can put that little curse behind us," Law said. "I'm sure the Jets will bounce back like they did last year."

The Patriots won at the Meadowlands 44-7 in the second game last year, then lost at home 30-7 in the 15th game and missed the playoffs on the final weekend.

Yesterday, Adam Vinatieri and Doug Brien kicked three field goals each before Brady's touchdown run. He took it in himself when he saw his receivers were covered.

Friars win in OT

Continued from page 8

overtime, the Friars finished things off with a rebound goal. Sophomore Katharine Lary passed the ball to Suehnholz at the top of the circle, but Tocco successfully blocked her initial shot. As Tocco dove to deflect the ball from the cage, Suehnholz pounced and fired off a quick shot to score the final goal of the game, securing a 2-1 victory for the visitors.

Although the Maroon and White was in the lead for most of the game, the Friars were able to pull out the victory when the pressure was on. Providence has been playing well under pressure this season, with three of their four victories decided in overtime.

In contrast, UMass started off the game well, but appeared to be worn out before the second period of the game.

"[The Minutewomen] got frantic at critical times, and when they needed to control the tempo they didn't," Shea said.

"That's the mark of a young team, so it's pretty par for the course. It's sort of been baptism by fire, learning under the gun."

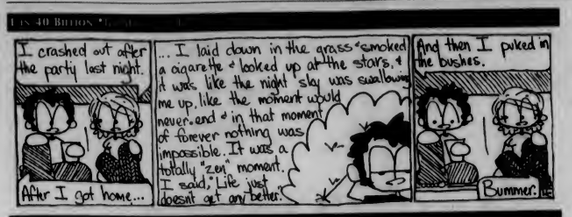
UMass did play better as a team on Saturday than it has all season. In fact, it outshot Providence 17-15, and outnumbered the Friars in penalty corners 9-8.

"They were doing good things," Shea said. "This was their most disappointing loss, because they had it in control. They took steps forward, but not to finish it off is disappointing."

Despite vast improvements since last weekend's games in Cambridge, Mass. – 6-1 and 4-0 losses to Boston University and Harvard, respectively – the Minutewomen still have plenty of room for development before heading back on the road.

"They need to continue to grow, and learn what they need to work on," Shea said.

The team heads back east this week to face in-state rival Northeastern. The non-conference game will be played in Boston Wednesday at 4 p.m.



TRUST "Before locking into a long term contract for a fitness facility with no machinery in place, why not give the veteran professionals a visit."
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
"Big enough to own the best equipment, but small enough to know your name."
* In business 22 years
* Locally owned & operated"
6243806
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0080 RT. 9, AMHERST

Oasis Body Wraps and Tanning
243 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 587-9742
NOW FEATURING SUN SPRITZER UV FREE TANNING
• The first UV FREE tanning machine in the area
• Get $5.00 off your first visit
• A rich golden tan in just a few seconds
• You'll look and feel great
1/2 Price tanning every Tuesday
OASIS • Conveniently Located • UMASS

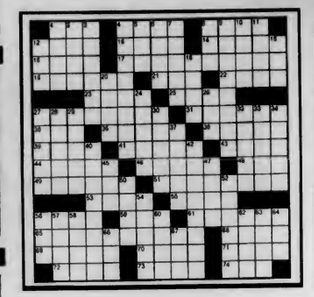
STUDENT TRAVEL
quik BREAK
check out these airfares!
one stop, no hassles
We hook you up with:
• discounted student and youth airfare
• budget hotels and hostels
• rail and bus passes
• international student ID cards (ISIC)
• travel insurance
• travel gear and more!
London.....$310
Paris.....$371
Rio de Janeiro.....$643
Los Angeles.....$262
Las Vegas.....$262
Fare is round trip from Boston. Subject to change and availability. Tax not included. Restrictions and blackouts apply.
2 nights + transfers + activities
New Orleans.....$110
Las Vegas.....$113
San Francisco.....$131
Vancouver.....$141
Miami.....$160
New York.....$192
(airfare not included)
44 Main St. (413) 256.1261
STA TRAVEL WE'VE BEEN THERE.
exciting things are happening @ www.statravel.com

Our Famous 2 BURGS - FOR - 2 BUCKS
Phantom Gourmet's 2003 Pick Top 8 Burgers in New England
"Pete's Big Bopper Deluxe"
OCMP CREDIT CARDS
ADVOCATE BEST OF THE VALLEY READERS POLL 2003
1st- BURGERS 2nd- HOT DOGS 3rd- FRIES
PETE'S DRIVE-IN
www.petesdrivein.com 287 RUSSELL ST • ROUTE 9 HADLEY • 585-0241

www.dailycollegian.com
EXPRESS/ STRUCTURE
Warehouse Clothing Sale
Mon - Thur 9 to 8
Fri - 9 to ???
GOT CLOTHES?
1st Quality Merchandise
5 DAYS ONLY
WAREHOUSE SALE
NOBODY'S PERFECT
Don't Miss Out!!!
WAREHOUSE CLOTHING SALE
Sept. 22nd thru Sept. 26th
WAREHOUSE SALE
Student Union Ballroom

Quote for the Day

"If you're free you'll never see the walls
If you're head is clear you'll never freefall
If you're right you'll never fear the wrong
If you're head is high you'll never fear at all"



-Audioslave

Today's Crossword Puzzle

ACROSS
1 Family nickname
4 Pipe type
8 Many NYC residences
12 TV's Hawkeye
13 Not do
14 Check for fit (2 wds.)
16 — A This Gang
17 Syrup source
18 Ms. Lupino
19 Finally (2 wds.)
21 Make tracks
22 One deposit
25 PC alternatives
26 Bruce's ex
27 Airport events
31 Pouring aid
35 Spike of Bruce Lee
36 Actress — Davis
39 Breathing spell
41 Sweetie pies
43 Bridge section
44 From Hong Kong
46 Aristotle's teacher
48 Fighter pilot
49 Tidi Buddy
52 Sharpshooter's name
53 Ski lift (high.)
55 Stepped on it
56 Hindu princess
59 Flowery month
61 Recooking
66 Fan
68 In a while
69 Freighter hazards
70 Got larger
71 Trade
72 Shade tree
73 Blissful spot
74 Sigh of content

DOWN
1 Corn receiver
2 Teen fave
3 Deli meat
4 Brief note (2 wds.)
5 Grounded bird
6 Almost, in poems
7 Priggish
8 Fuming over
9 Facial connections
10 Hunt-and-peck error
11 Auction shout
12 Alias
15 Born as
18 Coral ridge
20 Keep
24 Go dormant
26 Dirty rag
27 Islamic deity
28 Be frugal
29 Old keepsake
30 Snake covering
32 Mountain kingdom
33 Legislate
34 Bowling alley parts
37 Food carriers
40 Trellises
42 Raleigh (2 wds.)
45 Bird's home
47 Bother orders
50 Hunter's wear
52 Unreliable sort
54 Mountain chain
56 Joplin genre
57 From a distance
58 Cleopatra's river
60 Piece of length
62 Sioux City site
63 Wyle or Yannick
64 Site for Greenspan
66 Egg ending
67 Wallace of "Color"

1-13-05 © 2005 Universal Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Pizza Casserole
- Santa Fe Chicken
- Cuban Red Beans (vegan)

DINNER
- Boston Scrod
- Szechuan Beef & Broccoli
- Szechuan Tofu & Broccoli (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

MONDAY
- High: 73
- Low: 54

TUESDAY
- High: 74
- Low: 48

WEDNESDAY
- High: 75
- Low: 49

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Dan Lamothe

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Amelia P. Lincoln

COPY EDITOR
Nikolas P. Markantonatos

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington

PRODUCTION STAFF
Fedrich Torres, Corey Rosenberg

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Your idea for world peace is noble but implausible.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Today is a great day to be courageous and try something new.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Your pessimism will pass as things start to look up.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Double check your assignment book before you go out tonight.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Your arriving at a new chapter of your life, so keep turning pages.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You will wake up on the floor in the very near future.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
The most hyped up events can be the biggest letdowns.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Why do you even bother? Sometimes you should just settle for second best.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Seek refuge from your hectic life by taking a walk to a place you've never been.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Your schedule may seem overwhelming but take a deep breath and you'll be fine.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Have more school spirit and root for the home team. GO UMASS!!

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
The object of your affection is at a tough place and needs personal time. Back off!

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Activities

Fraternities-Sororities- Clubs- Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven Campus Fundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Montreal Weekends $99. Includes R/T Luxury Motor Coach from Springfield. 3 Days-2 Nights- 4 Star Hotel Downtown-Meals-Night Club passes. www.montrealexpress.net 1-781-979-9001 Special Group Rates

Auto for Sale

Buick Century 1994 Recently inspected 108,000 Miles $2100-413-549-6648

Computers

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

Employment

Rent us your ears! Participate in listening experiments $7.50/hour call 545-6837 or write jkingston@linguist.umass.edu

Hand out flyers on campus for new business – short term – 5 to 10 hours per week $8 per hour. Call 413-210-9352

Employment

Earn up to $100 per hour or more as an exotic male dancer at club Xstatic. 240 Chesnut St, Springfield MA, 413-736-2618 or www.clubxstatic.com

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

Produce Sales Associates Part-time evenings + Saturdays. Competitive Pay Call Atkins 253-9528

Employment

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

For Sale

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

For Sale

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.iagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

Furniture

Large Corner Computer Workstation: Filedrawers, cubbies, & more. $125.00 OBO. 367-0096

Instruction

Private Boxing Lessons- w/retired Pro Djata Bumpus. In Northampton. 584-1966 or visit- www.westernmassboxing.com Accepts all major credit cards.

Services

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, an d Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Travel

SPRING BREAK
Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

Travel

Spring Break '04 with StudentCity.com and Maxim Magazine! Get hooked up with Free Trips, Cash, and VIP Status as a Campus Rep! Choose from 15 of the hottest destinations. Book early for FREE MEALS, FREE DRINKS and 150% Lowest Price Guarantee! To reserve online or view our Photo Gallery, visit www.studentcity.com or Call 1-888-SPRINGBREAK!

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

Travel

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

Wanted

EGG DONORS NEEDED, non-smokers. Ages 21-32. Generous compensation & expenses paid. For more information contact Robert Nichols, Esq. (781)769-6900, Rnichols@gbnlaw.net, www.robertnicholsesq.com.

Place your classified in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace! Call 545-3500 today!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Bearing down

Resiliency key to win

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

ORONO, Maine — Steve Baylark, playing in place of the "academically disciplined" R.J. Cobbs and the injured Raumny Rosario, rushed for 23 yards in the first half.

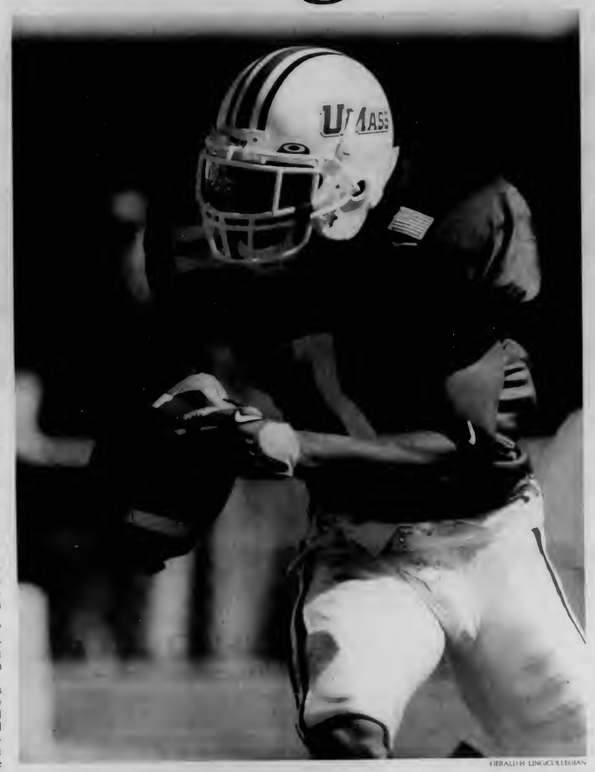
Steve Costello, playing special teams in place of Cobbs, fumbled a punt deep in Maine territory, and was subsequently beaten on a fade route by Christian Pereira for the Black Bears' first touchdown just three plays later.

Michael Torres, replacing arguably the school's most reliable placekicker in 2003 graduate Doug White, was blocked with a five-point lead hanging in the balance.

And Bobby Boyer, temporarily anointed as the team's top corner following an injury to Costello, was beaten down the sideline by Pereira, for a 56-yard touchdown pass, pulling the Bears to within five to begin the fourth quarter.

Yet if you were to name four of Mark Whipple's most valuable players in Saturday night's crucial 24-16 win over the two-time defending A-10 champions in UMass' conference opener, there would be no better choices than the above.

And that speaks to one thing, and only one thing.



"This," coach Mark Whipple declared, "is a resilient football team."

For Baylark, resiliency was evident in 87 second-half yards on the ground, 110 total on the game. In addition, his bruising, straight-ahead style cost him only five yards for the game, and inspired an unidentified member of the media to proclaim that the sophomore was "just tough as hell."

"It just took me awhile to get going," Baylark said. "I don't like playing on [artificial turf] because I slip everywhere. But once I got my feet under me I could find a grove and I just tried to run hard."

Costello, who has settled in nicely as the team's top cover man, was equally resilient following his special teams and defensive miscues. He did drop a crucial punt that set up a Maine drive to the endzone, but his 34 yards on five punt returns, as well as a long of 19 yards, were both game highs. Also, his 35-yard return

Continued on page 6

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Steve Costello's fumble recovery led to the Minutemen's third touchdown of the day against Maine. UMass held off a late push by the Black Bear offense to win their Atlantic 10 opener 23-16 at Harold Alfond Stadium in Orono, Maine.

Traveling Minutemen trump Maine

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

ORONO, Maine — A six-hour road trip through the wilderness of Maine is hard enough. Even worse is when that trip follows a loss in Orono. Fortunately for the Massachusetts football team, the final score was tilted in its favor at the final gun.

It wasn't pretty, but the University of Massachusetts (2-1, 1-0 Atlantic 10) held off the Maine Black Bears (2-2, 1-1 A-10) Saturday, posting a 24-16 victory, the first time the Maroon and White has won a conference opener on the road under Whipple's command.

UMass	24
Maine	16

UMass scored 21 points in the second quarter, seven of which came from the defense.

It was the Minutemen's second straight road game, one week after a 38-7 loss to Kansas State in Manhattan, Kan. For all intents and purposes, though, this one mattered more.

"Forget about championships, if you can't win on the road in this league, you're done," Whipple said. "We're 1-0, and that's all that really matters."

Fitting a theme for the day, it was the UMass defense that came up with the winning score. Steve Costello picked up a fumble committed by Maine tailback Marcus Williams, and returned it all the way for a touchdown, putting the Minutemen up 21-9 with 3:50 left in the first half.

Costello was more than happy to come up with the big play after two mistakes on punt returns earlier in the game, one of which led to a Black Bear touchdown.

"I had to make a big play because I had two mishaps in the punt game, but coach stayed behind me, my teammates stayed behind me and said 'go out and make the play,' " Costello said.

"When that play happened, it happened so slow. Just seeing the ball on the ground, I thought 'I'll pick this up if nobody else is.' And I picked it up and ran to daylight, and got seven of the nine that it gave up back."

The play, which began from Maine's own 33, followed a bomb completed by Maine quarterback Ron Whitcomb to Christian Pereira, who made a leaping catch and took it all the way into the endzone. But, in a sight that became quite familiar to the 7,316 in attendance, the play was brought back by a holding call on the Black Bears.

Continued on page 6

JIM ROGASH/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Dan Klecko (right), seen here battling New York Giants tight end Visanthe Shiancoe during a preseason game, was one of the few New England defenders to remain uninjured after the Patriots' 23-16 win over the New York Jets yesterday.

Depleted Pats manage victory

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FOXBORO (AP) – New England Patriots players are going down as quickly as the New York Jets' season.

For the third straight game, the Patriots lost a key defender and the Jets lost a close contest as New England won 23-16 Sunday.

N.Y. Jets	16
Patriots	23

Tom Brady never missed a play after hurting his right elbow with 5:45 left in the second quarter. He ran for a 1-yard touchdown late in the third quarter to break a 9-9 tie.

But in the first quarter, nose tackle Ted Washington fractured his leg and wide receiver David Patten hurt his right leg. Neither returned.

"We don't ask, 'Why us?'" linebacker Tedy Bruschi said. "We deal with what is happening, no matter who's in there."

Washington is expected to miss "a couple of weeks," coach Bill Belichick said. It is not known how long Patten will be out.

The Patriots (2-1) already were without two starting linebackers — Ted Johnson, who broke his left foot in the first game, and Rosevelt Colvin, who broke his left hip in the second and is expected to miss the season. And they released safety Lawyer Milloy before the first game.

Cornerback Ty Law rolled his ankle late in the first half but returned.

"We're already down in numbers as it is," Law said. "As long as I can run, even if I'm not full speed, my presence is important out there."

The Jets (0-3) lost to Washington 16-13 on a field goal with 5 seconds left, then fell to Miami 21-10 before Sunday's seven-point loss.

"It's a sickening feeling," quarterback Vinny Testaverde said. "Losing like this is worse because you were in all three games."

The Jets were without two key players — quarterback Chad Pennington with a dislocated wrist and cornerback Donnie Abraham with a broken shoulder.

Abraham's replacement, Ray Mickens, was called for pass interference in the end zone one play before Brady scored. And Pennington's replacement, Testaverde, threw an interception that Asante Samuel returned 55 yards for a touchdown 11 seconds into the fourth quarter.

Continued on page 6

Friars squeak by

Providence wins in overtime

By Paula Aden
Collegian Correspondent

Despite holding an early lead, the Massachusetts field hockey team fell in overtime to Providence College 2-1 Saturday at Garber Field. The non-conference game marked the fourth straight loss for the Minutewomen, dropping their record to 2-6.

Providence	2
UMass	1

"Providence didn't win because of anything they did," UMass coach Patty Shea said. "We played well, but we got frantic at critical times and they took advantage of that."

Senior Stefanie Suehnholz scooped up a rebound and put a shot past UMass netminder Christine Tocco to win the game 1:47 into overtime.

The Minutewomen made a strong start, with sophomore Robin Dziedzic earning the team's first goal only nine minutes into the game. Dziedzic scored off a rebound from a penalty corner. The Maroon and White dominated play during the first half of the game, with six penalty corners. Additionally, the Minutewomen outshot Providence 12-6 in the first period.

Play in the second half was more evenly divided between the teams, with solid defense from both the Friars (4-2) and the Minutewomen. Both teams were playing well on Saturday, but UMass seemed to tire during the second period, while Providence seemed to catch a second wind.

"In the second half, they stopped doing the simple," Patty Shea said of her charges.

During the second period, the Minutewomen were not communicating well on the field, rushing passes or not passing at all, letting themselves get mired in one-on-one possession and losing the ball back to the Friars.

Still a young team, the Maroon and White has been struggling to play as a unit, relying too much on individuals.

Although there are quite a few talented players for UMass, they have not yet been able to combine their individual skills to form a cohesive entity on the field.

Tocco made eight saves during the game, preventing the Friars from getting on the scoreboard until late in the game. With only five minutes left in regulation, junior Melissa Kroslak carried the ball all the way into the circle from midfield, before quickly passing to freshman Melissa McGow, who slipped it past Tocco, tying the game at one and forcing overtime.

Just under two minutes into

Continued on page 6

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

The Minutewomen dropped to 2-6 with an overtime loss to Providence on Saturday at Garber Field. The Friars improved to 4-2.

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 15

Council member deemed ineligible

By Courtney Charles
Collegian Staff

Former Coordinating Council member Levi O'Brien stepped forward last Thursday, saying he was ineligible for the seat he held during the summer.

According to O'Brien, Student Government Association speaker Jared Nokes pulled him over to the side during one of the council's first meetings during the summer and said, "You know you're not supposed to be filling this seat, right?"

"I asked him if he wanted me to step down and he said he wanted the seat filled and he wanted me to remain," O'Brien said.

O'Brien said he did not believe quorum would have held had he not been there. Nokes disagreed.

If quorum – which is one more seat than half the voting body – is not held, any vote or decision made without it is rendered invalid. According to Nokes, quorum is three people on this year's specific council, which he said was exceeded at all of the meetings.

ALANA member Rene Gonzalez interpreted the bylaws as meaning all the members, of which there should be 12, including Nokes, counted for the quorum. The council as defined in the bylaws should contain the speaker, the chairs of the five committees, two senators from the Senate at large and four members appointed by the ALANA caucus. In this case, quorum would be met only at 6.5.

Previously, Nokes had said that Attorney General Mark Morrison sent around an internal memo that declared O'Brien and former SGA Senate Ways and Means Committee Chairman Brian Thompson ineligible to serve on the council. Nokes said he had not realized they were ineligible until that time. Thompson is not at the University of Massachusetts this semester and therefore cannot act on the council.

When asked why O'Brien was ineligible Nokes said, "It depends on how you look at it. The way I read it, I didn't see it."

"Everything that happened before is going to stand," Nokes said.

When asked about the Coordinating Council's meetings, Nokes admitted that the beginning of the summer was "very confusing" when it came to figuring out who could serve on the council.

Nokes also said, "I don't think it was improper on my part or his [Levi's] part."

"I was essentially holding what would have been a vacant seat over the summer," O'Brien said. "It was allowed to happen. I was never eligible to serve on the Coordinating Council."

The bylaws say: "In the event a Coordinating Council member, other than the Speaker or the Associate Speaker, is unable to serve for the term of the Special Period, the Speaker shall, upon a majority vote of the Senate membership in attendance at a scheduled meeting in Regular Period, appoint a Senator to fill the seat."

Levi O'Brien was not the chair of the Administrative Affairs Committee; he was the Deputy Chair. The former chair was Chris Eckel, who became Associate Speaker at the last meeting. Therefore, O'Brien could have taken the position, had the Senate voted for him.

This is not what occurred. A tape from UVC-TV clearly shows that adjournment is first called for by Nokes.

According to Eduardo Bustamante – who played the tape during the ALANA meeting last week – after the meeting was adjourned, Nokes said, "I need all Coordinating Council members to come and see me."

He follows that by saying: "Levi, come up here. You've been promoted."

The Senate never voted on Levi's promotion, which the bylaws say is necessary. Levi was also not announced as being on the council until after the meeting was officially adjourned. Nokes had said that an appointment for the council be made before the end of the last meeting. He said this was why he barred four ALANA caucus members from being on the council.

According to Gladys Franco, chairwoman of the ALANA caucus, she had already picked out the four people for the council and did not realize she had to approach Nokes with the names before the end of the meeting.

In a previous article, Speaker Jared Nokes told the Collegian that once a seat on the council is vacant, it must remain vacant. Title II, Chapter 12, Section six explains this requirement.

According to the bylaws, "Coordinating Council seats vacated during the term of the Special Period shall remain vacant for the term of the Special Period." The bylaws define the special period as "the calendar period extending from the final meeting of the Senate in the Regular Period, to the first meeting of the Senate in the subsequent Regular Period." The council acts as the Senate at-large during this Special Period.

Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life Michael Gargano said he offered Nokes "an opportunity to educate and take the higher ground. He could address it in a proactive way, and leave the SGA out of it."

Gargano proposed an open forum debate amongst area professors and scholars with students present.

While Nokes considered this option, he ultimately rejected it because he did not want the issue to become a matter of public opinion.

"Whenever you have issues of this nature it shouldn't be done during the summer, you need to have the student body at large around," Gargano said.

"I think we should retain the ALANA seats this year and develop communication," he said.

Gargano called the whole thing "backdoor politics" and said it was "very underhandedly done."

"If they want to change the bylaws and eliminate the ALANA caucus I won't sign it. I really think the ALANA caucus should remain," Gargano said.

EMILIE DUGGAN/COLLEGIAN

Michael Gargano, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life said yesterday he would not sign anything to eliminate the ALANA caucus from the SGA.

Computer science students win first prize at competition

By Sara-Megan Walsh
Collegian Correspondent

This past August a group of University of Massachusetts computer science students were awarded first place in the Association of Computer Machinery's Special Interest Group on Knowledge Discovery in Data and Data Mining's data mining competition.

The award was given at a conference in Washington, D.C. The conference was organized by Cornell University.

The UMass students involved in the competition consisted of second-year graduate students Lisa Friedland, Michael Hay and Brian Gallagher; graduate students Andrew Fast and Jennifer Neville; and senior postdoctoral research associate Amy McGovern. Research Assistant Professor David Jensen directed the team of students. All are currently researching at the Knowledge Discovery Laboratory at the University.

The Knowledge Discovery Laboratory investigates how to find useful patterns in large and complex databases. They study the underlying principles of data mining algorithms, develop innovative techniques for knowledge discovery and apply those techniques to practical tasks in the areas such as fraud detection, scientific data analysis and web mining. One practical use of data mining is detection of cell phone fraud by the tracing of cell phone calling patterns.

The team began competing in the "Open Task" part of the conference, which began in May 2003. The objective of the Open Task was for the students to identify questions of interest within a set of 29,555 articles from www.arxiv.com. The articles came from over a 12-year span.

Once presented with the articles, the UMass computer scientists had to identify topics within the area of high-energy physics including Black Hole Theory, String Theory and quantum physics. Once the team finished, they had to develop a question of interest to ask data mining.

"This was the most difficult part of the task because one has to define his own questions of interest," said McGovern.

After identifying the questions that would eventually end in their 10-page entry, titled "Exploiting Relational Structure to Understand Publication Patterns In High Energy Physics," the team of students wrote code for the data mining programming that scanned the wealth of data to determine its relations and trends.

The students gathered the names of scientists published in the articles and divided them into two groups: those who were influential and those who were not. This judgment was made on two factors. The first factor was whether a scientist had won any awards. The second was the number of citations each scientist received by other authors. The top most influential scientist was Edward Witten.

From these two groups of scientists, the team identified many interesting trends. The team found that papers with a single author are much less likely to be accepted by physics journals than papers with multiple authors, that authors tend to prefer particular journals for their publications and that influential authors tend to co-author with other influential authors.

The team of computer scientists from UMass finished their project in June 2003. Their win at the AMC SIGKDD Conference provided them with the pride in winning a stiff, quick competition over entries from 15 other countries.

Oil drilling in Alaska proposed

By H. Josef Hebert
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) – Republican lawmakers trying to craft an energy bill have decided to include a provision for oil drilling in an Alaska wildlife refuge as part of the initial draft of the compromise legislation, congressional sources said yesterday.

The GOP "discussion draft" will include a House-favored provision that would allow oil development of the 1.5 million-acre coastal plain of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge as long as the footprint of development is limited to 2,000 acres.

The draft language, which is sure to be strongly opposed by democrats involved in the energy talks, was formally unveiled yesterday, said GOP aides familiar with the ongoing negotiations.

A number of Senate democrats have vowed to block final approval of an energy package, using the parliamentary stalling tactic of a filibuster, if an ANWR drilling measure is part of the bill. It would take 60 votes to overcome a filibuster in the Senate and even ANWR drilling supporters say at this time they don't have that many votes.

Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., the chairman of the energy negotiations, and Rep. Billy Tauzin, R-La., head of the House negotiators, decided to incorporate the House-passed language authorizing drilling in the Arctic refuge in hopes of swaying enough senators to nullify the filibuster threat.

"Sen. Domenici has been consistent and remains so in support of opening ANWR. He strongly believes this is the right thing for jobs, our economy and our national security," said Marnie Funk, a spokeswoman for the senator.

She said that Domenici knows that he may eventually have to drop the proposal if he is not convinced there are 60 votes to overcome a Senate filibuster. He "is not going to let this energy bill go down over one issue" whether it's ANWR or something else, said Funk.

Last week, Domenici said that "we're not going to let ANWR defeat a compromise energy bill." Earlier this year drilling opponents got 52 senators to oppose development of the Arctic refuge's oil as drilling supporters came a dozen votes shy of the 60 that would be needed to overcome a filibuster. Last week 43 senators, including five republicans, wrote letters to the energy conferees reiterating their opposition to ANWR drilling.

Drilling supporters hope to sway some of those senators by emphasizing the potential loss of widely popular programs if the energy bill fails to pass, including a requirement to use more corn-based ethanol, development of clean coal technologies and expansion of a program to help the poor pay energy bills.

The House, when it passed its energy blueprint last April, authorized oil exploration and development within ANWR's coastal plain as long as such activities do not disturb more than 2,000 acres of the tundra.

Proponents of drilling argue that the limits, as well as other environmental restrictions and use of modern technology, will provide adequate environmental safeguards. Critics of exploiting ANWR's oil argue that the 2,000-acre limit is meaningless because the area can be spread across the entire 1.5-million acres of the coastal plain, creating "a spider web" of development that would harm the pristine home to caribou, polar bears, musk oxen and migratory birds.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 5
ANTI-BUSH PRESIDENCY BUILT ON LIES
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 7
LIGHTING A FIRE FIREFIGHTER PERFORMS MUSIC AT BLUEWALL
SPORTS PAGE 12
VICTORY! PYAH SCORES THE GOLDEN GOAL
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 11

Officials slam President Bush on air pollution policy

By Theo Emery
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) – Vermont Sen. James Jeffords and Massachusetts Sen. Edward Kennedy slammed President Bush's air pollution policies on Monday, on the eve of a hearing into the president's choice to head the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

At a press conference at the New England Aquarium, Jeffords and Kennedy, alongside other elected officials ringed by activists bearing signs with slogans such as "Mass. Moms for Zero Mercury" and "Save Our Seafood," said Bush was trying to weaken clean air laws.

"Unfortunately, the Bush administration appears less interested in protecting mothers and children from mercury poisoning, and more interested in protecting the polluters' bottom line," Jeffords said.

Dana Perino, a spokeswoman for the President's Council on Environmental Quality, did not immediately return a call seeking comment.

Jeffords, an Independent, cited data from the EPA and the Centers for Disease Control, saying that one in 12 women of child-bearing age have mercury levels above the EPA's safe health threshold because of mercury-contaminated fish, putting some 300,000 newborn children at risk of nervous system damage.

Most of that mercury pollution, he said, comes from largely unregulated coal-burning power plants in the Midwest, which put some 50 tons of mercury into the air every year, he said.

"Utilities, amazingly, are releasing enough mercury into our air every to contaminate 45 million lakes," he said.

The Bush administration last week asked Congress to approve new laws governing air quality that he proposed early last year, but have since stalled, only receiving its first hearing this past July.

The proposals, dubbed "Clear Skies," would establish a cap on the amount of emissions from power plants that are major sources of nitrogen oxide, which causes smog; and sulfur dioxide, which causes acid rain. Utilities that exceeded the limits could buy credits from other energy producers whose emissions are lower and that choose to sell their ability to pollute.

The White House also said Clear Skies would impose the first nationwide cap for mercury emissions.

But the officials assembled yesterday called the proposal a sham that would actually delay federal mercury protections and roll back the protections from the 1990 Clean Air Act.

"While it has a catchy name, it delivers a false promise. In fact, a look at the fine print shows that clear skies actually provides less protection than existing law," Jeffords said.

Kennedy said that the days of young boys bringing home their catch after a day of fishing with their fathers are long gone in many parts of the country.

"That dream, which is so much a part of the American lore, and so much a part of the American promise ... does not exist any more in New England, and does not exist in 28 states, where fish are too dangerous to eat," the Massachusetts Democrat said.

Jeffords also said that when the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee holds a hearing today on Bush's choice to head the EPA, Utah Gov. Mark Leavitt, he would listen carefully.

"He seems to be a fine and honorable man, but when he comes before the committee [today] he will have to explain why this administration is moving us backward, instead of leading us forward on environment issues, at the expense of public health. He's going to have some very tough questions to answer," Jeffords said.

Marianne L. Horinko has been the interim head of the agency since Christine Todd Whitman resigned in May. Sen. Hillary Clinton, D-N.Y., and environmentalists have said they intend to block Leavitt's nomination.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

U.S. Senator Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., speaks at rally on mercury pollution. One in 12 adult women is affected by mercury, the Environmental Protection Agency and the Centers for Desease Control say.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Copy Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Erika Lovley
News Editor Courtney Charles
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Wooda
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant News Ferron Salniker
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marzelli

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been published since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Palestinian Premier complains of chaos of weapons

Israeli officials will not release top-ranking Palestinian official

By Mohammed Daraghmeh
Associated Press

RAMALLAH, West Bank (AP) – The Palestinian premier-designate complained yesterday about the "chaos" of weapons in the West Bank and Gaza but suggested that – like his predecessor – he will not use force to disarm militant groups.

With Israeli-Palestinian contacts frozen, a chance to break the stalemate came yesterday from a different direction: A Palestinian source said Israel has agreed in principle to free hundreds of prisoners.

But Israeli officials denied reports the swap with Lebanese militants could include top-ranking Palestinian official Marwan Barghouti.

The release of prisoners by Israel is a key Palestinian demand, but Israel has refused to free anyone who participated in terror attacks. Separately, Israel and the Lebanese militia Hezbollah have been in indirect contact about a possible prisoner swap for many months.

A dramatic prisoner release and Palestinian steps to disarm the militants would be significant confidence-building measures that might help get the stalled, U.S.-backed "road map" peace plan back on track.

A turning point in the Israeli-Lebanese contacts apparently came when Israel suggested it would not rule out freeing Palestinians. Israel is seeking the return of the bodies of three soldiers captured in October 2000 by Hezbollah guerrillas in Lebanon and an Israeli businessman, abducted around the same time.

The Palestinian source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Hezbollah put Barghouti, the highest-ranking Palestinian official in Israeli custody, at the top of the list of Paiestinians it wants freed. Barghouti is on trial for his alleged role in terror attacks that killed 26 Israelis.

A senior official at Israel's Foreign Ministry said on condition of anonymity that Barghouti would not be freed, citing a June recommendation by Israel's attorney general.

A senior security source said it would be "unthinkable" to free Barghouti while he is being tried on multiple murder charges.

Contacts on a possible prisoner release are being conducted by an unidentified German mediator.

An Israeli military source, speaking on condition of anonymity, confirmed negotiations had reached "an advanced stage" but refused to give any details.

In Beirut, Hezbollah leader Sheik Hassan Nasrallah told the Lebanese newspaper As-Safir in an interview published yesterday he expected a "comprehensive solution soon."

In the deal, Hezbollah would release the businessman, Elhanan Tannenbaum, and the bodies of the Israeli soldiers. Israel, in turn, would free Abdel Karim Obeid and Mustafa Dirani, two Lebanese guerrilla leaders it snatched in the late 1980s and early 1990s to win release of Israeli airman Ron Arad, shot down over Lebanon in 1986.

Israeli Chief Rabbi Yona Metzger told Israel Radio he would leave for a country neighboring Iran yesterday for talks with Iranian and Saudi clerics about Arad's fate. Metzger said these would be the first high-level religious contacts about Israeli prisoners.

The prospect of releasing Palestinian prisoners in the exchange has stirred mixed emotions in Israel.

Winning freedom for the captured Israelis, long symbolized by Arad, is a powerful emotional imperative for Israelis. But equally strong is the fear that freeing Palestinians convicted for attacking Israelis will lead to more terrorism.

In 1985, Israel exchanged 1,150 Palestinian prisoners for three Israeli soldiers captured during Israel's invasion of Lebanon in 1982. Many of the freed Palestinians took leading roles in the first Palestinian uprising against Israeli occupation, which began in 1987.

Meanwhile, Palestinian prime minister-designate Ahmed Qureia was working to put together a government and forge a new cease-fire to replace one that collapsed after six weeks in a spasm of Palestinian suicide bombings and Israeli air strikes last month.

Israel says it will not agree to a truce until Palestinian security forces begin cracking down on armed groups, as required by the U.S.-backed "road map" plan for Palestinian statehood by 2005.

Qureia met with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat yesterday, after consulting with Hamas, Islamic Jihad and other Palestinian opposition groups in the Gaza Strip. The groups turned down Qureia's request to join his government, which will be dominated by members of Arafat's Fatah movement.

"We still need more consultations on ending the chaos in the streets, in the administration and in the Palestinian mentality," Qureia told reporters at Arafat's West Bank headquarters. "This is the main issue ... including the chaos in using, distributing and storing weapons."

That was one of the strongest statements yet by a Palestinian leader against the proliferation of illegal weapons in the hands of militants in the Palestinian areas.

Qureia did not say what steps, if any, he would take to round up weapons.

Palestinian officials have suggested that as a first move, police might try to persuade militants not to parade with weapons in public, including in demonstrations. Marches by various factions are usually led by masked gunmen firing into the air.

1 million remain without power after Hurricane Isabel

By Bill Baskervill
Associated Press

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) – Four days after Hurricane Isabel barreled into the East Coast, thousands of people went back to work yesterday without the benefit of home-cooked meals or hot showers, and encountered miles of blank traffic lights and downed power lines.

"No electricity, no water," said Jeanne Spahr, 39, of Dover, Pa., whose power went off Thursday as Isabel approached. "We've been pouring pond water to flush the toilet. It's not smelling so good. I grew up using an outhouse and I don't want to go back to that."

Isabel's effects were still widely evident yesterday: Nearly 1.5 million customers remained without electricity. Hot meals were in short supply. Elderly residents had to be shuttled by boat from their flooded homes. And hundreds of roads were shut because of toppled trees and power lines.

At least 34 deaths have been blamed on the storm, 19 of them in Virginia.

North Carolina, Virginia, Maryland and Delaware were declared federal disaster areas, and President Bush traveled to Richmond to be briefed on the recovery efforts.

Many residents were irritated that electric companies and government officials were unable to restore power four days after the storm hit.

"I understand that people are frustrated – I'm frustrated," said Douglas M. Duncan, the Montgomery County, Md., executive. "We're working, of course, with the power company to get power restored, but it's been very slow going."

Along North Carolina's hard-hit Outer Banks, residents walked the trash-strewn beaches and ate breakfast in the few restaurants that were serving. Road crews had plowed the sand from major beach roads into 6- to 8-foot-high berms along the shoulders.

"Some of the stores are open, but they're not selling dairy products yet," said Erica Stephens, 30, of Kill Devil Hills, as she walked her dog along the sand. "We're trying to function. Everybody's trying to function."

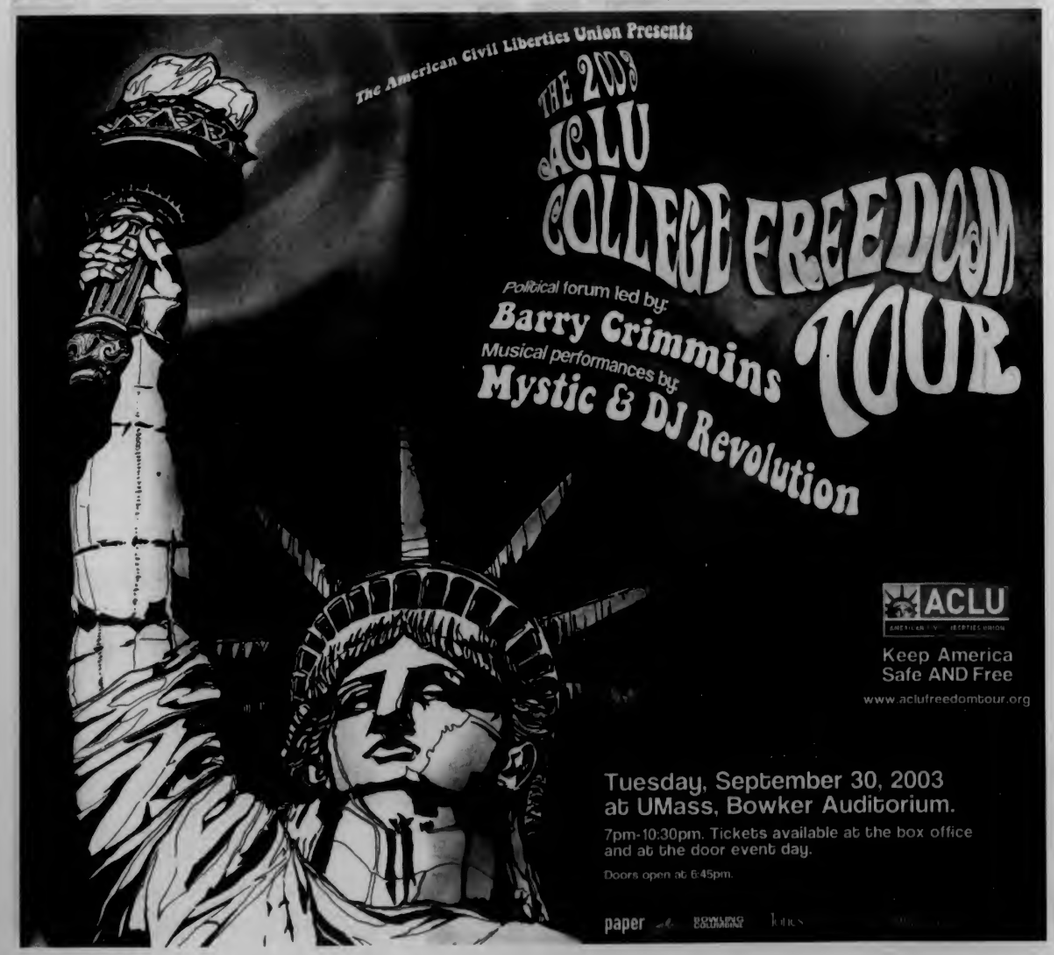
Farther south along the Outer Banks, relief workers in boats brought food and supplies to residents of Hatteras Village, which was cut off from the rest of Hatteras Island when Isabel carved a new channel across the narrow ribbon of land.

"Thank goodness for the Salvation Army," Janet Aiken said. "They're serving up three hot squares a day to anyone who needs it. And the National Guard brought in a lot of water for us and set up the generators, so we've got electricity in some parts and enough drinking water."

She said volunteers with a boat had come by the island to pick up elderly residents or people with heart conditions. "That's just how people are here," she said.

The Monday morning commute was especially difficult in southeastern Virginia.

The Midtown Tunnel, which carries 40,000 vehicles a day between Norfolk and Portsmouth, flooded during the storm Thursday and still was full of water. Authorities estimate it will be closed at least two weeks while they pump out the water.



"It's an adventure," said a jeans-clad Jennifer Ayers, who rode her bicycle a couple of miles from her Portsmouth home to catch a ferry across the Elizabeth River to Norfolk, carrying her office clothes in a backpack.

Motorists whose regular work routes remained opened still had to be careful, with many traffic signals out.

Police directed traffic at major intersections, but motorists were left to fend for themselves along many side streets. To make sure traffic moved as smoothly as possible, officials urged drivers to treat each intersection as a four-way stop. No major delays were reported yesterday morning around the Washington area, despite nearly 200 signal outages.

Despite the exasperation over the pace of repairs, few government officials were casting blame, insisting everything humanly possible was being done to recover from the storm.

"In the fifth day without power, I know everybody's getting frustrated. As I've heard of individual community's concerns, I'm making sure they're dealt with as soon as possible," Virginia Gov. Mark R. Warner said.

Suicide bomber wounds 19

Associated Press

U.S. military personnel investigate parts of a car at the scene where a suicide bomber killed an Iraqi policeman and himself.

By Steven R. Hurst
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) – A suicide bomber, his body wrapped in explosives and his car filled with 50 pounds of TNT, struck a police checkpoint outside U.N. headquarters in Baghdad yesterday, killing an Iraqi policeman who stopped him and wounding 19 people.

A U.S. military spokesman at the scene said the bomber, who also died in the 8:10 a.m. blast, was trying to get into the U.N. compound at the Canal Hotel, where a truck bomb a month ago killed 23 people including the top U.N. envoy to Iraq, Sergio Vieira de Mello. Yesterday's attack wounded two U.N. workers.

The attack, apparently timed to snarl attempts by Washington to win U.N. legitimacy for the U.S. occupation of this Arab country, could diminish the world body's willingness to become more deeply involved in Iraq's reconstruction. The United Nations already sharply reduced its work here after the Aug. 19 bombing.

Secretary-General Kofi Annan warned that if the situation continues to deteriorate, U.N. operations in Iraq "will be handicapped considerably."

"I am shocked and distressed by this latest attack on our premises in Baghdad," Annan said at the United Nations.

"We are assessing the situation to determine what happened, who did it, and taking further measures to protect our installations," he said.

The blast, which could be heard over much of the Iraqi capital, took place a day before President Bush was to address the U.N. General Assembly. He was expected to offer an expanded U.N. role in rebuilding Iraq, a condition set by many nations for contributing peacekeepers and money to the reconstruction effort.

Annan has said he wants assurances of security for U.N. personnel in Baghdad along with any expanded role.

The bomber in yesterday's attack was blocked at a newly established police checkpoint on a street in back of the compound. As police inspected the bomber's car, he detonated the explosives.

Praising new security arrangements around the hotel, a U.S. military officer at the scene credited Iraqi police with preventing an even greater tragedy.

"I reiterate that he was not through the checkpoint, and he was not near the U.N. compound. That means security is working," said Capt. Sean Kirley of the U.S. 2nd Armored Cavalry Regiment.

The bomb exploded about 200 yards from any of the buildings or mobile offices inside the compound and about 400 yards from the hotel building itself. The truck bomb last month was parked outside the front of the hotel just yards from Vieira de Mello's office, when it exploded and brought down the facade, trapping him and several others in the rubble.

Kirley said the Iraqi police had a warning of yesterday's attack shortly before it happened. He did not give details.

The power of the blast sent the hood of the bomber's car flying 200 yards. The detached arm of a victim lay more than 100 yards away.

Iraqi police Master Sgt. Hassan al-Saadi, among the first on the scene after the explosion, said he was told by wounded policemen that a gray 1995 Opel with Baghdad license plates approached the entrance to the parking area.

"A guard went to search the car, opened the trunk, and the car exploded, killing him and the driver. When I arrived, there was fire and smoke, even the guard's body was ablaze," he said.

EXTRA! EXTRA!
Free newspapers are now available to UMass students!
Newspapers will be available at the following locations:
Campus Center Concourse
Hampshire Dining Hall
Franklin Dining Hall
Worcester Dining Hall
The following publications are provided courtesy of The Student Government Association:
USA TODAY
The Boston Globe
The New York Times
Please see the special ballot item asking you to consider supporting the future of the newspaper program.
Support UMASS democracy, vote for your Student Senators on September 25th!
Questions or Comments? Please call (800) 872-6414, ext 504.
USA TODAY Education

LSAT
GMAT
GRE
MCAT
DAT
OAT
higher test scores guaranteed or your money back
Attend all required classes or make-up sessions, complete all scheduled tests, and do your homework. If your score doesn't improve on test day from your Kaplan diagnostic or a prior official test score, you can choose to repeat our program for free or get a full refund of your tuition. It's that simple.
World Leader in Test Prep and Admissions
KAPLAN
1-800-KAP-TEST
kaptest.com
*Test names are registered trademarks of their respective owners.
To be eligible for this offer, you must be enrolled in Kaplan's full classroom, tutoring, or online courses. In addition, you must present a copy of your official score report and your course materials within 90 days.

Unconscious man reported in DC

Warrant results in seizure of several items in Cashin Hall

police log

compiled by Thomas Coyle

Monday, Sept. 15

1:06 a.m. An officer reported a smashed window in the lobby of Thoreau Hall. Emergency Housing was notified and police went to Cance Hall to speak with the suspect.

11:32 a.m. An officer responding to an alarm at Clark Hall was informed by the keyholder of offensive writing on the windows of the Greenhouse, an ongoing problem. The officer took 13 photos of the writing and pictures.

11:48 a.m. A caller requested a well-being check for his son, and services were rendered.

12:47 p.m. A key ring containing house keys, car keys and UMass keys was found in Lot 64.

1:22 p.m. A UMPD detective met with an individual in Patterson Hall regarding a previous assault.

1:29 p.m. A Sony Playstation was reported stolen from Dickinson Hall.

3:41 p.m. A restraining order was served in Cance Hall.

4:15 p.m. A report of a break-in on a vehicle in Lot 49 was received. The responding officer reported that there was no break-in, that the owner had removed the stereo himself and forgotten to close the door.

5:45 p.m. A bag was reported stolen from a room in Washington Tower. Items stolen included clothes, compact discs and a Discman.

6:01 p.m. A report was received of a sick crow in the B-section area of North Village Apartments. Environmental Health and Safety was notified.

9:08 p.m. A caller reported a student on a bike being struck by a vehicle on Infirmary Way. The responding officer reported that the student fell off his bike and said he would seek treatment on his own.

11:30 p.m. A party reported an odor of marijuana in Cashin Hall. Officers were able to detect the source of the odor but were unable to gain entry to the room.

Tuesday, Sept. 16

1:13 a.m. Amherst Police reported stopping a vehicle in Lot 32. Amherst Police advised that the vehicle had revoked registration and the driver was arrested.

7:51 a.m. A checkbook was reported found at the New Africa House.

9:12 a.m. A call was received from the help phone at Brett Hall, but no voice could be heard. An area check came out OK. Telecom was notified of an apparent problem with the Wheeler Hall help phone after a passerby complained.

10:47 a.m. A report of a dog locked inside a car in Lot 64 was received. The owner arrived to retrieve the dog and was given a verbal warning.

4:44 p.m. A caller reported being stuck in the elevator on the 4th floor of the Fine Arts Center. The subject called again to report that he was able to get out of the elevator. The Physical Plant was notified, although the elevator had recently been repaired.

5:14 p.m. UMPD served a summons in Dickinson Hall. Young Lee, 21, of 9 Muller St., Tenafly, N.J., was charged with robbery, armed breaking and entering to commit a felony and accessory before the fact.

8:30 p.m. A caller reported that a male subject was lying on the floor of Worcester Dining Commons unconscious. The responding officer reported that the subject was alert and asking for an ambulance. Amherst Fire Department was notified and the subject was transported to Cooley- Dickinson Hospital.

8:36 p.m. A caller reported having $200 taken from her wallet in her office at Marston Hall.

9:14 p.m. A report was received of an odor of marijuana in Moore Hall. The responding officer was unable to detect any odor.

10:22 p.m. Student Security reported an individual requesting medical attention. The officer reported that the subject signed a medical care refusal and would transport himself to Health Services.

11:29 p.m. Officers found a vehicle with tires missing and the lug nuts on the ground in Lot 22. The owner was notified and UMPD checked west district lots.

Wednesday, Sept. 17

12:27 a.m. Cadets reported a car with no plates in Lot 11. The owner reported that she removed the plates herself because she is buying a new car.

12:41 a.m. An officer reported a parked car being struck in Lot 22. The officer administered a field sobriety test on the operator, who checked out OK. A citation was issued and the owner of the struck vehicle was advised to contact his insurance company.

3:07 a.m. A search warrant was served in Cashin Hall. The officers seized several items listed in the warrant.

4:07 a.m. Housing Services reported that an unkown individual had cut the wires to the door alarms on the west side of Gorman Hall. An area check for suspects was negative.

7:27 a.m. A caller reported a red Trek Y26 bicycle stolen from the 22nd floor lounge of Washington Tower.

7:57 a.m. A wallet containing money, a driver's license and a Visa card was found outside Mahar Auditorium.

12:09 p.m. A vehicle owner reported a hit and run in Lot 12. The collision caused damage to the rear bumper, trunk compartment and both sides of the vehicle.

12:32 p.m. A parent requested assistance with a domestic situation in Dickinson Hall. The party was advised to pursue restraining orders.

8:55 p.m. An officer reported a subject on a bicycle checking cars in Lot 22. The officer stated that the subject exited campus and headed toward North Pleasant Street.

9:17 p.m. Housing Services reported that one of their vehicles had been struck outside Greenough Hall.

Thursday, Sept. 18

1:15 a.m. A 911 call was received stating that 11 subjects in an SUV were punching out windows in Lot 44. The responding officer found no broken windows and the other lots were checked.

1:32 a.m. A 911 call was received from the J-section of North Village Apartments. An area check found that all was quiet.

2:31 a.m. Emergency Health and Safety and the Amherst Fire Department responded to a fire alarm in Kennedy Tower. EHS reported that the alarm sounded due to fireworks set off in the 17th floor lobby.

6:41 p.m. An officer reported a back window missing on a vehicle. There was no glass on the ground and very little on the car. The officer concluded it was most likely old damage and issued an orange card as a precaution.

As an engineer in the U.S. Air Force, there's no telling what you'll work on.
(Seriously, we can't tell you.)

United States Air Force applied technology is years ahead of what you'll touch in the private sector, and as a new engineer you'll likely be involved at the ground level of new and sometimes classified developments. You'll begin leading and managing within this highly respected group from day one. Find out what's waiting behind the scenes for you in the Air Force today. To request more information, call 1-800-423-USAF or log on to airforce.com.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

When you see this picture what do you think of?

If it's something funny we want you for the Collegian Comics

Interested? Come down to our office in the Campus Center Basement or call 545-3500 and ask for Matt.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

Tuesday, September 23, 2003 Editorial@dailycollegian.com

The potato industry cries for the fries

Ronald McDonald has always had a rather pale complexion. However, the clown has been looking more pallid than ever. Recent study results released by the U.S. Potato Board has shown that potato sales have been dropping at a mind-boggling rate of 5 percent wholesale and 10 percent in retail sales over the past year.

Experts are blaming this drop in potato sales on a national movement that has sparked over the last few years, urging the American public to becoming more health conscious. In turn, this push has caused many Americans to drastically change old eating patterns.

The golden arches have long been the face of the fattest nation in the world. The recent popularity of "fat suits" against McDonalds (much like the law suits against cigarette companies), has been launched by a parade of obese teenagers, claiming that they had no idea McDonald's food was unhealthy. In fact, the food was so good, they couldn't keep their hands out of the supersized fry container, and now they are a group of diabetic heart attack candidates.

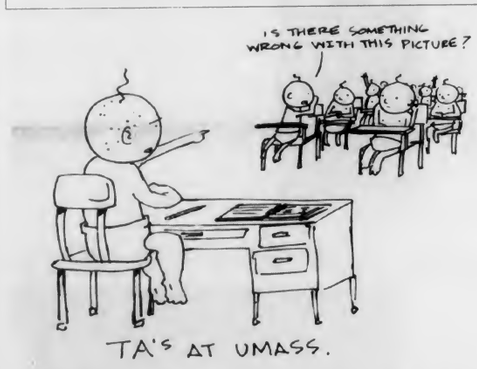
Now everyone is scared of the anti-fat crusade. So scared that McDonald's has launched a new health campaign starring new premium salads and all-white meat chicken nuggets. Players such as the reduced fat sundae and the fruit n' yogurt parfait have also been key ingredients.

Suddenly, the classic McDonald's "hamburger and fries" meal is disappearing faster than the Hamburglar. There has been a huge push to capture the attention of calorie-conscious consumers, and the sales pitch was successful. McDonald's got the publicity it wanted; however, it has become its own undoing in the meantime. Now, consumers don't want french fries when there are healthier alternatives. The popularity of the premium salad has been huge, and most people don't want fries with that.

McDonald's other big mistake has been increasing the prices of the value meals, which include a sandwich, a drink and fries. The price of most of these meals has topped off around $5 and change. Meanwhile, on the famous "dollar menu," consumers can have two burgers for $2 – sans fries – and save three bucks. So much for the potatoes.

Statistics tell all. Meals that were accompanied by french fries have fallen from 27.3 percent to 22.2 percent since 1997. With french fry sales making up one-fourth of all potato sales, spud farmers have a right to be panicked. Once the second most popular food staple in the U.S., the potato is quickly losing its status.

Hamburgers are apparently holding up by their own beefy selves. The popularity of new diets, such as the Atkins diet, has helped raise beef sales due to the large amounts of carbohydrate-free protein sources that must be consumed on this diet. There are very few diets that endorse eating french fries or potatoes in general, not even the high carbohydrate programs.



Now McDonald's has dug its own supersized hole. How can one franchise advertise garden greens and greasy fries at the same time? The potato industry is in a frenzy to win back the affections of our carbohydrate-addicted nation.

So far, the most recent ads for potatoes highlight the basics. Potatoes are carbohydrate packed (read energy), high in vitamin A and make great meals topped with nuts, sour cream or other vegetables. The potato is no worse than any other food. It's a vegetable for goodness sakes!

The true key to eating healthfully is moderation. A few McDonald's fries never hurt anyone. They love to see you smile.

Information from the McDonald's website (www.mcdonalds.com) and the USA Today website (www.usatoday.com) were used in this column.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

George Bush must go

Johnny Donaldson

George Bush must go. He must leave office, renounce his presidency and abdicate the throne that he so heinously stole in what can only be called a coup d'etat.

His is a presidency built on lies and deception, on the idea that a president is not a representative of his country's denizens, but a half-deity whose lordship gives him the right to make decisions antithetical to the beliefs of those he "stands" for. In other words, he is no better than your Fidel Castros or Saddam Husseins.

With another presidential election looming on the horizon, it is time for the country to step forward and remove the cancer that is infecting American politics. It is time to reinstate a government in which the president is designed to represent his constituents, not big business nor his own whims and desires.

Look at the so-called accomplishments that Dubya has provided the United States in the past three years: skyrocketing unemployment, a gigantic deficit (coming, sadly, on the heels of a once mighty surplus) and the bloody entanglement in the war on Iraq.

Bush has cut environmental regulations that will no doubt seriously harm our country, such as allowing ancient factories and reactors go lax on measurements designed to update outdated machinery. He has designed a plan to avoid forest fires by burning down portions of woodland. This is a man who wanted to drill for oil in protected land for a supply that we would only be able to supply maybe three or four SUVs at the most.

You don't give two craps about the environment? Fine.

What about the Patriot Act, which would allow government agents to search homes without warrants, wiretap phone lines and email without warrants, even detain people indefinitely without even a reason as to why they are being detained? Bush and his cronies want to take a 2005 expiration date off the Patriot Act and make it permanent. John Ashcroft even went so far as to have U.S. attorneys question Congress people who are against the Act.

George W. Bush is a liar, a fraud and phony who, through the miracle of corruption, managed to take over the highest office.

Bush has made moves to make gay marriage illegal, even calling on the sanctity of marriage to drum up support (this in a country that values "The Bachelor"). His fundamentalist Catholic beliefs have grown more entwined with his political power. Bush has grown confused about the separation of church and state. Homosexuality is not a sin, as Bush has said it was, and Bush should realize that his religious beliefs should have no bearing on the operation of this country and the private lives of the citizens.

Bush has admitted that there was no link between Osama Bin Laden and Hussein, one reason for his "pre-emptive" war on Iraq. In fact, there are still no chemical weapons, American soldiers are killed in the Middle East on an almost daily basis, and the war costs us billions each week. Yet even with our economy in shambles, Bush has requested an extra $87 billion from taxpayers –just after Sept. 11, and after a "new" video of Bin Laden has come out. (Hey, it might have been sitting on Pentagon shelves for months, but we'll never know.)

Nevermind that North Korea poses a bigger threat and that we are still allied with Saudi Arabia, even though the Saudi prince is more vicious than Hussein, and the 9/11 terrorists were primarily Saudi.

And finally there's the way Bush even got the gig as commander-in-chief. The Tenth Amendment states that the Supreme Court is not allowed to vote on the outcome of an election. Yet the Supreme Court did just that; and, in a five to four vote, it allowed Bush to take the stage. Coincidentally there are five Republicans on the bench and two of them had family members that were attorneys who represented Bush. Hmm, and the controversy was in a state governed by Jeb Bush. And a voting bylaw caused many voters, especially those who are in a minority, to lose out on the right to vote. Something smells fishy here, doesn't it folks?

George W. Bush is a liar, a fraud and phony who, through the miracle of corruption, managed to take over the highest office. Come 2004, maybe we should remove him from that office if he hasn't already made laws forbidding us to do so yet.

Johnny Donaldson is a Collegian columnist.

'... Leaves the whole world blind'

R.L. Juskalian

Avichai Sheran was born in 1928. He had dark hair and olive colored skin. Just over one year later, in 1929, Yasir Amir, a distant cousin of Avichai's, was born with dark hair and olive colored skin. Although neither of these men would know the other's name until sometime in the 1950s, they were born to hate the other.

One cool day, as if willed by God, the two men found themselves working the same job for the same construction company. Both were assigned to rebuild the foundation of the same ancient edifice. Normally this wouldn't have been a problem, except that the two men had different visions of how this particularly important edifice should be rebuilt.

No one is sure who threw the first punch, but that afternoon Avichai went home with a black eye and a broken nose, and Yasir was carried home in a stretcher – nothing had been built.

Overnight, someone killed Avichai's nephew, and brought punitive bloodshed the next morning. In response to the first death, Avichai headed a small band of his family members who hunted down and slaughtered 38 members of Yasir's family.

Avichai and Yasir both survived, but spent the rest of their lives hunting one another. A dispute, which started between two similar men, became a battle between two similar armies, and then a war between two similar nations – that edifice was never rebuilt.

The saddest part of this story is that the rest of the world watched as this whole mess played out. As the dispute grew, so did interest from the outside world. Money and weapons were funneled in. But the people saw something that defied logic: whenever one side killed someone, the other side would kill someone else in response. But then the side that killed first, killed again, in response to the other side's response. An eye for an eye became all the eyes for all the eyes.

Fifty years later, we sit here and argue about similar conflicts. We scream about injustices, we note that both sides cannot continue to kill in response to a killing – it would simply go on forever. So where did these ideas come from? It doesn't seem to make sense to us.

On Aug. 28, a man named Brian Wells was believed to have had a bomb, in the form of a collar, attached to his neck. He was allegedly made to rob a bank and follow certain instructions or else the bomb would detonate. The bomb went off and Wells died an odious death.

On Sept. 19, in response to this episode, Erika Lovley concluded her column: "Whoever is responsible for this heinous deed, I think capital punishment is too good for you. As unconstitutional as this may be, I firmly believe that you deserve to die the same horrible death as poor Brian Wells. An eye for an eye, a bomb for a bomb."

A bomb for a bomb: is that how we solve problems?

Let me note two distinct aspects of Lovley's argument which disgust and sadden me. Firstly, The United States of America exists as a nation governed by certain laws. Without these laws – the Constitution – there is no nation. Therefore, to argue for a punishment that Lovley acknowledged as being "unconstitutional," is to say that the Constitution can be selectively ignored – the logical equivalent of the destruction of our nation.

Secondly, and more importantly, Lovley embraces the idea of an eye for an eye. She even goes so far as to apply that to bombs. Did she really think about what she was saying? Did she take the time to see where that puts the world when applied to Israel and Palestine, or Pakistan and India? What about America on Sept. 11, 2001? Would it have solved or made better anything if the United States had embraced Hammurabi's ancient code and sent two planes to Afghanistan to murder 3,000 of their innocents?

An eye for an eye is an antiquated concept rejected by philosophers, activists and even the Bible. Though not religious myself, I suggest reading Matthew 5:38. The suggestion of justice as balanced against the specific crime committed did evolve from Hammurabi, but that is entirely different from a literal reading of The Code.

A bomb for a bomb: is that how we solve problems? In 1955, Ariel Sharon killed 38 Egyptian troops in "punitive military operations" against Egyptian units in the Gaza Strip. In the 1960s, Yasser Arafat created the Palestinian Liberation Organization in order to run border raids from Jordan and Syria. In 1982, under the guise of retaliation, Sharon masterminded and carried out the invasion of Lebanon, which resulted in a massacre of civilians at Sabra-Shatila, a camp in Beirut.

The killing has not ended in Israel. Americans suggest we implement "unconstitutional" punishments. An eye for an eye rules the day, as we sit here and wonder how anyone might get the idea that an eye for an eye should really be a bomb for a bomb.

R.L. Juskalian is a Collegian columnist.

Information from the website http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/in_depth/middle_east/2001/ was used in this article.

Snowboarder democracy

Zach Oelschlegel

I demand democracy!

What kind of country do we live in where people are still discriminated against because of what they believe in and stand for? More importantly, why does a $1.7 million conglomerate that calls itself the "Student Government Association" at a prominent university like UMass have the right to show favoritism to the majority of its students, and ignore the whimpering minority that I am?

Last week, the outrageous dictator Jared Nokes declared that there would be no more appointed seats in the SGA. While this was an appalling abuse of power on his part, the real heart of the matter is that 90 percent of the SGA members are white males, and I'm willing to bet that not one of them is a snowboarder in this so-called "representative democracy." I might as well try and tell you that I date Heidi Klum.

I, like so many others, once thought the days of hating snowboarders was over. A glorious day we all dreamed of with skiers and boarders alike sharing the mountain in peace. A day when we could ride the same rails, frolic with glee as we roamed the mountaintop and engage in lengthy chairlift chat. If only I knew how so, so wrong I was.

Cackling in the vile state of Vermont is the anti-boardite mountain they call Mad River Glen. Staring the face of progress down to the ground, this mountain has made it cool to hate snowboarders. I will even quote from its website: "Mad River's 250 inches of annual snowfall combine with uncrowded slopes free of snowboarding, and a pristine mountain environment to create a skiing experience like no other."

90 percent of the SGA members are white males, and I'm willing to bet not one of them is a snowboarder in this so-called "representative democracy."

What they really meant was "Mad River's 250 inches of annual snowfall combine with slopes free of worthless, self-absorbent, obnoxious snowboarders (who we feel should be exterminated in the slow and painful process they deserve to make the world a better place), to make a pristine skiing environment like no other."

Anti-boarditism at its worst: Mad River should be demonized for being so despicable. Yet, around the skiing hubs of campus, they are practically celebrated, as I have heard some spew their hate speech with utterances like, "Mad River is a wicked awesome mountain – old school chairlifts and not a snowboarder in sight," or, "Snowboarders are like a disease. You let the first one in, then you're sharing chairlifts with them, and then one day you wake up and your favorite mountain is owned and operated by a snowboarder and your daughter is about to walk down the aisle with another."

And what has the SGA done to combat this? Instead of boycotting and denouncing the Mad River folk, they commemorate those anti-boardites and even allow the Ski and Board Club, a Registered Student Organization on campus, to make annual trips to the mountain while leaving us snowboarders at the dregs of Sugarbush. To think the SGA's propensity towards skiing had nothing to do with allowing hate.

Therefore, I am here to press my case that there should be exactly 12 appointed seats in the SGA for the snowboarding minority. My people, the snowboarders, don't have the time to run for elections like everyone else or get those 25 signatures. I would wager that most of my people would fail to achieve the goal of a nomination because of the anti-boarditism that runs rampant throughout our beloved campus.

Even if one of us were to get elected, I would anticipate the overzealous skiing governor Mitt Romney to make a stand at the steps of the Student Union, impeding the entry of any snowboarding senator at an SGA meeting.

Mitt Romney an anti-boardite, you say? The answer to that is obvious when you consider the political pressure, or lack thereof, Romney has imposed on the so-called "great" state of Vermont. Even more shocking is that Romney staunchly supported a member of his own Republican Party to be unfairly elected, yet still would balk at the notion of passing off 12 seats to the snowboarding caucus here at our fine university.

All of this week is National Snowboarding Awareness Week. I urge you to meet me at the Student Union steps promptly at noon this Friday for our annual "Boards, not Bombs" rally, as Ross Powers, gold medalist and snowboarding activist will be speaking.

If you care one bit about what it truly means to be an American, if you want to stand up for what is right even if others may look down on you, and if you care about showing that anti-boardite SGA leading scumbag Jared Nokes what UMass is truly about, then you will be there. SGA office-storming and cupcakes will follow the rally, because we all know in our hearts that democracy doesn't end at the chairlift.

Zach Oelschlegel is a Collegian columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

editorial@dailycollegian.com
413-545-3699
Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center Way
Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NOHO'S MOVIE GEMS

COURTESY IFC/KURTZMAN

Dennis Leary stars in "The Secret Lives of Dentists."

By JOHNNY DONALDSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's no secret that in this multiplex-obsessed era, the only movies that are given a shot are the ones that are essentially made of nothing but popcorn and noise. These are the shiny baubles of modern cinema, the blockbusters that are force fed to audiences, the movies that look pretty but are as valuable as the cheapest of cubic zirconium.

However, there is always solace to be found. Three small films looking to be discovered are now currently playing at theaters in the area:

"The Magdalene Sisters"

It's one of the most unheralded atrocities of the 20th century. Over the span of the century, nearly 30,000 young women were locked away by the Irish Catholic Church in the Magdalene Asylums, for what were perceived as crimes of the flesh. The Asylums were slave labor camps disguised as methods for spiritual cleansing in which innocent young women were jailed to atone and get into heaven. The last Asylum was closed in 1996.

The crime committed by one of the three women, whose stories form the heart of Peter Mullan's wrenching "The Magdalene Sisters," was that she had a child out of wedlock. Another flirted too much with the opposite sex; the third was raped by her cousin. It's sickening being a Catholic and thinking about the abuses the religion inflicted upon its believers, and "The Magdalene Sisters" cuts away at the fanatic Puritanism that was, and may still be, part of the religion.

In structure, "The Magdalene Sisters" comes off like a women's prison picture, but it's a women's prison picture raised to the level of high art. The force of Mullan's humanity, his sad-eyed gaze upon the suffering women, burns away any question of exploitation. Geraldine McEwan, as the cruel head nun, acts her role with a bright-eyed sadism that's frightening in its realism.

"The Magdalene Sisters" never relents on the tragedy, and that's part of its power. The feels of despair, betrayal and ultimately hope, bleed right through the screen and into the soul.

"Camp"

Todd Graff's "Camp" is a stagy and awkward young-misfits drama in the manner of "Fame," yet it has an ebullient snap that raises it above the usual follow-your-dreams ghetto. Graff sets his movie at the fictional Camp Ovation – a summertime workshop for theater-mad kids (based on real such places) and it's obvious that the director has genuine affection for his characters, an affection that often outweighs his amateurish construction.

Among the characters confronting adolescent melodramas over the summer include the gay Hispanic drag queen (Robin Delesus), who went to his prom in a dress; the plain-Jane young girl (Joanna Chilcoat), who often winds up being the friend rather than the girlfriend; and the seemingly perfect straight boy (Daniel Letterle), who becomes the object of many affections.

"Camp" is a series of tried-and-true episodes that are tied neatly in a bow, but the movie has an infectious enthusiasm that radiates into the audience. The young actors are all newcomers and they range from quite good to tolerably amateur; but they all share the same enthused glow.

If there is a problem, it comes from Graff's clumsy dialogue and staging. Still, it's rare to find a movie that showers so much real love on its characters that it sends you floating into the atmosphere.

"The Secret Lives of Dentists"

The marriage of Dana and David Hurst has lasted 10 years, through three kids and a shared practice as dentists. That is until the day that David thinks he sees Dana kissing another man, sending him on a spiraling path of depression, anger and suspicion.

Alan Rudolph's "The Secret Lives of Dentists" is a pitch-perfect expose of marriage and how it suffers from the deadening effects of … marriage. Routine, infidelity, paranoia, loss of passion – they have the same effects on marriage as does sugar on a tooth. Slowly, it rots it away.

Rudolph's direction and Craig Lucas' script (adapted from Jane Smiley's novel, "The Age of Grief") nimbly straddle the line between humor and heartache, satire and realism. There is not one shot, not one line, not one moment in "The Secret Lives of Dentists" that goes to waste. The movie is a remarkable achievement – a black comedy that's also humane enough to tickle our heart.

It helps that Rudolph is aided by a fantastic cast that shares his same wavelength. Campbell Scott and Hope Davis both act with a quiet inner furnace; they are awesome examples of restrained interior torment. Denis Leary, as a patient-from-hell who becomes David's metaphorical manifestation of his id, is bitter, sarcastic and funny – a contrast to the emotionally callused couple. "The Secret Lives of Dentists" is a nearly flawless examination of marital grief.

What do you do the 'morning after?'

"Sex-iversity is a question and answer column designed to provide answers and important information regarding sex, sexuality, sexual orientation, sexually transmitted infections (STIs) and reproductive rights. Voiced by Julia Kristan, a member of Voices for Planned Parenthood (VOX) branch at the University of Massachusetts and an active volunteer for the Everywoman's Center on the UMass campus, the column is intended to help educate the university community about reproductive health, rights, legislature and responsibilities. Much of the statistical information provided in this column derives from research done through and obtained by Planned Parenthood and its national affiliates.

Q: What is the "morning after" pill? And how can I get it in an emergency?

Sex-iversity
JULIA KRISTAN

A: The "morning after" pill is more formally referred to as emergency contraception (EC), and is a pill (or a set of pills) containing a high dosage of female hormones. It is up to 98 percent effective if taken within 120 hours of having unprotected sex. The sooner it is taken within that time period, the better. It reduces the chance of becoming pregnant from a single act of unprotected sex from approximately 8 percent to 1-2 percent. There are typically two pills in a dose, which used to be taken exactly 12 hours apart. This has recently changed into taking both pills in one dosage, as soon as possible. It has been found to be as effective, or even more so, when the two pills are taken at the same time.

What the EC does is one of two things: it either prevents an egg from releasing from the ovary or it changes the uterine lining, therefore preventing a fertilized egg from implanting. The older versions of the "morning after" pill made most women sick, to the point of nausea and vomiting. Today's version is called Plan B and is much less unpleasant. It contains no estrogen, so nearly all the side effects are eliminated or reduced greatly.

The best way to obtain EC is by checking with your doctor. If you are not comfortable with going to your primary care doctor or Ob/Gyn, call or visit a Planned Parenthood in the area. You can also call 1-888-NOT-2-LATE (yes, it works even with the extra number) for information on where else EC can be obtained. The Planned Parenthood website, www.pplm.org (Massachusetts only), has an information page complete with a page to order EC online. Be warned: the online ordering is not 24/7. As UMass students, you can also head down to Health Services and speak with someone there; the pharmacy at UHS carries EC.

Through your primary care physician, EC may or may not be covered on your insurance. Your best bet is to call your insurance company and ask

Continued on page 8

Nothing thrilling about new flicks 'Cold Creek Manor' and 'Underworld'

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

The word "thriller" is often meant to describe a movie that intends to scare the living daylights out of its audience, yet the movies themselves are rarely, if ever, thrilling. Modern thrillers are so built from contrivance and cliché that they have lost the capacity to thrill.

Doors creaking open by themselves are no longer harbingers of fright; they're now part of the old dark house routine. And it may have once been cool, post-"Matrix," to watch people in tight leather blasting guns at other people in tight leather, but now such scenes are as adrenaline pumping as a Kenny G album.

The new so-called thrillers "Cold Creek Manor" and "Underworld" may be miles apart in style, but they share one common bond: neither are very thrilling.

"Manor" begins with a goose-pimply frisson of suspense. Dennis Quaid and Sharon Stone star as Cooper and Leah Tilson, an upscale New York couple who decide to take their kids and move into a large country estate to escape the dangers and daily grind of big city living. The 1,200-acre estate of the title is a large multi-room brick fixer-upper that looks about as appealing as the Amityville house. Why would any family, especially one as modern-day trendy as the Tilsons, buy this dusty scrap heap of a home? If they didn't, we wouldn't have a family-in-peril called "Cold Creek Manor" on our hands.

'Cold Creek Manor'
Directed by Mike Figgis
Starring Dennis Quaid Sharon Stone
Touchstone
Rated R
118 mins.
Grade C+

The director is Mike Figgis, a veteran of the indie world (he helmed "Leaving Las Vegas") and he is a director who has never met a foreshadowing he didn't like. As the camera flits through the house, we glimpse the pieces for future horror: an ornate stained glass skylight, a glass cabinet full of antique hammers and the family pet doomed a disturbing demise.

Then there's the former owner, a greasy ex-con (Stephen Dorff) who can barely hide his hostility and is inexplicably hired to renovate the home. Is it any surprise when bad things begin to happen?

For a while, Figgis does entice us into believing there may be genuine scares. The camera swoops through hallways and into rooms, and the movie develops a creepy voyeuristic tug. But the movie falls apart at about the time that Dorff and the snakes pop up – and it never recovers. Quaid, as the beleaguered, emasculated father who must get in touch with his primal instincts, gives a fine performance of restrained paranoia, but "Cold Creek Manor" never delivers the thrills it promises.

COURTESY TOUCHSTONE

Dennis Quaid stars in "Cold Creek Manor."

* * *

The silly and leaden "Underworld" is a vampire vs. werewolf saga that comes across more like a Goth-wear fashion show. The characters strut around in a sexy series of leather and Victorian-inspired costumes, but the characters themselves aren't nearly so fleshed out as the clothes. This is the kind of movie that will appeal only to 14-year-old boys and "Vampire: The Masquerade" fanatics.

'Underworld'
Directed by Len Wiseman
Starring Kate Beckinsale Scott Speedman
Screen Gems
Rated R
121 mins.
Grade C-

The talented young British actress Kate Beckinsale plays the vampire warrior Selene, a "death dealer" whose job is to hunt down remaining members of the Lycan werewolf species and kill them off. A blood feud has reigned for centuries, and now, caught in the middle is medical intern Michael (Scott Speedman), who apparently exists only to get banged around a lot and fall in love with Selene.

The movie, more than anything, resembles low-brow action-fantasies like "Highlander" in its cynical attempt to jumpstart a new franchise. It is built on a confused and confusing ancient mythology, and is directed by a former music video director – which ensures that the movie always looks good, even when the story goes down the proverbial drain.

It must be said that "Underworld" is not a good movie – it is too somber and preposterous for that, but the endless supply of gun battles and werewolf attacks ensures that there is something to look at (unlike the equally solemn "The Order," in which nothing happened.)

The cinematography of Tony Pierce-Roberts relies solely on a palette of blue and black light ("Underworld" apparently exists in a city of endless night), and the movie alternates between werewolf-vampire rumbles, characters earnestly intoning pronouncements and other characters making big entrances into rooms. It is all rather monotonous. There is no emotional core to "Underworld" – just lots of passionless, robotic acting and humorless dialogue – so there is no reason to care about anything that happens. What it does offer is Shane Brolly, as a bad-guy vampire obviously named Kraven, speaking in an Irish accent that flutters in and out with each word.

"Underworld" is meant to be dark, scary, edgy and exciting – and it just comes across as ludicrous.

Emmy's re-run winners

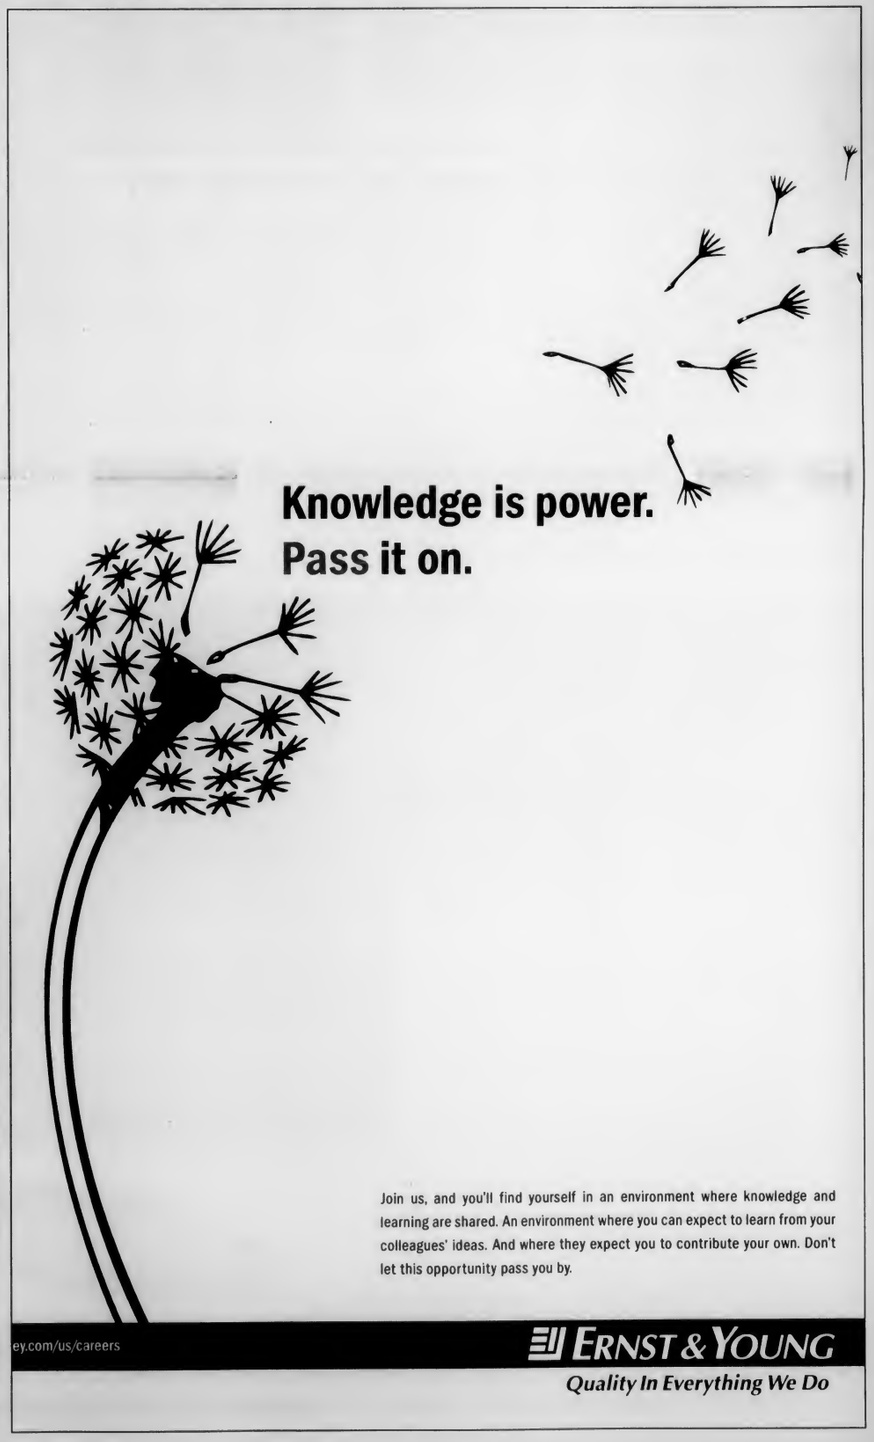
By ANTHONY BRENNICAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES (AP) – The Emmy Awards turned into a night of mostly reruns.

For the fourth consecutive year, the White House drama "The West Wing" claimed the best drama award – whacking what seemed to be yet another groundswell for the mob series "The Sopranos" after stars James Gandolfini and Edie Falco each claimed their third career Emmys.

It was Gandolfini's third consecutive win, and Falco's second. She also won previously in 1999.

Meanwhile, the Emmys repeated a disturbing trend of recent years: diminished viewership. Preliminary Nielsen Media Research figures pegged yesterday's average audience at 17.7 million viewers, down from 19.8 million on NBC last year.



The 2001 Emmycast, twice-postponed and aired by CBS opposite the seventh game of the World Series, drew only 17.1 million viewers. But in September 2000, the show was seen by 21.8 million viewers.

Other repeaters: Doris Roberts and Brad Garrett of "Everybody Loves Raymond."

For a third straight year, Roberts collected a supporting comedy actress trophy for playing nagging mother Marie Barone, while Garrett received his second consecutive supporting comedy actor honor for his work as her hangdog son Robert.

Roberts said her streak of victories shows that aging stars can still do great work.

"The fact that I'm 72 years old and that I'm still kicking and that I'm doing the kind of work I'm doing, I'm still challenged, is great hope for everybody in the business," she said backstage.

Chelsea singer/firefighter heats up the Blue Wall

By MELISSA POULIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Boston-based singer/songwriter and Chelsea, Mass., firefighter Eddie McGarry performed Friday night at The Blue Wall for a quaint, appreciative crowd. He took the stage with his guitars in hand to begin a set, which consisted of mellow acoustic and folk-rock songs.

Eddie McGarry
The Blue Wall Pub
Sept. 19

With a sound that can be likened to that of groups like Counting Crows, Pat McGee Band and Nickel Creek, McGarry's show was full of catchy guitar riffs and heartfelt lyrics. He was laid back, yet charming while holding casual conversation with the audience in between songs and occasionally sipping from the gallon of water at his side.

Most of the songs McGarry played were from his record that was released last year entitled, "Heat from the Spark." With song titles like "Will You See Me Tonight," "Nice to Dance" and "Beautiful Girl," the album is romantic and clever, and it merges together a wide spectrum of musical genres. McGarry has said that James Taylor and Cat Stevens are some of his biggest inspirations.

McGarry covered many classic rock artists during his set including songs by Neil Young, The Beatles, Peter Gabriel and James Taylor. He was able to do all the songs justice vocally as well as on the guitar.

There were a couple of noteworthy songs that really enhanced the performance. The tune "The All Out" is a tribute to the six firemen who were killed in a warehouse fire in Worcester in 1999. McGarry wrote the song from a fellow fireman's perspective in dedication to the men who died and their grieving family and friends.

The more upbeat song entitled "Classified" is McGarry's current single; it can be heard on 91.1 WMUA, the campus radio station. McGarry will be back at the Blue Wall Pub on Friday, Nov. 21.

COURTESY GREENLINE

Eddie McGarry performed live at the Blue Wall Pub Friday night. He will be returning to UMass Nov. 21.

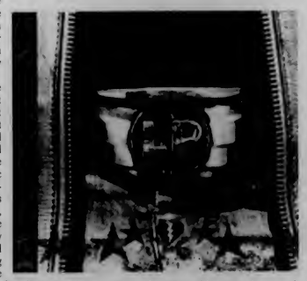
LP, the artist, releases a sub-par Lp

By DIANA MOGILEVSKY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With so many singer/songwriters trying to make a mark in the music scene, it is difficult to filter out the best from the rest. But someone, somewhere has made a terrible mistake. With her edgy, unemotional voice and cheesy love lyrics, LP has truly initiated herself into the world of the rest.

LP
'Heart-Shaped Scar'
Koch

At some moments on her new record, "Heart-Shaped Box," the vocals seem professional and fluid, if not for that awful twang evocative of bad '80s rock songs, followed by just plain screaming. The voice seems to not even match the rhythm of the music as this wanna-be rock star feigns emotion. The mood of the album is unrestful, choppy and distant. It tries to emulate Indie-folk-rock but ends up sounding like bad southern chick-rock.



COURTESY KOCH

LP sings her Indie-rock-esque songs in front of a Northampton crowd at Harry's last October.

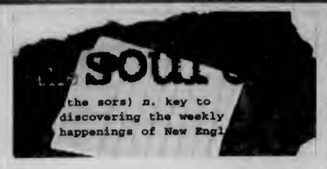
To match the cheesy guitar riffs are the lyrics, all relating to broken hearts and pain, straining to reach the mellifluous and tender styling of the likes of Lucinda Williams or Idina Menzel – but failing.

Here's an example: "I got a nice ride, you'd be perfect/anyway we can work it/It's a hard time for answers/but you could be my new dancer."

Some of the lyrics just don't make any sense at all, and the rest lack poetics and sentiment, and end up sounding more like pop music minus the publicity. In the album's release statement, she claims to have been influenced by Janis Joplin and The Rolling Stones, but she sounds more like a howling pop star.

The record starts off forcefully with "Perfect," in which LP conveys an attempt to reach self-satisfaction and contention – a good message, but the vocals are just not strong enough to support it. She sounds like she is simply shouting. Luckily, she has four guitar players on this song who sound fairly decent to compensate for that.

"Heart-Shaped Scar" is the third song on the album, In which LP writes of knowledge and experience scarring her past. The chorus sounds inconsistent with the rhythm of the song and LP's voice hollers and wavers disastrously.



Musically, the best song on the album is, "Coming Home," because it has a good progression and doesn't sound overdone. Even LP herself sounds alright. On "Follow Me Down" and "Greenbriar," LP actually plays the harmonica pretty well. She weaves through the melody smoothly and follows the rhythm.

The problem is the lyrics – they are terrible! And there is absolutely no need for back up singers.

Though certain songs on the album could be appreciated for their instrumentals, there is a great deal of work that needs to be done for this performer to acquire appreciation. She claims to have been voice trained by opera coaches and rock specialists, but LP just doesn't sound like she feels the music that she is singing. She sounds like she doesn't even hear the instruments but is concentrating on her own voice too much, which results In makeshift songs and croaky vocals.

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
$139
★ Student Special ★
4 months
Best Aerobics~Best Machines
KEISER • NAUTILUS • FREE WEIGHTS • CYBEX • STAIRMASTERS • LIFECYCLES • TREADMILLS • ELLIPTICALS • LIFEROWER
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
256-0090
90, AMHERST
ON BUS ROUTE • OPEN 7 DAYS

Young Men's Club
138 East Street Hadley, MA
413-584-8726
Monday Night Football
• Pool Table
• Darts
• Horseshoes
• Keno
• Smoking
• Public Invited
• Women Welcome
Transportation Available
Free Munchies With this ad!

TuesdaySeptember23

BOOKS

Peter Hart, activism director at Fairness and Accuracy in Reporting (FAIR) will speak at the Odyssey Book Shop in South Hadley. He will be discussing his book, "The Oh Really? Factor: Unspinning Fox News Channel's Bill O'Reilly." The discussion will begin at 7 p.m. It is an open admission event.

WednesdaySeptember24

LECTURES

Ping Chong will continue his series of talks at the Bowker Auditorium on how history, race and culture have affected the lives of individuals. His lecture series is entitled, "Undesirable Elements." He will be discussing the factors of everyday life that may be affecting us in ways we couldn't even imagine. Tickets are $8 for students and $15 for general admission; they are on sale through the New World Theater, which can be reached at 413-545-1972, or www.neworldtheater.org.

LITERATURE

Mike Stanton, the Pulitzer Prize winning author, will be at the Odyssey Book Shop in Holyoke to discuss his book, "The Price of Providence: The True Story of Buddy Cianci, America's Most Notorious Mayor, Some Wiseguys, and the Feds." The content of the evening will be an honest evaluation of the Cianci administration. It is free admission and the talk will begin at 7 p.m.

MUSIC

The Reverend Horton Heat, and Southern Culture on the Skids will be performing at the Pearl Street Nightclub. These two musical forces will make for an evening of powerful and moving music. Doors open at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $18 and are on sale through the Pearl Street BoxOffice.

ThursdaySeptember25

MUSIC

The Black Sheep Deli in downtown Amherst along with the musical group Few and Far Between will host the "Bluegrass Exchange." Few and Far Between will play a mix of old-time, bluegrass and jazz standards broken up with original compositions. Following the musical performance, community members are invited to gather around the microphone and join the musical exchange. Attendees are welcome to bring their own instruments as well as their voices. There is no charge to participate in this event.

FridaySeptember26

MUSIC

ZOX will be performing at Tammany Hall in Worcester. The band that does for the violin what Jethro Tull did for the flute will host a weekend opening concert. Perhaps one of the up-and-coming icons of the decade, ZOX is a band that must be seen, as well as heard. Following the release of their debut album, this is a band that is still very much riding their first burst of creative energy. The show is 18+ and tickets are on sale for $10 through the Tammany Hall Box Office, which can be reached at 508-791-6550.

FESTIVALS

The Worcester Palladium will host an all-day Skate Fest on Friday and Saturday. There will be a host of bands at the festival including Plan B, Starting Line, Simple Plan, Homegrown, Allster, The Movie Life, Senses Fail and many more. There will also be huge skate park set up for the event that will be open to the pro skaters and bikers. Tickets are $20 for one day and $40 for both and they are available in advance through www.tickets.com.

Amherst College will host its second annual "Music Festival for Humanity" in support of UNICEF. Admission is $4 and the festivities start at 8 p.m. in the Buckley Recital Hall in the Amherst College Arms Music Building. The event will feature performances by some of the leading a cappella groups, jazz ensembles and musicians from each of the five colleges. Amongst the performers will be UMass Doo-Woop Shop, Smith College Smithereens, Mt. Holyoke Nice Shoes, Amherst College DQ, Route 9 and Blue Sox. Tickets are on sale at the Amherst College Valentine Hall or at the door.

MUSIC

Bathtub Mary will perform in the Blue Wall Pub at the UMass campus. The band's name shows the lighter side of the musicians, as it is a satire on the lawn ornaments that are made of the Virgin Mary. They are a combination of classical styling infused with the vibe of folk music with some jazz-rock instrumentals mixed in. This super jam-band will rock the Blue Wall for free so there is no reason to miss out.

SaturdaySeptember27

MUSIC

International singing sensation Jewel will be will be performing at the Fleet Boston Pavilion. Jewel will be performing much of her new music from her new release as well as some of her old hits. The show will start at 8 p.m. and tickets are on sale through www.ticketmaster.com, starting at $35.50.

weeklypinup

Poetic Art

Starting Thurs., Sept 25 the Augusta Savage Gallery will be holding the exhibit called "Twenty-Six Ways of Looking at a Black Man." On display will be images from calligraphic text artist, Benn T.F. Nadelman and poetry from Raymond R. Patterson, above.

What does emergency contraception do to the female body?

Continued from page 6

now, when you're not in an emergency situation. With an appointment at Planned Parenthood, EC is available at a sliding scale cost based on ability to pay. You can also opt to pay for the visit and prescription entirely out-of-pocket if you do not want to go through insurance.

Emergency contraception is not to be used as a primary source of birth control; it is a back-up measure only. The effects of taking it regularly are not yet fully understood. However, taking high doses of female hormones regularly probably isn't the healthiest thing you could be doing for yourself. Even the smaller doses of birth control can cause women myriads of problems. Abusing the benefits of EC could be detrimental to your health.

What the EC does not do is give you an abortion. It is not the "abortion pill." There is an abortion pill out there called RU 486, and perhaps that will be the topic of another column. So if you are already pregnant from another act of sexual intercourse, EC will not abort the fetus. Please note that it is not recommended to take if a pregnancy is suspected, and you will not be given a prescription for it if this is the case. Emergency contraception works as other hormonal birth control methods.

There are some definite drawbacks with the current system of having EC as a prescription drug. In the real world, most acts of unprotected or unwanted sex happen on weekends, when it's not possible to get a prescription. Precious time is wasted when the pills could be doing their job in your body. There is a movement now to get EC available through pharmacies as an over-the-counter purchase. Many pharmacies and groups are opposing this move, crying that women and young girls especially, will not think twice about unprotected sex if they know they can get EC readily.

I would argue differently, although the door is open to have women and girls abusing the health measure. Emergency contraception is important in many situations. If the condom breaks, if you are sexually assaulted, if you missed a pill or if you just didn't use any protection, EC is a life-saving option if you do not wish to become pregnant. I urge women and men to take responsibility for their actions sexually, and realize seriously that pregnancy is always possible. In the struggle to have free choices for women and their health, it is vital that all options remain open. Having EC there for people when they need it is an important health care decision.

Education is another key component in choosing when and with whom to become pregnant. There are numerous methods in contraception, two of which I discussed last week. Go out and read up on them. Ask doctors and health care professionals questions; this column is not meant to substitute information from them. Arm yourself with knowledge. Back up your birth control consistently. Utilize EC when needed. And as always, communicate with your partner(s).

For more information, visit www.pplm.org or www.ceciinfo.org.

Arts & Living meeting for ALL writers today at 5 p.m. in the newsroom.

Please attend.

CEA Invites you to the...

techknowoverload tour
your life. only cooler.

University of Massachussetts, Amherst
Tuesday, September 23
10:00 am - 4:00 pm
Library Lawn
Hosted by Campus Activities Office

Come see the latest in hi-tech gadgets from leaders in digital technology from across the globe!

Win hi-tech devices, including a Samsung a600 camera phone, a Vespa, and an x105 picture messaging phone. All you have to do is show up!

For more information, including photos and schedules, visit www.TKOtour.com

This is a Mr. Youth, LLC. promotion.
For sponsorship information visit www.MrYouth.com

FEATURING

Ultimate Dorm Room
Want to live the ultimate digital lifestyle?
It all starts with this pad and we're givin' it away!

The CEA Surround Sound Pavilion
Experience Home Theater the way it was meant to be heard

and Much More!!!

Presented By
SAMSUNG
Windows Mobile
TOSHIBA
Image Is Everything

GERALD H. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Craig Canavan and the Maroon and White salvage a victory over Siena with Ptah Myers in overtime with the game-winning goal.

Myers' OT goal saves Minutemen

Continued from page 12

Siena's seven shots mark the third time over those last four games in which the Maroon and White defense limited its opponent's shots to under 10.

On offense, UMass was having its share of troubles getting the ball in the net. The Saints controlled the Minuteman offense in the first half, and they were riding a one-goal lead going into halftime.

"We came out flat and they came out just the way we thought they would, and we have to give them credit for being very difficult to play," Koch said.

The second half belonged to the Maroon and White, but still there was a lack of cohesion on offense. Myers, Dan Colwell and Ernie Billittier had eight shots on goal between them, but had trouble getting the ball behind Siena goalie Patrick Henry.

UMass remained scoreless until 65:35 when Siena committed a foul just outside the box, giving the Minutemen a free kick. Colwell blasted the ball into the upper left corner, tying the game at one.

Fouls were a major flaw in Siena's game, committing 24 to UMass' 11. The excess fouls gave UMass the edge with possession and caused the flow of the game to be dictated by the Maroon and White.

The rest of the game was purely defensive. Freshman goalkeeper Ernie Billman had another solid game in goal, making a couple of key saves, protecting the tie going into overtime.

"He's done a good job for us; he's been consistent. He came up and made a couple of good saves when we needed him to, and I thought he did a good job," Koch said.

The Minutemen dominated overtime and didn't let Siena take a single shot in the extra periods.

UMass' offense began to run efficiently, getting the ball into space and setting up more scoring opportunities. As the second overtime began, sophomore Jason Scudamore made a through pass in the box to Myers who knocked it home, winning the game at 101:32.

"We found a way to win. We got the results we needed. We just did it the hard way and talked about it. We were able to learn a lot, get a wake up call and still win the game," Koch said.

The Minutemen play their final non-conference game against University of New Hampshire Saturday in Durham, N.H.

2002-03 UMass basketball schedules released

By MIKE MARZELLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts basketball coaches Steve Lappas and Marnie Dacko announced their respective schedules last Tuesday afternoon. The men's squad will meet 10 teams that qualified for either the NCAA Tournament or the National Invitation Tournament (NIT) in 2002-2003, while the women will play at least four games against teams that competed in the 2002-2003 postseason.

The Minutemen will hit the floor for the first time on Nov. 9, as they will travel to the Springfield Civic Center to face the legendary Harlem Globetrotters. Following another exhibition at the Mullins Center on Nov. 13, they will open the 2003-2004 regular season by hosting St. Francis in Amherst in the opening round of the preseason NIT.

If UMass is able to advance past St. Francis, they will face the winner of the Texas Tech/Davidson game in the second round, and any further advancement will see the Maroon and White compete in Madison Square Garden, where the semifinal and final rounds will be held on Nov. 26 and 28.

Other notable non-conference dates for Lappas' squad are meetings with archrival and NCAA Tournament entrant Connecticut on Dec. 30, as well as fellow NCAA Tournament participant Vermont on Dec. 2.

The Minutemen have their first scheduled road game on Dec. 6, as the annual Commonwealth Classic will take place at intra-state rival and NIT qualifier Boston College's Conte Forum. Another NIT squad, Tennessee, also appears on Lappas' docket. The Volunteers are set to face Massachusetts on Jan. 3 at the Mullins Center in a game televised nationally on ESPN.

Conference play begins on Jan. 7, when the Minutemen host La Salle. UMass will host Temple on ESPN2 on Jan. 24, and will appear four times on the A-10 Television Network (Jan. 18 at Duquesne, Feb. 8 vs. Dayton, Feb. 14 at Xavier and Mar. 6 at Richmond).

Dacko's Minutewomen open the season on the road at Sacred Heart on Nov. 21, and will host Holy Cross in their home opener at the Mullins Center on Nov. 23.

They will then travel to the Carrier Dome to face Syracuse on Nov. 25 and will follow the non-conference match up by participating in the Coca-Cola Classic, Nov. 29-30 at the Arena at Harbor Yard in Bridgeport, Conn. UMass is slated to play host school Fairfield in the opening round, and either Brown or Delaware on the second day.

The Minutewomen will then face Vermont in Amherst on Dec. 3 before heading west to participate in the Arizona Basketball Classic, Dec. 6-7. They are scheduled to face Utah State in the first round followed by either host Arizona, a 2002-2003 NCAA Tournament entrant, or American.

Dacko will open the conference portion of her team's schedule in Philadelphia, as UMass will face La Salle and St. Joseph's on Jan. 3 and 6, respectively. The conference home opener will be on Jan. 9 against Temple, and they will square off against 2002-2003 NCAA Tournament participants in league matchups with Xavier on Jan. 23 and George Washington on Feb. 26.

The Minutewomen's only television appearance will come on Feb. 1, as they will host Fordham in a game televised on the A-10 Television Network.

University of Massachusetts Men's Basketball Schedule (as of September 22, 2003)

Day	Date	Opponent	Time
November
Sa	9	Harlem Globetrotters* (exhibition)	2 p.m.
Th	13	Player (exhibition)	7 p.m.
Tu	18	St. Francis (N.Y.)#	7 p.m.
Fr	21	Texas Tech/Davidson# (ESPN)	TBA
Su	24	Hartford	7 p.m.
Th	26	NIT Semifinals# (ESPN)	TBA
Sa	28	NIT Championship# (ESPN)	TBA
December
Tu	2	Vermont	7 p.m.
Fr	5	at Boston College	2 p.m.
Sa	6	vs. Central Connecticut%	7:30 p.m.
Sa	20	Marshall	TBA
Tu	23	Maine	7 p.m.
Sa	28	Albany	2 p.m.
Su	30	at Connecticut*	7 p.m.
January
Th	2	Tennessee (ESPN)	5:30 p.m.
Tu	7	Lasalle*	7 p.m.
Th	9	George Washington*	2 p.m.
Sa	11	at St. Bonaventure*	7 p.m.
Sa	18	at Duquesne* (A-10 TV)	Noon
Tu	21	at Saint Joseph's*	7 p.m.
Fr	24	Temple* (ESPN2)	1 p.m.
Su	26	Fordham*	7 p.m.
Fr	31	at Rhode Island*	Noon
February
Su	2	at Rutgers	7:30 p.m.
Th	6	Dayton* (A-10 TV)	2 p.m.
Sa	8	at Xavier* (A-10 TV)	4 p.m.
Tu	18	Rhode Island*	7 p.m.
Fr	21	at Fordham*	1 p.m.
Su	23	Saint Joseph's*	7 p.m.
Tu	25	St. Bonaventure*	2 p.m.
March
Su	2	at Temple*	TBA
Th	6	at Richmond* (A-10 TV)	4 p.m.
Atlantic 10 Conference Championship at University of Dayton Arena
Th	10	Opening Round
Fr	11	Quarterfinals
Sa	12	Semifinals
Su	13	Championship

*Atlantic 10 Conference game
+Springfield Civic Center
#Preseason NIT
Madison Square Garden
%Bridgeport Sun Arena
^Hartford Civic Center
&Sovereign Bank Arena

2002-04 Massachusetts Women's Basketball Schedule

Day	Date	Opponent	Location	Time
Fri.	Nov. 7	Team Concept (Exh.)	Amherst, Mass.	7:00 p.m.
Fri.	Nov. 21	at Sacred Heart	Fairfield, Conn.	7:30 p.m.
Sun.	Nov. 23	HOLY CROSS	Amherst, Mass.	4:00 p.m.
Tue.	Nov. 25	at Syracuse	Syracuse, N.Y.	7:00 p.m.
November 29-30 - Fairfield Tournament - Bridgeport, Conn.
Sat.	Nov. 29	Fairfield	Bridgeport, Conn.	5:00 p.m.
Sun.	Nov. 30	Brown or Delaware	Bridgeport, Conn.	1:00/3:00 p.m.
Wed.	Dec. 3	VERMONT	Amherst, Mass.	7:00 p.m.
Dec 6-7 - Arizona Basketball Classic - Tucson, Ariz.
Sat.	Dec. 6	Utah State	Tucson, Ariz.	3:00 p.m.
Sun.	Dec. 7	Arizona or American	Tucson, Ariz.	1:00/3:30 p.m.
Sun.	Dec. 14	at Northeastern	Boston, Mass.	1:00 p.m.
Sun.	Dec. 21	at Hartford	West Hartford, Conn.	1:00 p.m.
Tue.	Dec. 30	UNC-GREENSBORO	Amherst, Mass.	7:00 p.m.
Sat.	Jan. 3	at La Salle*	Philadelphia, Pa.	TBA
Tue.	Jan. 6	at Saint Joseph's*	Philadelphia, Pa.	TBA
Fri.	Jan. 9	TEMPLE*	Amherst, Mass.	7:00 p.m.
Sun.	Jan. 11	DAYTON*	Amherst, Mass.	2:00 p.m.
Fri.	Jan. 16	at Rhode Island*	Kingston, R.I.	7:00 p.m.
Sun.	Jan. 18	ST. BONAVENTURE*	Amherst, Mass.	2:00 p.m.
Fri.	Jan. 23	XAVIER*	Amherst, Mass.	7:00 p.m.
Thu.	Jan. 29	at Temple*	Philadelphia, Pa.	TBA
Sun.	Feb. 1	FORDHAM* (A-10 TV)	Amherst, Mass.	12:00 p.m.
Sun.	Feb. 8	at Duquesne*	Pittsburgh, Pa.	2:00 p.m.
Fri.	Feb. 13	at Fordham*	Bronx, N.Y.	7:00 p.m.
Sun.	Feb. 15	SAINT JOSEPH'S*	Amherst, Mass.	2:00 p.m.
Thu.	Feb. 19	at St. Bonaventure*	Olean, N.Y.	TBA
Sat.	Feb. 22	at Richmond*	Richmond, Va.	TBA
Thu.	Feb. 26	GEO. WASHINGTON*	Amherst, Mass.	7:00 p.m.
Sun.	Feb. 29	RHODE ISLAND*	Amherst, Mass.	2:00 p.m.
March 5-8 - Atlantic 10 Tournament - Alumni Field House - Philadelphia, Pa
Fri.	March 5	Opening Round	Philadelphia, Pa.	TBA
Sat.	March 6	Quarterfinals	Philadelphia, Pa.	TBA
Sun.	March 7	Semifinals (A-10 TV)	Philadelphia, Pa.	TBA
Mon.	March 8	Championship (ESPN2)	Philadelphia, Pa.	TBA

*Denotes A-10 Conference Game
Tentative schedule as of Sept. 22 * Subject to change

sports@dailycollegian.com sports@dailycollegian.com sports@dailycollegian.com sports@dailycollegian.com sports@dailycollegian.com

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
Why not be a bartender?
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
• One professional school in Western MA
• Hands on training in real bar club setting
• Full legal certification in alcohol awareness
• Job placement help
• ID Card
• Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413)747-9888
www.bostonbartender.com

TRUST "Before looking into a long term contract for a fitness facility with no machinery in place, why not give the veteran professionals a visit."
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
"Big enough to own the best equipment, but small enough to know your name."
* IN BUSINESS 22 YEARS
* LOCALLY OWNED & OPERATED"
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 254-0000 90 AMHERST

There's a reason we're called Travelers.
Join the company that has plenty of room for advancement. Travelers Property Casualty is one of the leading insurance companies in the United States. Our superior financial strength and consistent record of strong operating returns means security for our customers – and advantages for our employees. We give you the opportunity to get in on the ground floor with exciting Internships and Leadership Development Rotational Programs. So make the right move with us and enjoy world class benefits from day one.
Finance, IT Majors
We Are Coming to Campus:
Resume Drop: 9/30/03
Pre-Interview Session: 10/14/03
Time: 6pm-8pm
Place: Lincoln Murrey, Campus Center Room 805-09
Interviews: 10/15/03
If you can't join us, please submit resume to: College Relations, Travelers, One Tower Square, 5CZ, Hartford, CT 06183-7150. Fax: 860-277-1970. E-mail: college@travelers.com
For more information on our opportunities, visit our Web site: www.travelers.com.
Travelers
Travelers is an equal opportunity employer and invites culturally diverse applicants to join our team. We actively promote a drug-free workplace.

Athletes in Action Weekly Meeting
Tuesdays 8pm in James Dorm SW
Bible study + milk+ brownies = good times for athletes
Info: LA_Love_35@yahoo.com or Dave at 259-1083

Real Life
Thursdays 8pm
in the Campus Center
Teaching, worship, and a whole lot of fun
Info: umasscru.com or brent.vallee@uscm.org

Is a baseball power outage at hand?

Players think steroid testing could be a possible factor

By RONALD BLUM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK (AP) – The biggest sluggers in baseball look as if they've lost a little pop in their bats.

For the first full season since 1993, it appears neither Barry Bonds, Sammy Sosa nor any of the game's top power hitters will reach 50 home runs.

Could it be because baseball started testing for steroids this season? Some players think so.

"You look at the home-run numbers and you look at the averages that have gone down this year," said Frank Thomas of the Chicago White Sox, a two-time American League MVP. "I think it's a telltale sign that it's having a positive effect."

Before the 1994-95 strike, players hit at least 50 homers just 18 times. Babe Ruth in 1927 was the only one to hit 60 until Roger Maris had 61 in 1961.

Then came an unprecedented power barrage. Since the strike, players have reached 50 homers 18 times. Sosa topped 60 in three seasons and Mark McGwire did it twice, hitting a record 70 in 1998. Then in 2001, Bonds hit 73.

Going into the final week of this season, Alex Rodriguez of the Texas Rangers led the major leagues with 47 homers. Bonds had 44 for San Francisco, tied for second with Philadelphia's Jim Thome.

"There was a time when 60 was just an easy thing to do for guys," Giants manager Felipe Alou said. While the big bashers have dropped off, the overall average hasn't. There has been an average of 2.14 homers a game this year, according to the Elias Sports Bureau, up from 2.09 last season. Still, it's below the three peak years: 2.28 in 1999, 2.34 in 2000 and 2.25 in 2001.

"Things go in cycles," Chicago Cubs manager Dusty Baker said.

Bob Costas, a longtime baseball broadcaster and author, says it's too early to tell if there's a link between drug tests and the power drop at the top.

"Is it possible that there will be some positive, long-range effect? Yes. But I wouldn't jump to that conclusion yet," Costas said.

Bonds spent much of the season dealing with the death of his father, Bobby.

The 39-year-old outfielder, who has repeatedly denied ever using steroids, has played in just 124 games, averaging a home run per 8.5 at-bats. Sosa has played 132 games, missing time because of a beaning and a suspension. He has 36 homers, an average of one per 13.8 at-bats.

"A lot of the big home run guys got hurt and had some time off," said the Dodgers'Rickey Henderson, another former MVP.

"Barry Bonds had a real big tragedy, and Sammy Sosa's been on the DL and got suspended because of a corked bat, so maybe it threw his timing off."

Former MVPs Jose Canseco and Ken Caminiti have said many players use steroids. Last year, the players' association agreed for the first time to allow testing.

All players gave urine samples this year as part of "survey" testing, with samples taken twice from each player within a given week.

In addition, the commissioner's office had the right to test up to 240 players randomly.

If more than 5 percent of players test positive for steroids this year, "program" testing will start next season. If that happens, players who test positive would undergo treatment, and if they test positive a second time, they could be suspended for up to 15 days.

Results of this season's testing won't be available until after the season.

Cubs pitcher Mike Remlinger doesn't believe there's a link between testing and the power drop-off among top hitters, in part because players caught using steroids this season won't get in trouble.

Dodgers reliever Paul Shuey disagrees, saying the start of testing is the only explanation.

"I would have expected to see somebody hit 50 home runs after the way it's been going the last few years," he said. 'That's the only change I could see."

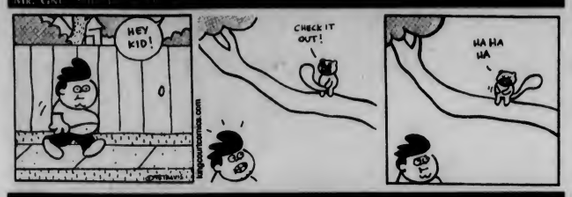
Officials from management and the union downplayed steroid testing as a reason 50 homers might not be reached.

"There's been talk about some guys showing up to camp slimmer, but I think a lot of the talk does players a disservice," said Gene Orza, the union's No. 2 official. "Barry Bonds would have had 50 homers, but he was out."

Bob DuPuy, baseball's chief operating officer, said it was simply another cyclical baseball trend. And, after all, pitchers have a lot to do with it, too.

"There are a number of very good young pitchers who are maturing and having an impact," he said.

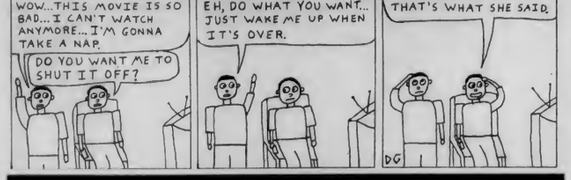
DINO VOURNAS/ASSOCIATED PRESS



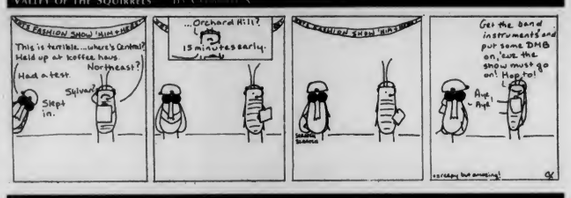
San Francisco Giants' Barry Bonds connects off Colorado Rockies' Jose Jimenez in the second inning Tuesday, Sept. 2 in San Francisco.

EXPRESS/ STRUCTURE
Warehouse Clothing Sale
Mon - Thur 9 to 8
Fri - 9 to ???
GOT CLOTHES?
1st Quality Merchandise
5 DAYS ONLY
WAREHOUSE SALE
NOBODY'S PERFECT
WAREHOUSE CLOTHING SALE
Don't Miss Out!!!
Sept. 22nd thru Sept. 26th
Student Union Ballroom

New WORLD Theater
Celebrating 25 Years of New WORLD Theater
Undesirable Elements/ Pioneer Valley
Created by Ping Chong and Tahnia Weiss
Sept. 24 and 25 8pm, Bowker Aud.
A part of Ping Chong's innovative interview-theater project.
Culture, community and identity collide to form a living history on stage. Immigrants from Senegal, El Salvador share their journey in becoming a part of the rich immigrant history of the Pioneer Valley
CARLOS NAMID
Students (with valid ID are $5
TICKETS ARE: $15-general public; $8-low income patrons/ seniors; $5-students. Call FAC Box Office 413-545-2511. For more info about the shows, call NWT at 413-545-1972.
Open Mic Series -FREE!- WORD for WORD Oct 7 at 7pm Cape Cod Lounge, UMass SUB for more info call 577-2990



MR. GNU



JAMBALAYA

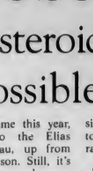
THAT'S WHAT SHE SAID

VALLEY OF THE SQUIRRELS

BELLY OF THE WHALE

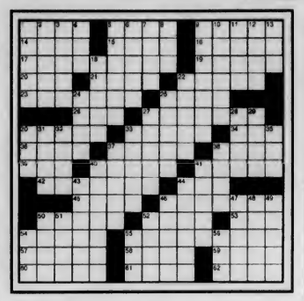
QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"Autumn is a second spring when every leaf's a flower."



-Albert Camus

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE



ACROSS
1 — au lait
5 Perimeter
9 Cousin's dad
14 Type of seaman
15 Nurture
16 Gets stuck
17 Attendee's reward (2 wds.)
19 Ire
20 Tokyo, formerly
21 Political campaign
22 Risky
23 Home wrecker?
25 Lily-white
26 Jungle snake
27 Pizza toppers
30 Fragrant wood
33 Rancher's homeless "second source"
34 Line of rotation
37 Trattoria sauce
38 Field of study
39 "Who's Who" entry
40 "Nanook" star
41 Idaho and Iowa
42 Streetcar
44 Monsieur's address
45 Borscht ingredient
46 Credit cards, slangily
50 Tooth type
52 Hull part
53 Nurses org.
54 Initials
55 Good lookers
57 Rivet-maker
58 Rivet-maker
59 Three-sided sword
60 Knight's mount
61 Recruit's dinner
62 Feel sure of

DOWN
1 Military student
2 Residence
3 Elevator stop
4 Always, to Poe
5 Mephitis
6 Fate of host
7 Steady look
8 Before now
9 Drinks calorie
10 Balloon girls
11 Hudson Bay tribe
12 Tax
13 WNW opposite
18 Abbot's underling
22 Because of 24 Cat's
25 Scrapbook item
27 "I Spy" star
28 Light brown
29 Brought action
30 Urban transport
31 Freeway ramp
32 Designer label
33 Tarn
35 German article
37 More washed-out
38 Mimicry
40 Gathered
41 Hunt down
43 Leap out
44 Picks
46 Lowly laborers
47 Gray brown
48 Pantium producer
49 Baseball's Slaughter
50 Shrewd
51 Horrible boss
52 Elbow opposite
54 Toy gun ammo
55 Dutch airline
56 Above, to a bard

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd.- N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
TUES. Team Pub Trivia! Win Money and Prizes
WED. Harp Reggae Night
September Special! Labatt Blue: $1.75 A pint / $6.25 A pitcher
"Start your own tradition."

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Nuggets
- BBQ Beef Sandwich
- Curried Vegetables (vegan)

DINNER
- Grilled Pork Chops
- Turkey Divan
- Grilled Portabella
- Mushroom Steaks (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
For Amherst

TUESDAY
- High: 72
- Low: 49

WEDNESDAY
- High: 73
- Low: 50

THURSDAY
- High: 74
- Low: 47

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Barbara Lotto
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Sarah Lloyd
COPY EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Dan Simmons
PRODUCTION STAFF
Nikolas P. Marakantonatos/ Dave Pessah

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
If your thinking about someone, they are not thinking about you. Sorry.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Someone from your past will invade your dreams, two nights in row.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
You're your worst enemy, stop screwing around and start helping yourself.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Your fat, don't eat that second calzone, you really don't need it.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Your predesesor screwed you over, it sucks huh?

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Keep that CD on repete. by the end of the day you'll know all the words to it.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Just because something takes a long time doesn't mean it isn't worth doing.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Check your pocket, you may just find some money you didn't know you had.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Watch a movie and chill tonight, I suggest Finding Nemo, it's a good one.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You need to prioritize your life, your obligations are too numerous.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Try to shed some of your baggage it's weighing you down.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You will meet a mysterious hottie tomarrow, get their number.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Fraternities-Sororities- Clubs- Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven Campus Fundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact Campus Fundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Montreal Weekends $99. Includes R/T Luxury Motor Coach from Springfield. 3 Days-2 Nights- 4 Star Hotel Downtown-Meals-Night Club passes. www.montreal-express.net 1-781-979-9001 Special Group Rates

AUTO FOR SALE

Buick Century 1994 Recently inspected 108,000 Miles $2100- 413-549-6648

AUTO REPAIR

Imported cars a specialty, 20 years experience. Honest Service, straightforward answers. Mark's Sunoco, Rt116 Sunderland 665-7438 (on bus route)

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Participate in listening experiments $7.50/hour call 545-6837 or write jkingston@linguist.umass.edu

EMPLOYMENT

Earn up to $100 per hour or more as an exotic male dancer at club Xstatic. 240 Chesnut St, Springfield MA, 413-736-2618 or www.clubxstatic.com

Hand out flyers on campus for new business – short term – 5 to 10 hours per week $8 per hour. Call 413-210-9352

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

EMPLOYMENT

Produce Sales Associates Part-time evenings + Saturdays. Competitive Pay Call Atkins 253-9528

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

FOR SALE

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.iagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

FURNITURE

Large Corner Computer Workstation: Filedrawers, cubbies, & more. $125.00 OBO. 367-0096

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons- w/retired Pro Djata Bumpus. In Northampton. 584-1966 or visit- www.westernmass-boxing.com Accepts all major credit cards.

LOST AND FOUND

Lost Sat night. Goodman Presentation at Mahar. Sharp Wizard Personal Organizer, contains valuable info. Reward. 413-253-9999 Allen

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

SERVICES

Do you know your rights as a student, tenant, worker or consumer? The Student Legal Services Office provides free help with your questions. Come to 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995.

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, an d Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! 110% Best Prices! Mexico, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida, Texas. Book Now & Receive Free Parties & Meals Campus Reps Wanted! 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2004! Beach Life Vacations! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Travel Free!! Call 1-800-733-6347 www.beachlife vacations.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplash-tours.com or 1800-426-7710

TRAVEL

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED, non-smokers. Ages 21-32. Generous compensation & expenses paid. For more information contact Robert Nichols, Esq. (781)769-6900, Rnichols@gbnlaw.net, www.robertnichols esq.com.

Place your own Classified Ad in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace! Just visit the Campus Center Basement or call 545-3500!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Beau-Ptah-ful

Myers saves day for UM

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's soccer team brought home a bittersweet victory at Siena College on Saturday in an unexpected, dramatic fashion.

With the score even at 1-1 at the end of regulation, UMass was faced with the desperate situation of closing out a game that should have never been close. The threat of an upset was ended when Atlantic 10 Player of the Week, Ptah Myers scored the golden goal 1:32 into the second overtime.

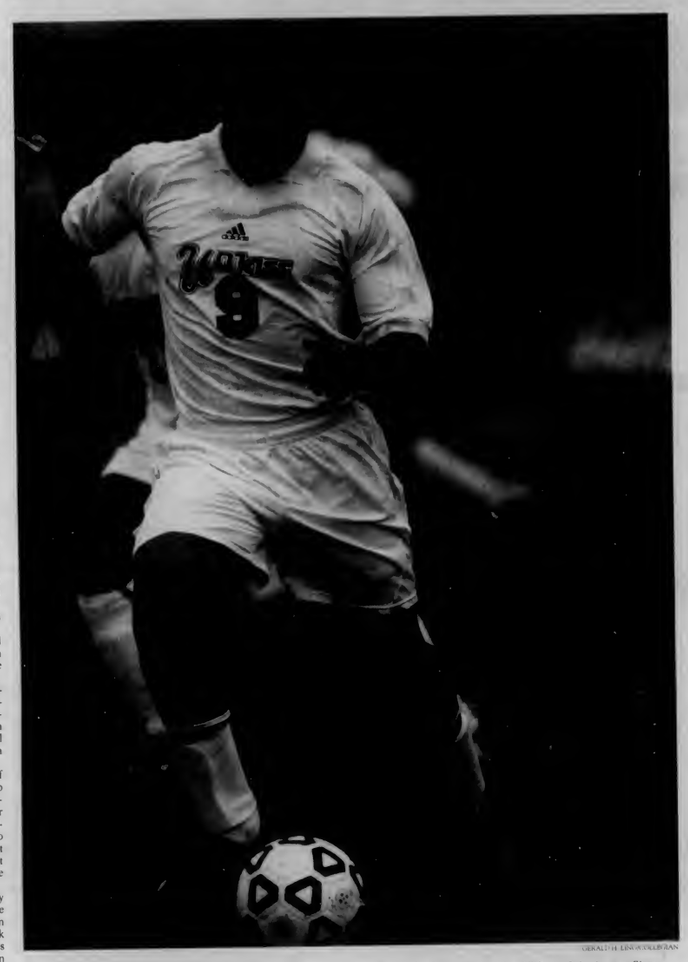
UMass	2
Siena	1 (OT)

The Minutemen offense looked stagnant against the Saint defense, and was unable to convert on multiple opportunities, chances that UMass coach Sam Koch doesn't want his team to be missing.

"We just didn't finish our chances," Koch said. "Their goalkeeper made a couple of good saves but we created a lot of good chances. We just couldn't finish them."

The Saints got on the board first at the 17:24 mark with an unassisted goal from Ciao Silva. The goal came off a roller in the box that went uncontested by UMass defenders. Silva connected, knocking the ball into the lower right corner.

The underdog had thrown the first punch.



"It was a ball that bounced free, they were able to get on the end of it and he hit a nice ball in the corner," Koch said.

There was some miscommunication among the midfielders and defenders facilitating the Siena attack. For a defense that has been solid all season, the early strike was a wakeup call.

"There were a couple of miscues on our part to set up the situation. If we had possessed the ball better in our midfield, they probably wouldn't have had the opportunity to set up the chance ... It's just one of those things, you can't do everything perfect all the time," Koch said.

Silva's goal was the only bright spot for Siena's offense all day. The Minutemen defense picked up the slack and shut down the Saints attack, allowing only seven shots the rest of the game.

Continued on page 9

GERALD H. LIN/COLLEGIAN

Senior co-captain Ptah Myers scores the game-winning goal 1:32 into sudden-death overtime, giving UMass a 2-1 win over Siena.

Woes continue in pen for Sox

Touchin' 'Em All
Mike Marzelli

When Theo Epstein acquired Scott Sauerbeck and Scott Williamson at the trading deadline to bolster the Sox's core of arms, everyone from Karl Ravech to Carl Beane was anointing him a genius.

Although now that the aforementioned duo has fallen on some serious hard times, his chrisening as the next Billy Beane was put on hold.

Sauerbeck came with Jeff Suppan, and at the high price of top infield prospect Freddy Sanchez, yet many thought this was the coup of the year. However, Sauerbeck can't hit the broad side of a barn with any of his pitches, and has lost the trust of manager Grady Little and the Sox coaches, making them reluctant to use him in late-inning situations.

Williamson has shown flashes of what made him an all-star closer in Cincinnati, but has shown even more of what made the Reds deem him expendable. He has a quality arm and has well above average velocity on his fastball, but his tendency to avoid trusting his hard stuff has led to far too many poorly located breaking balls.

Now, with the ongoing struggles of Byun-Hyun Kim in the closer's role, manager Grady Little has said he will go back to employing what created this Beantown bullpen mess in the first place: closer-by-committee.

Is this something that is going to work in the playoffs for the Red Sox, when and if they make it? Can Sauerbeck return to form and retire the Chavez's and Giambi's of the world in the post season? Will Williamson step up and pitch his way into the closer's role? And is Kim going to be able to be effective after being demoted from a role he's held for almost three months now?

These are all questions that must be answered before the Red Sox can even think of a World Series birth. The problem then lies in what little should deem as the only solution.

These are all very capable pitchers with plenty of big league experience, two of whom have playoff experience and know how to get their job done. The staff needs to keep trotting these guys out there and let them work their kinks out on the mound in game situations.

Sure it sets the Sox up to fail if they continue to be unable to come through, but without their positive contributions, Boston will be up the creek without a paddle against bona fide big league teams in the playoffs.

Spouting off

In case you missed it, Devil Rays pitcher Jeremi Gonzalez got into a heated exchange with baseball's official, Mr. Overrated Jorge Posada, and actually came charging after him as the Yankee catcher chastised the pitcher while he trotted to first base, for what he thought was headhunting.

Mr. Gonzalez obviously must not have gotten the memo that the season is a week from being over, and he plays for the hapless Rays. However, it's rare that a professional athlete remains as emotionally involved in a meaningless game as Gonzalez did, and he should be applauded for that.

This is an edge the D-Rays never used to have, and it is obviously a distinct effect Lou Piniella has been able to have on his young team. Yet never was it more evident than in post-game comments from Gonzalez about the incident, and what fans from St. Pete to Boston have claimed to be true for years:

"When I'm pitching, I don't want anybody to talk trash to me. And he was talking trash to me on the way to first," Gonzalez said. "Nobody says anything when the Yankees pitch inside. But when we do it, they say something. I'm tired of it. They think they're better than everybody. I don't think so."

Mike Marzelli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at Marzelli_Collegian@yahoo.com. Touchin' 'Em All appears every Tuesday during the baseball season. Information from Major League Baseball and the Tampa Bay Devil Rays was used in this piece.

XC competes in Bridgeport

Men finish 3rd, women 7th

The men's and women's cross country teams finish third and seventh respectively at the Ted Owen Invitational held in New Britain, Conn.

By Matt Barstow and Leah Wyner
Collegian Correspondents

The University of Connecticut showed the cross-country universe that it is a force to be reckoned with, taking the top four spots in Saturday's Ted Owen Invitational, held in New Britain, Conn.

The Huskies, ranked No. 19 in the New England Intercollegiate Amateur Athletic Association poll entering Saturday's race, upended No. 15 UMass and No. 10 Maine. The Huskies bounced back from a loss to Providence and UNH last weekend to take the Invitational in overwhelming fashion.

Connecticut's three returning seniors crossed the finish line within 17 seconds of each other, sealing victory.

Senior Mike Hall led the Huskies with a time of 26:39, good enough for first.

"UConn looked strong and they dominated the meet from the start. First place was never in doubt," UMass coach Ken O'Brien said.

The Minutemen finished third behind a Maine team that bested UMass in last week's meet at Amherst. UMass finished 29 points behind Maine at the Ted Owen Invitational, compared to last Saturday's one-point loss.

"Third place isn't too bad. UConn is very hard to beat, and we know Maine has a good team," O'Brien said.

Clark and Corbett finished 30th and 35th, respectively, in their first race of the year.

Corbett's brother, sophomore Ryan, won last week's race, but finished below expectations with a 26th-place 28:42.

"[Ryan] Corbett ran exceptionally well last week, but he is fighting somewhat of a flu, and it took something out of him," O'Brien said.

"An overview of the race is hard to give, some guys ran a little stronger than last week, and some guys slipped down a few spots. This early in the season you have to expect some inconsistencies," O'Brien said.

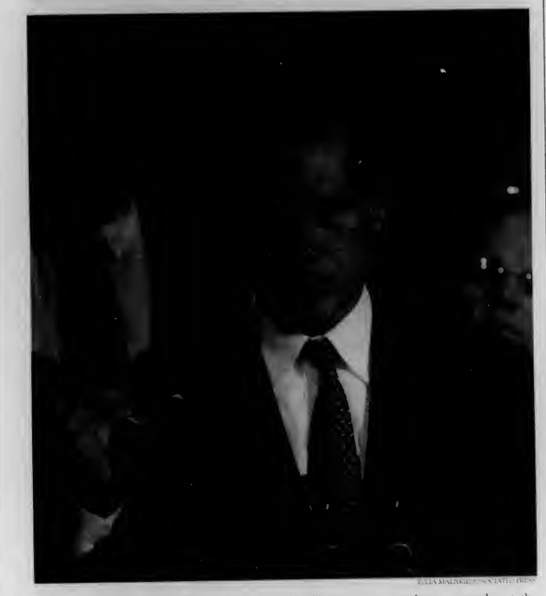
Hantman came in first for the Minutemen, three team spots better than last Saturday.

The Massachusetts women's cross country team finished seventh out of nine teams at the Owen Invitational.

New Hampshire won the meet with 36 points, and Vermont came in third place with a total of 94 points. Maine raced to a fourth place finish with 101 points. Colgate ended up with a total of 133 points, and Siena earned 162 points; the teams were fifth and sixth, respectively. UMass was 7th with 167 points, and Central Connecticut State University came in eighth with 201 points.

Minutewoman Alexis Anzelone led the women's team for the second meet in a row.

The Westfield, N.J. native's time of 18 minutes, 52.9 seconds, earned her fourteenth place. Freshman Cuisle Kierans from Newbury, Mass. stepped it up and finished second for the Minutewomen, 34th overall, with a time of 19 minutes, 57.7 seconds. Kierans improved from the Minutewomen's last meet, when she finished fifth for the team.



Rounding out the top three Massachusetts finishers was Kate Markopoulos. The senior from Porter Corners, N.Y. raced to a 38th place finish with a time of 20 minutes, 1.8 seconds. Coach Julie LaFreniere was a bit disappointed with the team's performance.

"The meet was not a good one for our women's team," she said.

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 16

Gov. forms death penalty panel

ELISA MARSHALL/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney gestures as he addresses a news conference yesterday at the Statehouse in Boston, announcing the formation of a panel of scientific and legal experts to craft a proposal to reinstate capital punishment in Massachusetts for a narrow set of crimes.

By Steve LeBlanc
Associated Press

BOSTON – Republican Gov. Mitt Romney said Tuesday he wants to craft a death penalty bill that will make it "virtually certain" that only those guilty of the worst crimes would be executed.

Romney named an 11-member panel of scientists, prosecutors and legal experts to write a bill that relies heavily on science to determine guilt or innocence.

Romney said the burden of proof used to sentence someone to death would likely need to be even tougher than the "guilt beyond a reasonable doubt" needed to convict a suspect of a crime.

"We want a standard of proof that is incontrovertible," Romney said. "This is a new kind of death penalty...just as science can free the innocent, it can identify the guilty."

Massachusetts is one of about a dozen states without capital punishment, which it banned in 1984.

The panel includes U.S. Attorney Michael Sullivan – a former state prosecutor who has testified before the Massachusetts Legislature in favor of the death penalty – and Dr. Henry Lee, a forensic specialist best known for his testimony for the defense during the O.J. Simpson trial.

Romney said he did not ask the members of the panel their position on the death penalty. He tried to deflect questions from reporters about whether individual members support or oppose capital punishment.

One of the co-chairmen of the panel, Joseph Hoffman, said the group intends to craft a bill that will protect the innocent.

He said it is "within the realm of possibility" the panel could conclude such a bill is impossible.

That "would be a very powerful statement to me and I would certainly be wise to take heed," Romney said.

Romney said he envisions using the death penalty only for the worst crimes, including the murder of a police officer, terrorist acts with multiple deaths or murders committed with "extreme atrocity."

The Republican governor faces an uphill fight in the Democrat-controlled Legislature, where support for the death penalty, which peaked after the 1997 murder of 10-year-old Jeffrey Curley of Cambridge, has declined. The past four Republican governors have tried unsuccessfully to reinstate it. The Massachusetts House has traditionally opposed the death penalty, which was defeated by a 94-60 margin in 2001. The Senate has backed the death penalty, but has not taken a vote in several years.

Anti-death penalty activists say it's impossible to create an error-proof law.

"It is an act of arrogance to assume that this time Massachusetts will get it right when it executed Sacco and Vanzetti," said Joshua Rubenstein of Amnesty International.

Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti were put to death in 1927 after they were convicted of killing two people during a robbery. Many observers say the trial focused unfairly on their anarchist beliefs and immigrant status.

Death penalty supporters credit Romney for trying to craft a precise bill.

"[Capital punishment] is the only way as a society that we can adequately express our disapproval of some awful behavior," said Republican House Leader Brad Jones.

Federal prosecutors in Boston have asked Attorney General John Ashcroft to consider filing a death penalty charge against Charles Jaynes, 28, one of two men convicted of kidnapping and murdering Jeffrey Curley. The Boston Globe reported Tuesday. Sullivan would not immediately comment on the decision.

Jeffrey Curley was lured into a car by Jaynes and a second man, then smothered with a gasoline-soaked rag when he resisted their sexual advances. His corpse was found encased in a cement-filled tub in a river in Maine.

It would be the first time since the federal Death Penalty Act was enacted in 1988 that the death penalty would be sought against someone already serving a life sentence imposed by a state court in the same place, legal observers said.

Federal prosecutors have pushed the death penalty in other recent Massachusetts murder cases.

As Plymouth District Attorney, Sullivan asked federal prosecutors if Gary Sampson, who recently pleaded guilty to the 2001 carjack slayings of two men, could face the federal death penalty. Jury selection is under way to decide if Sampson will be executed or face life in prison.

Sullivan filed notice in federal court last week saying he intends to seek the death penalty for two men accused of shooting a third man at the Boston Caribbean Carnival in 2001.

Suffolk District Attorney Daniel Conley Conley objected, saying the death penalty is not an appropriate punishment for an inner-city homicide.

EDITORIAL/OPINION
PAGE 3
UNSOLVED MYSTERIES
THE TRUTH BEHIND THE SGA?

ARTS & LIVING
PAGE 4
THE SAINTS RETURN
BOONDOCK SAINTS SEQUEL IN THE WORKS

SPORTS
PAGE 8
BACK TO WORK
MINUTEMEN TAKE ON CCSU

COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS
PAGE 7

HASA suspended

By Dan Lamothe
Collegian Staff

The Haitian Student Association was notified formally Monday by letter that they will be suspended for the rest of the semester as a Registered Student Organization.

The suspension has been put in place in response to allegations in a report filed by Hind Mari, Assistant Director for RSO Events at the Campus Activities Office and the advisor for HASA in CAO, HASA President Vonel Lamour said.

The allegations involve HASA's planning for the National Haitian Student Conference held last April 4 through April 6 at the University of Massachusetts. The conference is an annual event that has moved around the country each year since its inception in 1997. At UMass last spring, it drew an estimated 600 people of various ages and cultural backgrounds. Speakers included Grammy-winning hip-hop artist Wyclef Jean, film director Jonathan Demme and nationally renowned motivational speaker Rene Godefroy.

Lamour said that he is frustrated that HASA is taking all of the blame for whatever may have been wrong behind the scenes at the conference.

"I understand that Campus Activities is understaffed and overworked," he said. "But at the same time, we shouldn't be penalized for a lack of support or advisement."

Mari's report outlines eight areas she feels the planning for the conference – widely considered a success last spring – was lacking. The allegations include poor communication between members of HASA's executive board last spring and CAO, contradictions between different sets of financial numbers for the conference that HASA gave CAO, and poor planning involving transportation, hotel rooms, food and cash handling for the event.

Another allegation levied in the report is that HASA had an outside bank account that was used for the conference without the knowledge of the CAO or the Student Government Association.

Lamour expressed frustration over many of Mari's complaints, saying that there is another side that HASA has not had the chance to express yet. He gave the example of a problem involving food planning. HASA wanted authentic Haitian food for the conference, which he said was originally scheduled for February but was rescheduled due to weather. He said the group obtained a food waiver to bring in outside catering for the February date, but was not notified until three days before the conference that they needed to obtain a second waiver – something that typically can take a few weeks to go through campus paperwork.

According to Lamour, the bank account allegation is also overblown. Because the conference is an event that moves from campus to campus by the year, national organizers have a bank account to aid in online registration. Lamour said that was the sole purpose for the account.

"No person, including Frantzlyne [Monestime, former HASA president] had access to that account. No one could withdraw or deposit into that account," he said. "It was solely used for the purpose of online registration by a third party, the committee for the conference."

According to Lamour, HASA is also not happy with the extended period of time it took for the group to receive officially what their status this year would be. HASA has been suspended since May 9, when SGA Secretary of the Registry Carla Moy sent them a memo that a decision would be issued on HASA's status as an organization "upon review and investigation of these allegations."

HASA received no official notification until Monday's letter from Vice Chancellor Michael Gargano.

Mari would not comment on the allegations in the report, other than to say she hopes she can work with HASA this semester on organizational development.

"I really want to work with them to fix the problems," she said.

Lamour said he and other members of HASA will meet today at 3 p.m. with members of CAO and the SGA to discuss details of HASA's suspension and to go over discrepancies HASA has with Mari's report.

His hope is that a compromise can be reached where HASA can be placed on some sort of probation as opposed to a full suspension. He isn't expecting use of HASA funds, which remain frozen under the suspension, but he wants to be able to hold general body meetings and "educationals" for freshmen who join the group.

UMass sets fundraising record

By Sara-Megan Walsh
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts set an all-time fundraising record by raising $35.2 million dollars in private donations during the fiscal year that ended on June 30.

The donations came from a variety of sources, including 44 percent from corporations and foundations and 34.9 percent from University alumni, along with funds from graduating and current UMass students.

"We are grateful for their confidence and their support," Chancellor John V. Lombardi said. Chancellor Lombardi cited the key factor in this dynamic fundraising as the increase in large gifts granted to UMass. The University offered information on four of the large gifts.

Kathleen and Robert Mahoney, both University alumni, granted $2 million for the construction of the Integrated Sciences Building.

The University also received a $1.5 million gift from Terry Murray upon his retirement as chairman of FleetBoston Financial Corporation. The donation was created with matching funds for the Terrence Murray Commonwealth College Honors fund.

UMass alumnus Earl W. Stafford, chairman and CEO of Universal Systems and Technology, Inc., gave $1 million to the University for creation of the Earl W. Stafford Professorship in Entrepreneurial Studies.

The fourth gift was received from an anonymous donor and served, with matching funds, to support the University Chair in Peace Psychology.

There are two main factors believed to be behind this sudden increase in fundraising through private donations from the $20.1 million raised last year; the first being the new direction the University has taken under the leadership of Chancellor Lombardi. Lombardi has argued that an investment in UMass will improve the academic quality of the University and create more educational opportunities for students. Secondly, the University's Foundation Board has taken a lead in finding, developing and personally making substantial philanthropic commitments to campus.

Last year, UMass beat the University of Connecticut in the first Senior Class Challenge, a competition where graduating seniors from both universities challenged each other to raise the most donations for their schools. UMass focused on its long history of philanthropy, leading to 51 percent of its students donating an average of

Continued on page 2

Campus Center Water Park

Members of the University of Massachusetts Maintenance Department responded to a flash flood in the Campus Center Lobby yesterday afternoon when water from a torrential downpour failed to be channeled away through safety storm arteries. The heavy downpour was estimated to have caused local water levels to rise three inches within a half hour time frame.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COMICS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Erika Lovley
NEWS EDITOR Courtney Charles
PHOTO EDITOR Gerald H. Ling
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Julie Beauchamp
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE Sandra Marquez
SPECIAL ISSUES Betsy Feldman
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Ben Ratner
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Mark Lagatic
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lisa Lynch
LAYOUT MANAGER Lindsay Clark
GRAPHICS ADVISER Charlie Higgins
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Cram
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT NEWS Ferron Salniker
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marzelli

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SPENCE IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN A MEMBER SINCE JANUARY 1998. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

www.dailycollegian.com

Weekly Calendar of events

September 24 - September 30 2003

Compiled by Ferron Salniker

Wednesday 24

At 4 p.m. award-winning poet, Daniel Tobin will hold a reading in the Stimson Room of the Williston Memorial Library at Mount Holyoke College. Tobin's poems have appeared in Stand, The American Scholar, The Paris Review, and many other journals. Among his awards are "The Discovery/The Nation Award," The Robert Penn Warren Award, a creative writing fellowship from the National Endowment for the Arts, and the Robert Frost Fellowship. Tobin is presently Chair of the Writing, Literature, and Publishing Department at Emerson College in Boston. The lecture is free and open to the public.

On the University of Massachusetts campus, Professor David Hafemeister of California Polytechnic State University will present "Verification of Arms – Control Treaties," a lecture that will address the general area of applying physics to important societal issues. Hafemeister has advised (among others) the U.S. Senate, the U.S. State Department and the National Academy of Sciences. Refreshments will be served at 3:45 p.m. in the Hasbrouck lobby. The lecture will begin at 4 p.m. in Hasbrouck, room 126.

At 7 p.m., Pulitzer Prize-winning investigative reporter Mike Stanton will discusses his New York Times bestseller, "The Prince Of Providence: The True Story of Buddy Cianci, America's Most Notorious Mayor, Some Wise Guys, and the Feds." For more information call: 534-7307. The event is co-sponsored by the Mount Holyoke College English Department and the University Massachusetts Journalism Department. The reading is free and will take place at the Odyssey Bookshop located at 9 College Street in South Hadley.

Thursday 25

The Campus Community is invited to attend the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and Other Minority Students, first annual Freshmen/Upperclassmen Community Day Reception at 5:30 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium at UMass. Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life Dr. Michael Gargano will speak. For more information call Doris Clemmons at 545-5106.

At 6 p.m. the Jewish Outdoor Group will be driving to a local park and build a fire, roast hotdogs and marshmallows, and sing Jewish and traditional campfire songs. To attend, meet at Hillel House, 388 N. Pleasant St., Amherst. RSVP for rides to bachutzr@yahoo.com or Susan at 549-1710x203.

Dr. Robert Fuller will present the lecture "Somebodies, Nobodies, and the Abuse of Power" at 7:30 p.m. in the Hooker Auditorium of Clapp Hall at Mount Holyoke College. Trained as a physicist, Fuller is a former President of Oberlin College. His recent book has spawned a new movement based on the questioning of "rankism," a name for the humiliations, indignities and abuses heaped upon nobodies by those of higher rank.

At 7:30 p.m. in the Gamble Auditorium in the Art Building at Mount Holyoke College, the Weissman Center for Leadership will sponsor the lecture "Democratic Crises and Radical Intellectuals." The Keynote speaker will be Joy James, the Professor of African Studies at Brown University who has participated in a year-long focus on "Geographies of Color: Education, Inequality, and Black Leadership in the 21st Century." For more information, call the Weissman Center for Leadership at (413) 538-3071.

Friday 26

Students and faculty participants in the 2000-03 Smith-Wellesley South Africa studies program will share their experiences with members of the Five-College community at 12 p.m. in the Campus Center, room 205 at Smith College.

Cosponsored by the UMass Organismal and Evolutionary Biology Program, Ben Waggoner of the University of Central Arkansas will give a talk titled "What You Can Learn from a Bunch of Oddballs: The Late Proterozoic Ediacarabiota." The seminar will begin at 4 p.m. and will take place in room 319 of the Morrill Science Center. Vans will depart for UMass from the Amherst Geology Department at 3:30 p.m.

Services for Erev Rosh Hashana will be held in the UMass Student Union Ballroom at 7 p.m. For more information call 549-1710.

Smith College will host the Green River Doula Network Benefit. The "Autumn Evening of Fun" will hold raffles and opportunities to meet with local doulas. Belly dancers will perform, and henna artists will also be attending. The benefit will be located at the Smith College Field House at 7 p.m.

Student Programs and Something Every Friday will present hypnotist Steve Taubman in "Americas Funniest Hypnotist Show" at 9 p.m. in the Blanchard Campus Center Great Room at Mount Holyoke College. Admission is free.

Saturday 27

From 8:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. the Frances Perkins Scholars Association (FPSA) will hold a tag sale in the Chapin Auditorium in Mary Wooley Hall at Mount Holyoke College to raise money for the FPSA Emergency Loan Fund.

10 a.m. services for Rosh Hashana will be held in the Student Union Ballroom. For more information call 549-1710.

Sunday 28

At 2 p.m. filmmaker Sanjay Kak will lead a discussion following the screening of his film about the struggle against big dams in the Narmada Valley, India. The "Words on Water" film screening is part of the conference, "Water Rights & Wrongs: Global Perspectives on Water Sovereignty." The event will be held in the Campus Center Room 208 at Smith College. The event is free.

Monday 29

Lisa McLoughlin, a Five College Women's Studies Research Associate from Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute will hold a lecture entitled "A Guide for Women Undergraduate Engineering Students." McLoughlin's talk will describe three years of longitudinal, qualitative research into the lives of women undergraduate engineering students at three different colleges. Her research will be developed into a handbook for women undergraduate engineers and high school women considering a major in engineering. The lecture will be at 4:30 p.m. in the Five College Women's Studies Research Center at Mount Holyoke College.

Jane Musky, a film production designer, will kick off the "Smith Theatre Departments Designers and Directors Colloquium Series" with a discussion and examples of her work. Musky has been the production designer for such films as Finding Forester, Object Of My Affection, The Devil's Own and When Harry Met Sally. Designers & Directors is a colloquium series with six female production designers for feature films. The lecture will be at 7 p.m. in the Wright Hall Auditorium at Smith College.

Sarah Cardwell, a lecturer in Film Studies at the University of Kent, Englang, will give a lecture entitled, "Time is of the Essence: Exploring Film's Temporality." The lecture will be held at 7 p.m. In Room 202 Skinner Hall, Mount Holyoke College, and is co-sponsored by the Mount Holyoke College Philosophy Department and the Mount Holyoke College Film Studies Program.

At 7:30 p.m., Dr. Alli Tripp, the director of the Women's Studies Research Center at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, will explore the major changes in and characteristics of women's mobilization in Africa, contrasting the current movement with the more conservative women's agendas that emerged after independence. The lecture will take place in room 106 of Seelye at Smith College. Refreshments will be provided.

Tuesday 30

At 7 p.m. lesbian poet, short story writer, and children's book author Leslea Newman will read from "The Best Short Stories Of Lesiea Newman." The reading is co-sponsored by True Colors at Mount Holyoke College and will be located at the Odyssey Bookshop, 9 College Street, in South Hadley.

Dr. Peter Berger, the director of the Institute for the Study of Economic Culture at Boston University will present a lecture entitled, "TransBuddhism: Transmission, Translation, and Transformation." Berger has been committed to the study of relationships between economic development and sociocultural change all over the world. The lecture will be held in Graham Hall, Hillyer in the Brown Fine Arts Center at Smith College at 7:30 p.m.

University receives $35.2 million in FY '03 donations

Continued from page 1

$39. The seniors raised a total of $27,351.

Current students and parents contributed a record $2 million to the Annual Fund. The money in the Annual Fund goes toward support for the school and its campus programs.

Vice Chancellor for University Advancement Elizabeth Dale gave a rough breakdown of how the University will most likely spend the money.

Sixty percent of the money will have a direct impact on campus in scholarships, equipment and facilities, expanding library resources, student activities, research projects and other items.

\ure-campus commitments.

Dale encouraged further monetary support of the University saying: "Private support creates a more vibrant learning environment for our students and provides a vital margin of excellence on this campus."

New WORLD Theater
Celebrating 25 Years of New WORLD Theater
Undesirable Elements/ Pioneer Valley
Sept. 24 and 25 8pm, Bowker Aud.
A part of Ping Chong's innovative interview-theater project.
Culture, community and identity collide to form a living history on stage. Immigrants from Senegal, El Salvador share their journey in becoming a part of the rich immigrant history of the Pioneer Valley
Created by Ping Chong and Talvin Wilks
BUNTHOU
CARLOS
VERONA
NAMID
Student's (with valid ID are $5
TICKETS ARE: $15-general public; $8-low income patrons/ seniors; $5-students. Call FAC Box Office 413-545-2511. For more info about the shows, call NWT at 413-545-1972.
Open Mic Series - FREE!-
WORD for WORD
Oct 7 at 7 pm
Cape Cod Lounge, UMass SUB
for more info call 577-2990

$$ HIPPODROME $$
EARN UP TO $40 PER HOUR
Nightclub Now Hiring
Bartenders
Cocktail Servers
Cashiers
Floor Staff
Barbacks
Coat Checkers
Apply In Person Only
Dates: Wed Sept. 24th and Thurs Sept. 25th 2003
Time: 6:00 8:00 p.m
Place: 1 00 Main Street, Springfield, MA www.hdrome.com

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
$139
★ Student Special ★
4 months
Best Aerobics~Best Machines
KEISER • NAUTILUS • FREE WEIGHTS • CYBEX • STAIRMASTERS • LIFECYCLES • TREADMILLS • FELIPTICALS • LIFEROWER
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0000 RT. 9 AMHERST
ON BUS ROUTE • OPEN 7 DAYS

Young Men's Club
136 East Street Hadley, MA
413-584-9729
Monday Night Football
• Pool Table
• Darts
• Horseshoes
• Keno
• Smoking
• Public Invited
• Women Welcome
Transportation Available
Rt. 9 Amherst
Eastern Savings Bank
Free Munchies with this ad!

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 Savings on eyeglasses from the on-site Optical Services at UHS
2 A great place to get contact lenses
3 Convenient hours and location
4 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
5 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
SPECIAL OFFER:
10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.
For appointments or questions, call 577-5244
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

CVS pharmacy
1 Hour Photo
Student Discount
$1.00 off 1 hour processing (prints only)
$2.00 off 1 hour digital processing (prints & cd)
Valid Student ID required.
Available at both Amherst locations only.
Original roll developing only.
Offer ends: Sept. 30, 2003

DIESEL
FOR SUCCESSFUL LIVING
2 papers. 4 cups of coffee. 3 friends who can't stop talking.
1 unique you.
ZANA
downtown Amherst

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 2003 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Staying informed for Election 2004

It's no news that next year is an election year, but even with the primaries approaching in February, who the candidates might be is still news. Yes, the election itself is still a long time away, but it's not too early to start paying attention to the potential candidates so that we can be informed about who our choices are for the next president of the United States.

George W. Bush is the obvious choice for the Republican Party, and everyone knows about him. But how much do you know about the people who are running for the Democratic nomination?

There are several Democrats who are being considered major contenders for the primaries. Massachusetts' own Senator John F. Kerry is actually considered one of the first tier candidates. He may take a hit to his broad voter base, however, with the recent arrival of fellow Vietnam veteran General Wesley Clark to the scene.

Howard Dean, the former governor of Vermont, is another major player whose opinions are similar to those of General Clark. Dean, as of right now, is considered the major front-runner of this race. Then, of course, there is also the ever-present Dick Gephardt from Missouri who has picked up solid support from the labor unions.

Joe Lieberman and John Edwards (the senator from North Carolina, not the median from TV) are also running for the nomination but aren't being considered quite as seriously.

And then of course there are the candidates that aren't being taken seriously at all: candidates like Al Sharpton and Carol Moseley Brown, who, while she admits that she won't win the nomination, says that she's trying to pave the way for future women candidates.

Each of these potential presidents has opinions of his or her own and positions on the key issues. If you aren't already aware of what they are, they can be easily found with a little effort.

We, at the Collegian, receive letters, articles and columns all the time criticizing and denouncing our current president and his actions and statements on just about every issue. Luckily, we have elections every four years so that if the public is unhappy with the job that is being done, we have a chance to change it. But no change will be made if we don't take an active interest in the alternatives.

If you are completely clueless, take ten minutes out of your day. Do some research; learn about the other candidates and what their positions are. Formulate your own opinion, and most importantly, when the time comes, VOTE!

We live in a democratic country, and that is a privilege that too many of us take for granted. We have the opportunity to choose our leader, but in order to do that, we need to not only have an educated opinion, but also act upon that opinion. Short of being an exchange student, there is no reason why everyone on this campus should not be registered and exercising their right to vote, especially for the upcoming presidential election.

If you want to change things, which so many of you say that you do, then you can. So start paying attention now, and that way when the time comes, you will know what candidate you want as your president and you'll be able to voice your opinion by casting a vote.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Grand ol' failure

Yousef Munayyer

I'm a Republican. No, wait, please keep reading; I swear I'll explain. I know it's a tough gig to pull in this town, but here is the deal. I'm not actually a registered member of any party. This is because I have very little faith in the parties that dominate political discourse and can't fathom letting other people persuade the way I vote because they brandish a donkey or an elephant.

Sadly, American politics has only further disintegrated a hostile petting zoo of nothing more than donkeys and elephants defecating on a lawn that occasionally grows high enough to be called the Green Party.

When it comes to most issues, I find that I identify with the conservatives more. Many of you who have read my column before are thinking I'm a blatant hypocrite now, but that's not the case. What I'm trying to explain, and what I'm quite angry about is the status of the Republican Party and conservatives now, and how this administration has disenfranchised many of its own.

I will not concentrate on President Bush's personal shortcomings. Besides, I am only permitted so much space to write, but rather what is important to understand is that the Bush administration is not very Republican at all, at least not to me.

When Bush ran for office, he promised several things. I'm not even sure if he even remembers any of his campaigning, because he hasn't done much of what he originally said he would. The whole campaign is a blur to me as well; I just remember it culminating in hanging chads and a Supreme Court case. Remember all that talk about education and no child left behind? What has come of that initiative?

I know that most schools are strapped for cash now more than ever before. I know that the University of Massachusetts, along with other schools, is consistently feeling the heat when it comes to budget woes. Many state governments are inching to the brink of bankruptcy. How much time and effort has Bush spent supporting schools? Well there was this one photo I recall of him leading story time at an elementary school, appropriately enough Bush was holding his book upside-down. The fact of the matter is the campaign platform that focused on "putting education first" hasn't put it on the list at all.

Now I know many people are thinking that poor ol' George just caught some bad luck with 9/11 and that threw his whole plan off; I don't really buy that. The president took most of the month of August off to vacation while presiding over the largest security blunder in the history of this nation. I can agree that 9/11 changed the world; there is no dispute in that, but Bush has done little to reflect the conservative ideal on post-9/11 America.

With the nation's economy already slumping and unemployment figures rising, the Bush team needed to focus on solving those problems. At the same time, 9/11 opened the window of opportunity for every neo-con in the pentagon to get off the simulator machines and put their plans to work in real life.

Since Bush took office, government has never been larger. This administration has created bureaucracies that would make Franklin Delano Roosevelt jealous. Spending has gone through the roof. The tax cuts have dried up a surplus so drastically that the national debt is reaching new heights every day. The tax cut may have stimulated the economy prior to 9/11 but continuing with it now is pointless. There is a desperate need for money in a government that is bigger and nosier than it should be. Not to mention that most of the money that is in the budget isn't going where it should be, like education, as we were promised a few years ago.

Investors are scared to jump back into the market and I can't blame them. The economy began this descent after the high of dotcom investing vanished towards the end of the Clinton years. But since then, no light has been seen at the end of the tunnel. White-collar crime, perpetrated by the likes of Enron (Enron officials were some of the largest contributors to the Bush campaign) has instilled a fear in investors only rivaled by instability caused by the constant state of war since 9/11. People don't want to move their money around, and President Bush has given them no reason to.

The recent decisions of the Supreme Court regarding affirmative action and gay rights have shown that the conservatives are losing ground in those national debates. Not to mention "Log Cabin" Republicans – can there be a bigger oxymoron? This is yet another area where Bush has rarely put forward an effort to make a difference.

The status of the Republican Party disappoints me. I'm not crazy about any of the Democratic candidates for 2004 – I don't even see a difference in many of them. If the Republican Party were willing to put up someone other than its joke of an incumbent, I would highly consider it. Unfortunately though, that is unlikely, and this administration has made many conservatives take an "anyone-but-Bush" attitude.

The Republican Party has transformed into some mutant composed of confused middle-of-the-road politicians and extremist ideologues that are bent on being the cartographers of the Middle East. Not to mention that it's carried by an intolerant, perverse form of good vs. evil patriotism that encourages discrimination towards anyone now waving Old Glory.

The truth is that the Republican Party has forgotten what Old Glory is about; they have forgotten what they stand for, and they have allowed neocons to hijack their party and control it in the national arena as well. Maybe this will all work out and the GOP will reform itself, and maybe one day we can understand the phenomenon that is "Log Cabin" Republican thinking. HA! Well, one can always hope.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian columnist.

Unsolved Mysteries: The SGA

Thomas Naughton

"Who are these people? What do they do? Why the hell should I care about this crap anyway?" If you find yourself asking these questions concerning the acronym "SGA," you are not alone. I have been here for three years, and I still have no clue what the hell people are talking about when they say "SGA."

I thought SGA was some STD and all of the signs for SGA meetings were signs for the "Sick Genitalia Association." Then, I was walking around the student union where I saw the "SGA Office" and I thought, "Wow, they have a whole office for this 'Association of the Genitally Afflicted.'" (I was trying to come up with less-inflammatory names for the 'groins on fire' club.)

Then a friend kindly pointed out "No, you idiot, SGA is the Student Government Association. Remember student council in High School?"

I thought an STD association sounded strange, but then I thought that it made sense considering the 25,000 students who go here. And then if you consider the amount of people who live in Southwest, factor in the frats, and add on the transient hippies in Central...

My friend was disappointed in my stupidity.

Suddenly I felt ripped off. I come to UMass for diversity and they can't even give me one damn STD club?! Its not like I'm afflicted, its not like I want to join, but I want options, damn it!

Later on, I read in the paper concerning some hullabaloo between ALANA (My friends kindly pointed out before I could ask that No, not everyone in ALANA is named Alana) and the SGA. Apparently, someone from the SGA eliminated seats from the SGA because It said in the constitution that those seats were unconstitutional. Does that make sense to anyone? Because it makes no sense to me. Senseless, I decided to get in the know about the SGA and exactly what it does by logging onto the website (chuckling to myself that I was foolish enough to get the acronym wrong).

Three hours and 11 Diet Pepsis later, I still had no idea what the hell the SGA was all about, not a clue. Then suddenly, I thought I found it. I started reading the constitution. "So... it's a club." Still clueless.

On the website there are lots of explanations concerning who and what the SGA is, but no info on why an SGA is needed. what benefits it offers, why your everyday student should even care about Student Government.

The Constitution was kind of like the directions to a stereo or a small appliance. The first article is "Name," wherein it says the name of the Student Government Association: "The Student Government Association." (Thank you for purchasing a Sony Stereo Unit — they have to print that so you remember what you bought.) Again with the disappointments, I thought that the "Name" section was going to reveal a super secret name for the SGA, but no, it's just SGA. Even the Samaritans were more thoughtful than that.

From what I gathered on the website, the SGA is a club on campus for kids who want to talk about...stuff on campus. The SGA is governed by a UMass Trustee Statement that allows these special students to handle money going to registered student organizations...and that's about it. If you have a club, the SGA is your governing body. If you mess with the SGA and you're in the hang-gliding club, well let's just say it may be a bad hang-gliding season. I know I'm probably missing a bunch of "real cool" stuff that the SGA does and I apologize, but I still don't know why I should care about this club that I don't belong to.

I remembered my friend comparing them to high school student council and I grimaced again. Why is everyone getting so upset about a club? Did any of the girls in the Baby Sitters Club get this upset? I don't think any of those girls did anything to warrant the submitting of statements to newspapers or the participation in protests.

I propose that we dismantle this SGA and ALANA and all of those government-type clubs and just submit to me as Grand Poobah of Student Body. As Grand Poobah, I will dissolve any and all RSOs that I see fit. No more Republican Club being all "white male" in my Campus Center, no more "Radical Student Union" eating soy and getting rowdy. The Caribbean Dance club or whoever is always in the Campus Center Auditorium can stay because I like their style; no politics, just Caribbean dance. I am serious about these changes. If the SGA and ALANA can't get along and make decisions together, then I'll make them by myself. I represent enough groups on my own: I'm gay, a former-catholic, my sister was the president of the foreign language club, and I have some Republican cousins in New Hampshire. I have you all covered.

The bottom line is this: We're in college; this is not the real world. Jared Nokes is making a huge statement on behalf of the SGA whether everyone agrees with him or not. That statement is one imbued with sickening racism and elitism. But then again, it's just a club. Someone very funny said, "Politics is Hollywood for ugly people." I imagine that there are many attractive members of the SGA, so I'm not sure if that statement applies to them. But after looking at the archives of the boring agendas and minutes and after looking around at the UMass campus unchanged in the three years I've been here, student government seems to be an amusement park for the devoted lethargist.

Thomas Naughton is a Collegian columnist.

Meal plan exemptions

S. J. Port

If you cannot eat what is served at the dining hall due to religious or dietary reasons, you should be excused from having a meal plan. Forcing students who cannot eat the food prepared and served at the dining commons to purchase meal plans is immoral and does not put the best interests of students where they should be – first.

If you are a freshman or sophomore, living on campus, you are required to have a campus meal plan. This is fine for the average student who eats the average food, prepared the average way. However, there are those who cannot, due to religious or dietary reasons, eat what is served at the campus dining commons. Thus the purpose of the Food Service Department's Exemption Committee – to determine whom should be exempted from the mandatory campus meal plan.

However, recently, the Exemption Committee has refused exemptions to several Jewish students attempting to keep Kosher while living on campus.

Jewish students who observe the Jewish dietary laws of Kashrut (to keep Kosher) are unable to eat in the campus dining halls with assurance that the food and its preparation align with kosher observances. This is also true of Muslim students who follow the dietary laws of Hallal.

One sophomore, who we shall call Sam, keeps kosher. Last year, as a freshman he ate breakfast, and a vegetarian lunch at the dining common in his living area, and then dinner at the Hillel House where the "Kosher Option" meal plan was served on weeknights. This year, Sam has become stricter in his Jewish practice. Part of this more intense focus on religion, for Sam, means observing the laws of Kashrut more closely, which poses a problem when forced to have a dining commons meal plan.

This year, the "kosher option" meal plan is only available at the Hampden Dining Common in Southwest, unlike last year when it was served at the Hillel House. The option was moved to Hampden this fall supposedly so that students would not have to leave campus to keep kosher, allowing more students to more easily keep kosher. However, according to Sam, fewer people eat kosher at Hampden than did at Hillel.

Now, to continue his kosher diet on campus, he must purchase a meal plan and the "kosher option" available for an additional $200 per semester. As a sophomore, the smallest meal plan Sam could choose is the Basic Meal Plan at a cost of $1,206.50 per semester. If you tack on the $200 kosher option, his meal plan for the semester is $1,406.50. If Sam did not have to keep kosher, he could have the Deluxe Meal Plan for just $1,288 per semester, $118.50 cheaper than the Basic plan with the kosher option.

Sam, who spends much of his time at the Hillel House that serves Jewish students on campus, could get a meal plan there at Wahby's Cafe for just $984.80 a semester. The food at Wahby's would be completely kosher, prepared properly, served in accordance with the Kashrut laws, and for Sam, a much more convenient option. Living in Central and spending much of his time outside of class at Hillel makes the commute to Southwest for the UMass kosher meal option a burden.

Furthermore, the Hillel option allows Sam to eat with others who, like him, have chosen to keep kosher, instead of eating in a "private area" within Hampden.

On Monday, Sept. 15, Sam completed his Exemption Application in order to be excused from his campus meal plan. With his application was a letter from his Rabbi detailing why Sam would not be fulfilling Kashrut laws if he continued to eat at the dining commons. On Wednesday, Sept. 17, Sam received a letter from the Exemption Committee denying his request for exemption from the campus meal plan. The reason seemed to be that they had added lunch to the kosher option, served at Hampden, where before they had only offered dinner.

Sam knows of two other students who also denied exemptions from the campus meal plan, despite religious reasons, this semester.

This is not about money. This is about doing what is right for students, putting students first.

I'm afraid you'll read that Sam is Jewish and from New York and blow this off, allowing yourself to fall prey to typical stereotypes and think, "This kid has money, let him pay the extra $200." But this is not about money. This is about doing what is right for students, putting students first.

Chancellor Lombardi walks campus with a "Students First" pin on his backpack. The pin proclaims the motto of our new Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life, Michael Gargano, who has said, "Our theme...is students first!" Gargano and Lombardi have the right idea: the Food Services department does not. If Sam is exempted from his campus meal plan, he will purchase a meal plan at the Hillel House's Wahby's Cafe. He will be well fed and registered with a well known campus organization's meal service, how is this not in Sam's best interest?

Granting Sam, and others in his situation, an exemption from their mandatory meal plan would show the University's respect for their religious choices, decisions and needs. Denying him an exemption says that foodservice cares more about enrollment in their plan, than in the campus's students.

S.J. Port is a Collegian Columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 2003 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Saints return to the big screen

COURTESY THEBOONDOCKSAINTS.COM

The MacManus brothers are coming back for some more righteous slaughter.

By Reid Davenport
Collegian Staff

To be a fan of the cult movie, "The Boondock Saints," means there are only a few things you wish for: a sequel and a chance to speak with a member of the cast. While the sequel is still in the early stages of heading to the set for filming, director Troy Duffy was kind enough to set aside some of his own time to speak with a member of "the Flock" about the upcoming movie, amongst other things.

"I saw you were in Massachusetts so I had to give you a call," Duffy said in response to an email.

Troy is a former Bostonian, but currently finds his home in Los Angeles, Calif. He never believed his movie would be as popular as it is today. There are currently over 10,000 members of the fan group, dubbed "the Flock," and they show off their love for the film through drawings, pictures, and through tattoos at TheBoondock-Saints.com. To this day, there is not a bar Mr. Duffy can enter without at least one person recognizing him.

"I'm never tired of fans recognizing me in public," Duffy said. "You know they are true fans because if someone like Brad Pitt is in a bar, everyone knows who he is, but to know who I am would make you a true fan of the movie. My wife will even overhear other people in a bar talking about the film and she'll go tell them that I was the director."

For those who are unfamiliar with the film, it's about two Irish Catholic brothers from South Boston who realize that if they rid the world of evil, along with their best buddy, the good in things may flourish. The film includes Sean Patrick Flanery, Norman Reedus, Willem Dafoe and Billy Connolly. It is an action-drama packed with some of the best action scenes, gunfights and one-liners ever. The only problem is that only a select few know of the movie.

The original film was created for theaters back in 1999. Unfortunately for Duffy, the timing for the release of his film was during the Columbine school shootings. These events led to the film never seeing the light of day in the U.S. due to the graphic nature. There were a few screenings in Canadian theaters, but the film still was not available to the public. Any hardcore fan of the film at the time would have to order the Canadian version of the DVD, which was simply the R-rated version of the film, in order to see it at all.

Eventually "Blockbuster" came out with a "FOX" version of the film for VHS, but the members of the Flock craved more insight into the film. After a long wait, "FOX" finally released a DVD with commentary, deleted-scenes and outtakes for a very reasonable price of $10. Still, the fans would learn Troy was cheated because the NC-17 footage was taken out in order to get the DVD released.

On the heels of the DVD release came a shocking announcement on the website about a sequel in the works. Suddenly it was like "Willy Wonka" all over again as the factory, known as the mind of Troy Duffy, started producing ideas again, full-blast, but the gates stayed locked so no one could get in to see his secret formula. The rumor mill on the message board went crazy. Rumors about Dafoe not being part of the cast and whether the sequel would go to theaters or not were running rampant, but only Troy Duffy could answer the questions that flooded in every day.

"With Dafoe, it was a scheduling problem," Duffy said about Dafoe being unable to rejoin the cast. "He was doing a play over in London when I talked with him and he just was not ready to take in the information at the time.

"This is actually going to be a history-making movie," Duffy boasted about the theater question. "It will be the first theatrical released sequel for a straight-to-video movie. We are going to try to get it in all the major markets."

One of the big questions is if David Della Rocco will return as his Rocco persona in the sequel. Duffy confirmed that the self-proclaimed "Funny Man" will have one, and only one, returning scene in the sequel. Other rumors Duffy put to rest are that there will be no love interest whatsoever and the new character, Romeo, is not meant to be the 'new Rocco,' but simply a new character.

"I wrote the part of Romeo for my friend Clifton Collins Jr. [of 'The Last Castle' and 'Traffic']," said Duffy. "I think of a certain actor when I write my characters. I may not get that specific actor, but when we shot in Toronto I found a ton of great actors. I prefer to put new faces in than have a big star who won't commit to the film.

"As for the new FBI agent, I just saw her as a woman," Duffy continued. "There is absolutely no love interest, so the Flock has no need to fear."

COURTESY THEBOONDOCKSAINTS.COM

Film creator Troy Duffy has unwittingly created a cult classic.

Along with Collins, Marley Shelton joins the cast as FBI Agent Eunice Bloom. Shelton is most well known for her roles as Wendy Peppercorn in "The Sandlot" and Chloe in "Bubble Boy." These two will not be the only new additions to the film. There will be the gunfights, action scenes and classic lines that every fan will enjoy, but Troy has promised one other thing about the film.

"I want this sequel to blow the most hardcore fan away," said Duffy. "The sequel is going to have a story that no one will see coming. It's also the only thing I worry about. Even with the action the fans loved returning, this film is going to have a twist that no one will be prepared for."

If you are a current, or future, fan of the movie and searching stores for "Saints" t-shirts, the place you need to go is the merchandise section of TheBoondockSaints.com. The Saints shop also has pea coats, rosaries, and shot glasses, among other things for you to show off your love for the film with. They just released a Rocco shirt which Duffy, and Della Rocco himself, are very proud of.

"We got lucky with our t-shirt maker in Colorado," said Duffy. "There are only three high quality presses and our guy managed to get one. It costs a lot more, but it's worth it. We also plan to have a shirt for every character available eventually."

The sequel is currently being planned to begin filming between now and spring in Toronto. Again, it is planned for a theatrical release along with a new NC-17 version DVD release of the first film. Troy is also trying to work a deal to get the first Saints into theaters for midnight screenings. "The Boondock Saints" is currently available on "Fox DVD" at stores for around $10.

COURTESY THEBOONDOCKSAINTS.COM

"This is actually going to be a history-making movie," creator Troy Duffy said of the sequel to "The Boondock Saints" (original film pictured above). "It will be the first theatrical released sequel for a straight-to-video movie. We are going to try to get it in all the major markets."

Some major twisted rock
Fingertight's album debuts strong

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

Fingertight's debut album, "In the Name of Progress" is a nonstop fast-paced progression into an angry world of heavy rock riffs and furious, emotionally desperate vocals. With increasing pressure from major record labels for a band to instantly deliver, it has become a rare quality for a hard rock group to be able to authentically express themselves without sounding contrived or sappy. In fact, it seems to be even harder to introduce catchy hooks into the equation without the whole ordeal coming off sounding like another faceless radio rock record. One could sit down and analyze the heck out of their album, but the fact is, Fingertight has made a catchy album that for the most part sounds fresh and new.

Fingertight 'In the Name of Progress' Columbia

Packed with a new innovative and emotionally subjective melodic metal, "In The Name Of Progress" finds Fingertight delivering fantastic hooks, intricate instrumentation and the occasional haunting melody as well as driving riffs, a ample amount of piano and a loosely determined rhythm section. If comparison must be made one could say that this band sounds like a twisted cross between Taproot, Our Lady Peace and The Lostprophets. This band seems to excel at writing material that is inherently tailored to be pleasing to the mainstream ear, yet possesses a bit of the kind of depth that goes beyond a face value listening.

The band wrote and composed all of the 15 tracks on the debut album. This fact may explain the somewhat repetitive themes of anger, loneliness and all around social displeasure that emanate throughout the compact disk. A prime example of their uninspired lyrical styling comes from their first track, "Fear In Me." "The shame inside me, the fate they've tried to seal."

COURTESY COLUMBIARECORDS.COM

Fingertight strive for originality, but fail to hit hard on their debut album.

At the same time, though what makes this band so endearing are the glimmers of lyrical genius that vein throughout the whole work. An example of these deep and thought-provoking lyrics comes from their track "Resurfacing."

"On the surface, of the one we call belief. Underneath it, well comes the only thing I've lived for. That's why you must believe me."

Though they are quite innovative in their work, Fingertight by no means reinvent the modern rock wheel. Their material is tight, the band is on point, and the songs have a certain character; but as a whole it's nothing that will boldly appeal to anyone already

Continued on page 5

Nappy Roots loses its groove:
Kentucky jam band falls short

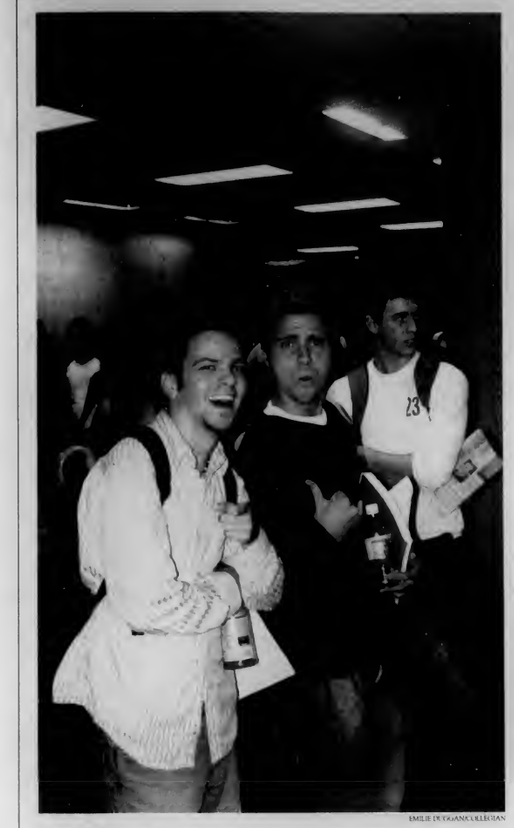
By Gill Benedek
Collegian Correspondent

On the track, "Nappy Roots Day," Ron Clutch sums up the group's present state perfectly: "Who would ever thought six different strands/ would lock together locked forever/ rockin' leathery wood told you chicken and grits go good/ with some watermelon." The Kentucky sextet, Nappy Roots, has produced its creative, sophomore album, "Wooden Leather." Armed with an arsenal of producers, almost every track on "Wooden Leather" oozes with their signature country sound: deep-fried, funk beats laced with organic instruments and soulful hooks.

Nappy Roots 'Wooden Leather' Atlantic

Although some of the album's lyrics lack the verbal persuasion of today's better rappers, Nappy Roots' rhythm helps cover this problem. Similar to their debut album, Nappy Roots focus on the blue-collar, common man. On "Sick and Tired" the group illustrates people's frustration with barely getting by: "I'm sick an' tired of being criticized/ I'm sick an' tired of barely getting by/ I'm sick an' tired of not livin' right."

The single "Roun' the Globe" is a perfect representation of their sound, a blend of city and country hip-hop, as they sing on their single's hook, "The whole damn world's country." For the partygoers, "Wooden Leather" may disappoint. "Twang," an ode to tight-jeaned ladies, tries hard to sound funky and instead ends up being a little off balance.



Other surprises are the tracks by producers Raphael Saadiq and Kayne West. Saadiq croons on "Leave This Morning," but his other track, "Work in Progress" is a poignant cut. Crackling vinyl, uplifting flutes and strumming guitars are flawlessly layered on the track. Anthony Hamilton, the talent behind the chorus on "Po' Folks" makes a return on "Push On" with an impressive showing.

The album begins to lag toward the end, where many uninspired beats and lyrics conclude the album. "War and Peace" and "Light and Dark" seem like an afterthought, half-hearted in both their production and delivery. Yet overall, "Wooden Leather" successfully experiments with a countrified-funk sound. Despite the lack of focus at the end, the Nappy Roots have solidified themselves on the hip-hop arena with "Wooden Leather."

COURTESY ATLANTIC

The Nappy Roots still jam but have lost a bit of their passion on new release, "Wooden Leather."

EMILIE DUFFIN/COLLEGIAN

Ready for my close-up

Mike Lebakken, a senior English major, and Ben Lund, a senior Marketing major, clown around while they wait for their Real World/Road Rules audition. Auditions were held yesterday at the Campus Center.

Shock rocker still at it:
Bowie produces another hit

By Jennifer Hubbard
Collegian Correspondent

The only way to describe David Bowie's new compact disc is, interesting. It is full of picturesque lyrics that force you to listen up and colorful background accompaniment that edges on strange, but it never crosses the line to annoying. This will mark Bowie's 26th album, but Bowie hasn't lowered his standards.

David Bowie 'Reality' Columbia

A song on the album that was particularly memorable was "Never Get Old," where he claims, "And I'm never ever gonna get, I'm never ever gonna get old." If he keeps making albums like this, then there is no way he can.

Lyrics like "Well some people try to pick up girls, they get called assholes, this never happened to Pablo Picasso," from the song "Pablo Picasso" intrigue and amuse the listener. This song starts off with skipping noises that almost make you think your copy is scratched, but soon segue into a tune centering around the painter Pablo Picasso. This was by far a favorite because it is so different, and the lyrics make it really funny because they compare everything to the painter.

The track "the Loneliest Guy" was a bit aggravating because it is so slow and just makes one want to fall asleep. It doesn't transition well with the prior songs that are poppy and feel good. The first few songs on the disk, including "New Killer Star" and "Pablo Picasso" bring a poppy-ness to the compact disc. Songs like "Looking for Water," "Fall Dog Bombs the Moon," and the title track, "Reality," have a rock feeling to them, which is a change from the first set of songs.

"She'll Drive the Car" is a surprise because it incorporates a blues sound in the song. "Bring Me to the Disco King" is very slow and uses a lot of piano. This is also surprising because of its title. The slow songs are a little too slow at points, but the lyrics are well written.

COURTESY TIME.COM

David Bowie may be old, but is the 'king' of smooth rock.

This album has mass appeal because of its variety of styles. David Bowie is definitely an interesting individual.

In 1986, he played the goblin king in the Jim Henson children's movie, "Labyrinth," where he attempts to steal a baby and seduce the young Jennifer Connolly. It's his oddest work that always proves the most fun. This album definitely does not disappoint.

New band, same old rock and roll sound

Continued from page 4

COURTESY COLUMBIARECORDS.COM

"In The Name of Progress," sports its spooky cartoons.

worn out by the multitude of bands currently languishing in this corner of the rock n' roll genre. One could easily turn on a rock radio station and hear something similar to Fingertight.

Sure, the album does have its strong points, unfortunately most of them seem to come after the first half of the album where most listeners would have opted to get off the train. The momentum soon goes off the tracks near the end of the effort, especially when the seemingly ever-present aggression of new rock rears its ugly head on "Surface" – a track foolhardily resurrected from an earlier effort.

In the end, Fingertight's music isn't necessarily progress for music itself, but it is a huge leap for the band. "In The Name Of Progress" is definitely a fitting title when considering the body of work they have laid out on this offering. If you're looking for modern rock music that doesn't drill into your head and instantly make you tear the headphones off of you ears, or swear off the unoriginal fluff all together, Fingertight is the band for you.

SEND COMMENTS TO

arts@dailycollegian.com

What's Cookin' at UMass
Great Food. Great Fun!
Dining Services

Certified Kosher Meals are being served at Hampden Dining Commons!

Monday - Friday: Lunch 11:30am - 1:30pm
Dinner 5pm - 7pm

For more information call: 545-3489

New Hours of Operation for Wocester Dining Commons!

Oak Room will now be open until 7pm on Friday evening.

Hillside Room will be open until 7:30pm Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

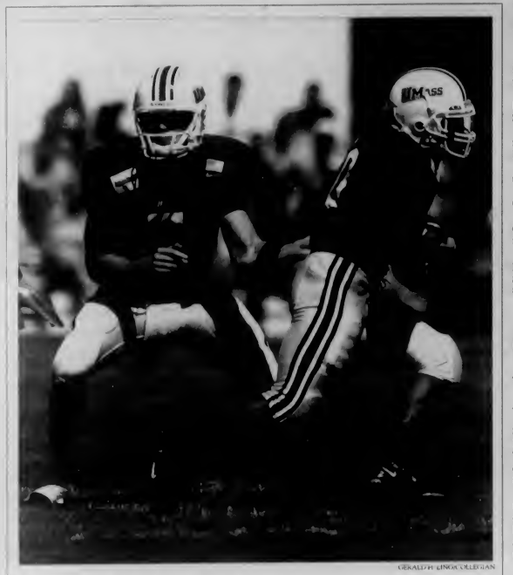
EXTRA! EXTRA!

Free newspapers are now available to UMass students!

Newspapers will be available at the following locations:

Campus Center Concourse
Hampshire Dining Hall
Franklin Dining Hall
Worcester Dining Hall

The following publications are provided courtesy of The Student Government Association:



USA TODAY
The Boston Globe
The New York Times

Please see the special ballot item asking you to consider supporting the future of the newspaper program.

Support UMASS democracy, vote for your Student Senators on September 25th!

Questions or Comments? Please call (800) 872-6414, ext 504.

USA TODAY Education

Gerald R. Lynch/Collegian

Going their seperate ways

Jeff Krohn hands off to Raunny Rosario during the Minutemen's 51-7 win over Central Connecticut on Sept 6. Rosario hasn't played since that game, but Krohn and the Minutemen will host James Madison this Saturday.

Minutewomen get back to work

Continued from page 8

Jessica McCavanagh and Kelly Shimmin, who are tied atop the point scorers list with eight.

"[Shimmin is] a creative sort of freestyle player," Rudy said, "without many defensive responsibilities. She can float around and then strike."

Another serious threat in the Blue Devils' arsenal is Marina Lorentzson, who trails the leading scorers by only one point.

"[Lorentzson is] very good in one-on-one situations," Rudy said.

Laura Duncan will anchor the stout Central Connecticut defense.

"[She is] very hard in the tackle and very experienced," Rudy said of Duncan. "One of the only seniors on the [Central Connecticut] team."

Sabrina Mariani will get the start between the pipes for the Blue Devils. Mariani has posted a 1.34 goals against average, a 74.3 save percentage, 26 saves and a record of 6-1.

"We're going to have to be on top of our game to beat this team, because they are feeling pretty good," Rudy said.

The banged-up Minutewomen will have to pick up the slack for the absence of leading scorer Blyler, who leads the Minutewomen with six points. Lindsey Bellini (five points) will be expected to take on the bulk of the offensive responsibilities for UMass.

Freshman Nadia Villrroel has been putting her name on the map with her aggressive play this season thus far. Villrroel has provided a spark for the young Maroon and White defense.

The Minutewomen will look to senior Kelly Nigh for another solid performance in goal. Aside from the five goals allowed to Boston University, Nigh has held opponents around one point per game. Nigh has started every game in net for the Maroon and White, and has totaled 29 saves on the season with a sub-2.00 GAA.

"The biggest thing," said Rudy, "is that we have to come out with some confidence in this game and not get rocked in the beginning.

Clarett takes legal action

By Rusty Miller
Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio – Suspended Ohio State tailback Maurice Clarett sued the NFL on Tuesday, asking a judge to throw out a league rule that prevents him from entering the 2004 Draft.

The lawsuit contends the NFL rule prohibiting players from being drafted until they have been out of high school for three years violates antitrust law and harms competition.

Clarett, who rushed for 1,237 yards and led Ohio State to a national championship as a freshman last season, wants U.S. District Judge Shira Scheindlin to declare him eligible for the 2004 Draft – or require the NFL to hold a special supplemental draft sooner.

Under current rules, he is not eligible for the draft until 2005.

"Had Clarett been eligible for the 2003 Draft, it is almost certain he would have been selected in the beginning of the first round and would have agreed to a contract and signing bonus worth millions of dollars," according to the lawsuit filed in federal court in New York.

The NFL says it will fight any challenge to the rule.

"We do not believe that this lawsuit serves the best interests of Maurice Clarett or college football players generally, but we look forward to explaining to the court both the very sound reasons underlying our eligibility rule and the legal impediments to the claim that was filed," NFL spokesman Greg Aiello said.

Clarett was suspended from the team for at least a year after an investigation determined he broke NCAA bylaws concerning benefits for athletes and lied to investigators.

His attorney, Alan Milstein, filed the lawsuit against the NFL a day after he and Clarett's mother met with league executives in Washington to discuss whether Clarett would be eligible for the April 24 draft.

The lawsuit argues the NFL rule "is a restraint of amateur athletes who were strangers to the collective bargaining process."

A Duke University legal expert says Clarett has a strong case and the NFL will probably have trouble keeping Clarett out of the draft.

"Any attempt by competitors to restrain competition in the labor market is regarded by the courts with great suspicion," said Paul Haagen, a Duke law professor. "Unless the restraint falls under a limited number of narrow exceptions, it will be treated as a violation of the antitrust laws."

When NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue was asked earlier this month if he thought the league could win such a lawsuit, he replied: "My feeling as commissioner is that we have a very strong case and that we'll win it."

Milstein said that if they win their lawsuit against the NFL, it wouldn't mean dozens of players would leave college early for the pros.

"This is not going to open the floodgates," he said. "You still will have to be of a certain level of ability to consider this. I read where someone said, 'We don't want 13-year-olds in the NFL.' That's ridiculous. You still would have to be drafted, signed and make the team."

Ohio State coach Jim Tressel said he had spoken to Clarett's mother this week and was told Clarett would be enrolled for the fall quarter.

"I don't know really much of what's behind the decision, so I don't know if he's testing the waters, how he's approaching it," Tressel said.

Clarett can only be reinstated by Ohio State after the school appeals to the NCAA. Athletic director Andy Geiger said Tuesday that, "We don't intend to apply for reinstatement for quite a while."

University Health Services
Mental Health Groups Fall 2003

Alcohol and Drug Discussion Group
Mondays, 3:45-5:00 pm
This is an informal, confidential place for individuals to explore their relationship with alcohol and drugs. Discussions will be guided by members' interests. Self-assessment tools and referral information will be made available. Members may attend as few or as many meetings as they wish.

Coed Self-Exploration Group For Undergraduate Students
Tuesdays, 2:30-4:00 pm —
or — Wednesdays, 3:30-5:00 pm
For college men and women who experience difficulties in interpersonal connections or who have concerns about their relationships.

Women's Eating Issues Group
Tuesdays, 4:00-5:15 pm
This is a group for women who are interested in changing negative eating patterns, decreasing food and weight concerns and enhancing self-acceptance. Members will have an opportunity to learn about the underlying dynamics contributing to eating issues and to develop coping strategies.

Women's Self-Exploration Group
Thursdays, 9:00-10:30 am
This is a group for older undergraduates, graduate students, student dependents, and covered employees. The group provides an opportunity for women to explore personal relationships, work, studies, family of origin, health, acculturation, and other relevant concerns. The group is ongoing with members added as space permits.

Anger Issues Group
Thursdays, 1:00-2:30 pm
This group is open to any students who would like to learn how to better manage and understand their anger. Meetings will focus on identifying emotions, memories, and situations that trigger anger, as well as strategies to manage it.

Coed Self-Exploration Group For Graduate Students
Thursdays, 4:00-5:15 pm
For graduate men and women who experience difficulties with interpersonal connections or who have concerns about their relationships. Members will have an opportunity to explore personal relationships, work, studies, and other relevant concerns.

Mindfulness-Based Stress Reduction (MBSR)
Thursdays, 5:15-6:30 pm
Start Date: September 18, 2003
Mindfulness is a particular way of paying attention:
- with mindful intention
- in the moment
- without judgement

Although MBSR embraces the acceptance of things as they are without striving, research has shown that, with regular practice, it has the potential to lower stress, anxiety, and depression. It can promote relaxation, improve concentration, raise self-awareness, and enhance the immune system. Referrals and inquiries may be made to Kathryn Proulx @ 545-2337.

Groups are conducted by Mental Health Division staff.
Payment is deducted from your UHS Basic Plan, Student Health Insurance Plan, GIC, or Health New England plan subject to plan limitation and co-pays.

Groups require an initial screening that can be arranged by calling 545-2337 or stopping by at 125 Hills North, Monday–Friday 8 am–5 pm.

TRUST
"Before locking into a long term contract for a fitness facility with no machinery in place, why not give the veteran professionals a visit."
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
"Big enough to own the best equipment, but small enough to know your name."
* In business 22 years
* Locally owned & operated 0283606
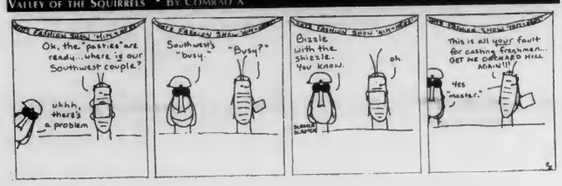
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0080 80 AMHERST

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club
90 Gatehouse Road, Off Rt. 9, Two miles East of Amherst Center
On the Bus Route • TEL: 256-6446
Shopping for a health club? • Do your homework first
JOIN NOW!
for our Semester Special
15 weeks – For Students: Only $179!
Inclusive membership / No additional fees / Includes free T-Shirt
Hampshire Fitness Club has it all for you
•Full sized indoor pool •Aqua aerobics •Cybex/Nautilus circuit •Boxing studio
•Cybex free weights •Full court basketball •Volleyball •Indoor tennis
•Yoga/Pilates •Aerobics/Step/Bosu •Jacuzzi/Saunas •Cardio-vascular equipment
MasterCard VISA
Open: 6am to 10pm Mon-Fri 8am to 9pm Sat-Sun

EXPRESS/ STRUCTURE
Warehouse Clothing Sale
Mon - Thur 9 to 8
Fri - 9 to ???
GOT CLOTHES?
1st Quality Merchandise
5 DAYS ONLY
WAREHOUSE CLOTHING SALE
NOBODY'S PERFECT
Don't Miss Out!!!
Wed. 22nd thru Sept. 26th
WAREHOUSE SALE
Student Union Ballroom

Jesse Hooper • By [illegible]

Depressing Boy • By [illegible]



JawHoo and JawHoo • By Mark Villard

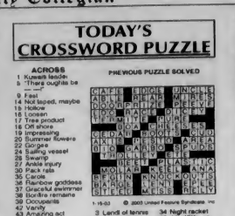
Lin 40 billion • By Mistaken Rabbits

Valley of the Squirrels • By Comrad X

Quote for the Day

"Sometimes I think I'm the only one who feels like going nowhere is like giving up..."

-Less Than Jake



Today's Crossword Puzzle

Across
1 Kuwaiti leader
5 "There oughta be ___"
9 Fast
14 Not taped, maybe
15 Hollow
16 Loosen
17 Trea product
18 Off shore
19 Impressing
20 Summer flowers
22 Gadgets
24 Sailing vessel
26 Swamp
27 Ankle injury
30 Pack rats
35 Ceres
36 Rainbow goddess
37 Graceful swimmer
38 Bonfire remains
39 Occupants
42 Ages
43 Amazing act
45 Floppy
48 Kitchen tool
49 City dweller
50 Chocolate dessert
51 Four-footed pal
52 Loses some weight
54 Mimic
56 Stronghold
62 Valentine
63 Years and years
65 Whirlpool
66 "The Little Mermaid"
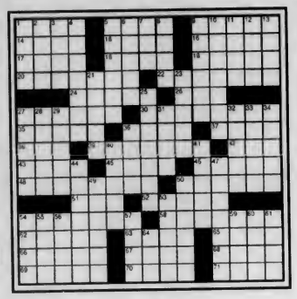
67 Tender meat
68 Bother, slangily
69 Hackett or Holly
70 TV stalwarts
71 Maneuver slowly



Down
1 Jazzy
Fitzgerald
2 Air
3 Land of lions
4 Turndown
5 "Venus" singer
6 Cowboy gear
7 Yeasty brew
8 Have on
9 Tell a fib
10 Release
11 "Don't rub ___?"
12 Move
13 Barrels
21 Top choices
(Pryth.)
23 Make — — puts 25 Run into words
27 More than a boo-boo
28 Tough question
29 Fix up an old house
31 Barnyard noise
32 Weekend items
33 Stories about
34 Night racket
36 J in JFK, e.g.
40 Amends
41 Tough situations
44 Narrowed down
47 Sing
49 In an orderly manner
50 Pastry
53 Steel girder
(Pryth.)
54 Melville sea
captain
55 Polanski's conquest
56 Forked out
57 Chisel feature
58 Sudden thought
60 Lotto info
61 Wall St.
landmark
64 Spanker

1-15-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Previous puzzle solved

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd.- N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
WED. Reggae Night!
TH. Becky Make Believe!
FRI. Open Irish Seisuin!
SAT. Johnny Stevens Band!
September Special!
Labatt Blue:
$1.75 A pint / $6.25 A pitcher
"Start your own tradition."

Dining Commons Menu
D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Burrito
- Popcorn Shrimp
- Garden Vegetable
- Chili (vegan)

DINNER
- Extra Crispy Fried Chicken
- Meatloaf
- Native American Stew (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast
For Amherst

WEDNESDAY
- High: 75
- Low: 49

THURSDAY
- High: 76
- Low: 47

FRIDAY
- High: 69
- Low: 50

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Brady
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan
COPY EDITOR
Morris Singer
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington
PRODUCTION STAFF
Sarah Lloyd / Cory Rosenberg

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You've worked hard and yet you still suck.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You borrowed your roomate's stuff and broke it again, didn't you?

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Change isn't always bad, sometimes it's great and sometimes it's really bad.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Don't doubt yourself, you really can handle things.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Your jacket is still soaked from yesterday, hang it to dry.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Go to the dentist, just cause they drill your teeth doesn't mean they aren't nice.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Burn your bridges, no one wants to be on the same side of a river as you.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
That guy who wasn't cool enough, yeah he's gonna be your boss someday.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Stop trying to convince yourself not to try, it's so immature.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You're not paranoid, people really are laughing at you behind your back.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Use your alone time productively, because no one likes you.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Although success can be scary, failure is scarier.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Activities

Fraternities-Sororities- Clubs-Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

Montreal Weekends $99. Includes R/T Luxury Motor Coach from Springfield. 3 Days-2 Nights- 4 Star Hotel Downtown-Meals-Night Club passes. www.montrealexpress.net 1-781-979-9001 Special Group Rates

Auto for Sale

Merc.Sable Wag. '94 Runs Great. Gd. Cond. Reliable trans. Recent Sticker. $1050. B/O Call 549-7455

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power must sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

Auto Repair

Imported cars a specialty, 20 years experience. Honest Service, straightforward answers. Mark's Sunoco, Rt116 Sunderland 665-7438 (on bus route)

Computer

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

Employment

Rent us your ears! Participate in listening experiments $7.50/ hour call 545-6837 or write jkingston@linguist.umass.edu

Earn up to $100 per hour or more as an exotic male dancer at club Xstatic. 240 Chesnut St, Springfield MA, 413-736-2618 or www.clubxstatic.com

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Employment

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

For Rent

Ski House for Rent. So. Londonberry, VT: 15 mins to Stratton, 7 mi to Bromley 3 mi to Magic Mtn. 7 Bdrms, 3 baths, Sleeps 30- $1,000/week. Katy.browne@verizon.net or 410-404-6326

For Sale

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jadfly.com or (413)253-0051.

Furniture

Futon great condition Thick Mattress $150.00 O/B/O KariSlyn@aol.com

Large Corner Computer Workstation: Filedrawers, cubbies, & more. $125.00 OBO. 367-0096

Instruction

Private Boxing Lessons- w/retired Pro Djata Bumpus, In Northampton. 584-1966 or visit- www.westernmassboxing.com Accepts all Major Credit Cards.

Lost and Found

Lost Sat night. Goodman Presentation at Mahar. Sharp Wizard Personal Organizer, contains valuable info. Reward. 413-253-9999 Allen

Roommate Wanted

Looking for a quiet, non-smoking female roommate to share 2 Bedroom Apt. in Sunderland. Rent $350.00/month + utilities. Stephanie 978-660-8579

Services

Shear Bliss Day Spa Services *Top Hair Colorist *Full Spectrum Botanical Hair Color *Touch-ups, Party Colors, Hi and Low Lites, etc. 253-2322

Legal questions? The Student Legal Services Office offers Free Legal assistance to fee-paying students. Contact us at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

Services

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Travel

SPRING BREAK 2004! Beach Life Vacations! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Travel Free!! Call 1-800-733-6347 www.beachlife vacations.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

Travel

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

Wanted

EGG DONORS NEEDED, non-smokers. Ages 21-32. Generous compensation & expenses paid. For more information contact Robert Nichols, Esq. (781)769-6900, Rnichols@dnlaw.net, www.robertmichols-esq.com.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

An early look at the Heisman

Mike Marzelli

Arguably the most famous individual award in sports, the Downtown Athletic Club Trophy was named for the first Athletic Director of the presenting outfit, former coach and Ivy League football player John Heisman, upon his death in 1936.

Since then, its annual presentation to the top collegiate football player has spurned debate and premature prognostications nationwide, and has created a cult following of columnists, sportscasters and armchair quarterbacks, all willing to weigh in on a hotly contested race.

So while there may not be a clear-cut favorite for the bronzed mantelpiece in the early weeks of 2003, the race is surely on among the following top early candidates.

Eli Manning – Sr. QB, Mississippi – 69-107 920 yards 8 TDs

It's tough to leave an SEC quarterback named Manning out of Heisman talk, and the youngest of the famous trio is hardly doing anything to shut his fans up.

His efficiency isn't quite where he'd like it to be, but he has moved a middle-of-the-road Rebel offense up and down the field like only a Manning could.

He, and his numbers, will only get better as he continues to mature, but his supporting cast will be hard pressed to support a Heisman.

Chris Perry – Sr. TB, Michigan – 71 carries 586 yards 7 TDs

Just a few years after being told by coach Lloyd Carr that he should look into transferring, Perry has not only endeared himself to his coach and teammates, but to Heisman voters as well.

With 560 yards on 60 carries entering this past weekend's battle with Oregon, Perry managed a meager 26 yards on 11 carries. He must regain his consistency to be a serious contender.

Cody Pickett – Sr. QB, Washington – 64-104 779 yards 3 TDs

The sure-armed Pickett has been very consistent up in the Pacific Northwest, despite losing his coach, Rick Neuheisel, at the last minute. He has thrown for 255, 290 and 234 yards in his first three games.

Pickett has the ability and the potential weapons, but his numbers need to reflect this. He must also perform better in big games to be viewed as a serious candidate.

Phillip Rivers – Sr. QB, N.C. State – 118-153 1,325 yards 11 TDs

Rivers has proved everyone wrong who thought his short arm throwing motion would keep him from being successful, and has carried himself into the race on performance alone.

Now a cult hero on Tobacco Road, the deadly accurate leader of the Wolfpack has put up monster numbers in the early going, and has certainly proven the credibility of his name being found on Heisman watch sheets.

Darren Sproles – Jr. TB, Kansas State – 90 carries 554 yards 7 TDs

Considered undersized, the ultra-quick Sproles is the prototypical Bill Snyder tailback in the fact that he is consistently the fastest player on the football field, and has great instincts as the pitchman on the option.

If Sproles can avoid finding himself with only 14 carries on the stat sheet as he did against Marshall, his sheer game-breaking ability makes him a true threat.

Mike Williams – So. WR, USC – 21 catches 298 yards 4 TDs

The most exciting player in the nation, Williams is too tall at 6-foot-5 for most cornerbacks, and with a sub-4.4 40-yard dash, his pure athleticism gives opposing coordinators migraines.

Carson Palmer is no longer the signal caller in L.A., and Williams will surely draw double and triple teams all season long, but the skill, the ability and the swagger are certainly there.

If not this year, then next.

Roy Williams – Sr. WR, Texas – 19 catches 290 yards 3 TDs

Another big, tall physical receiver, this Williams has hung around for his senior season in Austin, and his candidacy for the Heisman was mailed in months and years ago.

With a strong, able young quarterback in Chance Mock to throw him the ball, the chance to be a finalist will be his to lose. If Williams is able to stay healthy, which has been a concern in the past, it's hard to think that he will slump below contender status with his natural tools.

Kellen Winslow – Jr. TE, Miami (Fl.) – 14 catches 127 yards 1 TD

A natural freak at the tight end position, the versatile Winslow is the Hurricanes go-to guy and has not disappointed.

Winslow is as quick as they come off the line and has an uncanny knack for finding the soft spots in a defense. He has already developed a rapport with new quarterback Brock Berlin, and as Berlin goes, Winslow will go.

What Winslow also has is a strong supporting cast. Super speedy receiver Roscoe Parrish will help to stretch the field and open up the middle for the lanky tight end, and tailback Frank Gore should open up the passing game nicely.

Rashaun Woods – Sr. WR, Ok. State – 30 catches 502 yards 9 TDs

Overlooked nationwide, the Cowboys' wideout needs no further endorsement than that of Oklahoma coach Bob Stoops after the speedster torched the Sooners in back-to-back seasons.

The stats are there for Woods, as he has recorded consecutive 1,000-yard seasons with double-digit touchdown receptions, and has begun 2003 on a torrid pace.

Mike Marzelli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at Marzelli_collegian@yahoo.com

Back to work

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Lindsey Bellini is one of the few leaders on the UMass women's soccer team to remain healthy this season. The Minutewomen will continue to battle injury woes, and the Central Connecticut State Blue Devils, today.

UMass returns to the pitch after respite

By Matt Stewart
Collegian Staff

It's been a week since the Massachusetts women's soccer team has taken the field. And it still might not be enough time to heal all the wounds the Minutewomen have suffered during the young season.

The Maroon and White is still faced with the same key players out on the disabled list as it prepares for tonight's match-up against the red-hot Central Connecticut State Blue Devils.

"My plan this past week was to take three to four days off to get healthy," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "My biggest worry is that I hope that we're not too flat from too much rest."

The extra rest wasn't enough time for junior forward Lindsey "Stormy" Fairweather and sophomore forward Adair Blyler to fully recuperate. Blyler will once again not see action tonight. Senior back Maggie LaBrode and midfielders Morgan Czaja, Sarah Davis and Carly Turman are all in questionable condition for this contest.

"It hurts not having any of our starters in there," Rudy said. "But it especially hurts not to have Stormy and Blyler, it's tough."

The Blue Devils are on a roll, tallying up a 6-1 overall record and earning the No. 5 rank in the National Soccer Coaches Association of America Northeast Regional Poll. Central Connecticut consists of a wide array of international influence, with seven players hailing from such countries as England, Sweden, and Canada.

"They're a very good team," Rudy said, "probably the best team they have ever had. They're loaded with Englishwomen and are a very foreign team."

Leading the way for Central Connecticut are

Continued on page 6

Tough Husky squad hosts Minutewomen

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts field hockey team (2-6) will surely have its work cut out for it this afternoon, when it travels to Boston to face the No. 13 Northeastern Huskies (6-3) at the Wentworth Institute.

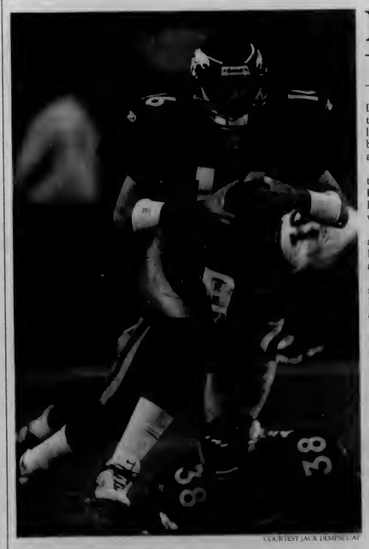
Coming off of a heartbreaking overtime loss to Providence on Saturday, the Minutewomen have lost four straight going into today's game, a position they didn't want to get in to at this point in the season. But that doesn't seem to faze coach Patty Shea.

"This is another chance for us to go out there and compete to the best of our ability … they're getting better and learning more every time they go out there," Shea said. "This will be a hard-fought game."

Once again, the pressure will be on junior standout Christine Tocco, who has taken the netminding duties for the Minutewomen since day one. Tocco has been playing exceptionally well in spite of the team's mediocre performance, racking up a .747 save percentage for the season despite seeing 111 shots. But once again, she will be heavily challenged by another high-powered offense.

"[Christine] has been playing great," Shea said. "She has gone out there and done everything we've asked her to do, every single game. She has been making spectacular saves all season long."

Leading the charge for Northeastern is All-America junior forward Mari Creatini, who scored four goals in Sunday's 6-0 routing of Maryland-Baltimore County. Having won America East Conference Player of the Week honors for the third consecutive week, Creatini will look to keep the momentum going against Tocco. She currently leads the nation in scoring with 15 goals, ranks 10th in the nation in assists (six), and leads America East with 36 points.



Junior Liane Dixon, senior Sara Webber and redshirt freshman Natalie Singelais join Creatini up front for an offense that is averaging just over 3.5 goals per game.

That will be quite a challenge for the Minutewoman defense to handle when it takes the field at 4 p.m. Led by senior Kristin Hopwood and sophomore Katelyn Woolfrey, the backfield play will be crucial to the outcome of the game. Opponents this season have averaged more than 20 shots per game, and those shots are finding the back of the cage at a three-goal per game clip.

If the Minutewomen are to stand any chance against the Huskies, they will have to make something happen on offense. They have scored just seven goals all season, and taken only 59 shots. The young squad will rely on freshman Marije Tigchelaar and sophomore Jaime Bawden to make some things happen. Tigchelaar and Bawden lead the team in points, with three each.

Shea said that the Minutewomen will need to get the ball in scoring position more often, and take more shots in order to stay close.

That will be tough, considering the Huskies have allowed just 68 shots on goal through their first nine games of the season thanks to superb play from senior backs Melissa Rowell and Leigh Shea. Junior Alli Bolster and redshirt-freshman Megan Troxel round out what makes for a very solid team defensively.

COURTESY JACK DEMPSEY/AP

Denver Broncos quarterback Jake Plummer (16) breaks loose on a 40-yard run against the Oakland Raiders in the second quarter Monday night in Denver. The Broncos went on rout Oakland, 31-10.

Broncos riding high

By John Marshall
Associated Press

DENVER – Beating Cincinnati and San Diego was a nice way for Denver to start the season. The wins gave the Broncos a little more confidence and new quarterback Jake Plummer time to get comfortable.

But it is not like the Broncos took out the town bully with one punch. It was the Bengals and Chargers, after all. Embarrassing the Raiders on national television? Now that's saying something.

"I'm tired of all these people talking about other teams and how great they are," Broncos tight end Shannon Sharpe said after Denver's 31-10 win Monday night.

"They talk about these teams that are supposedly set for the Super Bowl. But you know what? We played like a great team and we showed what we are all about."

Denver joined Kansas City and Indianapolis as the only teams in the AFC at 3-0. Oakland, last year's AFC champion, fell to 1-2.

OK, so the Raiders have been a shell of the team that lost to Tampa Bay in the Super Bowl last year. Oakland's offense looks like it is stuck in the mud, the defense can't stop anybody and the penalties are piling up.

But don't tell the Broncos about Oakland's troubles. They're not listening. Not only is Oakland the team Denver loves to beat, the Raiders embarrassed Denver twice last season.

"I'm about as satisfied as I've been in a long time," Broncos defensive end Trevor Pryce said.

It's hard not to be.

Plummer shook off last week's shoulder injury and showed why the Broncos picked him up in the offseason. He threw touchdown passes to Sharpe and Ashley Lelie in the first quarter, then put the Broncos up 21-0 with a 6-yard touchdown run on a bootleg.

He wasn't done. Plummer also took off on a 40-yard run in the second quarter to set up another score. It was the longest run ever by a Broncos quarterback – and six more than any by John Elway, the player Broncos fans hope Plummer can emulate.

"It was a lot of fun to be that efficient in the first half and score 31 points," said Plummer, who was 14-for-21 for 197 yards. "It was a great feeling."

No one felt better than Denver's defense.

Nearly a year after being picked apart by Rich Gannon, the Broncos made the Raiders' quarterback look like an unsure rookie instead of a confident league MVP. Defensive end Bert Berry sacked Gannon on the game's first play, one of five sacks by the Broncos, and the line disrupted his rhythm all night. The Raiders, the highest scoring team in the league last season, had just 7 yards in the first quarter and finished with 195 for the game.

"We kept going after him, hitting him and pressuring him – all these things and he couldn't get his rhythm down," Pryce said. "You could see it in his face."

The Broncos played so well that coach Mike Shanahan didn't even have to lie about injuries.

A week ago, Shanahan came under league scrutiny after saying Plummer's injury was a concussion instead of a shoulder injury in his halftime injury report against San Diego.

Shanahan avoided a reprimand, but NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue has told teams that further "fibbing," as Shanahan called it, would lead to disciplinary action.

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 17

High-speed police chase ends in violent crash

COURTESY ALISTAIR RYAN

A police officer oversees a nasty car crash in Southwest early yesterday morning as a tow truck drags away the wreckage.

Man flips car in Southwest

By Morris Singer
Collegian Staff

A police chase ended around 1 a.m. yesterday morning in a dramatic accident. A 1991 Oldsmobile Cutlass Supreme, fleeing three Amherst Police Department cruisers, hit a traffic island at the intersection of Sunset and Massachusetts Avenues, causing it to flip over.

APD Sergeant Timothy Sullivan confirmed the story. He said the APD is coordinating the investigation, but the department would not issue any further comment to the Collegian yesterday.

The Cutlass, which turned north onto Sunset Avenue from Fearing Street, accelerated down the roadway, struck the island and became airborne. It landed on its roof 15 feet away.

"I heard a car come down the road, and then the cops behind it, and then just a big bang," said Alistair Ryan, a junior who heard the incident from his dorm room in the Southwest residential area.

"I heard it hit and when I turned around it was flipping over," freshman Joe Gratton said.

Gratton, who said he was standing no more than 35 feet away from the airborne car, believes he was the closest person to the incident when it happened.

"If I had left where I was coming from five seconds later, I would have been killed," he said.

According to Gratton, after the car landed on its roof, the police cruisers stopped and two officers jumped out, drawing their guns and pointing them at the car.

"They were like, 'Get out! Get out!'" he said. "One of them was actually kneeled down behind [the] door [of his cruiser]."

At that point, the car was on fire, Gratton said. By the time the Amherst Fire Department arrived, though, the flames were mostly extinguished. AFD completely put out the fire when it arrived.

An ambulance was also dispatched to the scene for the injured driver.

Police investigators at the scene were seen sifting through wreckage left from the car. Among the pile of debris was at least one beer bottle, which police retrieved.

APD will hold a press conference at 8 a.m. today to address the incident.

Temporary handicap parking lot demolished

By Morris Singer
Collegian Staff

The latest construction at the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center led to the destruction of a $70,000 temporary handicapped lot outside of the building over the summer.

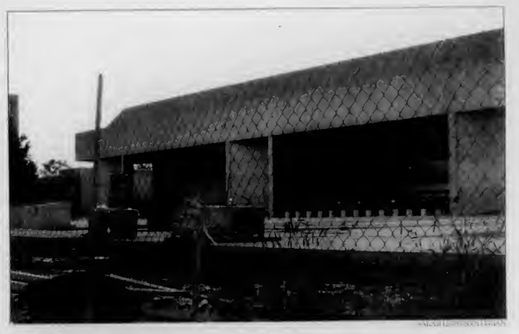
The work is a part of a series of ongoing projects at the FAC including a steam line replacement, a parking lot installation and site improvement.

While the temporary lot's official completion date was October 2001, pavement work on the lot continued through last summer, according to Jim Cahill, director of Facilities and Campus Planning.

The fences and construction equipment were removed entirely from the site last spring, leaving a newly paved handicap parking lot, bus stop and pedestrian walkway running from Herter Hall to North Pleasant Street. The FAC plaza became a construction site again in June, with tractors and orange tape brought back to the highly-used campus entrance and pavement ripped from the ground.

UMass Project Manager Bruce Thomas acknowledged that the construction was completed for less than three months before it started again.

"It wasn't timed," he said of the projects. "There were two different things happening at the same time. The two projects just sort of met at that point."



Cahill said that the temporary lot was installed because of Architectural Access Board requirements. All $70,000 of the money for the lot came from state-allocated funds. The lot cost the University about $50,000 in non-reusable materials and labor, and about $20,000 in reusable materials, he said.

Cahill said the decision was made not to apply for a variance that could have allowed the University to postpone construction of the lot until it could be included in the site improvement project. For this variance, an alternative arrangement for the physically disabled would have been necessary during the construction. Because of this, it was decided that building the temporary lot was a better option, Cahill said.

"We may have been able to get a variance to [postpone construction of the lot]," he said, "but our public safety people would have had to have people posted there overtime."

There is no handicap parking at the FAC plaza while the most recent construction is underway. Staff will accommodate physically disabled people at the Fine Arts Center until the latest construction

Continued on page 2

The Fine Arts Center is undergoing construction, creating an obstacle for students traveling afoot.

Dean supporters rally in Copley Square

HOLLY KINGSTROM/COLLEGIAN

Thousands of people gathered to show their support for 2004 presidential candidate Howard Dean.

By Holly Kingstrom
Collegian Correspondent

BOSTON – Former Vermont Governor Howard Dean brought his campaign for the Democratic Presidential nomination to Copley Square Tuesday, with a crowd of 2,500 in attendance. Boston to rally a crowd of roughly 2,500 in Copley Square on Tuesday.

His "September to Remember" campaign intrigued 22 Five-College students enough to make the bus trip out to Boston for his speech, "Freedom, Democracy, and Action." They were joined by students from other area schools, including the University of New Hampshire, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Harvard University, making up about one third of the crowd. Some of these students were already Dean supporters, while others went to take the opportunity to make a more educated decision when it comes time to vote.

"Dean has the most appeal to rally the younger generation," said Rob Henig, a Hampshire College student. Many students said they were attracted to Dean's politics because of his liberal views.

Under an overcast sky, those in attendance bustled around the lawn talking about Dean's politics and his chances for getting the Democratic nomination. Many carried blue "Howard Dean for America" signs.

"Dean spoke out early, when it mattered, against the impending war on Iraq," said James Williamson, a member of the Cambridge Democratic City Committee. He also mentioned that he doesn't support all of Dean's politics. However, Williamson said he's strongly considering Dean because Dean is, "energetically aggressive in opposition to the Bush administration."

As Dean took to the "stump" around 12:20 p.m. the wind picked up dramatically and so did the cheers. Dean opened, "We're here today to talk about what's at stake in this election. Ten months from today, we'll be coming back to Boston, not just to decide who will be the Democratic nominee, but to determine the future of our democracy."

Dean condemned Bush's foreign and domestic policies. He then proclaimed, "We are going to defeat this president by bringing millions of people back into the political process."

"We believe that together we can create a force strong enough to change history and take back our country," Dean continued. The force is well on its way. Dean has 417,106 supporters registered online as of Tuesday, and will break the $10.3 million contribution mark for one quarter, which is the Democratic record.

"We're meeting up," Dean said. "We're organizing. We're putting out flyers and knocking on doors. We're writing letters to one another, and talking about how we can shape the future of our country.

However, not all were charged by this rhetoric. Smith College student Annie Goodner said that Dean's attacks on Bush's policies gave the speech too negative a tone.

University of Massachusetts students Steven Hoeschele and Dan DeVoe strongly support Dean, and are co-coordinators of the program "UMass for Dean." They, along with several delegates from each school in the Five College consortium, began to meet and campaign for Dean. The trip to Boston is their first rally event, with one also scheduled this Friday. The rally will begin at Hampshire College in front of the dining commons at 10:50 a.m. and will go around to each of the Five Colleges.

DeVoe and Hoeschele cheered as Dean ended his speech, just before the rain came, yelling, "You have the power! You have the power!"

SGA elections begin

By Ed Hudson
Collegian Correspondent

The sprint to Election Day has come to an end. The Student Government Association will once again fill its student Senate with members of the university student body. From both on and off campus, the Senate will be provided with many familiar and possibly new faces. But if one thing is to be expected, it is that today's polls should be livelier than elections past.

Steve Hoeschele, SGA elections chancellor, said he has noticed more candidates "out and about" for this election than in the past. There will be a total of 86 candidates listed on today's ballot for Senate election at the polls. Of those 86, only 66 will become members of the Senate.

Eduardo Bustamante, administrative assistant and ALANA caucus member, estimated that in the past only about 5 percent of the student body would come out and vote. But, he added, "I expect it to be different this year." Hoeschele agreed that there is a bigger buzz around campus for this election.

In actuality, there were officially 89 nomination forms returned to the SGA. According to Hoeschele, the elections commission voted unanimously to rule three ballots invalid. Two ballots were ruled ineligible because those election hopefuls didn't provide their signatures on the back of their nomination forms. The third didn't provide the necessary 25 signatures, because one of the signatures wasn't from the correct district.

Hoeschele said he believes all three election hopefuls who had their nominations revoked are pushing to be write-in candidates in today's race. He also added that several other students would appear as write-ins on the ballot.

Another issue that has been surrounding today's election has been that of ALANA representation in the Senate. According to Hoeschele, there is a strong feeling about student involvement and representation in general. He agreed that people feel more passionate about this election with the issues facing ALANA.

Bustamante said he believes that historically ALANA students have not been represented well.

According to Rene Gonzalez, employee of ALANA affairs, this election is going to be a lot better than those of years past. "The involvement wasn't there before," Gonzalez said. "This year is a lot better with participation in terms of activeness to run for office."

There are approximately 20 students associated with the ALANA caucus running in today's election.

Senate hopeful Oyotunde Onikoro said at first he wanted to run for senate for personal reasons. "When I heard about ALANA and what was going to happen, it was the catalyst for me running for office and to have a voice there."

Onikoro said he has been working in coalition with ALANA to make sure every thing goes accordingly in the SGA.

According to Hoeschele, Secretary of Public Policy and Pelations Mina Safain has done a fantastic job publicizing and recruiting students to run for

Continued on page 2

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
MOOSE HUNTING
ADVENTURERS IN THE ALASKAN OUTBACK
ARTS & LEISURE PAGE 6
OUCH!
ACUPUNCTURE SERVICE STARTS AT UMASS
SPORTS PAGE 14
BACK AT HOME
NINE TEAMS RETURN HOME TO FACE JMU
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 13

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
News Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Copy Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Erika Lovley
News Editor Courtney Charles
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resources Sandra Marquet
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Lita Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Arts & Living Assistant Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Ferron Saltsiker
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marzelli

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar year. The Collegian is independently financed, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Index. It became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1918 and the Daily Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, the Collegian has been published since January 1994. For advertising info and information, call 545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

For the Record

Correction & Clarification: Because of an editing error, the origin of the letter sent to the Haitian Student Association regarding their status as a Registered Student Organization was incorrectly reported in a page one story yesterday. The letter sent to HASA on Monday was from Judy Gagnon, assistant director for organization development in the Campus Activities Office, not from Vice Chancellor Michael Gargano.

Write for news!

House leaders welcome senate deal on forest bill

By Matthew Daly
Associated Press

WASHINGTON – House Republican leaders welcomed a Senate agreement Wednesday on a bill to speed logging and other tree-thinning projects in national forests to reduce the danger of wildfire.

"I'm pleased with the progress," said Rep. Greg Walden, R-Ore., a co-sponsor of the House bill. "I think this is an important step forward on a critical issue to the West."

Environmentalists, though, said the apparent Senate deal would do little to reduce the risk of wildfire to Western communities, while removing citizen participation and boosting commercial logging.

Sean Cosgrove, forest policy specialist for the Sierra Club, said the Senate bill was most notable for what it fails to do.

"It doesn't really require the Forest Service to do fuel reductions around communities, it doesn't provide direct funding to do honest fuel reductions, and it doesn't really protect old-growth and roadless areas," Cosgrove said.

Senators from both parties said late Tuesday they had reached a tentative agreement on a forest-health bill, which has been mired in partisan dispute for the past three years, even as wildfires have ravaged the West.

Details were still being worked out, but aides and lawmakers said it would ease environmental restrictions on forest-thinning projects to reduce the danger of wildfire in about 20 million acres of national forests.

About half the work would be restricted to areas near homes and communities, while the other half could occur in more remote areas of the forests where larger, more commercially valuable trees grow.

The Senate bill also would allow courts to weigh the threat of long-term damage from wildfire against shorter-term effects of logging. Supporters say it would mandate protections for old-growth forests.

Cosgrove called the plan "more of the same" approach used by the GOP-controlled House and the Bush administration: "trying to skirt around [legal] appeals and cut the public out of the process."

The GOP lawmakers in the House said they want to see the bill's details. When the two chambers work out a compromise, they said, they will push for language similar to a bill the House approved in May.

"Let's see what the draft is," Walden said. "In this business, one word can make all the difference."

FAC construction continues

Continued from page 1

phase is completed, Thomas said.

Construction projects, according to Thomas, "happen when the money comes." The steam line replacement and the site improvement project occurred once the resources were secured, Thomas said.

Cahill said that many parts of the construction were completed several times.

"We dug it up, we filled it in, we dug it up," Cahill said. "I'm not surprised [that] some people are wondering why we put it down, dug it up and put some of it down again.

"This [construction] was a little bit too much to bite on in one contract," he continued. "It put everyone to the test."

Cahill insisted that this was the only way that the project could be handled. Every part was necessary to the construction of the site, he said.

"It was all part of the sequencing of the construction," he said. "The contractor did what he had to do."

About 80 percent of the money for the site improvement project came from state funds. The remainder came from campus capital funds and from private funds, including a donation from the Class of 1954.

According to Thomas, the current phase of construction is on schedule and contractors are expected to complete the project in November.

The steam line replacement project started in the fall of 2001 and was necessary because the old steam line was "deteriorated and very old," according to Cahill.

Elections begin today

Continued from page 1

office as well as encouraging others to vote.

Hoeschele said he has heard from a few members of ALANA that the SGA commission has been doing a good job.

"I think they [ALANA] are confident that they will get plenty of seats," Hoeschele said.

However, Bustamante believes that some parts of the election have been rushed, especially with regard to the referendum questions.

There are four referendum questions to appear on today's ballot, three of which were submitted by the SGA's coordinating council.

Question 1, put forth by SGA President David Carr, asks students to provide $3 of the approved $750 fee increase per semester for free USA Today, Boston Globe and New York Times newspapers. The newspapers would be available at the campus center and in dining halls.

Question 2, perhaps the most controversial subject on the ballot, asks students if they support changing the constitution of the SGA, originally approved in 1994 by the Board of Trustees, to include appointed seats for the ALANA caucus. Senate seats representing ALANA students will be equal to 13 percent of the total apportioned to electoral districts.

Question 3 asks students if they support changing the bylaws of the SGA to remove area government-appointed seats.

According to Hoeschele, three members of the five-person coordinating council, not including Chair of University Policy Olaf Aprans, who was not present, put forth these referendum questions.

"It's just ludicrous that these three students control all this money and power," Bustamante said.

The Board of Trustees must approve all amendments to the SGA constitution. This includes the amendment for appointed seats for ALANA.

"I would expect ALANA students to come out in full force to save their representation," Bustamante said. "And I hope that all progressive liberal white students will come out also."

When asked why he thought so many students would come out and vote in today's election, Bustamante said, "Because they need to. We have less say every year, so you've got to draw the line somewhere."

Students living in the Sylvan and Northeast residential areas can vote at Worcester Dining Hall.

Orchard Hill and Central residents can vote at the Franklin Dining Hall.

Students who live in Coolidge, Kennedy, Melville, Thoreau, Prince, Crampton, Emerson and James can vote at Hampshire Dining Hall.

All other Southwest area students can vote at Berkshire Dining Hall.

Commuter students are to vote primarily at the Campus Center concourse.

Any student can fill out an absentee ballot at any one of the aforementioned dining halls or at the Campus Center concourse.

Doctor speaks on Tibetan medicine

By Alyson Zillmann
Collegian Correspondent

Many people are not aware that it is possible for the human body to survive for years on only three pills a day. Dr. Barry Clark, an expert on the ancient Tibetan medical system, presented his lecture "Rejuvenation Methods and Essence-Extraction Techniques in the Tibetan Tradition" to over 40 people in the Neilson Library at Smith College Tuesday night.

Dr. Clark, who completed a 21-day cycle of fasting, studied under one of the personal physicians of the Dalai Lama.

The lecture provided a glimpse of a culture on the other side of the world. Dr. Clark spoke of the whole Tibetan rejuvenation process, from preparation to fasting.

He said that to prepare for the fasting, one should cleanse and relax the body with an oil massage, then a bath and a laxative to purge the system. He said without taking these steps, it's as good as "dyeing a stained cloth." Also beforehand, one should avoid stale or rotten foods, such as vinegar and pickle, he added.

Dr. Clark said that the fasting consisted of taking small pills of herbal or mineral compound with hot water.

The Tibetans, he said, believe in six superlative medicines – that is, six plants, each believed to have healing powers for certain organs in the body. For example, nutmeg is believed to be good for the heart, and cardamon is good for the kidneys. The other four superlative medicines included in the compound are saffron, clove, and bamboo pith.

Dr. Clark said that during his 21-day cycle, he grew so weak that it took him one and a half hours to lower himself one and a half feet from his bed to the ground.

However, after this period, he reached a period of great mental acuity and enlightenment. This is one of the desired results of the rejuvenation process – to be able to focus one's thoughts precisely for many hours and to reach new levels of wisdom. He said that another Westerner who completed the rejuvenation process with him became clairvoyant for a time.

Rejuvenation also promotes longevity, clears the senses, relieves nervous disorders and strengthens the immune system, Dr. Clark said.

He said that he knew of Tibetan monks whose hair had turned from gray to black, and other practitioners who had lived for 130 to 150 years or more.

Dr. Clark also talked about exotic Tibetan aphrodisiacs like the urine of the Tibetan Snow Frog and a rare orchid root, which the Tibetans use to induce virility. He said that the Tibetan concept of the aphrodisiac differed from the Western concept of immediate sexual arousal.

He said that during the rejuvenation process the practitioner is supposed to control sexual desire, and that the aphrodisiacs allow them to harness more energy by control.

According to drbarryclark.com, Dr. Clark has traveled extensively since 1981, giving lectures and treatments all over Asia, Europe, North America and Australia. He has written a dictionary on Tibetan Materia Medica, published by the Library of Tibetan Works and Archives.

He concluded his lecture by wishing the audience "the joy of life."

The
BLUE WALL
PUB

THIS WEEK at
The BLUE WALL PUB

MONDAY — Karaoke, Monday Night Football AND 10¢ Wings
TUESDAY — Open Mic Series
WEDNESDAY — Rhythm Systems - Bill Arnold DJ
THURSDAY — Live Music With Great American and Nefertiti Jones
FRIDAY — Live Music With Bathtub Mary co-sponsored by Laser 99.3
SATURDAY — Live Music With Echohead and The Tint

LIVE MUSIC starts at 9:00PM.
OPEN MIC starts at 7:00PM. The Sign-Up sheet goes out at 6:00PM. Bring your talent and your friends and your instruments. We'll provide the stage and sound equipment and 20 minutes for you to knock'em dead!
ALL MUSICAL STYLES are encouraged to participate!
AS ALWAYS, 18+ to party, 21+ to drink.

MSPP
Training Psychologists for the 21st Century
•Doctor of Psychology (Psy.D.) Degree Program
•Specialty tracks in Health and Forensic Psychology
•Optional Focuses available in Organizational Consulting, Assessment, Child, and Geropsychology
•Concurrent theory and practice throughout the program
•A variety of opportunities for field experience
•Highly accomplished practitioner faculty
•Post-doctoral Master of Science in Clinical Psychopharmacology Program
•Respecialization programs for psychologists
•Continuing Education Courses
•Classes for credit for non-degree students
•Fully accredited
Massachusetts School of Professional Psychology
221 Rivermoor Street, Boston, MA 02132
Toll free (888) 664-MSPP or (617) 327-6777 Ext. 210
E-mail: admissions@mspp.edu
WWW.MSPP.EDU

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club
90 Gatehouse Road, Off Rt. 9, Two miles East of Amherst Center
On the Bus Route • TEL: 256-6446
Shopping for a health club? • Do your homework first
JOIN NOW!
for our Semester Special
15 weeks – For Students: Only $179!
Inclusive membership / No additional fees / Includes free T-Shirt
Hampshire Fitness Club has it all for you
•FULL SIZED INDOOR POOL •AQUA AEROBICS •CYBEX/NAUTILUS CIRCUIT •BOXING STUDIO
•CYBEX FREE WEIGHTS •FULL COURT BASKETBALL •VOLLEYBALL •INDOOR TENNIS
•YOGA/PILATES •AEROBICS/STEP/BOSU •JACUZZI/SAUNAS •CARDIO-VASCULAR EQUIPMENT
Open: 6am to 10pm Mon-Fri
8am to 9pm Sat-Sun

City bombings, ground attacks rattle Iraq

By Charles T. Hanley
Associated Press

BAGHDAD – Bombs rocked a teeming quarter of Baghdad and a sex-film theater in Mosul yesterday, reportedly killing at least three Iraqis and wounding dozens. In a string of ground clashes, the U.S. military said they killed nine Iraqis on one of the bloodiest days of combat in weeks.

The nine deaths were all in the region around Tikrit, Saddam Hussein's hometown. U.S. troops aborted two ambushes by anti-American forces, killing five Iraqis, and came under fire elsewhere in exchanges that left at least four Iraqis dead. The surge in attacks came as world leaders worked to find agreement in New York on how to restore stability to Iraq.

In Baghdad, communist leader Hamid Majid Moussa said he and other members of the U.S.-appointed Iraqi Governing Council want to move toward national sovereignty "as fast as we can." But council members refused to be drawn into the debate over a specific timetable.

"We don't want to become involved in fruitless discussions," said Moussa, one of four council representatives at a news conference.

The debate among the United States and other governments over Iraq's future moved this week to U.N. headquarters in New York, where the Bush administration seeks a Security Council resolution encouraging other nations to contribute troops to the Iraq security force.

In exchange, France and others, including Germany, want the resolution to give the United Nations a greater voice in the political transition in Iraq, and a speedy move, in "months, not years," to full Iraqi sovereignty – that is, to ending the American postwar occupation.

Bush met with German Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder on Wednesday in New York, and both said later they would work to resolve those differences. Schroeder renewed Germany's offer to help train Iraqi police, but reiterated that Germany would send no troops here.

More than five months after the ouster of Saddam's government, the troops who are here – almost all Americans – face a daily threat of homemade roadside bombs, mortar attacks and small-arms ambushes.

For the first time Wednesday, U.S. soldiers in central Baghdad were seen deploying bomb-disposal robots, to check a suspicious object in an underpass. That proved harmless, but at about the same time three miles to the northwest, a bomb meant to catch a passing U.S. motorized patrol exploded instead as two buses rolled by.

The blast, in the old Tigris riverside district of Azamiyah, sent shrapnel ripping through the buses and caused one to crash into a tree. At least one Iraqi was killed and 18 were wounded, police and hospital officials reported. Five of the injured were in critical condition, hospital officials said.

In the northern city of Mosul, a bomb exploded in a movie theater showing foreign sex films, and witnesses said two people were killed and seven wounded. Religious and political groups have warned cinema owners against showing such films after censorship ended following the collapse of Saddam's regime.

South of Tikrit, near the town of Balad, seven Iraqis attacked an oil pumping station guarded by troops of the U.S. 4th Infantry Division. The Americans called in an AC-130 gunship, whose heavy weapons fire killed at least three Iraqis, reported division spokeswoman Maj. Josslyn Aberle. A fourth was seriously wounded.

In a second clash near Balad, a U.S. patrol killed three Iraqis waiting in ambush with small arms and rocket-propelled grenades, the military said.

Another U.S. patrol in the same area opened fire on three men trying to bury a homemade bomb – a mortar shell that was probably to be triggered remotely – on a highway used by U.S. convoys. Two Iraqis were killed in the firefight, Aberle said.

In a fourth firefight south of Tikrit, American soldiers came under fire, pursued the attackers to a house, and killed one Iraqi, the military said.

Aberle also reported U.S. troops arrested an Iraqi thought responsible for blowing up an oil pipeline last week. That attack, near the town of Beiji north of Tikrit, damaged a pipeline leading from the oil fields to a storage tank.

It was the first time the military has acknowledged that the pipeline explosion was an act of sabotage.

The Americans have been carrying out near-daily raids in the Tikrit area following a coordinated attack by Iraqi resistance fighters Sept. 18 that killed three American soldiers. The raids have resulted in dozens of arrests.

American and Iraqi officials blame the anti-U.S. resistance on remnants of Saddam's regime. Other Iraqis say some countrymen simply resentful of American domination may be joining in the attacks.

Lawrence Jackson/Associated Press

A U.S. soldier reaches into a bomb crater looking for explosives as other troops seal off the area in front of a blast-damaged bus after a roadside bomb exploded yesterday in Baghdad.

Three militants killed in Saudi Arabia raid

By Adam Malik
Associated Press

JIZAN, Saudi Arabia – Tear gas hung in the air yesterday and blood and bullets littered the halls of a Saudi apartment building a day after a shootout with security forces killed three suspected militants, including an alleged al-Qaida operative wanted by the FBI for terror threats against the United States.

The alleged operative, Zubayr al-Rimi, died in the latest dramatic raid in Saudi Arabia's crackdown on Islamic militants.

"My son is dead and it is all over," al-Rimi's father was quoted as telling the Saudi daily newspaper Al-Riyadh on Wednesday. The father earlier called on his son to surrender.

Zubayr al-Rimi is believed to have been the chief deputy of Abu Bakr al-Azdi, the former top al-Qaida man in Saudi Arabia who surrendered to Saudi authorities June 26.

Al-Rimi's name appears on a Saudi list of 19 militants connected to the May 12 suicide bombings of foreign housing compounds in Riyadh, which killed 35 people including nine attackers, according to a Saudi Interior Ministry official. Saudi officials have said the 19 were in contact with al-Qaida, the group suspected in the Sept. 11 terror attacks.

Six days before the second anniversary of Sept. 11, the FBI issued a bulletin saying it was searching worldwide for al-Rimi, along with another Saudi, a Moroccan and a Tunisian in connection with possible terrorist threats against the United States.

Al-Rimi was killed after security forces stormed an apartment building Tuesday in the southern town of Jizan, seeking five militants who had barricaded themselves inside. The three-story building houses employees, many of them foreigners, of the King Fahd Central Hospital next door.

At least one security officer also died in a prolonged shootout and two suspected militants were arrested, the Interior Ministry said in a statement carried by the official Saudi Press Agency. Al-Rimi and the other suspects were planning a terror attack, according to an official statement on Saudi state television.

In Washington, John Pistole, assistant director of the FBI's counterterrorism division, said al-Rimi died in the apartment building raid after the FBI received information Tuesday concerning his whereabouts.

"They engaged in a gun battle and now al-Rimi and another individual were killed," Pistole told a subcommittee of the U.S. House Financial Services Committee.

The Saudi government has cracked down on Islamic militants since the May 12 bombings. Large caches of weapons have been unearthed, more than 200 suspects arrested and more than a dozen killed in police raids – revealing both the government's determination to control militancy and a disturbingly wide network of extremists.

Al-Rimi, also known as Sultan Jubran Sultan al-Qahtani, had lived near Jihan, in Asir. His body was identified by his father, the Saudi newspaper Al-Riyadh reported.

Al-Rimi's father said he last saw his son two years ago and believed his son started to adopt extremist thought while studying physical education at a university in Abha in southwestern Saudi Arabia. He never finished his university degree, traveling instead to Afghanistan.

At least 11 of the 19 militants on the Saudi list have been killed or arrested. They include Abu Bakr, also known as Ali Abd al-Rahman al-Faqasi al-Ghamidi, the suspected mastermind of the May 12 attacks who surrendered in June; and the No. 1 figure on the list – al-Qaida member Turki Nasser al-Dandani – who was killed in a raid in northern Saudi Arabia in July.

Another suspect, killed in a police chase in June, was reportedly carrying a letter written by al-Qaida chief Osama bin Laden. Four of the 19 were among the nine bombers killed in the May 12 attacks.

The building where al-Rimi was killed was part of a complex housing about 3,000 foreigners – mostly from the Indian subcontinent, the Philippines and the Far East – as well as Saudis. The May 12 suicide bombings targeted three expatriate compounds.

Live
Deliberately

TIME MANAGEMENT
Thursday September 25th at 7:30pm
Campus Center Rm 162-175
presented by
Campus Crusade for Christ

The first 100 people will receive a
FREE Franklin/Covey Student Planner
umass cru.com

Need help with your Resume?

Come to a
Resume Writing Workshop!

TODAY! Thursday, September 25
1 pm * 201 Machmer

Friday, September 26
2 pm * 114 Stockbridge Hall

For more information about internships, co-ops and full time opportunities go to www-ccn.acad.umass.edu or call us at 545-2224

CareerServices

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Governor's plan for death penalty has no chance of passing

Republican Gov. Mitt Romney's announcement that he wants to craft a death penalty in Massachusetts that will only execute criminals who are "virtually certain" to be guilty was met yesterday with a predictable reaction in much of the predominantly Democratic Commonwealth – scorn.

Numerous state representatives and senators have already spoken out on the issue, criticizing Romney's plan in a number of ways. State Rep. Ellen Story, D-Amherst, called it "disingenuous."

"I think we have seen that scientific evidence can be used both correctly and incorrectly," Story told the Daily Hampshire Gazette. "DNA samples get mixed up or they get planted in somebody's box of documents when they shouldn't be there."

Romney named an 11-member panel of scientists, prosecutors and legal experts Tuesday to write a bill that relies heavily on science to determine guilt or innocence, according to the Associated Press.

"We want a standard of proof that is incontrovertible," Romney told the AP. "This is a new kind of death penalty ... just as science can free the innocent, it can identify the guilty."

Unfortunately for Romney, much of the state he governs does not see it the same way. The death penalty was eliminated from Massachusetts in 1984, and many of the personalities and attitudes that prevailed then still exist. Peter Kocot's, D-Northampton, opinion serves as a good example.

"In a modern and just society in the birthplace of American democracy, I think that we ought to be looking out for equal protection under the law and trying to perfect the judicial system, and promoting the death penalty is not the right way to do that," Kocot told the Gazette yesterday.

The attempt to reintroduce the death penalty by the governor has become somewhat of a tradition in Massachusetts. Since the ban in 1984, the last four Republican governors in the state have tried to reinstate it. In each case, the attempt has failed to pass through the primarily democratic legislature. The last time it came up for vote was in 2001, where the House voted it down, 94-60.

Romney does have some supporters, though, that much should be acknowledged. But those supporters will face a firestorm of criticism in our primarily liberal state, even though Romney told the AP he only envisions using the death penalty in extreme cases, such as the murder of police officers and terrorist acts with multiple deaths.

Initial reactions have followed the same party lines that previous death penalty votes in Massachusetts have. State legislators such as Kocut, Story and state Rep. John Scibak of South Hadley have all spoken out against Romney's plan, and all are Democrats in the majority. The only early support Romney has drawn comes from the right wing, such as Republican House Leader Brad Jones.

"[Capital punishment] is the only way as a society that we can adequately express our disapproval of some awful behavior," Jones said.

However, Jones's view will remain in the minority. The death penalty in Massachusetts is guaranteed to fall to the same fate it has before – into the right wing minority, with no chance of passing.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Information from The Daily Hampshire Gazette and The Associated Press was used for this editorial.

Stepping into the ring

Peter Trovato

Politics is a tough game. These days, it seems elected officials must come equipped with boxing gloves and a mouthpiece. It has become a main event worthy of Las Vegas lights and Don King promotion. Political bouts, from all different perspectives, are running rampant. Officials are doing battle, and we are sitting ringside.

These public tiffs could be broadcast live on pay-per-view with George Foreman doing the color commentary. There would be an event everyday.

Tonight, live from Massachusetts: Romney vs. Bulger. Watch as the newly elected governor takes on state crook Billy Bulger. Once Bulger submits to Romney's brutality, stay tuned. The Democrats will launch a vicious counter-attack accusing the governor of being unfit for the Commonwealth, because he wants to cut unemployment benefits, and his former company, Bain Inc., is being investigated for corporate misdeeds that cost the Massachusetts State Pension fund over $300,000.

Speaking of investigations, this carnage has spilled out into broadcast and print media. Fox News is suing author/comedian Al Franken for using the phrase "fair and balanced" in the subtitle of his new book, "Lies and the Lying Liars Who Tell Them; A Fair and Balanced Look at the Right." The book draws battle lines with several politicians and political analysts. Namely, Ann Coulter, the right wing, religious radical who once said, in regard to Muslims territories, "We should invade all their countries, kill their leaders, and convert them to Christianity." This quote got her canned from her post at National Review Online and inspired Franken to appropriately title the second chapter of his book: "Anne Coulter: Nutcase."

The scuffles continue throughout the nation; the Sunshine State is playing host to its own steel cage match. In one corner stand the Democrats desperately trying to keep hold of California, a state overflowing with liberal thought. In the opposite corner lurk the Republicans, who are strategically maneuvering their troops to eventually gain control of the capital. And who is the chosen combatant for the G.O.P.? None other than the Terminator himself: Aaahnald. Schwarzenegger has about as much business becoming governor as Gray Davis has entering a bodybuilding competition.

Unrest is an understatement. The political scene in America is a chaotic bloodbath without limitations.

So, both coasts are inflamed with various political struggles. But what about the rest of the country? Are they being left out? Oh no! They'll get their fill within the next several months. Plenty of blows will be traded when the Dems have to nominate a candidate who can knock President Bush down for the count. This is going to be good: Democrats attacking Democrats, a party civil war.

John Kerry vs. Howard Dean; Howard Dean vs. Dennis Kucinich; Dennis Kucinich vs. Joe Lieberman; Joe Lieberman vs. Mosely Braun; Mosely Braun vs. Dick Gephardt; and lastly, Rev. Al. Sharpton vs. everyone.

It is going to be a political tilt for the ages: Who can rumble with Bush? Name-calling, negative campaign ads, questionable voting records – you name it, this dogfight is going to have it. Kucinich will accuse Dean of being in-tight with corporations and free traders. Dean will call Joe Lieberman a Republican in a Democrat suit. Gephardt will tell Mosely Braun she is un-electable. And when the smoke clears and the bodies are sorted out, Gen. Wesley Clark will stand with his savvy military knowledge and keen sense of leadership as the chosen pugilist to step into the ring with Bush.

Unrest is an understatement. The political scene in America is a chaotic bloodbath without limitations. It is an intense attitude: Attack at every angle and take control wherever you can. This battle-front has even reared its ugly head on our campus: Jared Nokes and the Student Government vs. the members of ALANA – simply a microcosm of the entire country. It's mayhem, and it has become ridiculous.

These brawls are dividing the nation and causing important decisions to be left in their wake. Now, it is time for us to consider the age-old question: How can we get anything done if all we do is fight?

Peter Trovato is a Collegian columnist.

UMass security a failure

Gilad Skolnik

I failed. Yes, I failed my first test of the semester, and I'm not proud of it. All I wanted was a job, and that was too much for the University of Massachusetts, apparently. I didn't have very high aspirations, just to be the security receptionist for one of the many dorms of UMass. Most people usually respond with a snicker or by laughing when I inform them that I failed the test to become a security receptionist, usually asking, I'm guessing in sarcasm, "how could you fail it?"

The truth is that I don't know how I managed to fail it. I have come to the conclusion that I must have really pissed off that test proctor. Maybe it was that really squeaky pen of mine, or that tapping sound I make with my finger when I'm nervous.

I don't remember much from what I had to memorize, but I do remember that while you're working as a security receptionist, women aren't allowed to wear tank tops and men aren't allowed to wear muscle shirts.

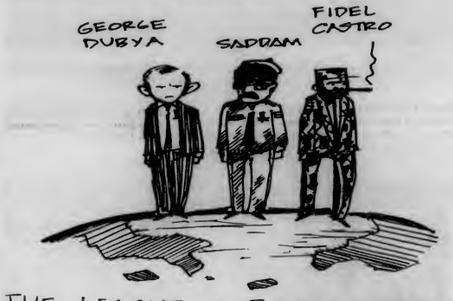
It's understandable that UMass security is trying to pull off a professional image and look serious, but some of the policies that they have in place are ridiculous. Someone can work security with as many piercings and tattoos as they want on their face, dye their hair any color, and it's all okay. But if they wear a tank-top or muscle shirt, it's not allowed?

Now, when you walk into a dorm room and see some guy sitting in that security receptionist chair who's jacked and wearing a muscle shirt, you're a lot less likely to want to mess with him and a lot more likely to show him your ID. It's quite easy to simply run by those folk, yelling and hollering as you wave your hands in the air every which way, but are you going to take that risk with either Biff or Gus manning security, wearing his muscle shirt and looking so pumped that he could rip that sink off your bathroom wall? I know it's important to look professional, but it should be more important to keep our dorms safe.

The only thing more ludicrous than guys not being allowed to wear muscle shirts, which I can live with for some reason, is girls not being allowed to wear tank tops. I may be no psychology major, but when that attractive girl in a tank top asks me to do something, I do it, as would most other guys. Moreover, people are less likely to want to run by security without checking other people in or furnishing a proper ID if security is some girl in a tank top. If anything, UMass security should be encouraging girls who are working for them to wear tank tops if they want a more secure and safe building.

Frankly, unless the policies of UMass security are changed, it might as well be cut and have the money go toward lowering tuition.

In fact, the Israeli army long ago realized the powers of women. Many women are given positions in the army to train men, in combat fields ranging from tanks to infantry. This is because males are often more responsive to females asking them to do things and less likely to argue with them.



Aside from the out of date dress code, the technology used by UMass security must be updated. Video cameras should be installed in each and every dorm entrance, which should always be recording everyone entering the building. It would be an expensive investment, but rest assured that this would be paid off quickly. Every time someone would run by security they would be caught on tape and fined a few hundred dollars. Even if no one ran by security, then all of a sudden security would actually be effective.

The problem is that the whole point of security is to only let people who are allowed to get into that particular building enter that building, but the exact people who are meant to be kept out can just run by security and not much can be done without knowing their names. Although I know the names of the 20,000 and something students who attend UMass, sadly there are some of us who don't. If the only people who don't run by security are the people who are allowed in the building and can legitimately check in then there's not much of a point for having it.

Frankly, unless the policies of UMass security are changed, it might as well be cut and have the money go toward lowering tuition. Although, at the rate that Romney is slashing funds from our budget, we may need that money just to keep the tuition from rising. Even more absurd is that security only starts functioning at 8 p.m., which means that any Joe Shmo who wants to can enter the building at 7:59. Do dangerous people only try to enter dorms after 8?

Perhaps the whole point of security receptionists in our buildings is to appease our parents by giving the image that UMass dormitories are very secure. Yet the fact remains that security receptionists are unable to provide adequate security for our dorms. Rather, they are a money drain and are quite ineffective. I may have failed my test, but they've failed their purpose.

Gilad Skolnik is a Collegian columnist.

Hunting in the Last Frontier

World Perspectives

Scott Eldridge II

The advertising manager at the student newspaper here got stuck in the bush two weeks ago and killed a moose to survive. She ate its heart.

Traveling in a swamp buggy of some sort, she and her male companion got stuck in the mud – a frequent occurrence when the ground is still thawed. In the pictures I saw, there was a bull moose hanging from its legs, skinned and opened wide. Alaska has a no waste law, so the whole thing eventually came home, but the meal of that evening was in fact the circulatory center of that majestic beast – the heart.

Don't cringe, the hunting and fishing in this state is supposed to be second to none. The likelihood that you will be out in the bush and need, in fact, to hunt and fish for survival is also second to none. There are many isolated spots in Alaska, and I'm not talking isolated like trying to find Chenoweth or the yellow lot. I'm talking about having a state capital that you can't drive to (Juneau is only accessible by ferry or plane).

Villages dot the vast expanse of the largest united state. Most are built on rivers or the coast (hint, commercial fishing is a huge industry). These villages are visited on a schedule dictated by weather and only by plane or snowmobile. Barrow, the northernmost town of 4,500, is visited every August to stock up the supplies for the next twelve months.

Then, there are the villages on the Aleutian Islands – the long stretch of islands heading towards Siberia. I met a woman this past week, while reporting on a story on these native villages, that was stuck on one of these islands for one week longer than she planned because the mail flight couldn't fight the wind and weather.

So when I heard the story of the heartless moose I was not shocked.

Nor was I shocked when I overheard the discussion in my 1 p.m. logic class about a morning hunt, one that was squeeze in between 9:15 a.m. and 12:30 p.m. It ended in two mountain sheep destined for a large freezer. That was a true test of time management, and also quite typical of the sportsmen here who do hunt or fish. And that is most everyone.

Natives, such as the Aleuts, Upiks, Eskimos and other tribes that still exist and live off the land, have subsistence laws that allow the killing of seals, polar bears, moose, caribou and other game. It is hardly game and every bit of every animal gets used. And it appears, though numbers are depleting over time, that there is plenty of game.

For instance, if I had the hunting inclination, there are often moose outside the dorms here. They roam onto campus, and as long as they aren't in heat, they won't trample you. There are beaver dams behind my university apartment and a stuffed cougar in the nearest dive bar. All right, so someone already got that cougar, but you get the point – wildlife.

It is not a male-only activity either, the ad manager is a woman and the woman in my short-lived welding class who has "the best way to make moose-meat chili" is also female. Hunting is not a machismo act and, now that there is snow in the mountains and foothills around Anchorage, is often very much done for food and survival and not for fun.

People still can go to grocery stores and many do, but depending on how far and how disconnected you are, hunting makes staying alive possible. The native tribes that rely on fishing and caribou know this, and this is why they can survive in the most remote areas of the state, and the country.

There are beaver dams behind my university apartment and a stuffed cougar in the nearest dive bar.

In support of the importance to some people of hunting, and in stark contrast to the University of Massachusetts, the University of Alaska- Anchorage has a residential gun safe, under the lock and key of the UAA police.

So if you hunt, bring a gun. Lock it up and go hunt between classes – or before work if you're the two bow hunters who at 7 a.m. were showing off their kill before going to work at the library. And, as if it needed to be said, there are warning signs on every door of every building pointing out the illegality of taking a gun into the university buildings. It makes sense to have these signs since the governor of this state passed some of the most relaxed concealed weapons laws in the country.

Although hunting and eating the heart straight out of a moose – in the inevitable quote of Bob Dylan – "ain't my cup of meat," it certainly typifies one of many unique lifestyle choices in Alaska.

Scott Eldridge II is a Collegian Columnist on exchange in Anchorage, Alaska.

Ed/Op Ed/Op Ed/Op Ed/Op Ed/Op Ed/Op Ed/Op Ed/Op Ed/Op Ed/Op Ed/Op Ed/Op Ed/Op

Actions speak.

Words are louder.

Write for Ed/Op.

Be heard.

Who's your anybody?

Rachel Smith

What does Jan. 27 mean to you? How about March 2? I'll give you a hint; judging by George W. Bush's tanking approval ratings, those are the days many of you will choose the next president of the United States. New Hampshire will hold their democratic primary election in January; Massachusetts will follow in March. If you care about who will be sitting in the oval office next year, you'll get involved now.

Iowa holds the first primary election on Jan. 19, and New Hampshire follows soon afterward. All the candidates are focusing a great deal of attention on those two early primaries. Early victories mean more money for the campaigns and ultimately, survival into the national elections. New Hampshire is also unusual because un-enrolled voters can vote in the primaries; most states only allow members of the Democratic and Republican Parties to vote in their parties' respective primary elections.

Every state holds an election between January and June of presidential election years to determine who gets to compete for the White House. When there is no incumbent president (remember the 2000 election), both parties hold primary elections. You might recall John McCain beating George W. Bush in New Hampshire; but, as you know, Bush won his party's nomination. In 2004, Bush can still be reelected, so only the Democrats are holding primaries. What does this mean to you? If you don't vote in your state's primary elections, you won't have a say in who will beat Bush.

The slogan "Anybody but Bush" is popping up on bumper stickers, T-shirts, and even at the University of Massachusetts College Democrats. The group named their presidential campaign awareness program "Who's Your Anybody?" That's a great question, considering the importance of this upcoming election; I'm not seeing a great deal of student activism. All students have a responsibility to find the best "somebody" and at least vote for that person, but they should consider volunteering or interning on a campaign.

My "anybody" is Senator Joe Lieberman from Connecticut, and I'm fortunate enough to be interning for a person who I heartily believe is the best person to work in the oval office. I found out about internships for the campaign at the Senator's website and applied online. I'm getting credit toward my major from the political science department, getting hands-on experience with the political and financial aspects of national campaigns, and I'm having a terrific time.

Last weekend, I went door-to-door in New Hampshire with Team Joe, asking people about their opinions on the candidates, specific issues and general concerns. I was legitimately amazed as state opinion polls materialized with unique faces, names and personalities; I'll never think about New Hampshire voters solely in terms of statistics or percentages again.

You may have read about a majority of undecided voters, but imagine that you could meet hundreds of those voters and tell them why nobody will be a better president than your "anybody." Debating politics over lunch is fun, but you're not making a difference unless you vote or get involved with a campaign. In 2004, its time to get somebody elected into the executive office by a majority of votes instead of appointed by one vote from the Supreme Court. Unless you want to risk keeping Bush in office for another four years, you must vote, and you really should actively voice your concerns about the Bush administration by advocating for the Democratic candidates.

I'm sure most candidates have online applications for interns and volunteers, plus the Campus Career Center has a wealth of information about internships that students can do for college credit. I would urge students to volunteer for their preferred candidate for one day in New Hampshire. One of the privileges of living in New England is being so close to the political maelstrom whirling next door.

Every four years UMass students have an opportunity to help make history; that means every student that completes a traditional four- or five-year academic plan can participate in a presidential election, if only for one or two days. I intern for Senator Lieberman's campaign once a week in Hartford, Conn., which is only an hour or two away from campus depending on the traffic. There are campaign offices for the Democratic candidates all over New England, some of which are less than an hour from UMass.

Unless you want to risk keeping Bush in office for another four years, you must vote.

Many voters are disillusioned, especially since the controversial 2000 presidential election. What every eligible voter needs to realize is that the opportunity to reclaim national politics is not only preferable, it is obtainable. Register to vote. Nag your friends and family to register to vote. Get involved in elections and advocate for whichever candidate you believe in, but don't give up hope and don't sacrifice your electoral power because you dislike the current administration. Voter apathy is what got Bush into Washington in 2000.

I found a candidate who will make a terrific president, and I'm convinced Sen. Lieberman will help this country recover from poorly executed military actions, irresponsible tax cuts and the attempted complete disenfranchisement of economically disadvantaged Americans. As an intern for Sen. Lieberman, I would love to see every student at UMass join the campaign, but as a student and a person who lives in this country, I simply implore everybody to find their "anybody."

Rachel Smith is a Collegian columnist.

Just eat your steak

Francis Carr

Last weekend I returned to Cape Cod to waitress an encore shift at the restaurant where I worked all summer. Halfway through the night, I ran into a friend and we decided to catch up. How was she doing? What was new with both of us? Her friend sat idly by, spinning the straw in her drink and looking bored. How was being back at school for me?

At this, the friend butted in, "Oh, you're in school?" She more stated than asked. "Where do you go? Four C's?" (She was referring to Cape Cod Community College). "No." I said, annoyed by her intrusion. "I go to UMass." Her jaw dropped and then she nodded as she encouragingly said, "Good for you!"

This was not an isolated experience. I can't tell you how many times I have had customers inquire about my personal business. More often than not, they presumptuously ask right off the bat, "where do you go to school?"

"I go to UMass. Senior. I am a journalism major. I don't know what I will do when I get out of college."

They look miffed and uncomfortable in the face of my indecision.

"Okay, okay, maybe something in the way of public radio. Yes, I have had internships. Can I go put your order in yet?"

Don't get me wrong, some type of personal interaction is acceptable in this line of work, but why do people assume that there is more that they are entitled to know? Why isn't it enough to just be waitressing? Why do people always assume that what you are doing is a means to an end? Where do they get the nerve to judge your decisions, without even knowing you? What does it matter to them what my direction in life is, as long as they get their steak in a timely fashion, cooked the way they ordered it?

When my sister graduated from college, she returned home for the summer and worked at an upscale Italian restaurant. She was going to France in the fall to teach English and needed to save money. Then, the inevitable question arose, "Where do you go to school?"

I can't tell you how many times I have had customers inquire about my personal business.

At first, she would answer honestly. She would tell these complete strangers of her recent graduation and her plans to teach abroad. When she got to the part about a job on the horizon, people breathed huge sighs of relief and sometimes even commented, "Thank goodness, you didn't get a college education to work here, eh?"

Guffaw, poke, nudge. My sister was offended and decided to edit her story. Instead of divulging her future plans to these meddlesome strangers, she simply stopped including the part about going to France. She would allow them the knowledge that she had gone to college, but no more. People would wait for more information after she told them of her graduation, but she wouldn't budge. If they insisted she would simply say, "I'm sorry. I just don't quite see how this pertains to your order?"

I am sure we have all been thinking about it. What in the world is in store for me after college? Where am I going to live? Who am I going to live with? How much money will I make? Should I get my Master's? Should I go to law school? I think about these things constantly, but that is because it is my business. I honestly believe that everything will fall into place, the way things tend to do if you just relax and have confidence.

Someone recently told me that these are my years to be selfish, to do any and everything you want, before you have serious responsibility. Why is there such an urgency to go out, get the best job ever, makes piles of money and maximize your earning potential? This is what most of us have in store for the rest of our lives: overtime, nine to five, suits, cubicles, company picnics, retirement funds. Why start now? Why not embrace our youth while we still have a choice? As long as you are honoring your loans and responsibilities, why not enjoy yourself for a while? Whether you're waitressing, pumping gas, making a documentary or traveling, if it's what you want, do it, and don't make apologies. This is your life.

Frannie Carr is a Collegian columnist.

Mission impossible: finding a job

Emily O'Brien

Stressed out about finding a job? Well, you're in good company. Anyone who picks up a newspaper and flips to the news or turns on the TV knows that the job market is bleak. The country's economic woes are creating an overwhelming surge in the unemployment rate, and unfortunately, for those of us attending the University of Massachusetts, the job market seems far from promising.

Quite frankly, trying to get a job either on or off campus is nearly impossible. There are those lucky few who somehow wrangled themselves a job, but how they did it is beyond me. To get a job in or around Amherst, you have to fall into one of the following two categories.

You have to permanently live out here, so that disqualifies just about everyone attending UMass. Or, you have to have some sort of "dependable" connection that will put in a good word so you're not another one of the thousands of nameless faces applying for the job. Now, if you fall into one of those categories, congratulations! I'm jealous of you, because you're making money, and I am not.

Let's first discuss on-campus jobs. If you attend a school with nearly 25,000 students, one would think that maybe the University would be able to supply you with some sort of menial job. But no. If you don't have work-study, then getting a job on campus is pretty much out of the question. Anyway, the money you do get from work-study doesn't really put a dent in all the weekly expenses a college student manages to accrue. Therefore, at least in my situation, getting a job on campus is pretty much out of the question.

So, the only remaining jobs are found off campus. If you don't have a car, good luck. Trying to figure out where to apply to is a daunting undertaking within itself. The process of applying for jobs (in particular the monotonous task of filling out applications) takes at the very least an entire day to accomplish.

The most demoralizing part of the whole application process occurs when you first go into apply. After mustering up the courage to ask whether or not your desired place of employment is hiring or not, quite frequently the reply you will receive is, "We're taking applications." If you don't know by now, that means "No." It can also be translated into "don't even waste your time filling out this application because I might as well throw it in the trash the second you walk out of the door."

One would think that maybe the University would be able to supply you with some sort of menial job. But no.

"Why is it so hard to get a job off campus at UMass," you may ask. I'm not entirely sure, but I do have my theories. First of all, many employers want to hire Amherst residents because they live here year-round and won't be MIA during breaks. I do understand this concept to a certain extent. However, I still do not comprehend how fair it is that we, as college students, are pouring money into this community and essentially supporting their economy. Yet, time after time, we are turned away from employment. Not to mention that we do, in fact, spend at least two-thirds of the year out here in good old Western Massachusetts. In my opinion, that is by far enough time for me to feel as though I qualify as a resident.

The only other way in which you can snaggle yourself a half decent job out here is by knowing someone. By that, I don't mean your best friend's old roommate's sister that works at the restaurant you want to work at. That is not a reliable source; an immediate connection is essential. Maybe I just don't befriend the right people, but no one I know has a half decent job off campus. So all in all, it adds to that neither you, nor I, will never ever get a good job out here – ever.

The reality of the depression of employment for college students in this college town is discouraging. Many of us are faced with the reality that we have to find some way to financially support ourselves, at least to a certain extent. I personally am very fortunate that my parents offer me financial assistance in various ways. I'm basically responsible for my own spending money. However, in order to afford living somewhat comfortably, I have to go home nearly every other weekend to work. It isn't necessarily the worst situation I could be in, but it isn't an ideal one either. Once you add up gas and general expenses, such as groceries, it's nearly impossible to save money while in college.

So even though the outlook of the job market is depressing to future college graduates, at least UMass graduates have broken in the feeling of unemployment.

Emily O'Brien is a Collegian columnist.

Beware of MassPIRG

Joe Wilkins

For those who don't know, MassPIRG stands for Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group. The group was started, under a different name, roughly 30 years ago by Ralph Nader. Over the years, it has spurred the creation of many other state "PIRGs" around the country. The group's main concerns are environmental and consumer protection. There is, in fact, a student chapter right here on campus. MassPIRG, at least on the middle and lower levels, is mainly run by people in their mid-20s fresh out of college. There is certainly a high degree of enthusiasm in these politically conscious individuals, but in some cases a lack of responsibility.

I say this because of an experience I had this summer with MassPIRG. Due to the irresponsibility of my directors at MassPIRG, $75 was taken from my paycheck by mistake. Working up to 55 hours a week and only getting paid for 25 of them is an insult in itself, but losing some of my hard earned money because of a simple paperwork mistake was certainly disturbing. The issue I have with MassPIRG is not the money, however. I have accepted that I will never see it at this point – two months after the fact and after countless complaints and phone calls. No, the issue I have is the manner in which the situation was dealt with.

MassPIRG's paychecks are very confusing for the untrained. They deal with quotas, averages, bonuses and buffer accounts. Often, my director rushed me through the process of examining my pay sheet. Obviously, this is not a good practice, because had I not taken the time to carefully examine the information and would not have caught the problem. Finding that money was mistakenly taken from my paycheck, I immediately approached my director about it. She gave me the impression she would take care of it. I trusted her to take responsibility for the mistake and to get me the money as soon as possible.

When two weeks had gone by, (a pay period in the MassPIRG world, much like the campus jobs here at UMass) I expected to see a reimbursement. Upon finding no such monies, I inquired again with my director, who basically informed me that nothing had been done to solve the problem in the past two weeks and that I should talk to the other director, a male my own age. He also informed me that he would take care of it. Again, foolishly, I trusted him to correct the problem, which in fact belonged to his very own paperwork error a few weeks prior.

Unfortunately, the MassPIRG office was closing in about two weeks and the two directors that knew about my issue were leaving. Having still not received any reimbursement, I inquired yet again about the money a few days before the office was to be closed. At this point, I was told they could not help me and the responsibility to claim my money was dumped on me. To save space and to keep the reader from boredom, I will not elaborate further, but will simply say that I have been attempting for the past month, without result, to obtain my stolen money. At this point, it seems I will have to let it go.

I have been attempting...without result, to obtain my stolen money.

My purpose here is not to present MassPIRG's activities in a negative light, and for those at MassPIRG who may be reading this, please don't take offense. The group indeed does great work, which is highly valuable in the state and beyond, but there are some important changes that need be made.

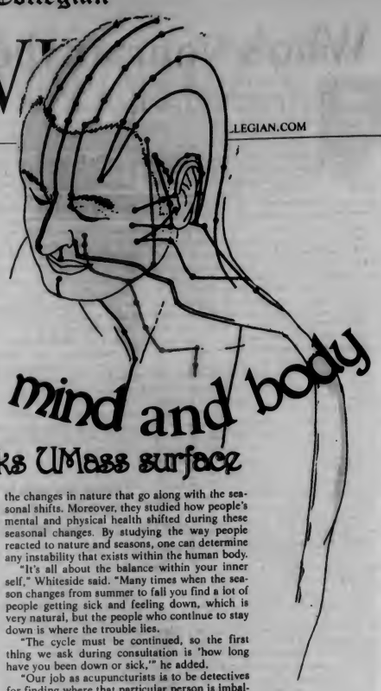
For now, let me say this: MassPIRG needs to pay more attention to those who work at the bottom as door-to-door fundraisers. The group is only as strong as its base. If the concerns of the hardest working employees of MassPIRG are not met, then the group is only shooting itself in the foot. If MassPIRG makes a mistake on a pay sheet, then MassPIRG should be the one to fix it. I write this article only out of concern for the individuals who may want to make a summer job or even a career out of MassPIRG in the future. Workers beware.

Joe Wilkins is a UMass student.

Submit a letter or opinion

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699



Mail: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center Way, Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIV

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 2003

LEGIAN.COM

Holistically healing the mind and body

Acupuncture breaks UMass surface

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

It has been practiced all over the world for 5,000 years, but for University Health Services it is the newest addition to its repertoire of health-care aids.

This year marks the first time an acupuncture service will be offered through UHS to students, faculty and staff on the Amherst campus.

Two working Licensed Acupuncturists are conducting this groundbreaking venture in health services, Janna Lussier and Ton Whiteside.

"I am really excited about the opportunity to work with students because at this age people are looking to shape the habits in their lives," Whiteside said. "Acupuncture really works better with someone who is 20 years old compared to someone who is 40 years old."

The two acupuncturists have a practice together in Greenfield and have been working together since they were students at the National Institute for Acupuncture in Columbia, Md. They decided last year that UMass would be a great place to develop their practice.

"We made a comprehensive proposal about a year ago to [director of UHS] Bernette Melby in which we used the acupuncture service on the campus of University of Maryland in College Park as an example of how it could work," Lussier said.

GERALD H. LINGCOLLEGIAN

Janna Lussier, left, and Ton Whiteside are the two new accupuncturists at University Health Services.

Acupuncture is an ancient medicinal practice that originated in China roughly 5,000 years ago. It involves the use of two to six slender, stainless steel needles barely the size of a few human hairs – called filaments – which are inserted just beneath the skin's surface. It is the most popular form and most widespread symbol of traditional Asian medicine philosophy in the United States and around the globe.

"Acupuncture is really not known anymore as an alternative medicine," Lussier said. "Now it's rather called a complimentary therapy."

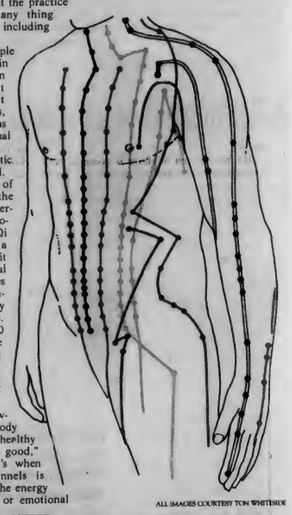
According to the two practitioners, the philosophy of Chinese medicine is very different than the way western medicine operates. In ancient China, the way doctors of Chinese medicine determined people's health is by very close observation. They studied the change in seasons and the changes in nature that go along with the seasonal shifts. Moreover, they studied how people's mental and physical health shifted during these seasonal changes. By studying the way people reacted to nature and seasons, one can determine any instability that exists within the human body.

"It's all about the balance within your inner self," Whiteside said. "Many times when the season changes from summer to fall you find a lot of people getting sick and feeling down, which is very natural, but the people who continue to stay down is where the trouble lies.

"The cycle must be continued, so the first thing we ask during consultation is 'how long have you been down or sick,'" he added.

"Our job as acupuncturists is to be detectives for finding where that particular person is imbalanced," Lussier said.

Acupuncture has been proven to be an effective treatment for an immense amount of ailments. Anything from headaches to infections can be treated. According to Whiteside, the most prevalent reason people seek acupuncture is to cure chronic pain but the practice provides relief to any thing related to the body, including the mind.



"A lot of people think it's just for pain like chronic back pain but it does a lot more," he said. "It treats bodily systems, all organ systems plus mental and emotional symbols.

"It really is a holistic enterprise," he added.

The basis of acupuncture is the Chinese theory of energy flow, called Qi (pronounced "chee"). Qi is not considered a physical entity but it represents the vital energy that circulates through all the channels of the body including all organs. There are over 360 channels in the human body and practitioners have been studying them for thousands of years.

"When Qi is flowing through your body smoothly, you feel healthy and you feel good," Whiteside said. "It's when one of those channels is blocked and when the energy cannot travel, pain or emotional

Continued on page 9

ALL IMAGES COURTESY TON WHITESIDE

There are over 360 channels in the Qi energy flow system as shown in the diagram above.

Synthesis Center in Amherst provides alternative health care

GERALD H. LINGCOLLEGIAN

Patients at the Synthesis Center practice psychosynthesis as a way to reach personal growth. The center, above, is located in downtown Amherst at 274 North Pleasant Street.

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

Nestled in the heart of Amherst Center is a place where people go to find inner peace, develop their intuitive abilities, and to seek help spiritually and psychologically. It is called the Synthesis Center. Didi Firman, founder of the psychosynthesis program at the Synthesis Center, offers comprehensive training in the art of psychosynthesis to those who seek it.

"Beyond the psychosynthesis training and counseling, the center offers many other types of seminars and classes that all focus around improving the well-being of the individual," Firman said.

In its most basic sense, psychosynthesis is simply a name for the process of personal growth – the natural tendency in each human being to harmonize or synthesize our various aspects into high levels. In a more precise definition, psychosynthesis is a conscious attempt to cooperate with the natural process of personal development. The basic philosophy behind this school of thought is that everything has the drive and potential to become the most evolved and full version of itself possible, and psychosynthesis is a means to this end.

Many other alternative forms of health care date back thousands of years, such as acupuncture, reikl and yoga, while psychosynthesis is a fairly new concept. It emerged in the year 1911 from the early work of Italian psychiatrist Roberto Assagioli. He believed that Freud's work vastly

Continued on page 9

Lyrics on Mayer's follow-up album weigh listeners down

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

John Mayer has titled his latest effort "Heavier Things," and from that title, its clear that the ingratiating young singer/songwriter has envisioned the album as an evolutionary leap forward from his work on the triple-platinum "Room For Squares." From the stark black-and-white photo on the front to the title of the album, it's obvious Mayer is saying he's taking a leap.

Except, this isn't him taking the leap at all. "Heavier Things" doesn't differ much from the folk-pop-jazz leanings of "Room For Squares," with the exception that the album has less of the blues and jazz inflected moments of the latter. This is still the same playful Mayer of before (the booklet is color-coded according to emotional impact and location of recording amongst other things,) the handsome, dreamy-voiced young man wooing young women with his acoustic guitar.

John Mayer 'Heavier Things' Aware/Columbia

Mayer's easy-going voice, which has enough range to overcome the crutch of good looks, is nicely showcased here, but it's used at the expense of songs that have all the impact of cotton candy. Mayer's smooth vocals are enough to seduce young girls, but the cynical will just shrug and ask what all the fuss was about.

It's hard to tell if Mayer is going to be a long-lasting singer and songwriter, the James Taylor of his generation, or if he's really just the second coming of the easy-listening troubadours of the '70s and '80s, men whose songs remained while their faces faded from memory.

The music on "Heavier Things" is hardly a strenuous listen; it exists to act as the backdrop to, well, pretty much anything – relaxation, seduction, whatever. It's slick. It's easy. It's inoffensive. And it also has a tendency to get boring.

Not to say that there aren't interesting moments on "Heavier Things." Lead single "Bigger Than My Body" is a great hook for a new album, with a bouncing rhythm and Mayer hitting a falsetto high with uncanny skill. It's the highlight of the album. Unfortunately, it's the second song. And Mayer allows his humor to occasionally shine through, especially on the sarcastic "New Deep" in which he takes aim at earnest street corner prophets: "Cause ever since I tried / trying not to find / every little meaning in my life / it's been fine / it's been cool / with my new golden rule." As he says in the chorus, "Numb is the new deep."

SCOTT ELLIOTT/COLLEGIAN

John Mayer, pictured at the Mullins Center last November, released his second major album, "Heavier Things," following the success of "Room for Squares."

